(2)

Senat[redacted] Republican Leader Knowland says hereafter the Senate will refuse gallery admission to anyone who does not hold a card from his Senator. Kowland said this will be rigidly enforced.. and will apply to sight-seeing parties touring the capital. He said "other security steps" are under consideration.

The Atomic Energy Commission says another "atomic device" has been [redacted] detonated in the Marshal Islands. We are told only that this is the first in a series of tests.

(3)

The Civil Service Commission today released a breakdown on one thousand seven hundred and eighty-two persons who had been fired by the first of the year as "security risks." Of this group, 354 were dismissed because of "security information" in their files. One hundred and ninety were sex perverts. And 504 were found to have been convicted of felonies or misdemeanors.. There were 959 dismissed for other reasons. The Commission points out that the total exceeds the 1,782 fired..but this is because some with criminal records, for example, also had records with other derogatory information. The report shows that the largest number of subversives were dismissed from the Interior Department.. 72 of them. Then came the Veterans Administration with 45 and the State Department with 43. The report lists 49 sex perverts fired from the state department...and 31 from the Central Intelligence agency.

The State Department announced today that Scott McLeod, its security chief, hereafter will not be in charge of "personnel." McCleod said recently that the personnel and security jobs are inseperable..he took the JOB on that basis. But hereafter he will not be responsible for hiring or firing State Department personnel. The department says this is not to be considered as a demotion.

4

Senator McCarthy said today that his committee will hear from Army Secretary Stevens either this Thursday or a week from today. McCarthy said he wants to ask Stevens about what he called "contradictory" policies in handling the cases of persons accused of Communism.

The Senate today confirmed Earl Warren to be the 14th chief justice of the United States. Warren was approved by a voice vote.. with no audible dissents.

House Speaker Martin says the President is still opposed to the Democratic plan to increase personal income tax exemptions.

And Secretary of Agriculture Benson, in his first annual report to the President, said that 1953 was a year in which a long decline in farm prices was HALTED #and a sound permanent farm program" had been developed.

In India today, Prime Minister Nehru turned down President Eisenhower's offer of military aid for India similar to the aid we have just granted India's neighbor Pakistan. Nehru told his parliament: "In making this suggestion the President has done less than justice to us, or to himself. If we object to military aid being given to Pakistan, we would be hypocrites and unprincipled opportunists to accept it ourselves." Nehru demanded that the 14 Americans who are now on the U.N. cease-fire team in Kashmir as observers, be withdrawn. He reasoned that American military aid to Pakistan is a form of intervention in India's dispute with Pakistan.

In Vatican City today the official newspaper says that Pope Pius' illness will take a long time to cure. On the eve of the Pope's 78th birthday.. and the 15th anniversary of his election to the pontificate.. the paper says: "The general condition of the supreme pontiff is good. Owing to the nature of the sickness, (However) his improvement is proceeding very slowly and it is still predicted.. as his doctors state.. that the hope for cure will take quite a long time."

In the Sudan today 25 prsons were reported killed in a (BATTLE) between police and anti-Egyptian rioters. The riot was touched off by the visit to Khartoum of President Naguib..who was restored to his office over the week-end. More than 30-thousand demonstrators..both for and against Naguib.. massed in the city to see him arrive for the opening of the Sudan's first parliament. But the violent rioting forced postponement of the ceremony.

In Damascus, the 80-year-old, Hasham el Atassy returned today as the President of Syria..the job from which he had been forced out in 1951. New riots in Damascus today brought to at least 12 the number of persons killed in five days of revolution.

In Florida today, Ted Williams, the Boston Red Sox outfielder, fractured his left shoulder while chasing a fly ball in his first day of spring training. Williams is expected to be out of uniform for at least five or six weeks.

(7)

In Switzerland, United Nations economists said today that a recession in the United States will ~~mm~~reduce Europe's exports, but that the European economy would weather the recession.

What occured in the House of Representatives today, is further proof of the ends to which individuals (and often nations) will go when tensions mount and tempers flare. The Roman historian Sal-ust, once offered some good advice when he said:"No mortal man (has ever served at the same) time his passions and his best interests." Benjamin Franklin put it even more bluntly:"If passion drives, let reason hold the reins."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, March 1, 1954
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: This is the news! Five congressmen were shot and wounded today while attending a session of the House of Representatives. Lou Shollenberger was in the House when a woman and two men, shouting "Free Puerto Rico!" fired pistols from the gallery. Here is an eye-witness account by Shollenberger from the Radio Gallery of the House of Representatives in Washington.

SHOLLENBERGER: ..... began around two-thirty this afternoon, Washington Time. The first any of us knew about it was the sound, we thought, of firecrackers, but that idea was dispelled almost immediately when many of the members of the House, who were on the floor, could look up and see the guns blazing away, hear and see the bullets splintering into committee tables andhit the walls and ceilings. Someone has already counted twelve bullet holes in the House itself. How many more were fired isn't known at the moment. The five members of Congress were hit; one of them, Representative Alvin M. Bentley, of Michigan, is in critical condition at Washington's Casualty Hospital. There also are Representatives Kennth A. Roberts, of Alabama, and George H. Fallon, of Maryland. Reportedly in less serious condition are the two others who were hit, Representatives Ben F. Jensen, of Iowa, and Clifford Davis, of Tennessee. When the shots were fired, the House was voting on a bill, whether to debate a proposal to admit Mexican workers to the United States. Speaker Martin, who was in the chair, had just counted the "ayes," was ready to call for the "nays" when pandemonium hit, to speak ... (correction by speaker) to quote Speaker Martin.

Police now identified those doing the shooting as Puerto Ricans, all listing New York City as their homes. Apparently from a note found in her handbag, which police quote as saying she takes full responsibility for all that happened was Lolita Lebron, thirty-four. (sentence sic) She says that she and her companions bought only one-way tickets to Washington, that they had expected to be killed. With her and now in police custody are Rafael Miranda, aged twenty-five, and Andreas Cordero, age twenty-nine. Four others have been arrested, are held for questioning, one being picked up at Union Station with a gun. The three principals are to be arraigned tonight, charged with assault with intent to kill. These facts, of course, have come to us a little bit at a time.

When the shooting stopped there was still the fear that other gunmen might still be at large. I was in the speaker's lobby, which lies just behind the floor of the House itself, waiting to talk to a congressman. When I heard the shots I hesitated for a moment, thinking that surely no one was shooting, but when I saw the members hitting the deck I knew something was happening. At about that moment Representative Jensen walked through the doors from the floor, hesitated, and fell. Some went to help him immediately. Others of us saw that Representative Bentley was hit and hit hard. He was lying on his back on the floor just in front of the Speaker's Stand in the House itself. He is the one who is now in the most serious condition. His doctors report that the bullet had hit his lung, his stomach, and his liver. He went into the operating room just an hour ago. While the shooting was still going on several persons rushed for the assailants. A spectator in the visitors' gallery, where the gunmen were, just in back and to the left of the speaker, this spectator made a lunge. He was Frank Wise, in the gallery for an afternoon of relaxation. Another spectator, Raymond Cole (?), visiting a doorkeeper friend, helped. Representative James Van Zandt, of Pennsylvania, a Navy Reserve Captain, and Lee Thomas, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, a Republican telephone page, rushed up the steps and both aided in overpowering the Puerto Ricans. One put up some resistance. The others were meek and submitted to arrest. By this time both the House and the Senate, which had heard about the shooting, adjourned for the day and the galleries were cleared. Congressional leaders immediately upon seeing that the five who had been hit were being taken care of began a series of conferences. Speaker Martin announced that security measures will be tightened to see that no more visitors are admitted without tickets. Chairman Velde announced that at the request of Speaker Martin the House Un-American Activities Committee will investigate immediately.

Outside, surrounding the Capitol Building itself, a large crowd of curiosity seekers began to assemble. Police began checking everything. Washington's Police Chief Murray says that the three who were captured here in the House didn't say why they chose the House instead of the Senate to do their shooting. He did say that they had no interest in the Mexican Labor Bill. At the White House, it's reported, President Eisenhower called Speaker Martin with offers of assistance. The President also cancelled a congressional reception scheduled for tomorrow night. Here, in the House, of course, those who were not hurt began remembering the last time such an incident took place. Old-timers remember that the then-Representative Melvin Moss, of Minnesota, outtalked a gunman in the gallery who demanded time to speak. Others of us who were here in Washington on November 1, 1950, recall the time that two Puerto Ricans tried to shoot their way into President Truman. There is no explanation yet for the shootings this afternoon. The woman, whom police say has admitted firing the first shot, shouted that ... quote: "My country is not free! Free Puerto Rico!" Police say that the three picked up here in the House were carrying two Lugers and two so-called P-38 pistols and they also had about thirty rounds of ammunition, but they had no chance to use it partly because of the quick work of those who overpowered them, partly because one of the pistols jammed as they were firing. All in all, it was quite an afternoon in Washington, Ed.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETORK

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Five Congressmen were shot and wounded today while attending a session of the House of Representatives. Lew Shollengerger was in the House when a woman and two men, shouting "Free Puerto Rico" fired pistols from the gallery. Here is an eye witness account by Shollenberger from the radio gallery of the House of Representatives in Washington:

SHOLLENBERGER: ...began around two-thirty this afternoon, Washington Time. The first any of us knew about it was the sound, we thought, of firecrackers, but that idea was dispelled almost immediately when many of the members of the House, who were on the floor, could look up and see the guns blazing away, hear and see the bullets splintering into committee tables and hit the walls and ceilings. Someone has already counted twelve bullet holes in the House itself. How many more were fired isn't known at the moment. The five members of Congress were hit; one of them, Representative Alvin M. Bentley, of Michigan, is in critical condition at Washington's Casualty Hospital. There also are Representatives Kenneth A. Roberts, of Alabama, and George H. Fallon, of Maryland. Reportedly in less serious condition are the two others who were hit, Representatives Ben F. Jensen, of Iowa, and Clifford Davis, of Tennessee. When the shots were fired, the House was voting on a bill, whether to debate a proposal to admit Mexican workers to the United States. Speaker Martin, who was in the chair, had just counted the "ayes" was ready to call for the "nays" when pendamonium hit.

Police now identified those doing the shooting as Puerto Ricans, all listing New York City as their homes. Apparently from a note found in her handbag, which police quote as saying she takes full responsibility for all that happened was Lolita Lebron, thirty-four. She says that she and her companions bought only one-way tickets to Washington, that they had expected to be killed. With her and now in police custody are Rafael Miranda, aged twenty-five, and

Andreas Cordero, age twenty-nine; four others have been arrested, are held for questioning, one being picked up at Union Station with a gun. The three principals are to be arraigned tonight, charged with assault with intent to kill. These facts, of course, have come to us a little bit at a time. When the shooting stopped there was still the fear that other gunmen might still be at large. I was in the speaker's lobby, which lies just behind the floor of the House itself, waiting to talk to a congressman. When I heard the shots I hesitated for a moment, thinking that surely no one was shooting, but when I saw the members hitting the deck I knew something was happening. At about that moment Representative Jensen walked through the doors from the floor, hesitated, and fell. Some went to help him immediately. Others of us saw that Representative Bentley was hit and hit hard. He was lying on his back on the floor just in front of the Speaker's stand in the House itself. He is the one who is now in the most serious condition. His doctors report that the bullet had hit his lung, his stomach, and his liver. He went into the operating room just an hour ago. While the shooting was still going on several persons rushed for the assailants. A spectator in the visitors' gallery, where the gunmen were, just in back and to the left of the speaker, this spectator made a lunge. He was Frank Wise, in the gallery for an afternoon of relaxation. Another spectator, Raymond Cole, visiting a doorkeeper friend, helped. Representative James Van Zandt, of Pennsylvania, a Navy Reserve Captain, and Lee Thomas, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, a Republican telephone page, rushed up the steps and both aided in overpowering the Puerto Ricans. One put up some resistance. The others were meek and submitted to arrest. By this time both the House and the Senate, which had heard about the shooting, adjourned for the day and the galleries were cleared. Congressional leaders immediately upon seeing that the five who had been hit were being taken care of began a series of conferences. Speaker Martin announced that security measures will be tightened to see that no more visitors are admitted without tickets. Chairman Velde announced that at the request of Speaker Martin the House Un-American Activities Committee will investigate immediately. Outside, surrounding the Capitol Building itself, a large crowd of curiosity seekers began to assemble. Police began checking everything. Washington's Police Chief Murray says that the three who were captured here in the House didn't say why they chose the House instead of the Senate to do their shooting. He did say that they had no interest in the Mexican Labor Bill. At the White House, it's reported, President Eisenhower called Speaker Martin with offers of assistance. The President also cancelled a congressional reception scheduled for tomorrow night. Here in the House, of course, those who were not hurt began remembering the last time such an incident took place. Old-timers remember that the then-Representative Melvin Moss, of Minnesota, outtalked a gunman in the gallery who demanded time to speak. Others of us who were here in Washington on November 1, 1950, recall the time that two Puerto Ricans tried to shoot their way into President Truman. There is no explanation yet for the shootings this afternoon. The woman, whom police say has admitted firing the first shot, shouted that "My country is not free." Free Puerto Rico!" Police say that the three picked up here in the House were carrying two Lugers and two so-called P-38 pistols and they also had about thirty rounds of ammunition, but they had no chance to use it partly because of the quick work of those who overpowered them, partly because one of the pistols jammed as they were firing. All in all, it was quite an afternoon in Washington, Ed.

MURROW: In Puerto Rico, Governor Luis Munoz Marin said of the shooting in Washington: "People of Puerto Rico are deeply indignant because of this savage and unbelievable lunacy which does not express in the remotest way the peaceful and decent nature of the people of Puerto Rico. And in Venezuela, Secretary of State Dulles said he is shocked by the news: The shooting may have been timed to coincide with the opening of the Inter-American conference today in Caracas. Senate Republican Leader Knowland says hereafter the Senate will refuse gallery admission to anyone who does not hold a card from his Senator. Knowland said this will be rigidly enforced and will apply to sight-seeing parties touring the capital. He said "other security steps" are under consideration.

The Atomic Energy Commission says another "atomic device" has been detonated in the Marshal Islands. We are told only that this is the first in a series of tests.

The Civil Service Commission today released a breakdown on one thousand seven hundred and eighty two persons who had been fired by the first of the year as "security risks." Of this group, 354 were dismissed because of "security information" in their files. One hundred and ninety were sex perverts. And 504 were found to have been convicted of felonies or misdemeanors. There were 959 dismissed for other reasons. The Commission points out that the total exceeds the 1,782 fired, but this is because some with criminal records, for example, also had records with other derogatory information. The report shows that the largest number of subversives were dismissed from the Interior Department - 72 of them. Then came the Veterans Administration with 45 and the State Department with 43. The report lists 49 sex perverts fired from the State Department and 31 from the Central Intelligence agency.

The State Department announced today that Scott McLeod, its security chief, hereafter will not be in charge of "personnel." McCleod said recently that the personnel and security jobs are inseparable - he took the job on that basis. But hereafter he will not be responsible for hiring or firing State Department personnel. The Department says this is not to be considered as a demotion

Senator McCarthy said today that his committee will hear from Army Secretary Stevens either this Thursday or a week from today. McCarthy said he wants to ask Stevens about what he called "contradictory" policies in handling the cases of persons accused of Communism.

The Senate today confirmed Earl Warren to be the 14th chief justice of the United States. Warren was approved by a voice vote - with no audible dissents.

House Speaker Martin says the President is still opposed to the Democratic plan to increase personal income tax exemptions.

And Secretary of Agriculture Benson, in his first annual report to the President, said that 1953 was a year in which a long decline in farm prices was halted and a sound permanent farm program had been developed.

In India today, Prime Minister Nehru turned down President Eisenhower's offer of military aid for India similar to the aid we have just granted India's neighbor Pakistan. Nehru told his parliament: "In making this suggestion the President has done less than justice to us or to himself. If we object to military aid being given to Pakistan, we would be hypocrites and unprincipled opportunists to accept it ourselves." Nehru demanded that the 14 Americans who are now on the U.N. cease-fire team in Kashmir as observers be withdrawn. He reasoned that American military aid to Pakistan is a form of intervention in India's dispute with Pakistan.

In Vatican City today the official newspaper says that Pope Pius' illness will take a long time to cure. On the eve of the Pope's 78th birthday, and the 15th anniversary of his election to the pontificate the paper says: "The general condition of the supreme pontiff is good. Owing to the nature of the sickness, however, his improvement is proceeding very slowly and it is still predicted as his doctors state that the hoped for cure will take quite a long time."

In the Sudan today 25 persons were reported killed in a battle between police and anti-Egyptian rioters. The riot was touched off by the visit to Khartoum of President Naguib who was restored to his office over the weekend. More than 30-thousand demonstrators both for and against Naguib massed in the city to see him arrive for the opening of the Sudan's first parliament. But the violent rioting forced postponement of the ceremony.

In Damascus, the 80-year-old, Hasham el Atassy returned today as the President of Syria - the job from which he had been forced out in 1951. New riots in Damascus today brought to at least 12 the number of persons killed in five days of revolution.

In Florida, Ted Williams, the Boston Red Sox outfielder, fractured his left shoulder while chasing a fly ball in his first day of spring training. Williams is expected to be out of uniform for at least five or six weeks.

In Switzerland, United Nations economists said today that a recession in the United States will reduce Europe's exports, but that the European economy would weather the recession.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What occured in the House of Representatives today is further proof of the ends to which individuals (and often nations) will go when tensions mount and tempers flare. The Roman historian Salust, once offered some good advice when he said: "No mortal man has ever served at the same time his passions and his best interests." Benjamin Franklin put it even more bluntly: "If passion drives, let reason hold the reins."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday March 2 1954

This is the news:

Republican Representative Bently of Michigan, is now given a fifty-fifty chance to survive the wound inflicted yesterday by (Puerto) Rican nationalists. Dr. George Creel, a Cleveland surgeon, says Bently has improved slighlty; a bullet went through his chest, lung, diaphram, liver and stomach. The four other Congressmen who were hit are all doing well. Puerto Rico's Governor Luis Munoz Marin, flew to Washington today, to tell the President that all of his people protest "this outrage." And he was given a standing ovation when he walked onto the floor of the House with Speaker Martin.

Martin told reporters the four Puerto Ricans, now being held on charges of assault with intent to kill, are "undoubtedly Communists." And the New York employer of the woman being held, says the F.B.I. had her under surveillance AS A "SUBVERSIVE". New York police say they found "quantities" OF Communist literature, in the apartment of one of the men being held.

[redacted]

[redacted]y.

Civil Service Commission Chairman Philip Young today told Senators that of the 24-hundred persons removed from government jobs as security risks 383 had something of a subversive nature in their case files. But Young added: he doesnt know whether a single one of these 383 was fired for disloyalty, subversion or communism. He has (no) [redacted] way of finding out whether subversion was a controlling factor in their dismissal. He doesn't know how many of them were notified that there was subversive information in their files. And he acknowledges that some of the 383 may have been dismissed for other reasons..or resigned.

Republican National Chairman Hall called on the President today and then told reporters: He cannot go along with Senator McCarthy when Mc Carthy "attacks persons fighting Communism just as he is." Hall says he does not think anyone should say "Generals in our army are not fighting Communism." He thinks all the incidents arising out of the Senator's [redacted] argument with Army Secretary Stevens "throw a fog around the President's program which is one of the finest ever presented by a President." He thinks what he called "these little offshoots" draw the people's attention away from the program. Hall was reminded that several weeks ago he described McCarthy as an asset to his party. He (ACKNOWLEDGED) [redacted] that and added: "I don't like the situation as it developed last week."

Defense Secretary Wilson returned to Washington from a Florida vacation and described the McCarthy-Stevens row as "a lot of wind to blow up over one left-wing dentist".. a reference to former Major Peress who was given an honorable discharge from the army after refusing to answer loyalty questions before the McCarthy committee.

And ~~the~~ Senator McCarthy said he's about ready "to declare a moratorium on these statments back and forth." And he announced a second postponment of a meeting with Secretay Stevens. McCarthy says he's asked the State Dept. to explain why it took away the right to hire and fire employes from Security Chief McCloud.

A Senate internal security subcommittee was told today that former Navy Secretary Knox once said that former President Roosevelt said: "Considering the fact that we are allies of Russia and the Communist party of the United States is bending its efforts to win the war...(this was in 1942).. the United States is not bound to oppose activities of the Communist party." Chairman Jenner put this into the record in what was described as minutes of a Navy meeting. He said the record will be changed if the Navy differs with the minutes.

2

Retired Rear Admiral Staton said that during the war, Adlai Stevenson, then an aide to Secretary Knox, told Staton "I don't think we should be too hard on Communists", who were radio operators in the merchant marine. Stevenson today described this as an old story..answered during the 1952 campaign and fully explained at the time.

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee today (INTRODUCED) a bill to cut excise taxes almost one billion dollars a year. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey says this is "more than the Treasury can afford" at the present time.. although he favors "selective reductions" of some sales taxes. Earlier, the committee approved a Presidential request and voted to continue the present 52 per cent corporation income tax rate for another year

The State Department announces the resignation of Arthur Dean as Secretary of State Dulles' deputy to the Korean peace conference. Dean says he had to quit because of the pressure of personal business.

And the United Nations was told today by its truce chief in Palestine that tension has increased along the Isreal-Jordan border and joint patrols should be assigned to lessen the danger of an explosion.

Edward R. Murrow: March 2, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

In three great regions of the world vital American interests are at stake - Europe, Asia and Latin-America. The Berlin Conference has just emphasized the gravity of the European problem; the approaching Geneva Conference does not appear now to offer a much greater hope of agreement than Berlin. The All-American Conference now meeting in Caracas presents a contrast. No one at Caracas challenges free world power or American responsibility for the defense of the free world. For this reason the meeting ought to be a pleasant interlude, a kind of American holiday from old world and Asian worries.

But it is not being held in a holiday mood and the difference between Caracas, on the one hand, and Berlin and Geneva on the other, is really one of degree. In degree it is a big difference, but at the root of things the same basic problem exists, the question of ultimate communist power.

What the United States wants at Caracas is a united front against communist infiltration, in particular a condemnation of the state of affairs in Guatemala. Before and during World War ~~II~~ the united front against the Nazis was not difficult to set up. The resistance to a united front against communism is disconcertingly stubborn, though not because Latin Americans like communism. It is highly unlikely that a resolution criticizing Guatemala by name will be adopted at Caracas. The reason is that another and older issue is involved - intervention. If All-American solidarity is to continue it can be only through the maintenance of the principle that ~~states~~ Nations do not meddle in the domestic affairs of other ~~states~~ Nations.

There would be mighty little actual intervention in a resolution telling off the pro-Communist inclinations of the Guatemala regime. But the very mention of internal affairs tastes of intervention to Latin Americans. And not until Communism appears to them to be a much more acute danger will they rate it ahead of intervention.

One of the dangers of communism in Latin America is the very fact that it doesn't look dangerous at this stage. Latin America is the natural breeding ground for social and political extremism. Here are countries where the disparity between great wealth and great poverty is glaring. In all of them there has been a history of grinding economic exploitation. Capitalism and government have only recently come to acknowledge enlightened social and economic responsibilities. The United States draws to it the same kind of unpopularity that the strong and the well-to-do proverbially inspire in those weaker and poorer. So this is a happy hunting ground for Soviet intrigue. Its Soviet origins never need be disclosed. It can always work for plausible and ~~indeed~~ apparently genuinely liberal policies. The more successful it is, the more concealed it can remain. And the United States is history's gift as a target. Taking a long look at the future, it may be doubted whether Europe or Asia would create dangers more sinister to the United States than a far-flung communist infiltration in Latin America. And one may be sure that this is the teaching communist conspirators receive in their indoctrination in the Soviet Union.

If Secretary Dulles is not to get at Caracas a resolution criticizing the Guatemalan regime by name, how can he work for more effective solidarity? This is a question which Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, has already answered in the report he brought home from his recent Latin-American tour. There are other ways to build up solidarity. They are economic and cultural, they include a helpful interest in how Latin-Americans deal with their many difficulties.

President Peron of Argentina told the correspondent of the New York Times that Dr. Eisenhower's visit marked a real turning point for the better in Argentine relations with the United States. The publication of the report was a big event in Latin America, much bigger, of course, than in Washington. But since then little has been done to implement it.

Harold Stassen said the report had passed beyond the status of being a recommendation and had become a policy. But Latin Americans see few signs of it.

One of the issues to be discussed at Caracas is that of prices. During the war we paid through the nose for Latin American materials because we needed them so badly. Now we don't, and prices are off, coffee excepted. The Latin Americans naturally like a free rein of economic forces when it works in their favor. But they also want the protection of minimum prices for primary products that are essential.

It has been said that their attitude toward prices is formed in the knowledge that the copper and nitrate miners of Chile, the tin miners in Bolivia and the oil workers in Venezuela are as much part of the American economy as the coal miners of Pennsylvania or the oil workers of Oklahoma. They know it, but does the United States Senate and House of Representatives? If so, the Latin Americans think something more specific would come of the Milton Eisenhower report. The basis for solidarity is there, and it is not necessary to forge it on the anvil of anti-communism. If the United States sees the communist menace more clearly than do Latin Americans, it can also see that communism is to be held off by greater concern for Latin America's economic and social problems. This time the cry isn't for huge government loans or grants in aid. It is, above all, for attention.

Because we are a rich and powerful nation, we are apt at times to forget that this is a world in which we can't go it alone. And as John Clarke remarked some 3-hundred years ago:"You often must ask your neighbor if you shall live in peace." However we may regard the Latin-American countries, the Roman Horace was right when he said:"Your own property is at stake when your neighbor's house is on fire."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Republican Representative Bentley of Michigan is now given a fifty-fifty chance to survive the wound inflicted yesterday by Puerto Rican nationalists. Dr. George Creel, a Cleveland surgeon, says Bentley has improved slightly, a bullet went through his chest, lung, diaphram, liver and stomach. The four other Congressmen who were hit are all doing well. Puerto Rico's Governor Luis Munoz Marin flew to Washington today to tell the President that all of his people protest "this outrage." And he was given a standing ovation when he walked onto the floor of the House with Speaker Martin.

Martin told reporters the four Puerto Ricans now being held on charges of assault with intent to kill are "undoubtedly Communists." And the New York employer of the woman being held says the FBI had her under surveillance, as a subversive. New York police say they found "quantities" of Communist literature in the apartment of one of the men being held.

Civil Service Commission Chairman Philip Young today told Senators that of the 24-hundred persons removed from government jobs as security risks 383 had something of a subversive nature in their case files. But Young added: he doesn't know whether a single one of these 383 was fired for disloyalty, subversion or Communism. He has no way of finding out whether subversion was a controlling factor in their dismissal. He doesn't know how many of them were notified that there was subversive information in their files. And he acknowledges that some of the 383 may have been dismissed for other reasons or resigned.

Republican National Chairman Hall called on the President today and then told reporters: He cannot go along with Senator McCarthy when McCarthy "attacks persons fighting Communism just as he is." Hall says he does not think anyone should say "Generals in our army are not fighting Communism." He thinks all the incidents arising out of the Senator's argument with Army Secretary Stevens "throw a fog around the President's program which is one of the finest ever presented by a President." He thinks what he called "these little offshoots" draw the people's attention away from the program. Hall was reminded that several weeks ago he described McCarthy as an asset to his party. He acknowledged that and added: "I don't like the situation as it developed last week."

Defense Secretary Wilson returned to Washington from a Florida vacation and described the McCarthy-Stevens row as "a lot of wind to blow up over one left-wing dentist" - a reference to former Major Peress who was given an honorable discharge from the army after refusing to answer loyalty questions before the McCarthy committee.

And Senator McCarthy said he's about ready "to declare a moratorium on these statements back and forth." And he announced a second postponement of a meeting with Secretary Stevens. McCarthy says he's asked the State Department to explain why it took away the right to hire and fire employees from Security Chief McCleod.

A Senate Internal Security subcommittee was told today that former Navy Secretary Knox once said that former President Roosevelt said: "Considering the fact that we are allies of Russia and the Communist party of the United States is bending its efforts to win the war - that was in 1942 - the United States is not bound to oppose activities of the Communist party." Chairman Jenner put this into the record in what was described as minutes of a Navy meeting. He said the record will be changed if the Navy differs with the minutes.

Retired Rear Admiral Staton said that during the war, Adlai Stevenson, then an aide to Secretary Knox, told Staton "I don't think we should be too hard on Communists "who were radio operators in the merchant marine. Stevenson today described this as an old story - answered during the 1952 campaign and fully explained at the time.

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee today introduced a bill to cut excise taxes almost one billion dollars a year. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey says this is "more than the Treasury can afford" at the present time - although he favors "selective reductions" of some sales taxes. Earlier, the committee approved a Presidential request and voted to continue the present 52 percent corporation income tax rate for another year.

The State Department announces the resignation of Arthur Dean as Secretary of State Dulles' deputy to the Korean peace conference. Dean says he had to quit because of the pressure of personal business.

And the United Nations was told today by its truce chief in Palestine that tension has increased along the Israel-Jordan border and joint patrols should be assigned to lessen the danger of an explosion.

In three great regions of the world vital American interests are at stake - Europe, Asia and Latin-America. The Berlin Conference has just emphasized the gravity of the European problem; the approaching Geneva Conference does not appear now to offer a much greater hope of agreement than Berlin. The All-American Conference now meeting in Caracas presents a contrast. No one at Caracas challenges free world power or American responsibility for the defense of the free world. For this reason the meeting ought to be a pleasant interlude, a kind of American holiday from old world and Asian worries.

But it is not being held in a holiday mood and the difference between Caracas, on the one hand, and Berlin and Geneva on the other, is really one of degree. In degree it is a big difference, but at the root of things, the same basic problem exists, the question of ultimate communist power.

What the United States wants at Caracas is a united Front against Communist infiltration, in particular a condemnation of the state of affairs in Guatemala. Before and during World War II, the united front against the Nazis was not difficult to set up. The resistance to a united front against communism is disconcertingly stubborn, though not because Latin Americans like Communism. It is highly unlikely that a resolution criticizing Guatemala by name will be adopted at Caracas. The reason is that another and older issue is involved - intervention. If All-American solidarity is to continue it can be only through the maintenance of the principle that nations do not meddle in the domestic affairs of other nations.

There would be mighty little actual intervention in a resolution telling off the pro-Communist inclinations of the Guatemala regime. But the very mention of internal affairs tastes of intervention to Latin Americans. And not until Communism appears to them to be a much more acute danger will they rate it ahead of intervention.

One of the dangers of Communism in Latin America is the very fact that it doesn't look dangerous at this stage. Latin America is the natural breeding ground for social and political extremism. Here are countries where the disparity between great wealth and great poverty is glaring. In all of them there has been a history of grinding economic exploitation. Capitalism and government have only recently come to acknowledge enlightened social and economic responsibilities. The United States draws to it the same kind of unpopularity that the strong and the weel-to-do proverbially inspire in those weaker and poorer. So this is a happy hunting ground for Soviet intrigue. Its Soviet origins never need to be disclosed. It can always work for plausible and apparently genuinely liberal policies. The more successful it is, the more concealed it can remain. And the United States is history's gift as a target. Taking a long look at the future, it may be doubted whether Europe or Asia would create dangers more sinister to the United States than a far-flung communist infiltration in Latin America. And one may be sure that this is the teaching communist conspirators receive in their indoctrination in the Soviet Union. If Secretary Dulles is not to get at Caracas a resolution criticizing the Guatemalan regime by name, how can he work for more effective solidarity? This is a question which Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, has already answered in the report he brought home from his recent Latin-American tour. There are other ways to build up solidarity. They are economic and cultural, they include a helpful interest in how Latin-Americans deal with their many difficulties. President Peron of Argentina told the correspondent of the New York Times that Dr. Eisenhower's visit marked a real turning point for the better in Argentine relations with the United States. The publication of the report was a big event in Latin America, much bigger, of course, than in Washington. But since then little has been done to implement it. Harold Stassen said the report had passed beyond the status of being a recommendation and had become a policy. But Latin Americans see few signs of it. One of the issues to be discussed at Caracas is that of prices.During the war we paid through the nose for Latin American materials because we needed them so badly. Now we don't, and prices are off, coffee excepted. The Latin Americans naturally like a free rein of economic forces when it works in their favor. But they also want the protection of minimum prices for primary products that are essential.

It has been said that their attitude toward prices is formed in the knowledge that the copper and nitrate miners of Chile, the tin miners in Bolivia and the oil workers in Venezuela are as much part of the American economy as the coal miners of Pennsylvania or the oil workers of Oklahoma. They know it, but does the United States Senate and House of Representatives? If so, the Latin Americans think something more specific would come of the Milton Eisenhower report. The basis for solidarity is there, and it is not necessary to forge it on the anvil of anti-Communism. If the United States sees the communist menace more clearly than do Latin Americans, it can also see that Communism is to be held off by greater concern for Latin America's economic and social problems. This time the cry isn't for huge government loans or grants in aid. It is, above all, for attention.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Because we are a rich and powerful nation, we are apt at times to forget that this is a world in which we can't go it alone. And as John Clarke remarked some 3-hundred years ago: "You often must ask your neighbor if you shall live in peace." However we may regard the Latin-American countries, the Roman Horace was right when he said: "Your own property is at stake when your neighbor's house is on fire."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Republican Representative Bentley of Michigan is now given a fifty-fifty chance to survive the wound inflicted yesterday by Puerto Rican nationalists. Dr. George Creel, a Cleveland surgeon, says Bentley has improved slightly, a bullet went through his chest, lung, diaphram, liver and stomach. The four other Congressmen who were hit are all doing well. Puerto Rico's Governor Luis Munoz Marin flew to Washington today to tell the President that all of his people protest "this outrage." And he was given a standing ovation when he walked onto the floor of the House with Speaker Martin.

Martin told reporters the four Puerto Ricans now being held on charges of assault with intent to kill are "undoubtedly Communists." And the New York employer of the woman being held says the FBI had her under surveillance, as a subversive. New York police say they found "quantities" of Communist literature in the apartment of one of the men being held.

Civil Service Commission Chairman Philip Young today told Senators that of the 24-hundred persons removed from government jobs as security risks 383 had something of a subversive nature in their case files. But Young added: he doesn't know whether a single one of these 383 was fired for disloyalty, subversion or Communism. He has no way of finding out whether subversion was a controlling factor in their dismissal. He doesn't know how many of them were notified that there was subversive information in their files. And he acknowledges that some of the 383 may have been dismissed for other reasons or resigned.

Republican National Chairman Hall called on the President today and th told reporters: He cannot go along with Senator McCarthy when McCarthy "attacks persons fighting Communism just as he is." Hall says he does not think anyone should say "Generals in our army are not fighting Communism." He thinks all the incidents arising out of the Senator's argument with Army Secretary Stevens "thro

a fog around the President's program which is one of the finest ever presented by a President." He thinks what he called "these little offshoots" draw the people's attention away from the program. Hall was reminded that several weeks ago he described McCarthy as an asset to his party. He acknowledged that and added: "I don't like the situation as it developed last week."

Defense Secretary Wilson returned to Washington from a Florida vacation and described the McCarthy-Stevens row as "a lot of wind to blow up over one left-wing dentist" - a reference to former Major Peress who was given an honorable discharge from the army after refusing to answer loyalty questions before the McCarthy committee.

And Senator McCarthy said he's about ready "to declare a moratorium on these statements back and forth." And he announced a second postponement of a meeting with Secretary Stevens. McCarthy says he's asked the State Department to explain why it took away the right to hire and fire employees from Security Chief McCleod.

A Senate Internal Security subcommittee was told today that former Navy Secretary Knox once said that former President Roosevelt said: "Considering the fact that we are allies of Russia and the Communist party of the United States is bending its efforts to win the war - that was in 1942 - the United States is not bound to oppose activities of the Communist party." Chairman Jenner put this into the record in what was described as minutes of a Navy meeting. He said the record will be changed if the Navy differs with the minutes.

Retired Rear Admiral Staton said that during the war, Adlai Stevenson, then an aide to Secretary Knox, told Staton "I don't think we should be too hard on Communists "who were radio operators in the merchant marine. Stevenson today described this as an old story - answered during the 1952 campaign and fully explained at the time.

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee today introduced a bill to cut excise taxes almost one billion dollars a year. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey says this is "more than the Treasury can afford" at the present time - although he favors "selective reductions" of some sales taxes. Earlier, the committee approved a Presidential request and voted to continue the present 52 percent corporation income tax rate for another year.

The State Department announces the resignation of Arthur Dean as Secretary of State Dulles' deputy to the Korean peace conference. Dean says he had to quit because of the pressure of personal business.

And the United Nations was told today by its truce chief in Palestine that tension has increased along the Israel-Jordan border and joint patrols should be assigned to lessen the danger of an explosion.

In three great regions of the world vital American interests are at stake - Europe, Asia and Latin-America. The Berlin Conference has just emphasized the gravity of the European problem; the approaching Geneva Conference does not appear now to offer a much greater hope of agreement than Berlin. The All-American Conference now meeting in Caracas presents a contrast. No one at Caracas challenges free world power or American responsibility for the defense of the free world. For this reason the meeting ought to be a pleasant interlude, a kind of American holiday from old world and Asian worries.

But it is not being held in a holiday mood and the difference between Caracas, on the one hand, and Berlin and Geneva on the other, is really one of degree. In degree it is a big difference, but at the root of things, the same basic problem exists, the question of ultimate communist power.

What the United States wants at Caracas is a united Front against Communist infiltration, in particular a condemnation of the state of affairs in Guatemala. Before and during World War II, the united front against the Nazis was not difficult to set up. The resistance to a united front against communism is disconcertingly stubborn, though not because Latin Americans like Communism. It is highly unlikely that a resolution criticizing Guatemala by name will be adopted at Caracas. The reason is that another and older issue is involved - intervention. If All-American solidarity is to continue it can be only through the maintenance of the principle that nations do not meddle in the domestic affairs of other nation

There would be mighty little actual intervention in a resolution telling off the pro-Communist inclinations of the Guatemala regime. But the very mention of internal affairs tastes of intervention to Latin Americans. And not until Communism appears to them to be a much more acute danger will they rate it ahead of intervention.

One of the dangers of Communism in Latin America is the very fact that it doesn't look dangerous at this stage. Latin America is the natural breeding ground for social and political extremism. Here are countries where the disparity between great wealth and great poverty is glaring. In all of them there has been a history of grinding economic exploitation. Capitalism and government have only recetly come to acknosledge enlightened social and economic responsibilities. The United States draws to it the same kind of unpopularity that the strong and the well-to-do proverbially inspire in those weaker and poorer. So this is a happy hunting ground for Soviet intrigue. Its Soviet origins never need to be disclosed. It can always work for plausible and apparently genuinely liberal policies. The more successful it is, the more concealed it can remain. And the United States is history's gift as a target. Taking a long look at the future, it may be doubted whether Europe or Asia would create dangers more sinister to the United States than a far-flung communist infiltration in Latin America. And one may be sure that this is the teaching communist conspirators receive in their indoctrination in the Soviet Union. If Secretary Dulles is not to get at Caracas a resolution criticizing the Guatemalan regime by name, how can he work for more effective solidarity? This is a question which Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, has already answere in the report he brought home from his recent Latin-American tour. There are other ways to build up solidarity. They are economic and cultural, they include a helpful interest in how Latin-Americans deal with their many difficulties. President Peron of Argentina told the correspondent of the New York Times that Dr. Eisenhower's visit marked a real turning point for the better in Argentine relations with the United States. The publication of the report was a big event in Latin America, much bigger, of course, than in Washington. But since then little has been done to implement it. Harold Stassen said the report had passed beyond the status of being a recommendation and had become a policy. But Latin Americans see few signs of it. One of the issues to be discussed at Caracas is that of prices. During the war we paid through the nose for Latin American materials because we needed them so badly. Now we don't, and prices are off, coffee excepted. The Latin Americans naturally like a free rein of economic forces when it works in their favor. But they also want the protection of minimum prices for primary products that are essential.

It has been said that their attitude toward prices is formed in the knowledge that the copper and nitrate miners of Chile, the tin miners in Bolivia and the oil workers in Venezuela are as much part of the American economy as the coal miners of Pennsylvania or the oil workers of Oklahoma. They know it, but does the United States Senate and House of Representatives? If so, the Latin Americans think something more specific would come of the Milton Eisenhower report. The basis for solidarity is there, and it is not necessary to forge it on the anvil of anti-Communism. If the United States sees the communist menace more clearly than do Latin Americans, it can also see that Communism is to be held off by greater concern for Latin America's economic and social problems. This time the cry isn't for huge government loans or grants in aid. It is, above all, for attention.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Because we are a rich and powerful nation, we are apt at times to forget that this is a world in which we can't go it alone. And as John Clarke remarked some 3-hundred years ago: "You often must ask your neighbor if you shall live in peace." However we may regard the Latin-American countries, the Roman Horace was right when he said: "Your own property is at stake when your neighbor's house is on fire."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Mar. 3, 1954

This is the news:

At his news conference today, the President permitted the recording of this statement:

> (runs... ending
>
> the basic dedication of every American to the preservation and advancement of America's safety, prosperity and well-being.

An hour later, Senator McCarthy commented on the President's views in this recorded statement:

> (runs....
>
> ending:.."in the government was finally dug out of the dark recesses and exposed to public view."

[redacted]

At [redacted] the [redacted] very [redacted] that the Senate [redacted] proposed [redacted]

At the President's news conference he was asked to comment on McCarthy's demand to know why [redacted] Secretary of State Dulles stripped his Security Officer Scott McLeod of his authority to hire and fire. Mr. Eisenhower said: the responsibility for administrative assignments within a department is the sole responsibility of the head of the department and no one else.

Mc Carthy says his committee has the duty "to check closely" on the McCloud matter.

Aside from Senator Mc Carthy.. the President told reporters he is very pleased that the Senate has laid aside proposed constiutional amendments to limit the treaty-making powers of the President.

And he called the shooting of five Representatives by Puerto Rican terrorists "a tragic event."

amendments limiting the President's treaty-making powers. Now, he said, the Senate can devote its time to concrete action on his legislative program. Mr. Eisenhower [illegible] the wounding of five representatives by Puerto Rican terrorists was a tragic event.

The four fanatics accused of doing the shooting today were indicted on ten charges each of assault with intent to kill and assault with a dangerous weapon. "Casualty Hospital" reports that Representative Bentley, the most seriously wounded, has been taken off the critical list. But he is still considered "seriously ill."

The United Press says it has "private advices from San Juan" that Monday's shooting was part of a plot to overthrow this government by the assasination of the President, Secretary of State Dulles and F.B.I. Chief Hoover.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted today to cut the excise taxes on jewelry, cosemtics, admission tickets, furs, travel tickets and other items. This would cost the government almost one billion dollars a year. The Administration opposes the reduction.

The House Labor committee has voted to give the federal courts, rather than the National Labor Relations Board, the power to hear unfair practises cases. Chairman McConnel says this would have the effect of putting the N.L.R .B. "out of business."

3

Ambassador Lodge..our chief representative to the United Nations told a Senate committee today:"If anybody sucked anybody into the Korean war, it was the United States which sucked in the U.N., and quite rightly." Lodge defended the American decision to fight Communist aggression in Korea.

In Indo-China, Ho Chi-Minh, the leader of the Communist forces, today accused the United States of "taking another step towards direct intervention" in the Indo-Chinese war. He said we are allowing our air force "to participate in the massacre of the population." This was HIS REACTION [redacted] to the air force ground technicians who are helping the French maintain their planes.

The French report that the Vietminh are stepping up their attacks in the Red River Delta area. The French say they suffered "some [redacted] losses" at half a dozen key defense points.

The current controversey over the conduct of Congressional hearings would seem to be coming to a head. We have been hearing much about rights, privleges and fair play. But all of this adds up to what Junius said many centuries ago: "Integrity in men is measured by their conduct". Henry Ward Beecher once put it another way when he remarked:"One may be better than his reputation but never better than his principles."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

At his news conference today, the President permitted the recording of this statement:

PRESIDENT: 1. The Department of the Army made serious errors in handling the Peress case and the Secretary of the Army so stated publicly, almost a month ago.

2. The Army is correcting its procedures to avoid such mistakes in the future. I am completely confident that Secretary Stevens will be successful in this effort.

3. Neither in this case, nor in any other, has any person in the Executive Branch been authorized to suggest that any subordinate, for any reason whatsoever, violate his convictions or principles or submit to any kind of personal humiliation when testifying before Congressional committees or elsewhere. In a more general sense I have certain observations to make. They are:

1. We must be unceasingly vigilant in every phase of governmental activity to make certain that there is no subversive penetration.

2. In opposing communism, we are defeating ourselves if either by design or through carelessness, we use methods that do not conform to the American sense of justice and fair play.

3. The conscience of America will clearly discern when we are exercising proper vigilance without being unfair. That conscience is reflected in the body of the United States Congress. We can be certain that its members will respond to America's convictions and beliefs in this regard. Here I must repeat something that I have often stated before. The ultimate responsibility for the conduct of all parts of the Executive Branch of the Government rests with the President of the United States. That responsibility cannot be delegated to another branch of government. It is, of course, likewise the responsibility of the President and his associates to account for their stewardship of public affairs. All of us recognize the right of the people to know how we are meeting this responsibility and the Congressional right to inquire and investigate into every phase of our public operations. Manifestly, in a government such as ours, successful service to 160,000,000 people demands a true spirit of cooperation among the several branches of government, especially between the Executive and the Legislative Branches. Real cooperation is possible only in an atmosphere of mutual respect. I spent many years in the army, during the course of which I sometimes appeared before committees of the Congress. Sometimes I was a direct witness, and more often, in my early years at least, I was merely a so-called technical assistant to the man testifying. In all that time I never saw any individual of the Army fail to render due and complete respect to every member of Congress with whom duty brought him in contact. In all that time I never saw any member of Congress guilty of disrespect toward the public servants who are appearing before him. In the tradition of such mutual respect I grew up in the governmental service. It is that tradition that I intend that the Executive Branch will observe and apply as long as I hold my present office. I have only a few additional comments. They are made in the belief that they conform to the conscience of the American people and to our understanding of justice, right and governmental responsibility. FIRST, all of know that our military services and their leaders have always been completely loyaland dedicated public servants, singularly free of suspicion of disloyalty. Their courage and their devotion have been proved in peace as well as on the battlefields of war. America is proud of them. I am certain that no one in any governmental position wants to have his own utterances interpreted as questioning the lasting debt that all of us Americans owe to the officers and enlisted men and women of the armed services. In this tribute to the services, I mean to include General Zwicker, who was decorated for gallantry in the field. SECOND, except where the interests of the nation demand otherwise, every governmental employee in the Executive Branch, whether civilian or in the armed forces, is expected to respond cheerfully and completely to requests of the Congress and its several committee. In doing so it is, of course, assumed that they will be accorded the same respect and courtesy that I require that they show to the members of the legislative body. Officials in the Executive Branch of the Government will have my unqualified support in insisting that employees in the Executive Branch who appear before any type of executive of Congressional investigat body be treated fairly. THIRD, Obviously, it is the responsibility of the Congress to see to it that its procedures are proper and fair. I, of course, expect the Republican membership of the Congress to assume the primary responsibility in this respect, since they are of the majority party and, therefore, control the committees. I am glad to state that Senator Knowland has reported to me that effective steps are being taken by the Republican leadership to set up codes of fair procedures. FOURTH, There are problems facing this nation today of vital importance. They are both foreign and domestic in character. They affect the individual and collective future of all of us. The views of myself and my associates on these matters have been outlined in the proposals on legislation we have submitted to the Congress. They deserve the undivided and incessant attention of the Congress, of the Executive Branch, of the public information media of our nation, of our schools, and even of our churches. I regard it as unfortunate when we are diverted from these grave problems - of which one is vigilance against any kind of internal subversion - through disregard of the standards of fair play recognized by the American people. These incidents are all the more useless and unfortunate in view of the basic dedication in every loayl American to the preservation and advancement of America's safety, prosperity and well-being.

MURROW: An hour later Senator McCarthy commented on the President's views in this recorded statement:

MCCARTHY: It is important to remember that this silly tempest in a teapot arose because we dared to bring to light the cold, unpleasant facts about a Fifth Amendment Communist officer who was promoted, given special immunity from duty outside the United States, and finally given an honorable discharge with the full knowledge of all concerned that he was a member of the Communist party. It now appears that for some reason he was a sacred cow of certain Army brass. A continued exchange of statements about our exposure of this Fifth Amendment Communist Army officer is worse than ridiculous. I stated last night that I will no further take part in this pointless waste of time. Rather I shall spend my time in action - in the continued exposure of those who are dedicated to the Communist enslavement of the world. If a stupid, arrogant or witless man in a position of power appears before our committee and is found aiding the Communist party, he will be exposed. The fact that he might be a general places him in no special class so far as I am concerned. Apparently the President and I agree on the necessity of getting rid of Communists. We apparently disagree only on how we should handle those who protect Communists. I hope that the President realizes the reason for the gleeful shouting of every un-American element over what they consider a fight between those who honestly oppose Communism. I think that their joy will be shortlived. When the shouting and the tumult dies, the American people and the President will realize that this unprecedented mudslinging against the committee by extreme Left Wing elements of the press and radio was caused because another Fifth Amendment Communist in Government was finally dug out of the dark recesses and exposed to public view.

MURROW: At the President's news conference he was asked to comment on McCarthy's demand to know why Secretary of State Dulles stripped his Security Officer Scott McLeod of his authority to hire and fire. Mr. Eisenhower said: the responsibility for administrative assignments within a department is the sole responsibility of the head of the department and no one else. McCarthy says his committee has the duty to check closely on the McCleod matter. Aside from Senator McCarthy, the President told reporters he is very pleased that the Senate has laid aside proposed constitutional amendments to limit the treaty-making powers of the President.

And he called the shooting of five Representatives by Puerto Rican terrorists "a tragic event." The four fanatics accused of doing the shooting today were indicted on ten charges each of assault with intent to kill and assault with a dangerous weapon." Casualty hospital reports that Representative Bentley, the most seriously wounded, has been taken off the critical list. But he is still considered "seriously ill."

The United Press says it has "private advices from San Juan" that Monday's shooting was part of a plot to overthrow this government by the assassination of the President, Secretary of State Dulles and FBI Chief Hoover.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted today to cut the excise taxes on jewelry, cosmetics, admission tickets, furs, travel tickets and other items. This would cost the government almost one billion dollars a year. The Administration opposes the reduction.

The House Labor committee has voted to give the federal courts, rather than the National Labor Relations Board, the power to hear unfair practices cases. Chairman McConnell says this would have the effect of putting the NLRB "out of business."

Ambassador Lodge, our chief representative to the United Nations told a Senate committee today: "If anybody sucked anybody into the Korean war, it was the United States which sucked in the U.N. and quite rightly." Lodge defended the American decision to fight Communist aggression in Korea. In Indo-China, Ho Chi-Minh, the leader of the Communist forces, today accused the United States of "taking another step towards direct intervention" in the Indo-Chinese war. He said we are allowing our air force "to participate in the massacre of the population." This was his reaction to the air force ground technicians who are helping the French maintain their planes.

The French report that the Vietminh are stepping up their attacks in the Red River Delta area. The French say they suffered "some losses" at half a dozen key defense points.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The current controversy over the conduct of Congressional hearings would see to be coming to a head. We have been hearing much about rights, privileges and fair play. But all of this adds up to what Junius said many centuries ago: "Integrity in men is measured by their conduct." Henry Ward Beecher once put it another way when he remarked: "One may be better than his reputation but never better than his principles."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday March 4, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told delegates to the Inter-American Conference in Venezuela today: the time has come for the Latin American nations to join with us, in a "clear and final warning" to the Russians, to keep away from this hemisphere. Mr. Dulles said that the Americas are not immune from the threat of Soviet Communism... that the death of Stalin has produced no basic change in Russian policies...and any attempt by the Russians, to establish colonies in this area of the world, must be regarded as a "threat to the peace."

Mr. Dulles noted:"There is no place here, for political institutions which serve alien masters."/He said he "hoped" agreement could be reached by the delegates to make this point obvious and clear.

Tonight, Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov released a statement on the anniversary of the death of Stalin./In it, he said:"The United States is brazenly claiming the leadership of the world."/He compared the North Atlantic Treaty, to the German-Italian-Japanese anti-comintern pact of 1937./He predicted that Nato would be no more successful, than was the anti-comintern arrangement.

In Britain, Sir Winston Churchill said tonight that with the coming of summer, the people of Britain will see the end of ALL rationing. Earlier in the day, it was made known that the British are in the midst of building a "powerful force of bombers, designed to carry atomic weapons." Parliamentary Air Secretary George Ward, said the program was being undertaken to, "guarantee peace by impressing any potential enemy with the suicidal folly of aggression."

In this country, Secretary of Defense Wilson told newsmen today, that the idea that the army is coddling Communists is "just damn tommyrot." He acknowledged that he had not read the Zwicker-McCarthy testimony but added: "There's a general impression that Zwicker was not treated as courtesously as he is entitled to be." Wilson said he believed Communists could be sifted out of the army without special legislation, if this becomes necessary. He thinks some sort of law in this direction might be helpful. Wilson said the Army Secretary Stevens is "technically responsible" for the tardiness in ousting Major Peress. But Wilson sees no reason why Stevens should or would consider resigning.

31.

Senator Mc Carthy, who at first said he would not comment on Wilson's "no coddling" statement, later changed his mind. The Senator said that "nobody was accusing the army as such of coddling. But certain individuals in the army have been been protecting, promoting and covering up known communists." Mc Carthy said he was sure Wilson agreed with him on this point. He hopes they won't have to waste time, he said, arguing about "fifth amendment communists."

The Defense Department today asked Congress for a law under which drafted doctors who refuse to answer loyalty questions could be forced to serve as enlisted men. At present such persons must be commissioned as officers or discharged from the service.

But Senator McCarthy's committee heard today from Private First Class Marvin S. Belsky, a 25--year old doctor. The Senator said Belsky is "a member of the Communist conspiracy." Belsky refused to answer a number of questions under the Fifth Amendment.

The White House says it has received hundreds of telegrams priaising the President's call for fair play in congressional investigations

And Republican Senator Mundt says he believes the controversey between the President and Senator McCarthy "is pretty well simmering down."

Here in New York, Republican Chairman Hall said it is "nonsense" to say that personality clashes have torn the Republican party apart. He said:"On many issues there are degrees of opinion, emphasis and approach. In the tested American way this is only proper. But we are not a divided party."

Democratic Senator McClellan said today he has asked the Army for "a documented, written report" on whether anyone has tried to get special treatment for David Schine, who is a former staff member of the McCarthy committee. Schine, who was recently drafted, is reported to have been given special treatment at Fort Dix where he was first stationed.

Attorney General Brownell says the government is considering the prosecution of the Puerto Rican Nationalist Party, four of whose members shot down five Congressmen on Monday. And a special House security committee has recommended that a seven-foot bullet-proof glass partition be erected around the visitors gallery. The committee also suggests that Congress abolish its present patronage police force and create a new force of trained career officers.

The president today named J. Earnest Wilkins, a Negro, to be assistant secretary of labor. Wilkins is a former president of the Cook County Bar Association. White House Secretary Hagerty says this is the first time a Negro has been named to a sub-cabinet post. Hagerty says he knows of no experience Wilkins may have had with labor matters.

Republican Senator Bricker charges that proposals to curb the President's treaty-making powers were defeated because of "furious lobbying of White House and State Department aides." He says the fight TO AMEND THE CONSTITUTION has only begun..and will be won. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: March 4, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

In Paris, there is in progress a dramatic and crucial race against the diplomatic clock. The objective is to settle the question of the future of the Saar, and get the French to ratify the European Army Plan, and to get all this done before the conference on Far Eastern affairs opens in Geneva on April 26th. This is not just a French or a Franco-German plan or maneuver. We are in it, and so are the British.

There does exist a plan for the settlement of the Saar. Chancellor Adenauer and French Foreign Minister Bidault will meet in Paris to talk about it next Tuesday. The two men have already reached virtual agreement on the broad outlines of a settlement. So it appears possible that one French condition that must be met before the European Army Plan can be ratified will in fact be met. But the French have other conditions. They want an undertaking from us, re-emphasizing our determination to remain loyal to our NATO commitments, that we consider our obligations to be of indefinite duration; and that we won't at some future time pull out, and leave the French at the mercy of a re-armed Germany. We have privately assured the French that such a declaration will be forthcoming, and it will be timed to have the greatest possible effect on the debate in the Chamber of Deputies. The French demand similar assurances and a closer association between the European Army and the British. And here again the British have promised that such an undertaking will be given.

Another indication of combined pressure and assurance for the French is the action of the Belgian Government to ratify the European Army Plan next week. This will have some influence in strengthening the hands of those Frenchmen who are urging ratification of the plan. So what is happening in Paris is that German, American and British diplomats are combining in one big heave to try to get the European Army Plan out of the deep French political rut.

Of course nothing can be done about this until French Premier Laniel asks his Parliament to set a date to start debating the issue. Many times in the past he has given private assurances of his intentions to do so, and then changed his mind at the last minute. He may do so again. But this time the clock is running, and powerful French politicians such as Bidault, Reynaud, Pinay and Pleven have decided to try to force Laniel's hand. If the settlement on the Saar is reached; if the assurances are given by this country and by Britain, the French conditions will have been met, and the betting will be about even that the European Army Plan will go through before everybody sits down with the Russians, Chinese Communists and all the rest at Geneva.

Tomorrow the French Assembly begins debating the Indo-Chinese war. It's been going on for almost eight years. Both the parliament and the public want to end it, but no one knows how. The last suggestion was made by India's Prime Minister Nehru, who merely said that he thought it would be a good idea if somebody would arrange a cease fire, but that India did not propose to take any formal action to bring it about. The French Government is not expected to reject in advance the suggestion for a cease fire; but the French will insist upon some formal proposal and on guarantees to protect the French forces and civilian residents in Indo-China. The French will not take the initiative in asking for peace or a cease fire. If the rebel leader, Ho-Chi-Minh, asks for a cease fire it will be considered. The French are basing their major hopes for peace in Indo-China on the Geneva Conference, but the government can't afford to tell the public that it would refuse a cease fire offer if the rebels make one. # The French are still inclined to think that the best chance of getting peace in Indo-China is to persuade the Chinese Communists to stop sending aid to Ho-Chi-Minh. But the Chinese would want a heavy price for deserting Ho, at least recognition of Red China, and a vast increase of trade with the West. These things the French would be prepared to grant, but they know that we wouldn't. They have hopes that Ho-Chi-Minh might turn out to be another Tito, and that if they could get the fighting stopped, some sort of coalition government might be formed.

All of this adds up to at least one thing, and that is that Mr. Dulles at Geneva will face a far more formidable task than at either Berlin or Caracas. The stresses on Western unity will be more considerable, and Mr. Dulles's area for maneuver and negotiation will be strictly limited by considerations of domestic politics.

Abraham Lincoln once set forth a pretty good code for international dealings when he said:"If you would win a man to your cause, first convince him that you are his true friend. Therein is a drop of honey that catches his heart, which is the greatest high-road to his reason. Once this is gained, you will find little trouble in convinsing his judgement of the justice of your cause."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told delegates to the Inter-American Conference in Venezuela today: the time has come for the Latin American nations to join with us in a "clear and final warning" to the Russians to keep away from this hemisphere. Mr. Dulles said that the Americas are not immune from the threat of Soviet Communism - that the death of Stalin has produced no basic change in Russian policies - and any attempt by the Russians to establish colonies in this area of the world must be reharded as a "threat to the peace."

Mr. Dulles noted: "There is no place here for political institutions which serve alien masters." He said he "hoped" agreement could be reached by the delegates to make this point obvious and clear.

Tonight, Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov released a statement on the anniversary of the death of Stalin. In it, he said: "The United States is brazenly claiming the leadership of the world." He compared the North Atlantic Treaty to the German-Italian-Janpanese anti-comintern pact of 1937. He predicted that NATO would be no more successful than was the anti-comintern arrangement.

In Britain, Sir Winston Churchill said tonight that with the coming of summer the people of Britain will see the end of all rationing. Earlier in the day, it was made known that the British are in the midst of building a "powerful force of bombers designed to carry atomic weapons." Parliamentary Air Secretary George Ward said the program was being undertaken to "guarantee peace by impressing sny potential enemy with the suicidal folly of aggression."

In this country, Secretary of Defense Wilson told newsmen today that the idea that the army is coddling Communists is "just damn tommyrot." He acknowledged that he had not read the Zwicker-McCarthy testimony but added: "There's a general impression that Zwicker was not treated as courteously as he is entitled to be." Wilson said he believed Communists could be sifted out of the army without special legislation if this becomes necessary. He thinks some sort of law in this direction might be helpful. Wilson said the Army Secretary Stevens is "technically responsible" for the tardiness in ousting Major Peress. But Wilson sees no reason why Stevens should or would consider resigning.

Senator McCarthy, who at first said he would not comment on Wilson's "no coddling" statement, later changed his mind. The Senator said that "nobody was accusing the army as such of coddling. But certain individuals in the Army have been protecting, promoting and covering up known communists." McCarthy said he was sure Wilson agreed with him on this point. He hopes they won't have to waste time, he said, arguing about "fifth amendment communists."

The Defense Department today asked Congress for a law under which drafted doctors who refuse to answer loyalty questions could be forced to serve as enlisted men. At present such persons must be commissioned as officers or discharged from the service. But Senator McCarthy's committee heard today from Private First Class Marvin S. Belsky, a 25-year old doctor. The Senator said Belsky is "a member of the Communist conspiracy." Belsky refused to answer a number of questions under the Fifth Amendment.

The White House says it has received hundreds of telegrams praising the President's call for fair play in congressional investigations.

And Republican Senator Mundt says he believes the controversey between the President and Senator McCarthy "is pretty well simmering down."

Here in New York, Republican Chairman Hall said it is "nonsense" to say that personality clashes have torn the Republican party apart. He said: "In many issues there are degrees of opinion, emphasis and approach. In the tested American way this is only proper. But we are not a divided party."

Democratic Senator McClellan said today he has asked the Army for "a documented, written report" on whether anyone has tried to get special treatment for David Schine who is a former staff member of the McCarthy committee. Schine, who was recently drafted, is reported to have been given special treatment at Fort Dix where he was first stationed.

Attorney General Brownell says the government is considering the prosecution of the Puerto Rican Nationalist Party, four of whose members shot down five Congressmen on Monday. And a special House security committee has recommended that a seven-foot bullet-proff glass partition be erected around the visitors gallery. The committee also suggests that Congress abolish its present patronage police force and create a new force of trained career officers.

The President today named J. Earnest Wilkins, a Negro, to be assistant secretary of labor. Wilkins is a former president of the Cook County Bar Association. White House Secretary Hagerty says this is the first time a Negro has been named to a sub-cabinet post. Hagerty says he knows of no experience Wilkins may have had with labor matters.

Republican Senator Bricker charges that proposals to curb the President's treaty-making powers were defeated because of "furious lobbying of White House and State Department aides." He says the fight to amend the Constitution has only begun and will be won.

In Paris, there is in progress a dramatic and crucial race against the diplomatic clock. The objective is to settle the question of the future of the Saar, and get the French to ratify the European Army Plan, and to get all this done before the conference on Far Eastern affairs opens in Geneva on April 26th. This is not just a French or a Franco-German plan or maneuver. We are in it, and so are the British.

There does exist a plan for the settlement of the Saar. Chancellor Adenauer and French Foreign Minister Bidault will meet in Paris to talk about it next Tuesday. The two men have already reached virtual agreement on the broad outlines of a settlement. So it appears possible that one French condition that must be met before the European Army Plan can be ratified will in fact be met. But the French have other conditions. They want an undertaking from us re-emphasizing our determination to remain loyal to our NATO commitments, that we consider our obligations to be of indefinite duration; and that we won't at some future time pull out and leave the Frenchat the mercy of a re-armed Germany. We have privately assured the French that such a declaration will be forthcoming, and it will be timed to have the greatest possible effect on the debate in the Chamber of Deputies. The French demand similar assurances and a closer association between the European Army and the British. And here again the British have promised that such an undertaking will be given.

Another indication of combined pressure and assurance for the French is the action of the Belgian Government to ratify the European Army Plan next week. This will have some influence in strengthening the hands of those Frenchmen who are urging ratification of the plan. So what is happening in Paris is that German, American and British diplomats are combining in one big heave to try to get the European Army Plan out of the deep French political rut.

Of course nothing can be done about this until French Premier Laniel asks his Parliament to set a date to start debating the issue. Many times in the past he has given private assurances of his intentions to do so, and then changed his mind at the last minute. He may do so again. But this time the clock is running, and powerful French politicians such as Bidault, Reynaud, Pinay and Pleven have decided to try to force Laniel's hand. If the settlement on the Saar is reached; if the assurances are given by this country and by Britain, the French conditions will have been met, and the betting will be about even that the European Army Plan will go through before everybody sits down with the Russians, Chinese Communists and all the rest at Geneva.

Tomorrow the French Assembly begins debating the Indo-Chinese war. It's been going on for almost eight years. Both the parliament and the public want to end it, but no one knows how. The last suggestion was made by India's Prime Minister Nehru, who merely said that he thought it would be a good idea if somebody would arrange a cease fire, but that India did not propose to take any formal action to bring it about. The French Government is not expected to reject in advance the suggestion for a cease fire; but the French will insist upon some formal proposal and on guarantees to protect the French forces and civilian residents in Indo-China. The French will not take the initiative in asking for peace or a cease fire. If the rebel leader, Ho-Chi-Minh, asks for a cease fire it will be considered. The French are basing their major hopes for peace in Indo-China on the Geneva Conference but the government can't afford to tell the public that it would refuse a cease fire offer if the rebels make one. The French are still inclined to think that the best chance of getting peace in Indo-China is to persuade the Chinese Communists to stop sending aid to Ho-Chi-Minh. But the Chinese would want a heavy price for deserting Ho, - at least recognition of Red China, and a vast increase of trade with the West. These things the French would be prepared to grant, but they know that we wouldn't. They have hopes that Ho-Chi-Minh might turn out to be another Tito, and t at if they could get the fighting stopped, some sort of coalition government might be formed. All of this adds up to at least one thing, and that is that Mr. Dulles at Geneva will face a far more formidable task than at either Berlin or Caracas. The stresses on Western unity will be more considerable, and Mr. Dulles' area for maneuver and negotiation will be strictly limited by considerations of domestic politics.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Abraham Lincoln once set forth a pretty good code for international dealings when he said: "If you would win a man to your cause, first convince him that you are his true friend. Therein is a drop of honey that catches his heart, which is the greatest high-road to his reason. Once this is gained, you will find little trouble in convincing his judgment of the justice of your cause."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Abraham Lincoln once set forth a pretty good code for international dealings when he said: "If you would win a man to your cause, first convince him that you are his true friend. Therein is a drop of honey that catches his heart, which is the greatest highroad to his reason. Once this is gained, you will find little troubl in convincing his judgement of the justice of yourcause." - Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, March 5, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles charged in Venezuela today that Guatemala is trying to disrupt the Inter-American conference. The Secretary issued his statement after the foreign minister of Guetamala charged that a resolution proposed by the United States..to investigate Communist infiltration in this hemisphere... was actually a move to force Latin America back to the policies of the "big stick" and "dollar diplomacy." Mr. Dulles called this an "abusive attack" and evidence that Guatemala opposes a declaration by the conference against Communism. With this, tomorrow's conference meeting was cancelled..to let tempers cool.

In Indo-China today the Communists raided the civil airport at Hanoi.. destroyed or badly damaged at least ten newly refitted C-47 cargo planes.. and then were beaten off by French defenders. The attack crippled the French airlift. It was the boldest raid of the war.

In Paris, Premier Laniel says all France wants to negotiate a settlement of the Indo-China war. The French will accept reasonable proposals, if the rebels evacuate their troops from Laos and Cambodia.. and establish a neutral no-man's-land around the Red River delta.

Foreign Aid Chief Stassen said in Washington that we will deliver more than one and a third billion dollars of military aid to Indo China this year.

And the President told Congress that he has ordered that foreign aid be continued to five European nations even though they have shipped more than 6 million dollars worth of strategic materials to Russia and her satellites. The President says it would be detrimental to our security to cut off military and economic aid to the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Norway and Denmark.

In Washington today, John F. Kane, special assistant to Army Secretary Stevens, resigned his job in protest against what he said was the failure of Steven's superiors to support the Secretary in his fight with Senator McCarthy.

And McCarthy dropped a two million dollar libel and slander suit against former Democratic Senator Benton of Connecticut. McCarthy said the suit was dropped because his lawyers could find no one who believed Benton's statement. And Benton, repeating his charge that McCarthy has committed perjury, fraud and calculated deceit on the people says McCarthy dropped the suit because he "refuses to face examination in court."

The McCarthy committee today heard Peter Gragis of Levittown NEW YORK identify himself as a former Communist in a New Jersey electronics labratory. Gragis said he knows nothing about spying at the plant.

Adlai Stevenson--in Miami today--says he is sure that the Army has not coddled Communists "any more than previous democratic administrations ever coddled a single subversive, traitor or spy deliberately.

And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas says he believes the Democrats will win control of Congress this year campaigning on the country's economic condition. He doesn't believe the communists-in-government issue will be effective Republican campaign material.

The four Puerto Ricans who shot five Congressman on Monday today pleaded innocent on assault charges. And the condition of Representative Dently of Michigan..shot by the Puerto Ricans.. is still considered serious.

Here in New York police found nine cases of anti-tank guns... five cases of hand grenades and 25 [redacted] M-1 rifles in a Manhattan building. They arrested two men identified as Cubans.

The Army says it has arrested former prisoner of war Claude Batchelor and charged him with collaborating with the Communists while he was in a Korean prison camp. The government says Batchelor's collaboration with the enemy "caused other American prisoners of war punishment and hardship."

Karl Loos, solicitor for the Agriculture Department, told Senators today that under the Administration's new farm program the President could give away two and a half billion dollars worth of surplus wheat, cotton and dairy products.

An examiner for the Civil Aeronautics Board ruled today that Arthur Godfrey deliberately buzzed the Teterboro, New Jersey, airport control tower last January. The examiner recommended that Godfrey's private pilot certificate be suspended for six months..the maximum possible period. A spokesman for Godfrey says he "respectfully accepts" the suspension decision.

[redacted]

And the president of the Pan American coffee Bureau says we must expect coffee prices to go higher. Senator Frear of Delaware says [redacted] retail prices might hit $1.23 a pound by the end of the year.

Edward R. Murrow: March 5, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

A celebrated bookstore in Baltimore is about to close, and its going calls for more than local notice. It is the Peabody Bookshop, belonging to Siegfried Weisberger, notable as one of the only bookstores in this country that sells alcoholic refreshments, and for the fact that in its beer-room H.L. Mencken used to hold forth to his cronies. But what commands attention is more than this souvenir of the 1920's. It is the reason Mr. Weisberger gives for selling. He has on his shelves 100,000 volumes which he declares nobody wants to read. "The age of the boob is upon us" he asserted, and predicted very dark days for America. "Everyone in the cities used to look up to the doctor, the lawyer, the professor. They were idols" he declared. "Today they all look up to the business man." And he snorted: "People don't want books, ideals and culture. They only want dollars."

A customer of the Weisberger store found the new books out in front; the rare books -(and a notable collection of them)- on shelves in a studio behind this, and the bar and beer room in the rear warmed by an old stone fireplace. Mr. Weisberger is retiring to his Maryland farm and writing a book on Mencken.

Mr. Weisberger's scorn for American reading recalls the old gag about the girl whose boy friend suggested buying her a book for Christmas and who replied: "Don't buy a book; I gotta book." It sent this reporter to the book trade asking questions about America's reading habits. He came upon a number of startling facts. A Gallup poll published last November showed that of those asked if they were reading a book - any book - only seventeen percent said yes. To the same question the year before, eighteen percent said yes, and the year before twenty-one percent. This is not necessarily proof that the age of the boob is upon us. In this country 85 to 90 percent of the adult population reads a daily newspaper, 80 to 85 percent listens for an hour or more a day to the radio. If some of them read less it may be because they have changed over to other media of communication. And it is part of the picture that the reading of magazines is high and that magazines bring much that formerly came only in books.

Even so, there isn't a lot of comfort in the statistics about reading. Those adults at present reading a book in this country were 17 percent. In England where the general level of education is well below ours, the percentage was 55, more than three times as high. In Australia it was 34 percent - twice as high - and in Canada 31 percent. Another startling figure shows that an English child, who stays in school to the age of 14, has read as many books as the average college graduate in this country.

But even this does not necessarily mean a change for the worse in the United States. One needs to know whether the number of volumes published has gone down over the years. And anyone who has thought about this, may say offhand that it can't have gone down, because of the enormous output of paper-backed books. Here are the figures. Twenty-five years ago the total number of volumes published was about 235 million. This fell off in the first recession year to 155 million. Last year it rose to an estimated 800,000,000. But all of the increase cannot be ascribed to the paper-backed books. Last year the total of these was 259 million. Some of the increase in volumes published was in textbooks. But textbooks and paper-backs, and the rise in population all being considered, a great many more books are being published than 25 years ~~XXXX~~ ago. So more are being read.

Well, one must ask, what kind of books? Here I have information only about paper-backed books, but they will do. Novels make up much the greater part, more than double the number of mysteries. Actually mysteries were down last year, though the number of westerns came up almost exactly as much as the mysteries went down. But non-fiction books went up. They were up 5 million over the year before, and 7 million over two years before.

One company reports that its heaviest sale was not of a work of fiction, but a book about baby and child care that sold 4½ million in four years. The next largest sale was a pocket dictionary, the next a cookbook. In four years Shakespeare's tragedies sold 1 million 3 hundred thousand. A pocket book of verse has sold 2 million copies, Homer's Odyssey well over half-a-million.

It comes easy to say that reading has gone off as television has come in. But actually the studies so far made don't bear that out as a permanent trend. In regions where TV is new, reading of books goes off for a while. Then it rises again to its former level.

These figures aren't tested, they are only indicative. Some are encouraging, some discouraging. I leave some discouraging ones to the last. One is that only one college graduate in six was reading a serious book at the time a recent survey was made. And only just over half of the college graduates could name a book they even cared to read.

Another fact is that 10 percent of the public does 70 percent of the reading, paper-backs and all. There always has been some such disparity in this country. The Founding Fathers were fabulous readers, they knew virtually everything that had been written. But the rank and file of their time read little. Today almost all the serious book reading is left to a small segment of the people. And even the light books are read by less than one fourth of the population.

We have been talking of books and reading habits. Several years ago, The President of Yale, Alfred Griswold remarked:"Ours is an age of action, hair-trigger action, and we cannot resign from it. But what is to become of us when action no longer finds inspiration or discipline in thought because thought has not been able to find inspiration or discipline in books."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles charged in Venezuela today that Guatemala is trying to disrupt the Inter-American conference. The Secretary issued his statement after the foreign minister of Guatamala charged that a resolution proposed by the United States to investigate Communist infiltration in this hemisphere was actually a move to force Latin America back to the policies of the "big stick" and "dollar diplomacy." Mr. Dulles called this an "abusive attack" and evidence that Guatemala opposes a declaration by the conference against Communism. With this, tomorrow's conference meeting was cancelled to let tempers cool.

In Indo-China today the Communists raided the civil airport at Hanoi - destroyed or badly damaged at least ten newly refitted C-47 cargo planes and then were beaten off by French defenders. The attack crippled the French airlift. It was the boldest raid of the war.

In Paris, Premier Laniel says all France wants to negotiate a settlement of the Indo-China war. The French will accept reasonable proposals if the rebels evacuate their troops from Laos and Cambodia and establish a neutral no-man's-land around the Red River delta. Foreign Aid Chief Stassen said in Washington that we will deliver more than one and a third billion dollars of military aid to Indo China this year.

And the President told Congress that he has ordered that foreign aid be continued to five European nations even though they have shipped more than 6 million dollars worth of strategic materials to Russia and her satellites. The President says it would be detrimental to our security to cut off military and economic aid to the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Norway and Denmark.

In Washington today, John F. Kane, special assistant to Army Secretary Stevens, resigned his job in protest against what he said was the failure of Steven's superiors to support the Secretary in his fight with Senator McCarthy.

And McCarthy dropped a two million dollar libel and slander suit against former Democratic Senator Benton of Connecticut. McCarthy said the suit was dropped because his lawyers could find no one who believed Benton's statement. And Benton, repeating his charge that McCarthy has committed perjury, fraud and calculated deceit on the people, says McCarthy dropped the suit because he "refuses to face examination in court."

The McCarthy committee today heard Peter Gragis of Livittown, New York identify himself as a former Communist in a New Jersey electronics laboratory. Gragis said he knows nothing about spying at the plant.

Adlai Stevenson in Miami today, says he is sure that the Army has not coddled Communists "any more than previous Democratic administrations ever coddled a single subversive, traitor or spy deliberately.

And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas says he believes the Democrats will win control of Congress this year campaigning on the country's economic condition. He doesn't believe the Communists-in-government issue will be effective Republican campaign material.

The four Puerto Ricans who shot five Congressmen on Monday today pleaded innocent on assault charges. And the condition of Representative Bentley of Michigan shot by the Puerto Ricans is still considered serious.

Here in New York, police found nine cases of anti-tank guns five cases of hand grenades and 25 M-1 rifles in a Manhattan building. They arrested two men identified as Cubans.

The Army says it has arrested former prisoner of war Claude Batchelor and charged him with collaborating with the Communists while he was in a Korean prison camp. The government says Batchelor's collaboration with the enemy "caused other American prisoners of war punishment and hardship."

Karl Loos, solicitor for the Agriculture Department, told Senators today that under the Administration's new farm program the President could give away two and a half billion dollars worth of surplus wheat, cotton and dairy products.

And examiner for the Civil Aeronautics Board ruled today that Arthur Godfrey deliberately buzzed the Teterboro, New Jersey, airport control tower last January. The examiner recommended that Godfrey's private pilot certificate be suspended for six months - the maximum possible period. A spokesman for Godfrey says he "respectfully accepts" the suspension decision.

And the president of the Pan American coffee Bureau says we must expect coffee prices to go higher. Senator Frear of Delaware says retail prices might hit $1.23 a pound by the end of the year.

A celebrated bookstore in Baltimore is about to close, and its going calls for more than local notice. It is the Peabody Bookshop, belongin to Siegfried Weisberger, notable asone of the only bookstores in this country that sells alcoholic refreshments, and for the fact that in its beer-room H.L. Mencken used to hold forth to his cronies. But what commands attention is more than this souvenir of the 1920's. It is the reason Mr. Weisberger gives for selling. He has on his shelves 100,000 volumes which he declares nobody wants to read. "The age of the boob is upon us" he asserted, and predicted very dark days for America. "Everyone in the cities used to look up to the doctor, the lawyer, the professor. They were idols" he declared. "Today they all look up to the business man." And he snorted: "People don't want books, ideals and culture. They only want dollars."

A customer of the Weisberger store found the new books out in front; the rare books and a notable collection of them - on shelves in a studio behind this, and the bar and beer room in the rear warmed by an old stone fireplace. Mr. Weisberger is retiring to his Maryland farm and writing a book on Mencken. Mr. Weisberger's scorn for American reading recalls the old gag about the girl whose boy friend suggested buying her a book for Christmas and who replied: "Don't buy a book; I gotta book." It sent this reporter to the book trade asking questions about America's reading habits. He came upon a number of startling facts. A Gallup poll published last November showed that of those asked if they were reading a book - any book - only seventeen percent said yes. To the same question the year before, eighteen percent said yes, and the year before twenty-one percent. This is not necessarily proof that the age of the boob is upon us. In this country

85 to 90 percent of the adult population reads a daily newspaper, 80 to 85 percent listens for an hour or more a day to the radio. If some of them read less it may be because they have changed over to other media of communication. And it is part of the picture that the reading of magazines is high and that magazines bring much that formerly came only in books.

Even so, there isn't a lot of comfort in the statistics about reading. Those adults at present reading a book in this country were 17 percent. In England where the general level of education is well below ours, the percentage was 55, more than three times as high. In Australia it was 34 percent - twice as high - and in Canada 31 percent. Another startling figure shows that an English child who stays in school to the age of 14 has read as many books as the average college graduate in this country.

But even this does not necessarily mean a change for the worse in the United States. One needs to know whether the number of volumes published has gone down over the years. And anyone who has thought about this may say offhand that it can't have gone down because of the enormous output of paper-backed books. Here are the figures. Twenty-five years ago the total number of volumes published was about 235 million. This fell off in the first recession year to 155 million. Last year it rose to an estimated 800,000,000. But all of the increase cannot be ascribed to the paper-backed books. Last year the total of these was 259 million. Some of the increase in volumes published was in textbooks. But textbooks and paperbacks and the rise in population all being considered, a great many more books are being published than 25 years ago. So more are being read.

Well, one must ask, what kind of books? Here I have information only about paper-backed books, but they will do. Novels make up much the greater part, more than double the number of mysteries. Actually mysteries were down last year, though the number of westerns came up almost exactly as much as the mysteries went down. But non-fiction books went up. They were up 5 million over the year before, and 7 million over two years before. One company reports that its heaviest sale was not of a work of fiction, but a book about baby and child care that sold 4½ million in four years. The next largest sale was a pocket dictionary, the next a cookbook. In four years Shakespeare's tragedies sold 1 million 3 hundred thousand. A pocket book of verse has sold 2 million copies, Homer's Odyssey well over half-a-million.

It comes easy to say that reading has gone off as television has come in. But actually the studies so far made don't bear that out as a permanent trend. In regions where TV is new, reading of books goes off for a while. Then it rises again to its former level.

These figures aren't tested, they are only indicative. Some are encouraging, some discouraging. I leave some discouraging ones to the last. One is that only one college graduate in six was reading a serious book at the time a recent survey was made. And only just over half of the college graduates could name a book they even cared to read. Another fact is that 10 percent of the public does 70 percent of the reading, paper-backs and all. There always has been some such disparity in this country. The Founding Fathers were fabulous readers, they knew virtually everything that had been written. But the rank and file of their time read little. Today almost all the serious book reading is left to a small segment of the people. And even the light books are read by less than one fourth of the population.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have been talking of books and reading habits. Several years ago, the President of Yale, Alfred Griswold remarked: "Ours is an age of action, hair-trigger action, and we cannot resign from it. But what is to become of us when action no longer finds inspiration or discipline in thought because thought has not been able to find inspiration or discipline in books."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday Mar 8, 1954

This is the news:

House Speaker Martin says the President hopes that the Senate will reduce a one billion dollar excise tax cut, that's expected to pass the House. After meeting with the President, Martin said Mr. Eisenhower shares the opinion of Treasury Secretary Humphrey that The HOUSE HAS "gone a little far."

[redacted]

[I'd like to review the tax situation in a few minutes.]

The President today told Congress, that in a little more than four years, we have given our allies almost 8-billion dollars worth of guns, ammunition and other military equipment. And the Foreign Operations Administration says Western Europe is showing "an encouraging period of self-reliance." #

The Agency says the failure to ratify the European Defense Community treaty, is a matter of "serious concern" to our government.

Today the Netherlands became the first West European nation to complete all of the necessary legislative and diplomatic steps to join the European Defense Community.

Labor Secretary Mitchell told a Senate committee his department will need an additional 40-million dollars, in the next fiscal year...most of it to take care of en expected increase in unemployment compensation.

And A. F. of L. and C.I.O. leaders told a House committee that the President's housing program is "completely inadequate" for the nation's needs.

The Republican national Committee today selected Vice President Nixon to reply to the radio and television speech Adlai Stevenson made from Miami Beach on Saturday night. Stevenson charged that the Republican party is "half McCarthy and half Eisenhower." Mc Carthy had asked for equal time of CBS and NBC to reply to this speech. But both networks announced that [redacted] Republican committee THEY WOULD GIVE THE TIME TO THE [redacted] and hence McCarthy's bid had been turned down. Party Chairman Hall says Stevenson "impugned the Eisenhower Administration and its leadership." He said the answer to Stevenson "is not a matter for personal rebuttal by an individual." Mc Carthy, in Miami today, said he , as well as his party, should be given time to reply to Stevenson. But Mr. Nixon has been chosen to speak on Saturday.. from 10;30 to 11 p.m. EASTERN TIME

The Supreme Court ruled today that testimony a witness gives before a congressional committee may not be used as evidence against him in a state court.

Major General Dean, who was a Communist prisoner in Korea for three years, said today he himself lacked "the intelligence or the strength" to live up to the military ideal.. and report nothing to the enemy but his name, rank and serial number.

Representative Bentley of Michigan, who was shot by Puerto Rican nationalists last week, underwent a second operation today. His condition is reported as "good." And while Puerto Rican authorities continued their roundup of Nationalist leaders.. and searched for Communist chiefs in Puerto Rico, federal authorities [redacted] announced the arrest of almost 100 persons of Puerto Rican extraction...both in New York and Chicago.

Secretary of State Dulles today told the Inter-American conference in Caracas that the republics of north and south america must take joint action if any of them should fall to Communism. Dulles described Communism as "a far-flung, clandestine political organization" operated by the leaders of the Soviet Union's communist party for their own benefit.

In Indo-China today the French barred all civilians from the NEIGHBORHOOD of two airfields used by 149 American air technicians. The Communists had made a commando raid on one of the strips. They destroyed what the French describe only as "several army planes."

~~Communist Chinese newspapers may hint that they will demand what they call "Indo-China's independence and freedom from France" at as the price for ending the 8-year-old war. The Communist paers say French opposition to this will "handicap a peaceful solution of the Indo-China issue."~~

~~And Madame Chiang Kai Shek says the "betrayal of the Republic of China and perhaps even the whole of Asia" is possible at the Geneva Conference in April.~~

In Tokyo today.. nine years after the war, the United States and Japan signed a mutual defense pact. When ratified by the Japanese Diet, the pact calls for us to put an estimated 100-million dollars into Japan's economy..for military purposes. That would be for the first year. We would also furnish Japan with destroyers, jet planes, tanks and jeeps and help boost her defense force to 160-thousand men in a year. Assistant Secretary of State Robertson calls the agreement "a constructive step for the peace and security of the free world in the Pacific."

In Egypt today, Premier Naguib was restored to the full powers he held before the revolution of two weeks ago. Once again he will be his country's premier , president and chairman of its Revolutionary Council. Abdel Gamal Nasser who became premier and president for a while now returns to the job he held two weeks ago: vice premier.

Edward R. Murrow: March 8, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The House of Representatives is expected this week to pass the Reed Bill reducing to ten percent the excise taxes on articles now paying more than ten percent, but leaving untouched the tax on liquor, tobacco, gasoline and automobiles. Republicans are expected to vote for the Bill quite enthusiastically, as will many Democrats. This will be enthusiasm in the face of President Eisenhower's endorsement of the warning by Secretary Humphreys that the Treasury cannot now stand the loss of nearly a billion dollars in revenue which is entailed.

This break in party discipline may be repaired in the Senate - and it may not be. Senators conceivably could go even further than the Representatives. But Secretary Humphreys is hoping for a compromise in the Senate, substituting a ceiling of 15 percent on excise taxes for the ten percent.

The state of Republican Party discipline actually is not as demoralized as it looks. For while they seem to be defying the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, the House Republicans really are fighting the Democrats. They are trying to head off a drive that would increase income tax exemptions from six to seven or eight hundred dollars. The strategy is to rush in first with reduction of the excise taxes, so as to stiffen resistance to an increase of income tax exemption. The Treasury loses over $900,000,000 by the Reed Bill. But if income tax exemptions are raised from seven to eight hundred dollars the Treasury will lose two billion, three hundred thousand.

Of course it doesn't tell the whole story to say that all the Republicans are after is to block a still deeper cut in revenue by the Democrats. # This is an election year and Republicans are quite as well aware of it as Democrats. They are sensitive to the charge that the Eisenhower budget favors the well-to-do more than the average person. The excise tax reductions will be popular with more than the buyers of luxuries. These, to be sure, are favored. The cost of furs and jewelry will come down. But the excise tax reductions will help a great many people. It will bring down the cost of local and long distance telephone calls, of railroad and other transportation, of all admissions, and a miscellany of other items such as luggage, lady's handbags, cosmetics, toilet preparations, cabaret bills, club dues, initiation fees, safe deposit rentals, sporting goods, cigaret lighters, fountain and ballpoint pens, mechanical pencils, light bulbs, photographic equipment including films, and firearms. If Secretary Humphrey gets the compromise he wants in the Senate, there will be no reduction on transportation costs, local phone calls, sporting goods, lighters, pens and firearms.

A feature of the strategy to head off the Democrats is to take out of the excise bill the recently voted continuation of corporation taxes at 52 percent. This continuation was obediently put through at the behest of the White House and Treasury. Now it will be made part of the general tax revision bill. By House rules, the excise bill can't be amended to include income tax exemptions. So the Reed Bill will reach the senate before a showdown is risked on the exemption issue.

Republicans, having voted to continue corporation taxes at 52 percent for another year are now pleased to have demonstrated that they are not coddling the rich. And in cutting excise taxes they say they will be helping the average consumer. But whatever the argument, there is another aspect of the matter. Excise tax reduction deprives the Treasury of revenue in a year when a deficit already is foreseen. This is a lengthened step in deficit financing. For that reason it is bringing anguish to that section of the Republican party that unfalteringly advocates a balanced budget, and is unable to forget the promises made two years ago. But they make up only a handful in the Congress at present.

However, Congressmen who will vote for this loss of revenue are defending themselves by more than reference to the coming election. They point out that the Administration already is poised to resort to emergency measures if unemployment increases in March. Some of the White House measures would come under the heading of deficit financing. So Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee and his Republican followers have jumped the gun. They have taken emergency measures before the White House could take them or was ready to take them, and they have not taken the ones the White House has in view.

Democrats like Senators George and Douglas also want to meet the economic setback through tax relief, particularly for the common man. Neither of these senators rates as an economic radical. So their proposals to forego more than five billion dollars in revenue also can be called an effort to take the initiative from the White House. And their difference with the White House also is in the kind of measures advocated and the timing.

I mentioned the tax revision bill. This is not to be confused with the excise tax bill. It is a bill to change tax practices. It covers far too many kinds of practices to lump into a single generalization. The bill runs to 875 pages, and is about as lucid as the fine print of an income tax return. It is not a drastic bill, but it deserves much more public study than it is likely to get. It will reach the floor of the House next week.

There probably has never been a tax bill in all of history that managed to completely satisfy everyone. Will Rogers once remarked that "taxpayers cheer not from the heart but from the pocketbook." But this is nothing new. Centuries ago, Seneca recognized the same problem when he said:"Knowing how to make money and also how to keep it - either of these gifts might make a man rich."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

House Speaker Martin says the President hopes that the Senate will reduce a one billion dollar excise tax cut that's expected to pass the House. After meeting with the President, Martin said Mr. Eisenhower shares the opinion of Treasury Secretary Humphrey that the House has "gone a little far." I'd like to review the tax situation in a few minutes.

The President today told Congress that in a little more than four years we have given our allies almost 8-billion dollars worth of guns, ammunition and other military equipment. And the Foreign Operations Administration says Western Europe is showing "an encouraging period of self-reliance." The Agency says the failure to ratify the European Defense Community treaty is a matter of "serious concern" to our government.

Today the Netherlands became the first West European nation to complete all of the necessary legislative and diplomatic steps to join the European Defense Community.

Labor Secretary Mitchell told a Senate committee his department will need an additional 40-million dollars in the next fiscal year - most of it to take care of unexpected increase in unemployment compensation.

And AFL and CIO leaders told a House committee that the President's housing program is "completely inadequate" for the nation's needs.

The Republican national Committee today selected Vice President Nixon to reply to the radio and television speech Adlai Stevenson made from Miami Beach on Saturday night. Stevenson charged that the Republican party is "half McCarthy and half Eisenhower." McCarthy had asked for equal time of CBS and NBC to reply to this speech. But both networks announced that they would give the time to the Republican committee and hence McCarthy's bid had been turned down. Party Chairman Hall says Stevenson "impugned the Eisenhower Administration and its leadership." He said the answer to Stevenson "is not a matter for personal rebuttal by an individual." McCarthy, in Miami today, said he, as well as his party, should be given time to reply to Stevenson. But Mr. Nixon has been chosen to speak on Saturday from 10:30 to 11:00 p.m. eastern time.

The Supreme Court ruled today that testimony a witness gives before a congressional committee may not be used as evidence against him in a state court.

Major General Dean, who was a Communist prisoner in Korea for three years, said today he himself lacked "the intelligence or the strength" to live up to the military ideal and report nothing to the enemy but his name, rank and serial number.

Representative Bentley of Michigan, who was shot by Puerto Rican nationalists last week, underwent a second operation today. His condition is reported as "good." And while Puerto Rican authorities continued their roundup of Nationalist leaders and searched for Communist chiefs in Puerto Rico, federal authorities announced the arrest of almost 100 persons of Puerto Rican extraction both in New York and Chicago.

Secretary of State Dulles today told the Inter-American conference in Caracas that the republics of North and South America must take joint action if any of them should fall to Communism. Dulles described Communism as "a far-flung, clandestine political organization" operated by the leaders of the Soviet Union's Communist party for their own benefit.

In Indo-China today the French barred all civilian from the neighborhood of two airfields used by 149 American air technicians. The Communists had made a commando raid on one of the strips. They destroyed what the French describe only as "several army planes."

In Tokyo today, nine years after the war, the United States and Japan signed a mutual defense pact. When ratified by the Japanese Diet, the pact calls for us to put an estimated 100-million dollars into Japan's economy for military purposes. That would be for the first year. We would also furnish Japan with destroyers, jet planes, tanks and jeeps and help boost her defense force to 160-thousand men in a year. Assistant Secretary of State Robertson calls the agreement

"a constructive step for the peace and security of the free world in the Pacific."

In Egypt today, Premier Naguib was restored to the full powers he held before the revolution of two weeks ago. Once again he will be his country's premier, president and chairman of its Revolutionary Council. Abdel Gamal Nasser who became premier and president for a while now returns to the job he held two weeks ago: vice premier.

The House of Representatives is expected this week to pass the Reed Bill reducing to ten percent the excise taxes on articles now paying more than ten percent, but leaving untouched the tax on liquor, tobacco, gasoline and automobiles. Republicans are expected to vote for the Bill quite enthusiastically, as will many Democrats. This will be enthusiasm in the face of President Eisenhower's endorsement of the warning by Secretary Humphreys that the Treasury cannot now stand the loss of nearly a billion dollars in revenue which is entailed. This break in party discipline may be repaired in the Senate - and it may not be. Senators conceivably could go even further than the Representatives. But Secretary Humphreys is hoping for a compromise in the Senate, substituting a ceiling of 15 percent on excise taxes for the ten percent.

The state of Republican Party discipline actually is not as demoralized as it looks. For while they seem to be defying the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, the House Republicans really are fighting the Democrats. They are trying to head off a drive that would increase income tax exemptions from six to seven or eight hundred dollars. The strategy is to rush in first with reduction of the excise taxes, so as to stiffen resistance to an increase of income tax exemption.

Of course it doesn't tell the whole story to say that all the Republicans are after is to block a still deeper cut in revenue by the Democrats. This is an election year and Republicans are quite as well aware of it as Democrats. They are sensitive to the charge that the Eisenhower budget favors the well-to-do more than the average person. The excise tax reductions will be popular with more than the buyers of luxuries. These, to be sure, are favored. The cost of furs and jewelry will come down. But the excise tax reductions will help a great many people.

It will bring down the cost of local and long distance telephone calls, of railroad and other transportation, of all admissions, and a miscellany of other items such as luggage, lady's handbags, cosmetics, toilet preparations, cabaret bills, club dues, initiation fees, safe deposit rentals, sporting goods, cigarette lighters, fountain and ballpoint pens, mechanical pencils, light bulbs, photographic equipment including films, and firearms. If Secretary Hu phrey gets the compromise he wants in the Senate, there will be no reduction on transportation costs, local phone calls, sporting goods, lighters, pens and firearms. A feature of the strategy to head off the Democrats is to take out of the excise bill the recently voted continuation of corporation taxes at 52 percent. This continuation was obediently put through at the behest of the White House and Treasury. Now it will be made part of the general tax revision bill. By House rules, the excise bill can't be amended to include income tax exemptions. So the Reed Bill will reach the Senate before a showdown is risked on the exemption issue. Republicans, having voted to continue corporation taxes at 52 percent for another year are now pleased to have demonstrated that they are not coddling the rich. And in cutting excise taxes they say they will be helping the average consumer. But whatever the argument, there is another aspect of the matter. Excise tax reduction deprives the Treasury of revenue in a year when a deficit already is foreseen. This is a lengthened step in deficit financing. For that reason it is bringing anguish to that section of the Republican party that unfalteringly advocates a balanced budget, and is unable to forget the promises made two years ago. But they make up only a handful in the Congress at present. However, Congressmen who will vote for this loss of revenue are defending themselves by more than reference to the coming election. They point out that the Administration already is poised to resort to emergency measures if unemployment increases in March. Some of the White House measures would come under the heading of deficit financing. So Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee and his Republican followers have jumped the gun. They have taken emergency measures before the White House could take them or was ready to take them, and they have not taken the ones the White House has in view.

Democrats like Senators George and Douglas also want to meet the economic setback through tax relief, particularly for the common man. Neither of these senators rates as an economic radical. So their proposals to forego more than five billion dollars in revenue also can be called an effort to take the initiative from the White House. And their difference with the White House also is in the kind of measures advocated and the timing. I mentioned the tax revision bill. This is not to be confused with the excise tax bill. It is a bill to change tax practices. It covers far too many kinds of practices to lump into a single generalization. The bill runs to 875 pages, and is about as lucid as the fine print of an income tax return. It is not a drastic bill, but it deserves much more public study than it is likely to get. It will reach the floor of the House next week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There probably has never been a tax bill in all of history that managed to completely satisfy everyone. Will Rogers once remarked that "taxpayers cheer not from the heart, but from the pocketbook." But this is nothing new. Centuries ago, Seneca recognized the same problem when he said: "Knowing how to make money and also how to keep it - either of these gifts might make a man rich."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday March 9 1954

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a tax reform bill that will cut taxes on individuals and businesses by one-and-a-third billion dollars the first year..more later. The bill is 875 pages long..reorganizes the whole tax structure..is aimed at removing inequities. Among other things it: puts a ten per cent excise tax ceiling on cosmetics, entertinment, furs, jewelry and telephone service. (These are now taxed at 15 to 25 per cent.) The bill sharply reduces income taxes on stock dividends..makes bigger allowances for medical expenses, retirement income, and single heads of families. Democratic committee members voted against it saying it gives too much of a break to stockholders and business "to the almost complete exclusion of the average taxpayer."

The President today named Navy Secretary Robert Anderson to succeed Roger Kyes as deputy secretary of defense. Anderson, a Texan, who has been a rancher, lawyer and businessman, was a "Democrat for Eisenhower" in 1952.

Senate Republican leaders today agreed on proposals to "guide" Senate investigations. Chairman Ferguson of a special committee says the will be made public tomorrow. And Chairman Saltonstall of the Armed Services Committee, says his group will start a hearing to find out what the Defense department is doing "about subversives AND communists [redacted] in the armed services." The committee will hear from Secretary Wilson, Army Secretary Stevens and others, in what could be a move to take the issue of "subversives the in the armed forces" out of the hands of Senator McCarthy's committee.

Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont charged on the Senate floor today that McCarthy is doing his best to shatter the Republican party either [redacted] by intention, or through ignorance. Flanders asked: "Is McCarthy a hidden satellite of the Democratic party, which he is furnishing with so much material for quiet mirth?" Flanders said: McCarthy is "conducting a noisy search for internal subversion, that diverts the nation dangerously from world dangers." He said: "The [redacted] dangerous attack is from without..not within. Look out Senators, and see what is creeping upon us."

Mc Carthy returned to Washington tonight, after telling reporters in New York that he was going to test the refusal by CBS and NBC, to give him free time to answer Adlai Stevenson's speech of Saturday. The newtworks have given such time to Vice President Nixon..as a [redacted]t representative of the Republican National Committee. And Nixon says he will consult with the President on his speech..to be made Saturday night.

Senator McCarthy approves the choice of Nixon, but he wants to answer Stevenson, personnally. He accuses both networks of being, among other things, dishonest, arrogant and completely immoral. He says he is going to make a test case . And if it turns out that under the rules of the Federal Communications Commission he it not entitled to free time, then, he says, "the rule has got to be changed."

But F.C.C. Commissioner Robert E. Lee, a friend of McCarthy's, says the decision by the networks is very fair..he calls it "a square deal".

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced plans to build four more atomic furnaces..in the search for economical industrial power from atomic energy.

And General Motors says it sold more than 10 billion dollars worth of its products last year... a record for any private corporation. The corporation's total tax bill was nearly two billions. And its profit... 599-million.. was the third highest in the company's history.

YOST MEERLOW

A Dutch psychiatrist..Dr. Joost Meerloo...told a Marine Court of Inquiry today that "every man" will either break or die under the kind of torture inflicted on Marine Colonel Schwable who signed a false germ warfare confession in Korea.

In Caracas, Venezuela, the foreign minister of Guatemala walked out of a plenary session of the Inter-American conference when a speaker from the Dominican Republic called for an end to attacks on the United States. The Guatemalan minister said he had more important things to do "than to hear such people in the ridiculous and stupid role of discussing democracy." He later returned to the conference hall.

In Indo-China, Communist Commandoes again attacked the port of Haiphong but were beaten off. And French commander, General Navarre, promised his 300-thousand troops that "soon it will be our turn to take the offensive."

In Washington, Defense Secretary Wilson was asked today whether [redacted] American troops will be used in combat in Indo-China. He said he "can't [redacted] answer" that.. told reporters he didn't want to discuss the situation in [redacted] Indo-China. Both the President and Wilson have previously said they had no intention of [redacted] SENDING our troops into combat there.

Edward R. Murrow: March 9, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

It is not often that two such historic decisions are being reached in one city, as now in Paris, with Dr. Adenauer and Foreign Secretary Bidault agreeing to a Saar settlement, and the French and Vietnamese formulating anew the status of freedom, of states associated in the French Union. What makes these decisions historic, is that both bring modern values to old and highly troubled relationships. The Saar agreement solves the most stubborn territorial difference between France and Germany, in terms of Europeanizing the region. The agreement within sight with Vietnam, broadens the earlier concepts of the French Union, by making it an association more literally of free and sovereign states.

It is a sign of the times that neither of these momentous events is getting the attention it merits. One might expect anything so forward-looking as a Saar settlement, based on the realization of a European Union, to be trumpeted as a tremendous achievement. One might expect the same from a stretching of the French Union, since it will end most of what remains to France, of old-fashioned empire. But while enlightenment and progress can be considered an expression of modernity, so is political extremism. And the full story of the Saar agreement, is not being told at the moment, so as not to permit extreme nationalism in Germany or France to organize resistance before the French Assembly debates the European Defense Community. And the understanding between the French and Vietnam representatives must not be exploitable, at this time, by extreme nationalists in France or Indo-China. It will go too far to please Frenchmen who want to curb Arab nationalism in North Africa, and may not go far enough to silence extreme nationalists in Vietnam.

Reports from Paris hint a far-reaching accord between Dr. Adenauer and Monsieur Bidault on the Saar. It appears that on the basis of it, April 1st has been set by the French for opening the European Defense Community debate in the Assembly. It also appears certain, though this still lacks final confirmation, that the Assembly will vote on E.D.C. before the Geneva conference, April 26th. Indeed the vote may be expected before the Easter recess. If this optimistic forecast is fulfilled, it would close off with a flourish, one of the most tense and anxious trains of events since the war.

Details of a Saar agreement are not to be announced, beyond the bare fact, that it is based on the Van Natter plan, a Dutch proposal made in the Council of Europe. By this plan, the Saar would be neither French nor German. It would be a sovereign state, within the European Union. Such a plan could hardly be put into effect without consulting the Saar population, so a plebiscite in the territory is to be expected. And once the population accepts the new status, the French will have no more reason to freeze out the right wing German party, as it did in the last election, and since. Germans have some minor property claims in the Saar, and any settlement can be expected to cover them. The predominant economic interest in the Saar, will continue to be France. If France gets most of the Saar coal and steel output, it has more weight as against Germany, in the already functioning coal and steel community. But this is no threat to anybody's security, especially not if harmoniously agreed to.

The Saar settlement is one of three factors that now are expected to tip the scales in the French Assembly, in favor of the European Defense Community. Another is an assurance from the United States of its intention to keep American forces in Europe. This might arrive in the form of a letter from President Eisenhower to President Coty. The other is the completion of a treaty by which Britain binds itself to close co-operation with the European Army, which it is not joining. The assurances by both the United States and Britain have been laid down by Assembly leaders, along with an acceptable Saar settlement, as conditions for ratifying the E.D.C.

To come back to the talks with the Vietnamese, they are being conducted for Vietnam by Premier Buu Lok, a prince and cousin of Bao Dai. His needs are quite clear. He must take home enough to rally the Vietnamese behind the anti-Communist cause, and permit him to re-cast the government, to give the delegation to the Geneva conference the broadest popular base. France already has promised Laos wide independence, but this treaty is not a perfect pattern for Vietnam. For the definitions of sovereignty and freedom, are not beyond dispute. Laos is assured full freedom and sovereignty within the French Union. But the French constitution, which sets up the French Union, does not provide for any state within it, other than France, being sovereign. The treaty with Laos makes the council of the French Union responsible for relations between Laos and France, but in the French constitution, this council has only advisory powers.

When these political points are settled, French economic claims remain, along with Vietnam's share in any action France takes in defending the state. Premier Laniel has reason to hope he can tell the Assembly, that the magnanimous grant of full independence to Vietnam, has been answered by the voluntary assurance that Vietnam will remain in the French Union, and give France preferential customs and other economic advantages. Agreement on such terms already is foreseeable.

The success of international politics depends to a great extent on the willingness of men and nations to trust one another. Frank Crane once remarked:" You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough." For statesmen, these lines from the New Testament would seem appropriate:"We walk by faith, not by sight. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a tax reform bill that will cut taxes on individuals and businesses by one and a third billion dollars the first year - more later. The bill is 875 pages long - reorganizes the whole tax structure - is aimed at removing inequities. Among other things it puts a ten percent excise tax ceiling on cosmetics, entertainment, furs, jewelry and telephone service. These are now taxed at 15 to 25 percent. The bill sharply reduces income taxes on stock dividends - makes bigger allowances for medical expenses, retirement income, and single heads of families. Democratic committee members voted against it saying it gives too much of a break to stockholders and business "to the almost complete exclusion of the average taxpayer."

The President today named Navy Secretary Robert Anderson to succeed Roger Kyes as deputy secretary of defense. Anderson, a Texan, who has been a rancher, lawyer and businessman, was a "Democrat for Eisenhower" in 1952.

Senate Republican leaders today agreed on proposals to "guide" Senate investigations. Chairman Ferguson of a special committee says they will be made public tomorrow. And Chairman Saltonstall of the Armed Services Committee says his group will start a h aring to find out what the Defense Department is doing "about subversives and Communists in the armed services." The committee will hear from Secretary Wilson, Army Secretary Stevens and others in what could be a move to take the issue of "subversives in the armed forces" out of the hands of Senator McCarthy's committee.

Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont charged on the Senate floor today that McCarthy is doing his best to shatter the Republican party either by intention or through ignorance. Flanders asked: "Is McCarthy a hidden satellite of the Democratic party which he is furnishing with so much material for quiet mirth?" Flanders said McCarthy is "conducting a noisy search for internal subversion that diverts the nation dangerously from world dangers." He said: "The dangerous attack is from without - not within. Look out Senators, and see what is creeping upon us."

McCarthy returned to Washington tonight after telling reporters in New York that he was going to "test" the refusal by CBS and NBC to give him free time to answer Adlai Stevenson's speech of Saturday. The networks have given such time to Vice President Nixon as a representative of the Repulbican National Committee. And Nixon says he will consult with the President on his speech to be made Saturday night.

Senator McCarthy approves the choice of Nixon but he wants to answer Stevenson, personally. He accuses both networks of being, among other things, dishonest, arrogant and completely immoral. He says he is going to make a test case. And if it turns out that under the rules of the Federal Communications Commission he is not entitled to free time, then, he says, "the rule has got to be changed." But FCC Commissioner Robert E. Lee, a friend of McCarthy's, says the decision by the networks is very fair - he calls it "a square deal."

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced plans to build four more atomic furnaces in the search for economical industrial power from atomic energy.

And General Motors says it sold more than 10 billion dollars worth of its products last year - a record for any private corporation. The corporation's total tax bill was nearly two billions. And its profit, 599-million - was the third highest in the company's history.

A Dutch psychiatrist, Dr. Joost Meerloo, told a Marine Court of Inquiry today that "every man" will either break or die under the kind of torture inflicted on Marine Colonel Schwable, who signed a false germ warfare confession In Korea.

In Caracas, Venezuela, the foreign minister of Guatemala walked out of a plenary session of the Inter-American conference when a speaker from the Dominican Republic called for an end to attacks on the United States. The Guatemalan minister said he had more important things to do "than to hear such people in the ridiculous and stupid role of discussing democracy." He later returned to the conference hall.

In Indo-China, Communist Commandoes again attacked the port of Haiphong but were beaten off. And French commander, General Navarre, promised his 300-thousand troops that "soon it will be our turn to take the offensive."

In Washington, Defense Secretary Wilson was asked today whether American troops will be used in combat in Indo-China. He said he "can't answer that," told reporters he didn't want to discuss the situation in Indo-China. Both the President and Wilson have previously said they had no intention of sending our troops into combat there.

It is not often that two such historic decisions are being reached in one city as now in Paris, with Dr. Adenauer and Foreign Secretary Bidault agreeing to a Saar settlement, and the French and Vietnamese formulating anew the status of freedom of states associated in the French Union. What makes these decisions historic is that both bring modern values to old and highly troubled relationships. The Saar agreement solves the most stubborn territorial difference between France and Germany, in terms of Europeanizing the region. The agreement within sight with Vietnam broadens the earlier concepts of the French Union by making it an association more literally of free and sovereign states.

It is a sign of the times that neither of these momentous events is getting the attention it merits. One might expect anything so forwardlooking as a Saar settlement based on the realization of a European Union to be trumpeted as a tremendous achievement. One might expect the same from a stretching of the French Union, since it will end most of what remains to France of old-fashioned empire. But while enlightenment and progress can be considered an expression of modernity, so is political extremism. And the full story of the Saar agreement is not being told at the moment, so as not to permit extreme nationalism in Germany or France to organize resistance before the French Assembly debates the European Defense Community. And the understanding between the French and Vietnam representatives must not be exploitable at this time by extreme nationalists in France or Indo-China. It will go too far to please Frenchman who want to curb Arab nationalism in North Africa, and may not go far enough to silence extreme nationalists in Vietnam.

Reports from Paris hint a far-reaching accord between Dr. Adenauer and Monsieur Bidault on the Saar. It appears that on the basis of it, April 1st has been set by the French for opening the European Defense Community debate in the Assembly. It also appears certain, though this still lacks final confirmation, that the Assembly will vote on EDC before the Geneva conference, April 26th. Indeed the vote may be expected before the Easter recess. If this optimistic forecast is fulfilled, it would close off with a flourish one of the most tense and anxious trains of events since the war. Details of a Saar agreement are not to be announced beyond the bare fact that it is based on the Van Natter plan, a Dutch proposal made in the Council of Europe. By this plan the Saar would be neither French nor German. It would be a sovereign state within the European Union. Such a plan could hardly be put into effect without consulting the Saar population, so a plebiscite in the territory is to be expected. And once the population accepts the new status the French will have no more reason to freeze out the right wing German party as it did in the last election, and since. Germans have some minor property claims in the Saar, and any settlement can be expected to cover them. The predominant economic interest in the Saar will continue to be France. If France gets most of the Saar coal and steel output it has more weight as against Germany in the already functioning coal and steel community. But this is no threat to anybody's security, especially not if harmoniously agreed to.

The Saar settlement is one of three factors that now are expected to tip the scales in the French Assembly in favor of the European Defense Community. Another is an assurance from the United States of its intention to keep American forces in Europe. This might arrive in the form of a letter from President Eisenhower to President Coty. The other is the completion of a treaty by which Britain binds itself to close cooperation with the European Army, which it is not joining. The assurances by both the United States and Britain have been laid down by Assembly leaders, along with an acceptable Saar settlement, as conditions for ratifying the EDC. To come back to the talks with the Vietnamese, they are being conducted for Vietnam by Premier Bu Lok, a prince and cousin of Bao Dai. His needs are quite clear. He must take home enough to rally the Vietnamese behind the anti-Communist cause, and permit him to re-cast the government to give the delegation to the Geneva conference the broadest popular base. France already has promised Laos wide independence, but this treaty is not a perfect pattern for Vietnam. For the definitions of sovereignty and freedom are not beyond dispute. Laos is assured full freedom and sovereignty within the French Union. But the French constitution which sets up the French Union does not provide for any state within it other than France being sovereign. The treaty with Laos makes the council of the French Union responsible for relations between Laos and France, but in the French constitution this council has only advisory powers.

When these political points are settled, French economic claims remain, along with Vietnam's share in any action France takes in defending the state. Premier Laniel has reason to hope he can tell the Assembly that the magnanimous grant of full independence to Vietnam has been answered by the voluntary assurance that Vietnam will remain in the French Union and give France preferential customs and other economic advantages. Agreement on such terms already is foreseeable.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The success of international politics depends to a great extent on the willingness of men and nations to trust one another. Frank Crane once remarked: "You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough." For statesmen, these lines from the New Testament would seem appropriate: "We walk by faith, not by sight. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed. March 10, 1954.

This is the news:

The President today agreed that Senator McCarthy has hurt the Republican party and endangered the Administration's program. He made this clear at a news conference at which he endorsed portions of a speech attacking McCarthy made yesterday by Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont. Flanders had charged that McCarthy either by intention or ignorance was doing his best to shatter the Republican party. The President today called this speech "a service." And [redacted] by way of expressing further disagreement with McCarthy the President said he believes that the CBS and NBC networkers "certainly discharged their responsibilities" in agreeing to give Vice President Nixon radio and television time to reply to a speech by Adlai Stevenson. The networks have turned down McCarthy's request for such time [redacted]. The President told reporters today that Nixon will make the party's reply.. he sees no need for any other reply.. "and that will be that." [redacted]

Seven hours after Mr. Eisenhower's news conference, Senator McCarthy said the Republican party is suffering a great deal of damage.... [redacted] not from him but from his critics.

Senate Republaican leaders today gave all their committee chairmen seven recommendations to govern their conduct in investigating committees and subcommittees. Although there is no provision to enforce these recommendations , they appear to be aimed at curbing the powers of Senator McCarthy..particularly his one-man committee meetings. The recommendations suggest: that only a committee majority can authorize an investigating subcommittee...that either a majority of committee members--or at least one Senator from each party--must be present to take sworn testimony....that the authority to issue subpenas cannot be delegated unless the committee so votes...that no hearings may be held unless the committee authorizes them.. that no meetings may be held outside of Washington without a majority committee vote. The Republican leaders also recommend that secret testimony and material be kept secret unless a majority agrees to make it public.. and that witnesses are entitled to lawyers at public or secret hearings. The McCarthy committee now has some of these recommendations in its rules. There was no mention in the recommendations of the President's suggestion that witnesses be protected from what he called "a disregard of the standards of fair play."

Today, Senator McCarthy charged that "some Senators" have made irresponsible and false statements about his success in exposing Communists. He said he has been turning up "current communists" even though the charge has been made that they are all old cases. ~~Democratic Senator Symington said McCarthy should wait to make these charges in the presence of Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington state...who has made similar charges. McCarthy said Jackson had been notified about today's hearing.~~

AT TODAY'S hearing, Peter Gragis, a former Communist, said he once gave Dr. Albert Einstein 21-dollars for the American Committee for Spanish Freedom. McCarthy described this group as "communist controlled." Gragis' relations with Einstein occured in 1945..four years before the Spanish Freedom organization was put on the attorney general's subversive list. The witness Gragis said THAT as far as he knew none of the money was collected from Communists. But in retrospect he thinks Einstein "was abetting a subversive organization" at the time. Einstein says he doesn't remember reciving the 21-dollars..has no further comment.

Senator McCarthy met for more than an hour and a half today with Defense Secretary Wilson. Later he told reporters: they have no argument.. Wilson has been combatting Communists a lot longer than the Senator.. and Mc Carthy agrees 100 per cent with Wilson that the army is not coddling Communists .. [redacted] [redacted] McCarthy blamed the present "bad situation" in the army on what he called 20 years of softness under previous administration. Army Secretary Stevens did not attend the Wilson-McCarthy lunch.

At the White House today the President had some comments on the Saturday speech by Adlai Stevenson. Askee about Stevenson's charge that the Republican party is now "half McCarthy and half Eisenhower" the President said:"Nonsense." And he took emphatic exception to Stevenson's suggestion that the so-called military "new look" may not be giving us the best security. The President stamped his foot as he said everything he is doing with the Defense department is for the best interests of the country. He is as concerned about this as any single individual could possibly be. And he is not going"to demagogue about it either." The President said [redacted] all of us must remember that the free world is picking [redacted] up a [redacted] burden it may have to carry for a long time.

Then he was asked about the fear among some congressmen that we are being drawn into the Indo-Chinese war "step by step." [redacted]

A reporter asked specifically what we would do if any our our air force technicians now in Indo-China are killed or captured. The President said: We will not become involved directly in the Indo-Chinese war unless Congress declares war. He said that is the complete answer to that question.

He also told reporters that in his view we should not be afraid to barter our farm surpluses, including butter, with other nations. (Most reporters took that to mean an opening of the door to trading with Russia and her satellites on farm surpluses.)

The President also told reporters that sometime next week.. perhaps on Monday.. he will speak to the nation by radio and television in a non-partisan explanation of his tax program. A few hours later the House by a vote of 411 to three approved a tax bill which contains some things to which thePresident objects. The new bill.. calls for a reduction of the federal excise taxes to 10 per cent on such items as jewelry, cosmetics, furs, admission and travel tickets and telephone tolls. If approved by the Senate this would go into effect on April first.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson said today that if the Congress should vote to continue high farm price supports next year, he probably would recommend a ~~mm~~ Presidential veto. Benson also told a House committee that the nation can remain prosperous with farmers receiving a gradually declining percentage of the national income.

The Senate Labor committee today approved a bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion or national origin...(the current version of the old Fair Employment Practises Commission bill.)

And in Rome, the Chamber of Deputies has confirmed Mario Scleba as premier by a vote of 300 to 283.

In Venezuela today there was another day of hectic debate at the Tenth Inter-American Conference. We've been wondering what has been accomplished at this meeting in Caracas. So we asked our correspondent to sum it up. Here is Dan Schorr's recorded progrss report:

(runs 4 minutes ending
This is Dan Schoor in Caracas)

This is Ed Murr. I'll be back etc

Bob Dixon

he'll offer documentary proof of an attempt to intervene in Guatemala. Toriello is something of a puzzle: If he's a dupe rather than a Communist fronter, he's a stubborn one. Dulles, in his speech Monday, cited for Toriello's benefit the case of another foreign minister, the Czech Jan Masaryk, who also thought there was room for communism within democracy. But Toriello laughed and said "That was Czechoslovakia, not America." Smilingly he tells us ofbeing called the "little Lenin of Latin America" by a New York newspaper. We asked if he preferred thetitle "little ...? If we find our Latin friends confused about the Red menace, they're having trouble figuring us out economically. The best U.S. could offer in speeches by Secretary Dulles and Assistant Secretary Samuel C. Waugh, was the promiseto consider open-mindedly changes in economic policy to meet their complaints; complaints about unstable prices, tariff barriers and insufficient government loans. We're feeling ourway so cautiously, that our statements are sometimes vague generalities.

For example, this last of Waugh's speech said price stabilization was no solution for their troubles and that it might be even more damaging than the instability itself. But that passage was cut out of the speech, because our whole foreign economic policy remains still to be decided. We speak with an uncertain voice here. But the Latin delegates have drawn hope from our invitation to a special Inter-American economic conference, to be held in Washington this year. Perhaps more hope than is warranted.

Typical of what worries Latin America was the statement by Colombia that these countries exchange their labor at ten cents an hour for U.S. imports containing work at $2.00 an hr. This is Daniel Schorr in Caracas.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. (30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

1954 MAR 10 PM 7:26

CBS 2902

ED MURROW /DELIVER IMMEDIATELY/

NEWSROOM

LYNN LANDRUM.—

AMERICA BEGAN WITH HUNGRY MEN WHO THOUGHT A FREE FAST WAS BETTER THAN A FETTERED FEAST. / YET SOMETHING MORE THAN HUNGER CAME OUT OF THAT PREFERENCE. / AND THE GLORY OF AMERICA IS NOT IN ITS TALL TOWERS NOR VAST ACRES. THE GLORY OF AMERICA IS THE AMERICAN CITIZEN, FREE, SOVEREIGN AND UNAFRAID. WE DO WELL TO THANK GOD FOR THAT"

- L~~YNN LANDRUM~~

Good Night & Good Luck.

~~JOHN AARON~~

END

FINISP

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 10, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Here is Dan Schorr's recorded progress report.

SCHORR: The United States came down to Caracas mainly to nudge our good neighbors into effective joint measures against Communist penetration of this hemisphere, typified by the growth of Red influence in Guatemala. Our Latin friends came, primarily, to try to talk us into a more favorable economic policy. Each side is making some headway though meeting uncertainty and a little confusion. We're trying to get the Latin states to adopt a resolution with the effect of exposing Communist agents in each country, of exchanging information on their activities, holding consultations in case of serious penetration as a threat to the peace of America. Andthough there's little doubt it will ultimately pass by a large majority, action is slowed down ~~by confusionists, by unawareness and occasionally high~~ ... ? (?) Puerto Rican troubles. Today's debate, for example, was interrupted by a flareup between Ecuador and Peru, over their age-old border dispute. Communism was forgotten as arms flailed the air, charges hurled, and the Nicaraguan chairman banged his gavel to remind his colleagues they were out of order. All this obviously interested the public morethan theoretical sounding discussions of far off Communist threats. (indistinct) ... diversionary, in effect, if not intentioned. Mexico wants the resolution limited only to foreign agents of communism, as though the line could be drawn. They want the resolution to apply also to other forms of totalitarianism which would be sure to draw the opposition of dictator-ruled countries. Panama is trying to tack on a rider against racial discrimination in employment, the result of a Panamanian grievance about employment in the Canal Zone. Bolivia wants an amendment saying? improved economic conditions should go hand-in-hand with the drive against Red penetration. The direct opposition comes from Guatemala's suave young Foreign Minister, Guillermo Toriello. And even he doesn't meet the resolution headon; opposing it not as anti-Communist but as interventionist, a dirty word in Latin America. Toriello, scheduled to speak tomorrow, tells us

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today agreed that Senator McCarthy has hurt the Republican party and endangered the Administration's program. He made this clear at a news conference at which he endorsed portions of a speech attacking McCarthy made yesterday by Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont. Flanders had charged that McCarthy either by intention or ignorance was doing his best to shatter the Republica party. The President today called this speech "a service." And by way of expressing further disagreement with McCarthy the President said he believes that the CBS and NBC networks "certainly discharged their responsibilities" in agreeing to give Vice President Nixon radio and television time to reply to a speech by Adlai Stevenson. The networks have turned down McCarthy's request for such time. The President told reporters today that Nixon will make the party's reply - he sees no need for any other reply "and that will be that."

Seven hours after Mr. Eisenhower's news conference, Senator McCarthy said the Republican party is suffering a great deal of damage not from him, but from his critics.

Senate Republican leaders today gave all their committee chairmen seven recommendations to govern their conduct in investigating committees and subcommittees. Although there is no provision to enforce these recommendations, they appear to be aimed at curbing the powers of Senator McCarthy - particularly his one-man committee meetings. The recommendations suggest: that only a committee majority can authorize an investigating subcommittee - that either a majority of committee members - or at least one Senator from each party - must be present to take sworn testimony - that the authority to issue subpoenas cannot be delegated unless the committee so votes.- that no hearings may be held unless the committee authorizes them - that no meetings may be held outside of Washington without a majority committee vote. The Republican leaders also recommend that secret testimony and material be kept secret unless a majority agrees to make it public - and that witnesses are entitled to lawyers at public or secret hearings. The McCarthy committee now has some of these recommendations in its rules. There was no mention in the recommendations of the President's suggestion that witnesses be protected from what he called "a disregard of the standards of fair play."

Today, Senator McCarthy charged that "some Senators" have made irresponsible and false statements about his success in exposing Communists. He said he has been turning up "current Communists" even though the charge has been made that they are all old cases.

At today's hearing, Peter Gragis, a former Communist, said he once gave Dr. Albert Einstein 21-dollars for the American Committee for Spanish Freedom. McCarthy described this group as "Communist controlled." Gragis' relations with Einstein occured in 1945, four years before the Spanish Freedom organization was put on the attorney general's subversive list. The witness Gragis said that as far as he knew, none of the money was collected from Communists. But in retrospect he thinks Einstein "was abetting a subversive organization" at the time. Einstein says he doesn't remember receiving the 21 dollars - has no further comment.

Senator McCarthy met for more than an hour and a half today with Defense Secretary Wilson. Later he told reporters: they have no argument. Wilson has been combatting Communists a lot longer than the Senator and McCarthy agrees 100 percent with Wilson that the army is not coddling Communists.

At the White House today the President had some comments on the Saturday speech by Adlai Stevenson. Asked about Stevenson's charge that the Republican party is now "half McCarthy and half Eisenhower" the President said: "Nonsense." And he took emphatic exception to Stevenson's suggestion that the so-called military "new look" may not be giving us the best security. The President stamped his foot as he said everything he is doing with the Defense Department is for the best interests of the country. He is as concerned about this as any single individual could be. And he is not going to demagogue about it either. The President said all of us must remember that the free world is picking up a burden it may have to carry for a long time. Then he was asked about the fear among some congressmen that we are being drawn into the Indo-Chinese war "step by step." A reporter asked specifically what we would do if any of our air force technicians now in Indo-China are killed or captured. The President said: "We will not become involved directly in the Indo-Chinese war unless Congress declares war. He said that is the complete answer to that question. He also told reporters that in his view we should not be afraid to barter our farm surpluses, including butter, with other nations. Most reporters took that to mean an opening of the door to trading with Russia and her satellites on farm surpluses. The President also told reporters that sometime next week, perhaps on Monday, he will speak to the nation by radio and television in a non-partisan explanation of his tax program. A few hours later the House by a vote of 411 to three approved a tax bill which contains some things to which the President objects. The new bill calls for a reduction of the federal excise taxes to 10 percent on such items as jewelry, cosmetics, furs, admission and travel tickets and telephone tolls. If approved by the Senate this would go into effect on April first.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson said today that if the Congress should vote to continue high farm price supports next year he probably would recommend a Presidential veto. Benson also told a House committee that the nation can remain prosperous with farmers receiving a gradually declining percentage of the national income. The Senate Labor committee today approved a bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion or national origin (the current version of the Old Fair Employment Practices Commission bill.)

And in Rome, the Chamber of Deputies has confirmed Mario Scelba as premier by a vote of 300 to 283.

In Venezuela today there was another day of hectic debate at the Tenth Inter-American Conference. We've been wondering what has been accomplished at this meeting in Caracas. So we asked our correspondent to sum it up. Here is Dan Schorr's recorded progress report:

SCHORR: The United States came down to Caracas mainly to nudge our good neighbors into effective joint measures against Communist penetration of this hemisphere, typified by the growth of Red influence in Gualemala. Our Latin friends came, primarily, to try to talk us into a more favorable economic policy. Each side is making some headway though meeting uncertainty and a little confusion. We're trying to get the Latin states to adopt a resolution with the effect of exposing Communist agents in each country, of exchanging information on their activities, holding consultations in case of serious penetration as a threat to the peace of America. And though there's little doubt it will ultimately pass by a large majority, action is slowed down by confusionists, by unawareness and occasionally (unintelligible). Today's debate, for example, was interrupted by a flareup between Ecuador and Peru, over their age-old border dispute. Communism was forgotten as arms flailed the air, charges hurled, and the Nicaraguan chairman banged his gavel to remind his colleagues they were out of order. All this obviously interested the public more than theoretical sounding discussions of far off Communist threats. (unintelligible) diversionary, in effect, if not intentioned. Mexico wants the resolution limited only to foreign agents of Communism, as though the line could be drawn. (unintelligible) the resolution to apply also to other forms of totalitarianism which would be sure to draw the opposition of dictator-ruled countries. Panama is trying to tack on a rider against racial discrimination in employment, the result of a Panamanian grievance about employment in the Canal Zone. Bolivia wants an amendment saying improved economic conditions should go hand-in-hand with the drive against Red penetration. The direct opposition comes from Guatemala's suave young Foreign Minister, Guillermo Toriello. And even he doesn't meet the resolution headon; opposing it not as anti-Communist but as interventionist, a dirty word in Latin America. Toriello, scheduled to speak tomorrow tells us he'll offer documentary proof of an attempt to intervene in Guatemala. Toriello is something of a puzzle: If he's a dupe rather than a Communist frontier, he's a stubborn one. Dulles, in his speech Monday, cited for Toreillo's benefit the case of another foreign minister, the Czech Jan Masaryk, who also thought there was room for Communism within democracy.

But Toriello laughed and said "That was Czechoslovakia, not America." Smilingly he tells us of being called the "little Lenin of Latin America" by a New York newspaper. If we find our Latin friends confused about the Red menace, they're having trouble figuring us out economically. The best U.S. could offer in speeches by Secretary Dulles and Assistant Secretary Samuel C. Waugh, was the promise to consider open-mindedly changes in economic policy to meet their complaints; complaints about unstable prices, tariff barriers and insufficient government loans. We're feeling our way so cautiously, that our statements are sometimes vague generalities.

For example, this last of Waugh's speech said price stabilization was no solution for their troubles and that it might be even more damaging than the instability itself. But that passage was cut out of the speech, because our whole foreign economic policy remains still to be decided. We speak with an uncertain voice here. But the Latin delegates have drawn hope from our invitation to a special Inter-American economic conference, to be held in Washington this year. Perhaps more hope than is warranted. Typical of what worries Latin America was the statement by Colombia that these countries exchange their labor at ten cents an hour for U. S. imports containing work at $2.00 an hour. This is Daniel Schorr in Caracas.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: America began with hungry men who thought a free fast was better than a fettered feast. Yet something more than hunger came out of that preference. And the glory of America is not in its tall towers nor vast acres. The glory of America is the American citizen, free sovereign and unafraid. We do well to thank God for that."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday March 11, 1954

This is the news:

House Democratic Leader Rayburn predicts that the House will approve a 100-dollar increase in personal tax exemptions. Rayburn said he expects few, if any, Democrats to oppose this. But Republican Leader Martin disagrees. He concedes that if the Democrats stick together they probably can win in the house. But he expects some Democrats to break ranks and vote with supporters of the Administration in opposition to increasing the personal exemption. But Representative Rayburn says if the move to increase the exemption does not pass "and they give all this tax relief to the high income brackets, with almost nothing for the little fellow, then I think it will be very embarrassing for the Republicans." The Administration says that this move would save the taxpayers..and cost the government.. almost two and a half billion dollars. The White House says that the President will make his tax address to the nation on Monday night. It will be heard over many of these stations at 10;45 p.m. eastern time.

The Senate today voted to consider statehood for Alaska and Hawaii in one bill... although the President has opposed such action. The Democratic move to tie-both bills together was passed by a vote of 46 to 43.. almost strictly along party lines.

The President today named Charles S. Thomas of Los Angeles to be the new Secretary of the navy. He is now serving as assistant secretary of defense.

The two Republicans on a three man Senate committee today recommended that the seat held by Democratic Senator Chavez of New Mexico be declared vacant because of "irregularities" in the 1952 election. Wyoming's Senator Barrett and Michigan's Senator Potter signed the report. Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri is preparing a minority report. Today's recommendation was the result of a one year inquiry of fraud charges made by Patrick Hurley, the unsuccessful Republican candidate in New Mexico. But Senator Chavez says the report is "a [redacted] tremendous insult to the people and officials of New Mexico". He says the [redacted] "statements in the report are not so." If the Senate should decide to declare the Chavez seat vacant, New Mexico's Governor Mechem would probably name a Republican to the Senate. This would make the line-up 48 Republicans to 47 Democrats. The 96th Senator is Independent ~~Mone~~ MORSE of Oregon.

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, a suspended army signal corps employe, told the McCarthy committee today she has never been a Communist.

I should like to review the testimony in a few minutes.

The House Labor committee voted 25 to 2 to amend the Taft-Hartley law to prohibit unions from denying membership to anyone because of race, religion or national origin. Democratic Representative Powell of New York calls this "a magna charta for Negro labor".. He says it will end "segregated union locals" by forcing the unions to give full and equal status to all qualified workers.

Democratic Senator Kefauver told a Senate committee that the General Motors Corporation, with its concentration of auto and tank production, is "approaching the point" of being a monopoly. Kefauver says the army "put all our eggs in one basket" in awarding G.M. a 200-million dollar contract for medium tanks..instead of splitting the contract with Chrysler, which originally developed the tank. The army says the award was made to General Motors "to provide the nation the maximum protection at the minimum cost."

Marine Colonel Schwable today told a special court of inquiry some of the conditions that led him to sign a germ warfare confession falsely. Schwable said he was constantly browbeaten and questioned by the Communists while he was cold, sick, cramped, filthy, and very lonely for the sight of an American. He said:"All I heard WERE Chinamen interrogating me or trying to feed me their political doctrines. I lost my sense of judgment. They say black is white...You say it is not... But you wind up agreeing." He told of being confined in a lean-to about the size of a doghouse in temperatures that dropped far below zero. Colonel Schwable said:"I used to pray for the night to come to bring me unconscciusness. But when I saw the sun starting to go down beyond the mountains I knew how cold it would be, and I would start praying for morning.

Here in New York today, Julio Pinto Grandia, a ringleader of Puerto Rican nationalists, was ordered to jail for six months for contempt of court..refusing to answer a grand jury's questions on the shooting episode in Washington last week. And one of the Representatives who was shot.. Alvin M. Bentley of Michigan,, has had another emergency operation. A doctor says he has suffered "a slight setback" as the result of the operation.

On the Stock Exchange today, industrial stocks rose to the highest levels in 25 years. The Dow-Jones average.. an index to stock prices..went above the 300 mark for the first time since October 25, 1929..four days before the big crash.

The Army says three paratroopers were killed and 72 injured in the largest peacetime airborne operation ever staged in this country. Some 9-thousand fully-equipped paratroopers and their equipment were dropped at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, in a few hours.

The Atomic Energy Commission said tonight that 28 Americans and 236 natives were subjected to "some radiation" during the recent atomic test in the Marshal islands. The commission says that all those exposed "are reported well." The announcement says that during the course of what's called "a routine" atomic test these people were transported from neighboring atolls to Kwajalein island according to plans as a precautionary measure. They were unexpectedly exposed to some radiation. There were no burns. After the tests are completed they will be returned to their homes. Representative Hinshaw, a member of the joint atomic energy committee, told reporters that the natives.. and presumably the Americans were 75 miles away from the explosion.

5-A

The British announced tonight that they will carry out germ warfare defense tests off the Bahama Islands this year. The British say such tests have been going on off the coast of Scotland. There is no indication what form the tests will take or on what scale they'll be conducted.

At Caracas, Guatemala again denounced the United States' anti-Communist resolution as "an extremely dangerous manuver" to hide intervention in the affairs of other countries. The foreign minister said:

Guetemala is not Communist nor is its government Communist."

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer sent his Parliament a bill calling for income tax reductions ranging from 6 to 41 per cent. There would be a 25 per cent cut in corporation taxes effective October first.

~~And in Indo-China, reliable American civilian pilots have now arrived to ferry supplies to the French in the field. The pilots are connected with retired General Chennault's privately owned airline.~~

Former assistant secretary of war John J. Mc Cloy, today denied charges by Senator McCarthy, that a war-time policy [redacted]m let "undesireables into the army." Mc Cloy said the army's policy in World War Two, concerning politcal loyalty was entirely sound. He said that many of the men to whom Mc Carthy apparently referred "were decorated for valor, and not a few were killed in action in the service of their country."

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss was suspended from her job with the army signal corps in Washington, because she was accused of being a "due-paying, card-carrying Communist" in 1943. The charge was made by Mrs. Mary Markward, a former F.B.I. counter-spy, who testified before the McCarthy committee that she has seen Mrs. Moss' name on a list of dues paying Communists. Today, Senator McCarthy, who left the hearing early, told Mrs. Moss:" We had testimony that you are a Communist and we are rather curious to know how people like yourself were shifted from waitress to the code room." Mrs Moss then testified: she did not work in the signal corps code room..had never been in a code room in her life. She said:"At no time have I ever been a member of the Communist party, and I never saw a Communist card." She said she never subscribed to the Daily Worker, and didn't know what Communism meant until 1948.. five years after she was supposed to be a party member.

Committee Counsel Roy Cohn told the Senators that the committee has evidence to corroborate that of Mrs. Mary Markward...from another witness, he did not name. At this point, Democratic Senator McClellan of Arkansas objected. And acting Chairman Mundt ordered Counsel Cohn's statement stricken from the record. Mundt explained that the "other witness" was now in contact with the F.B.I., and the committee would have to consider whether to release the name. McClelland objected again. He said:"That testimony shouldn't be revealed to the public, until we have a chance to weigh it. If you cannot call a witness, you should not mention it." McClelland charged that Mrs. Moss was being tried by heresay evidence.. rumour and innuendo. And Democratic Senator Symington told her:"I believe you are telling the truth." Mrs. Moss replied:"I certainly am." And the Senator went on to say:" I believe in this country a person is innocent until proved guilty. I think it very important that evidence be presented alongwith the implication of additional evidence." And he told the suspended army signal corps employe: "If you are not taken back by the army, come around and see me, and I'll get you a job."

Tonight, Senator McCarthy said. (and I'm reading a United Press dispatch from Washington.)."

"that charges he has not uncovered active Communists in the American government are completely false." The Wisconsin Republican said he had exposed a long list of Communists in government. In a radio interview with Commentator Fulton Lewis, Junior, Mc Carthy also:

Denied he was waging a battle against the army.

Replied to a charge of Senator Flanders, that the greatest danger from Communism is external."

Sen. Mc Carthy also said that this reporter who.. as the United Press puts it, "sharply criticized Mc Carthy in a Tuesday night television program, was an American advisor to the Moscow University Summer session in 1935. Sen. McCarthy said he said that this school was dedicated to the violent overthrow of the entire traditions of western democracy."

The rest of the story and my personal reaction will have to wait,

We are going through a period of continuing Congressional investigations. And it would seem that observations made many years ago still stand up as pretty good guideposts both for those testifying and those doing the questioning. Thomas Paine once remarked:"It is error only, and not truth, that shrinks ~~fm~~ from inquiry." Terence, in ancient days, had the answer:"Nothing is so difficult, he said, but that it may be found out by seeking."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

House Democratic Leader Rayburn predicts that the House will approve a 100-dollar increase in personal tax exemptions. Rayburn said he expects few, if any, Democrats to oppose this. But Republican Leader Martin disagrees. He concedes that if the Democrats stick together they proobably can win in the House. But he expects some Democrats to break ranks and vote with supporters of the Administration in opposition to increasing the personal exemption. But Representative Rayburn says if the move to increase the exemption does not pass "and they give all this tax relief to the high income brackets, with almost nothing for the little fellow, then I think it will be very embarrassing for the Republicans." The Administration says that this move would save the taxpayers and cost the government almost two and a half billion dollars. The White House says the President will make his tax address to the nation on Monday night. It will be heard over many of these stations at 10:45 p.m. eastern time.

The Senate today voted to consider statehood for Alaska and Hawaii in one bill although the President has opposed such action. The Democratic move to tie-both bills together was passed by a vote of 46 to 43 almost strictly along party lines.

The President today named Charles S. Thomas of Los Angeles to be the new Secretary of the Navy. He is now serving as assistant secretary of defense.

The two Republicans on a three man Senate committee today recommended that the seat held by Democratic Senator Chavez of New Mexico be declared vacant because of "irregularities" in the 1952 election. Wyoming's Senator Barrett and Michigan's Senator Potter signed the report. Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri is preparing a minority report. Today's recommendation was the result of a one year inquiry of fraud charges made by Patrick Hurley, the unsuccessful Republican candidate in New Mexico. But Senator Chavez says the report is "a tremendous insult to the people and officials of New Mexico." He says the "statements in the report are not so." If the Senate should decide to declare the Chavez seat vacant, New Mexico's Governor Mechem would probably name a Republican to the Senate. This would make the line-up 48 Republicans to 47 Democrats. The 96th Senator is Independent Morse of Oregon.

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, a suspended army signal corps employee, told the McCarthy committee today she has never been a Communist. I should like to review the testimony in a few minutes.

The House Labor committee voted 25 to 2 to amend the Taft-Hartley law to prohibit unions from denying membership to anyone because of race, religion or national origin. Democratic Representative Powell of New York calls this "a magna charta for Negro labor" He says it will end "segregated union locals" by forcing the unions to five full and equal status to all qualified workers.

Democratic Senator Kefauver told a Senate committee that the General Motors Corporation, with its concentration of auto and tank production, is "approaching the point" of being a monopoly. Kefauver says the army "put all our eggs in one basket" in awarding G.M. a 200-million dollar contract for medium tanks instead of splitting the contract with Chrysler, which originally developed the tank. The army says the award was made to General Motors "to provide thenation the maximum protection at the minimum cost."

Marine Colonel Schwable today told a special court of inquiry some of the conditions that led him to sign a germ warfare confession falsely. Schwable said he was constantly browbeaten and questioned by the Communists while he was cold, sick, cramped, filthy, and very lonely for the sight of an American. He said: "All I heard were Chinamen interrogating me or trying to feed me their political doctrines. I lost my sense of judgment. They say black is white. You say it is not. But you wind up agreeing." He told of being confined in a lean-to about the size of a doghouse in temperatures that dropped far below zero. Colonel Schwable said: "I used to pray for the night to come to bring me unconsciousness. I knew how cold it would be, and I would start praying for morning.

Here in New York today, Julio Pinto Grandia, a ringleader of Puerto Rican nationalists, was ordered to jail for six months for contempt of court refusing to answer a grand jury's questions on the shooting episode in Washington last week. And one of the Representatives who was shot, Alvin M. Bentley of Michigan, has had another emergency operation. A doctor says he has suffered "a slight setback" as the result of the operation.

On the Stock Exchange today, industrial stocks rose to the highest levels in 25 years. The Dow-Jones average, an index to stock prices, went above the 300 mark for the first time since October 25, 1929 - four days before the big crash.

The Army says three paratroopers were killed and 72 injured in the largest peacetime airborne operation ever staged in this country. Some 9 thousand fully equipped paratroopers and their equipment were dropped at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, in a few hours.

The Atomic Energy Commission said tonight that 28 Americans and 236 natives were subjected to "some radiation" during the recent atomic test in the Marshal Islands. The commission says that all those exposed "are reported well." The announcement says that during the course of what's called "a routine" atomic test these people were transported from neighboring atolls to Kwajalein Island according to plans as a precautionary measure. They were unexpectedly exposed to some radiation. There were no burns. After the tests are completed they will be returned to their homes. Representative Hinshaw, a member of the joint atomic energy committee, told reporters that the natives and presumably the Americans were 75 miles away from the explosion.

The British announced tonight that they will carry out germ warfare defense tests off the Bahama Islands this year. The British say such tests have been going on off the coast of Scotland. There is no indication what form the tests will take or on what scale they'll be conducted.

At Caracas, Guatemala again denounced the United States' anti-Communist resolution as "an extremely dangerous maneuver" to hide intervention in the affairs of other countries. The Foreign Minister said: Guatemala is not Communist nor is its government Communist."

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer sent his Parliament a bill calling for income tax reductions ranging from 6 to 41 per cent. There would be a 25 percent cut in corporation taxes effective October first.

Former assistant secretary of war John J. McCloy today denied charges by Senator McCarthy that a wartime policy let "undesireables into the army." McCloy said the army's policy in World War Two concerning political loyalty was entirely sound. He said that many of the men to whom McCarthy apparently referred "were decorated for valor and not a few were killed in action in the service of their country."

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss was suspended from her job with the army signal corps in Washington because she was accused of being a "dues-paying, card-carrying Communist" in 1943. The charge was made by Mrs. Mary Markward, a former FBI counter-spy, who testified before the McCarthy committee that she had seen Mrs. Moss' name on a list of dues paying Communists. Today, Senator McCarthy, who left the hearing early, told Mrs. Moss: "We had testimony that you are a Communist and we are rather curious to know how people like yourself were shifted from waitress to the code room." Mrs. Moss then testified: she did not work in the signal corps code room - had never been in a code room in her life. She said: "At no time have I ever been a member of the Communist party and I never saw a Communist card." She said she never subscribed to the Daily Worker and didn't know what Communism meant until 1948 five years after she was supposed to be a party member.

Committee Counsel Roy Cohn told the Senators that the committee has evidence to corroborate that of Mrs. Mary Markward from another witness he did not name. At this point, Democratic Senator McClellan of Arkansas objected. And acting Chairman Mundt ordered Counsel Cohn's statement stricken from the record. Mundt explained that the "other witness" was now in contact with the FBI and the committee would have to consider whether to release the name. McClellan objected again. He said: "That testimony shouldn't be revealed to the public until we have a chance to weigh it. If you cannot call a witness you should not mention it." McClellan charged that Mrs. Moss was being tried by heresay evidence, rumor and innuendo. And Democratic Senator Symington told her: "I believe you are telling the truth." Mrs. Moss replied: "I certainly am." And the Senator went on to say: "I believe in this country a person is innocent until proved guilty. I think it very important that evidence be presented along with the implication of additional evidence." And he told the suspended army signal corps employee: "If you are not taken back by the army, come around and see me and I'll get you a job."

Tonight, Senator McCarthy said and I'm reading a United Press dispatch from Washington, "that charges he has not uncovered active Communists in the American government are completely false." The Wisconsin Republican said he had exposed a long list of Communists in government. In a radio interview with commentator Fulton Lewis, Junior, McCarthy denied he was waging a battle against the army. Replied to a charge of Senator Flanders that the greatest danger from Communism is external."

Senator McCarthy also said that this reporter who, as the United Press put it, "sharply criticized McCarthy in a Tuesday night television program," was an American advisor to the Moscow University Summer session in 1935. And according to Senator McCarthy's broadcast tonight, he said that this school was dedicated to the violent overthrow of the entire traditions of western democracy." The rest of the story, some of the additional details and perhaps correction and my personal reaction will have to wait for another time.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are going through a period of continuing Congressional investigations. And it would seem that observations made many years ago still stand up as pretty good guideposts both for those testifying and those doing the questioning. Thomas Paine once remarked: "It is error only, and not truth, that shrinks from inquiry." Terence, in ancient days, had the answer: "Nothing is so difficult, he said, but that it may be found out by seeking."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday March 12, 1954

This is the news:

The government reports that unemployment increased by 584-thousand persons in February. It was the fourth straight monthly increase. There are now three million 671-thousand unemployed. In the past three months, December, January and February, the figure on the unemployed increased by two million. [redacted]

Once again tonight, Senator McCarthy and Army Secretary Stevens are in violent verbal disagreement. An army report [redacted] says that Senator McCarthy and his Chief Counsel, Roy Cohn applied pressure and threats to the army to try to get special treatment for a former committee aide..David Schine..who was drafted into the army. The Army report says the 27-year-old Cohn threatened to "get" Secretary Stevens and wreck the army. Cohn denies this and he and McCarthy say the army has been using this report in an attempt to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to give up its search for Communists in the army. McCarthy today released an unsigned memorandum [redacted] saying that Army

Secretary Stevens once suggested that the Committee aim its search for Communists at the navy.. the air force and the defense department. The unsigned McCarthy menorandum says Stevens offered to "furnish leads and plenty of dirt" for such an investigation.

Secretary Stevens promptly called this "utterly untrue." And the army's legal counsel, John G. Adams, who is alleged to have had conversations with McCarthy on such things, calls the McCarthy memorandum "fantastic and false."

~~Among other things, the Army report charges that McCarthy called the Pfc. an old David Schine a pest and nuisance but asked that Cohn not be told this. McCarthy told the army to treat Shine like any other draftee. But four or five times he suggested Schine be assigned to the New York area. The report says that Cohn, among other things, threatened to "expose" the army if Schine were sent overseas.~~

~~Cohn denies this and McCarthy calls the army report "twisted, distorted and untrue." The Senator says Cohn is pretty much indispensable.~~

One McCARTHY committee member, Republican Potter of Michigan, called for a quick hearing, to determine whether what he called "these shocking charges" against Cohn are true. Another Republican committee member, Dirksen of Illinois said McCarthy violated an agreement with other Republicans not to release his memorandum...at least until the [redacted] had discussed the Army's report on McCarthy and Cohn. [redacted] Dirksen says "the present controversey has gone far enough."

The three Democrats on the committee want an early hearing on the Army's report.. so does Republican Senator Mundt, another member.

Senator McCarthy left Washington today to make some speeches in Wisconsin.

Chairman Millikan of the Senate Finance Committee says the Senate will probably go along with the House on a reduction in excise taxes. He promised to battle against any further moves to cut income taxes.

Chairman Cole of the Atomic Energy Committee says [redacted]

[redacted] the committee has been checking all atomic installations for missing documents as "a routine" matter. Representative Pelly of Washington state says "highly secret" papers are missing from the atomic plant at Hanford in his state. He says the volume of the missing papers is "rather extensive."

In Europe today, an American military source in Frankfurt says a Russian-made Mig attacked two of our navy planes on the German-Czech frontier. One plane was badly shot up. Both managed to land safely at Munich.

And Belgium today joined Holland as the only two countries that have completely ratified the European army treaty.

Edward R. Murrow: March 12, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

I assume that most people have on their minds matters of more considerable substance than Senator McCarthy's opinion of this reporter, OR of mine of him. However, it might serve some purpose to set some part of the record straight. Let us begin with the subject of the Civil Liberties Union. Here is Senator McCarthy's statement on that subject, recorded while he was interrogating Reed Harris:

TAPE: HARRIS

Q. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at any time?

A. I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union, yes.

Q. The question is did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?

A. They did supply an attorney.

Q. The answer is yes?

A. The answer is yes.

Q. You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?

A. Mr. Chairman this was 1932.

Q. I know it was 1932. Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist party?

A. I do not know that they have been listed so, sir.

Q. You don't know they have been listed?

A. I have heard that mentioned or read that mentioned.

Now here is this reporter's comment, made on a recent television program:

TAPE: MURROW

"The Reed Harris hearing demonstrates one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive, nor does the F.B.I. or any other government agency. And the "American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General MacArthur."

by Fulton Lewis

Here again is what Senator McCarthy said last night, when asked to comment on my remarks. ~~by Fulton Lewis Jr.~~

TAPE: MCCARTHY. "May I say there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not been listed. I have as you see here, Fulton, the fourth report of the un-American Activities Committee in California. I quote from page 107..this is a quotation in regard to the organization Murrow said had not been listed. "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a communist-front or transmission-belt organization. At least ninety percent of its efforts are expended on behalf of communists who come into conflict with the law"....so that again, Mr. Murrow is not telling the truth."

I specifically stated "the Attorney General's list, the F.B.I. and any other government agency". Someone lied - there's no doubt about that.

Now let us turn to another subject. Mr. Lewis last night asked the Senator to comment on a television program of which I am the editor. Here is Senator McCarthy's reply. I have no hesitation in giving it such circulation as this broadcast may enjoy.

TAPE: MCCARTHY: "I may say, Fulton, that I have a little difficulty answering the specific attack he made because I never listen to the extreme left-wing, bleeding heart element of radio and television..."

The Senator may have me there. I may be a "bleeding heart", being not quite sure of what it means. As for being "extreme left wing", that is political shorthand; but if the Senator means that I am somewhat to the left of his position and of Louis XIV, he is correct.

Now here are the facts about that Moscow summer school. The date was 1935. I was the Assistant Director of the Institute of International Education. This organization dealt primarily with the exchange of students and professors between this and foreign countries. It had established offices in London, Paris, Berlin, Geneva and elsewhere. It was largely financed at that time by the Carnegie Corporation and the Rockefeller Foundation. Among its board of trustees were such as John Foster Dulles, John Basset Moore, Thomas W. Lamont, Virginia Gildersleeve, and others equally distinguished. This board of trustees created an advisory committee in connection with a summer school in Moscow for graduate students, teachers and professors. Here is the list of advisors:

W.W. Charters, Director, Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University.

Harry Wooburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University.

George S. Counts, Professor of Education. Teachers College, Columbia University.

John Dewey, Professor Emeritus of Philosophy, Columbia University.

Stephen Duggan, Director, Institute of International Education.

Hallie F. Flanagan, Professor of English, Vassar College.

Frank P. Graham, President, University of North Carolina.

Robert M. Hutchins, President, University of Chicago.

Charles H. Judd, Dean, School of Education, University of Chicago.

I.L. Kandel, Professor of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Robert L. Kelly, Secretary, Association of American Colleges.

John A. Kingsbury, Secretary, Milbank Memorial Fund.

Susan M. Kingsbury, Professor of Social Economy and Social Research, Bryn Mawr College.

Paul Klapper, Dean, School of Education, College of the City of New York.

Charles R. Mann, Director, American Council on Education.

Edward R. Murrow, Assistant Director, Institute of International Education.

William Allan Neilson, President, Smith College.

Howard W. Odum, Professor of Sociology, University of North Carolina.

William F. Russell, Dean, Teachers College, Columbia University.

H.W. Tyler, General Secretary, American Association of University Professors.

Ernest H. Wilkins, President, Oberlin College.

John W. Withers, Dean, School of Education, New York University.

Thomas Woody, Professor of History of Education, University of Pennsylvania

Harvey W. Zorbaugh, Director, Clinic for the Social Adjustment of Gifted Children, New York University.

Some of the persons on that list are now dead, but presumably not yet immune from the Senator's attentions. It was and is a rather distinguished list, and I plead neither ignorance nor youth as the reason for my name being on it.

The Russian authorities abruptly, and without satisfactory explanation, cancelled the proposed summer school before it began, and most of the prospective members spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union. I did not accompany the group to the Soviet Union. No effort was made to revive the venture, and the advisory council was therefore dissolved. The Institute of International Education continued to arrange student and professorial exchanges, and to make arrangements for American students to attend summer sessions in various foreign countries, but not in the Soviet Union.

I believed eighteen years ago, and I believe today, that mature American graduate students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, the clash of ideas, with communists anywhere under peacetime conditions, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the communist cause, dogma and doctrine is stronger than our own. This reporter declines to admit that, but remains uncertain as to Senator McCarthy's position on this matter.

This seems to be the open season for quoting Lincoln. Last night, Senator Mc Carthy quoted from a Lincoln speech of 1838. I'd like to read you these words from that same speech:"- I hope I am overwary, but if I am not, there is even now something of ill-omen amongst us. I mean the increasing disregard for law which pervades the country; the growing disposition to substitute the wild and furious passions, in lieu of the sober judgement of courts; and the worse than savage mobs, for the executive ministers of justice."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(CBS RADIO NETWORK)
(HARD NEWS PORTION)

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The government reports that unemployment increased by 584-thousand persons in February. It was the fourth straight monthly increase. There are now three million 671-thousand unemployed. In the past three months, December, January and February, the figure on the unemployed increased by two million.

Once again tonight, Senator McCarthy and Army Secretary Stevens are in violent verbal disagreement. An army report says that Senator McCarthy and his Chief Counsel, Roy Cohn, applied pressure and threats to the army to try to get special treatment for a former committee aide, David Schine, who was drafted into the army. The Army report says the 27-year-old Cohn threatened to "get" Secretary Stevens and wreck the army. Cohn denies this and he and McCarthy say the army has been using this report in an attempt to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to give up up its search for Communists in the army. McCarthy today released an unsigned memorandum saying that Army Secretary Stevens once suggested that the Committee aim its search for Communists at the Navy, the Air Force and the Defense Department. The unsigned McCarthy memorandum says Stevens offered to "furnish leads and plenty of dirt" for such an investigation.

Secretary Stevens promptly called this "utterly untrue." And the Army's legal counsel, John G. Adams, who is alleged to have had conversations with McCarthy on such things, calls the McCarthy memorandum "fantastic and false."

One McCarthy committee member, Republican Potter of Michigan, called for a quick hearing to determine whether what he called "these shocking charges" against Cohn are true. Another Republican committee member, Dirksen of Illinois said McCarthy violated an agreement with other Republicans not to release his memorandum at least until they had discussed the Army's report on McCarthy and Cohn. Dirksen says "the present controversey has gone far enough."

The three Democrats on the committee want an early hearing on the Army's report - so does Republican Senator Mundt, another member. Senator McCarthy left Washington today to make some speeches in Wisconsin.

Chairman Millikan of the Senate Finance Committee says the Senate will probably go along with the House on a reduction in excise taxes. He promised to battle against any further moves to cut income taxes.

Chairman Cole of the Atomic Energy Committee says the committee has been checking all atomic installations for missing documents as "a routine" matter. Representative Pelly of Washington state says "highly secret" papers are missing from the atomic plant at Hanford in his state. He says the volume of the missing papers is "rather extensive."

In Europe today, an American military source in Frankfurt says a Russian-made Mig attacked two of our navy planes on the German-Czech frontier. One plane was badly shot up. Both managed to land safely at Munich.

And Belgium today joined Holland as the only two countries that have completely ratified the European army treaty.

EDWARD R. MURROW ON SENATOR MC CARTHY (CBS RADIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

I assume that most people have on their minds matters of more considerable substance than Senator McCarthy's opinion of this reporter, or mine of him. However, it might serve some purpose to set some part of the record straight. Let us begin with the subject of the Civil Liberties Union. Here is Senator McCarthy's statement on that subject, recorded while he was interrogating Reed Harris:

TAPE: HARRIS

Q. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at any time?

A. I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union, yes.

Q. The question is did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?

A. They did supply an attorney.

Q. The answer is yes?

A. The answer is yes.

Q. You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?

A. Mr. Chairman this was 1932.

Q. I know it was 1932. Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist party?

A. I do not know that they have been listed so, sir.

Q. You don't know they have been listed?

A. I have heard that mentioned or read that mentioned.

Now here is this reporter's comment, made on a recent television program:

TAPE: MURROW:

"The Reed Harris hearing demonstrates one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive, nor does the F.B.I. or any other government agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General MacArthur."

Here again is what Senator McCarthy said last night, when asked by Fulton Lewis, Jr., to comment on my remarks:

TAPE: "May I say there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good MCCARTHY Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not been listed. I have as you see, here, Fulton, the fourth report of the un-American Activities Committee in California. I quote from page 107 .. this is a quotation in regard to the organization Murrow said had not been listed. "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a communist-front or transmission-belt organization. At least ninety percent of its efforts are expended on behalf of Communists who come into conflict with the law" - so that again, Mr. Murrow is not telling the truth."

I specifically stated "the Attorney General's list, the F.B.I. and any other government agency." Someone lied - there's no doubt about that.

Now let us turn to another subject. Mr. Lewis last night asked the Senator to comment on a television program of which I am the editor. Here is Senator McCarthy's reply. I have no hesitation in giving it such circulation as this broadcast may enjoy.

TAPE: "I may say, Fulton, that I have a little difficulty answering the specific MCCARTHY: attack he made because I never listen to the extreme left-wing, bleeding heart element of radio and television.."

The Senator may have me there. I may be a "bleeding heart", being not quite sure of what it means. As for being "extreme left wing," that is political shorthand; but if the Senator means that I am somewhat to the left of his position and of Louis XIV, he is correct.

Now here are the facts about that Moscow summer school. The date was 1935. I was the Assistant Director of the Institute of International Education. This organization dealt primarily with the exchange of students and professors between this and foreign countries. It had established offices in London, Paris, Berlin, Geneva and elsewhere. It was largely financed at that time by the Carnegie Corporation and the Rockefeller Foundation. Among its board of trustees were such as John Foster Dulles, John Bassot Moore, Thomas W. Lamont, Virginia Gildersleeve, and others equally distinguished. This board of trustees created an advisory committee in connection with a summer school in Moscow for graduate students, teachers and professors. Here is the list of advisors:

W.W. Charters, Director, Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University.

Harry Wooburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University.

George S. Counts, Professor of Education. Teachers College, Columbia University.

John Dewey, Professor Emeritus of Philosophy, Columbia University.

Stephen Duggan, Director, Institute of International Education.

Hallie F. Flanagan, Professor of English, Vassar College.

Frank P. Graham, President, University of North Carolina.

Robert M. Hutchins, President, University of Chicago.

Charles H. Judd, Dean, School of Education, University of Chicago.

I,L. Kandel, Professor of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Robert L. Kelly, Secretary, Association of American Colleges.

John A. Kingsbury, Secretary, Milbank Memorial Fund.

Susan M. Kingsbury, Professor of Social Economy and Social Research, Bryn Mawr College.

Paul Klapper, Dean, School of Education, College of the City of New York.

Charles R. Mann, Director, American Council of Education.

Edward R. Murrow, Assistant Director, Institute of International Education.

William Allan Neilson, President, Smith College.

Howard W. Odum, Professor of Sociology, University of North Carolina.

William F. Russell, Dean, Teachers College, Columbia University.

H.W. Tyler, General Secretary, American Association of University Professor

Ernest H. Wilkins, President, Oberlin College.

John W. Withers, Dean, School of Education, New York University.

Thomas Woody, Professor of History of Education, University of Pennsylvania

Harvey W. Zorbaugh, Director, Clinic for the Social Adjustment of Gifted Children, New York University.

Some of the persons on that list are now dead, but presumably not yet immune from the Senator's attentions. It was and is a rather distinguished list, and I plead neither ignorance nor youth as the reason for my name being on it.

The Russian authorities abruptly, and without satisfactory explanation, cancelled the proposed summer school before it began, and most of the prospective members spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union. I did not accompany the group to the Soviet Union. No effort was made to revive the venture, and the advisory council was therefore dissolved. The Institute of International Education continued to arrange student and professorial exchanges, and to make arrangements for American students to attend summer sessions in various foreign countries, but not in the Soviet Union.

I believed eighteen years ago, and I believe today that mature American graduate students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, the clash of ideas with communists anywhere under peacetime conditions, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the communist cause, dogma and doctrine is stronger than our own. This reporter declines to admit that, but remains uncertain as to Senator McCarthy's position on this matter.

Monday, March 15, 1954

This is the news:

General Ridgeway told a Senate committee today, he is "not perfectly satisfied" with the new trimmed-down army budget. The army chief of staff, in what appeared to be the first high military critisicim, of the Administration's new look in military affairs, said: the army's capabilities have been reduced, while its global responsibilities have not been correspondingly lessened. He feels the individual soldier, "far from (RECEDING) in importance, is emerging even more clearly as the key to ultimate victory." But, said General Ridgeway, he has no doubt, the army will be able to solve the problem confronting it.

Defense Secretary Wilson told the Senators the New Look--(WHICH) I'd like to discuss in a fewminutes--will give the nation "adequate" security, under present world conditions. He said the military program will be changed, if world events make it necessary. And he indicated that we will not rely solely on "massive retaliation", to handle local wars. He said:"We will take a good square look at each situation" and determine what is best for the nation.

Army Secretary Stevens told the Senators, that the new military budget is based on certain basic assumptions.. such as, that there will be no resumption of the war in Korea. (Stevens) said: despite such basic assumptions "I do not believe that the (Long-Range) Communist menace has abated one iota."

The President tonight makes a radio and television address to the nation on taxes. It may be heard over many of these stations at 10;45 p.m. eastern time. And House Speaker Martin said today, after a White House meeting, (He) believes that the cut in the personal income tax..being recommended by some Democrats.. would endanger our economic stability. Martin says tax cuts already made by the Administration this year total about seven billion dollars. He says the President feels "to dump another two and a half billion dollar cut on top of that would be straining it too far financially."

Democratic House Leader Rayburn says he hopes the President is not taking credit" for a five billion dollar drop in income and corporation taxes on January first. Because--he says--that cut was ordered by a Democratic congress before Mr. Eisenhower became president." Tomorrow night Representative Rayburn, and other Democratic congressmen and senators, will reply to the President's speech of tonight.

The Supreme Court today upheld the submerged lands act which gives the oil-rich offshore lands to coastal states. Six of the justices said the Constiution gives Congress unlimited power over the public lands. And it is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. Two justices disagreed. Mr. Justice Black said the court's decision leaves him in doubt whether the court would sustain the right of Congress to sell the Mississippi River or any other great navigable river of this country. And Mr. Justice Douglas said earlier court decisions have held that the United States had "paramount right" to submerged lands.

Two Republican Senate leaders today urged Senator McCarthy to cancel a public speaking tour he has scheduled from Wednesday through Friday. They want his committee to start hearings on the quarrel between the Army and Senator McCarthy and his committee counsel Roy Cohn. But McCarthy refuses to start a public hearing this week. He has scheduled a closed hearing for tomorrow and then will be off on his speechmaking. Earlier, Republican Senator Dirksen, a member of the McCarthy committee, said the

"The public business comes (FIRST.) This is a pressing matter. It can't be deferred." Dirksen said: "A Senator should never let speaking engagements or any other semi-private affairs interfere with public service." And Senate Republican Leader Knowland said: the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy "is important enough for all members of the McCarthy committee.. and should be given priority over all other matters."

This reporter tonight agreed to Senator McCarthy's suggestion that the Senator appear on my television program on April sixth. A telegram from the Senator charged IN PART that I HAVE "consciously served the Communist cause." I replied that I "utterly deny" this charge. And I said in a telegram to the Senator: "The record when it is finished will show who has served the Communist cause, you or I."

In Indo-China, Viet Minh troops have fought their way to the heart of a French fortress 175 miles west of Hanoi. The French have rushed a battalion of paratroops to the area where the enemy is waging a full-scale front attack..rather than his customary guerrilla and infilytration tactics.

Edward R. Murrow: March 15, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

If this country were not being distracted by certain domestic happenings, it would be paying anxious attention to the confusion over the grand strategy for American power. Some clarity had begun to show itself last week, then Vice President Nixon's ~~telecast~~ SPEECH Saturday night, roiled it up again.

President Eisenhower himself had not made things clear, with the assertion at his last ~~press~~ NEWS conference, that the United States would not get involved in another war without a declaration of war by Congress. Whatever the President said, there can be no certainty, in the atomic age, that war can wait for such a formal declaration. Suppose the enemy decided to strike first without warning, and sent a wave of bombers over the United States; does anyone think that the commander-in-chief would not order instant retaliation without waiting for Congress? Furthermore in the atomic age, a hydrogen bomb, or a large fission bomb, dropped on Washington could wipe out Congress and all chance of a meeting to declare war. President Eisenhower must assume that everybody understands this, which may be why he did not allow for these contingencies in his statement. He may have simply been giving an assurance, that we should not go to war in Indo-China without action by Congress.

But his remarks seemed to be directed to a question that has arisen from Secretary Dulles's announcement of the so-called "new look" in American grand strategy. "The basic decision" Mr. Dulles had said, "was to depend primarily upon a great capacity to retaliate instantly by means, and at places, of our own choosing." That left the natural question who was to do the choosing, and what was meant by "instantly". And the President seemed to be saying that instantly meant after Congress could meet and choose.

After Adlai Stevenson called for discussion of grand strategy, Washington was told that Mr. Dulles's "new look" had already been put into proper perspective, by the highest technical experts. Admiral Carney, Navy member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, speaking a month after the Dulles speech, said: "If we are honest with ourselves we will acknowledge that there are big wars, little wars, general wars, localized wars, Marquis of Queensbury wars, and savage, ruthless wars, atomic wars and perhaps non-atomic wars." And the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Admiral Radford, is twice on record with views that drastically modify the pronouncement of Secretary Dulles. On December 15 he said: "Recurring local situations - hot spots - are going to be with us for a long time to come. Unless we are in a position to handle them positively, and quickly, these hot spots will be serious and may be frequent." And he spoke of our having mobile, versatile combat forces, in addition to atomic weapons.

Then last Tuesday he said: "Our planning does not subscribe to the thinking, that the ability to deliver massive atomic retaliation is, by itself, adequate to meet all our security needs. It is not correct to say that we are relying exclusively on one weapon, or one service, or that we are anticipating one kind of war. I believe that the nation would be prisoner of its own military posture, if it had no capability other than to deliver a massive atomic attack." ~~Defense Secretary Wilson spoke to~~ Senators in this vein today.

~~So Mr. Stevenson's request for a discussion of strategy had been anticipated by two of the men best qualified to discuss it, and then Mr. Nixon could, whatever qualifying had been done, in his Saturday night talk.~~

BUT BACK TO MR. NIXON IN HIS SATURDAY NIGHT TALK*

Here he was spokesman of the party, as official as could be, and presumably spokesman of the President. And this is what he said: "Rather than let the Communists nibble us to death all over the world, in little wars, we would rely primarily on our massive retaliatory power, which we could use in our own discretion, at times and places that we chose." So that raised the question again, who is to use the discretion and choose the places? And that once more made Mr. Eisenhower's promise to let Congress do it, appear to be the answer. And in the atomic era that still is a promise a president may not be able to keep. So we are where we came in. The "new look" is there, and it is again out of perspective.

It is not unreasonable to presume that the great majority of Americans, and foreigners too, understood that Mr. Dulles's "new look" was intended primarily as a grave warning to the Kremlin. It certainly seemed to be saying, that the Soviet Union must not count on launching local aggressions with impunity, for the cost could be made unbearably high. Americans have had it drummed into them, that past wars could have been avoided if Washington had spoken out about its intention to act. Mr. Dulles spoke out.

The gravity of the warning appears to have registered in the Kremlin. For Mr. Malenkov has now become the first Soviet leader to admit publicly, that the Soviet Union itself might be destroyed in an atomic war. Heretofore the Russians have said only that capitalist countries would be destroyed in another war. Mr. Malenkov now asserts that all of civilization could be destroyed in an atomic war.

This acknowledgement does not bear on the controversy over the "new look". But it is a tiny gleam of hope that the Soviet leaders may be preparing to do something to prevent war. They might, for one thing, break the logjam in the discussion of atomic control and disarmament. To say this is stretching optimism pretty far. But such gleams of hope are few, and they ~~have~~ ought to be treasured.

There are, as we mentioned earlier, some small indications, that the Russians are becoming more aware of what an all-out war could do to this minor planet of ours. Daniel Webster once remarked:"Great events seldom happen and affect few. But trifles happen every moment to everybody. And though one occurance of them adds little to the happiness or misery of life, the sum total of their continual repitition is of the highest consequence."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Ridgeway told a Senate committee today he is "not perfectly satisfi with the new trimmed-down army budget. The army chief of staff, in what appeared to be the first high military criticism of the Administration's new look in military affairs, said: the army's capabilities have been reduced while its global responsibilities have not been correspondingly lessened. He feels the individual soldier, "far from receding in importance, is emerging even more clearly as the key to ultimate victory." But, said General Ridgeway, he has no doubt the army will be able to solve the problem confronting it.

Defense Secretary Wilson told the Senators the New Look which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes will give the nation "adequate" security under present world conditions. He said the military program will be changed if world events make it necessary. And he indicated that we will not rely solely on "massive retaliation" to handle local wars. He said: "We will take a good square look at each situation" and determine what is best for the nation.

Army Secretary Stevens told the Senators that the new military budget is based on certain basic assumptions such as, that there will be no resumption of the war in Korea. Stevens said: "despite such basic assumptions, I do not believe that the long-range Communist menace has abated one iota."

The President tonight makes a radio and television address to the nation on taxes. It may be heard over many of these stations at 10:45 p.m. eastern time. And House Speaker Martin said today, after a White House meeting, he believes that the cut in the personal income tax being recommended by some Democrats, would endanger our economic stability. Martin says tax cuts already made by the Administration this year total about seven billion dollars. He says the President feels "to dump another two and a half billion dollar cut on top of that would be straining it too far financially."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Ridgeway told a Senate committee today he is "not perfectly satisfi with the new trimmed-down army budget. The army chief of staff, in what appeared to be the first high military criticism of the Administration's new look in military affairs, said: the army's capabilities have been reduced while its global responsibilities have not been correspondingly lessened. He feels the individual soldier, "far from receding in importance, is emerging even more clearly as the key to ultimate victory." But, said General Ridgeway, he has no doubt the army will be able to solve the problem confronting it.

Defense Secretary Wilson told the Senators the New Look which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes will give the nation "adequate" security under present world conditions. He said the military program will be changed if world events make it necessary. And he indicated that we will not rely solely on "massive retaliation" to handle local wars. He said: "We will take a good square look at each situation" and determine what is best for the nation.

Army Secretary Stevens told the Senators that the new military budget is based on certain basic assumptions such as, that there will be no resumption of the war in Korea. Stevens said: "despite such basic assumptions, I do not believe that the long-range Communist menace has abated one iota."

The President tonight makes a radio and television address to the nation on taxes. It may be heard over many of these stations at 10:45 p.m. eastern time. And House Speaker Martin said today, after a White House meeting, he believes that the cut in the personal income tax being recommended by some Democrats, would endanger our economic stability. Martin says tax cuts already made by the Administration this year total about seven billion dollars. He says the President feels "to dump another two and a half billion dollar cut on top of that would be straining it too far financially."

Democratic House Leader Rayburn says he hopes the President is not "taking credit" for a five billion dollar drop in income and corporation taxes on January first. Because, he says, that cut was ordered by a Democratic congress before Mr. Eisenhower became president." Tomorrow night Representative Rayburn, and other Democratic congressmen and senators, will reply to the President's speech of tonight.

The Supreme Court today upheld the submerged lands act which gives the oil-rich offshore lands to coastal states. Six of the justices said the Constitution gives Congress unlimited power over the public lands. And it is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. Two justices disagreed. Mr. Justice Black said the court's decision leaves him in doubt whether the court would sustain the right of Congress to sell the Mississippi River or any other great navigable river of this country. And Mr. Justice Douglas said earlier court decisions have held that the United States had "paramount right" to submerged lands.

Two Republican Senate leaders today urged Senator McCarthy to cancel a public speaking tour he has scheduled from Wednesday through Friday. They want his committee to start hearings on the quarrel between the Army and Senator McCarthy and his committee counsel Roy Cohn. But McCarthy refuses to start a public hearing this week. He has scheduled a closed hearing for tomorrow and then will be off on his speech-making. Earlier, Republican Senator Dirksen, a member of the McCarthy committee, said: "The public business comes first. This is a pressing matter. It can't be deferred." Dirksen said: "A Senator should never let speaking engagements or any other semi-private affairs interfere with public service." And Senate Republican Leader Knowland said: the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy "is important enough for all members of the McCarthy committee and should be given priority over all other matters."

This reporter tonight agreed to Senator McCarthy's suggestion that the Senator appear on my television program on April sixth. A telegram from the Senator charged in part that I have "consciously served the Communist cause." I replied that I "utterly deny" this charge. And I said in a telegram to the Senator: "The record when it is finished, will show who has served the Communist cause, you or I."

In Indo-China, Viet Minh troops have fought their way to the heart of a French foryress 175 miles west of Hanoi. The French have rushed a battalion of paratroops to the area where the enemy is waging a full-scale front attack - rather than his customary guerrilla and infiltration tactics.

If this country were not being distracted by certain domestic happenings, it would be paying anxious attention to the confusion over the grand strategy for American power. Some clarity had begun to show itself last week, then Vice President Nixon's speech Saturday night, roiled it up again. President Eisenhower himself had not made things clear, with the assertion at his last news conference, that the United States would not get involved in another war without a declaration of war by Congress. Whatever the President said, there can be no certainty, in the atomic age, that war can wait for such a formal declaration. Suppose the enemy decided to strike first without warning, and sent a wave of bombers over the United States; does anyone think that the commander-in-chief would not order instant retaliation without waiting for Congress? Furthermore in the atomic age, a hydrogen bomb, or a large fission bomb, dropped on Washington could wipe out Congress and all chance of a meeting to declare war. President Eisenhower must assume that everybody understands this, which may be why he did not allow for these contingencies in his statement. He may have simply been giving an assurance, that we should not go to war in Indo-China without action by Congress. But his remarks seemed to be directed to a question that has arisen from Secretary Dulles's announcement of the so-called "new look" in American grand strategy. "The basic decision" Mr. Dulles had said, "was to depend primarily upon a great capacity to retaliate instantly by means, and at places, of our own choosing." That left the natural question who was to do the choosing, and what was meant by "instantly." And the President seemed to be saying that instantly meant after Congress could meet and choose.

After Adlai Stevenson called for discussion of grand strategy, Washington was told that Mr. Dulles's "new look" had already been put into proper perspective, by the highest technical experts. Admiral Carney, Navy member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, speaking a month after the Dulles speech, said: "If we are honest with ourselves we will acknowledge that there are big wars, little wars, general wars, localized wars, Marquis of Queensbury wars, and savage, ruthless wars, atomic wars and perhaps non-atomic wars." And the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Admiral Radford, is twice on record with views that drastically modify the pronouncement of Secretary Dulles. On December 15 he said: "Recurring local situations - hot spots - are going to be with us for a long time to come. Unless we are in a position to handle them positively, and quickly, these hot spots will be serious and may be frequent." And he spoke of our having mobile, versatile combat forces, in addition to atomic weapons. Then last Tuesday he said: "Our planning does not subscribe to the thinking, that the ability to deliver massive atomic retaliation is, by itself, adequate to meet all our security needs. It is not correct to say, that we are relying exclusively on one weapon, or one service, or that we are anticipating one kind of war. I believe that the nation would be prisoner of its own military posture, if it had no capability other than to deliver a massive atomic attack. Defense Secretary Wilson spoke to Senators in this vein today. But back to Mr. Nixon in his Saturday night talk. Here, he was spokesman of the party, as official as could be, and presumably spokesman of the President. And this is what he said: "Rather than let the Communists nibble us to death all over the world, in little wars, we would rely primarily on our massive retaliatory power, which we could use in our own discretion, at times and places that we chose." So that raised the question again, who is to use the discretion and choose the places? And that once more made Mr. Eisenhower's promise to let Congress do it, appear to be the answer. And in the atomic era that still is a promise a president may not be able to keep. So we are where we came in. The "new look" is there, and it is again out of perspective. It is not unreasonable to presume that the great majority of Americans, and foreigners too, understood that Mr. Dulles's "new look" was intended primarily as a grave warning to the Kremlin. It certainly seemed to be saying, that the Soviet Union must not count on launching local aggressions with impunity, for the cost could be made unbearably high. Americans have had it drummed into them, that past wars could have been avoided if Washington had spoken out about its intention to act. Mr. Dulles spoke out. The gravity of the warning appears to have registere in the Kremlin. For Mr. Malenkov has not become the first Soviet leader to admit publicly, that the Soviet Union itself might be destroyed in an atomic war. Heretofore the Russians have said only that capitalist countries would be destroyed in another war. Mr. Malenkov now asserts that all of civilization could be destroyed in an atomic war. This acknowledgement does not bear on the controversy over the "new look." But it is a tiny gleam of hope that the Soviet leaders may be preparing to do something to prevent war. They might, for one thing, break the logjam in the discussion of atomic control and disarmament. To say this is stretching optimism pretty far. But such gleams of hope are few, and they ought to be treasured.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are, as we mentioned earlier, some small indications, that the Russians are becoming more aware of what an all-out war could do to this minor planet of ours. Daniel Webster once remarked: "Great events seldom happen and affect few. But trifles happen every moment to everybody. And though one occurance of them adds little to the happiness or misery of life, the sum total of their continual repetition is of the highest consequence."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, Mar. 16 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says the President has the authority to order a counter-attack against AN aggressor who attacks any of 33 allied countries. Mr. Dulles told reporters that under the North Atlantic pact and the Inter-American defense treaty (both approved by the Senate), the President could order instant retaliation against any aggressor. But the President himself said recently we will not become involved in any war without the approval of the Senate. Mr. Dulles holds that should London or Paris be bombed the President could call for retaliation just as he would if New York or Washington were attacked. The Secretary says that in most cases there would be consultation with the Senate and allied governments. And, he says, the President could decide the nature and extent of our counter-attack. TONIGHT, Mr. Dulles writes in the Quarterly Foreign Affairs magazine that the cornerstone of our military and diplomatic policy is a system of alliances with other free nations. It is not a blind reliance on atomic weapons. And we have no intention of depending merely on our "capacity for massive retaliation" to scare off possible Communist aggression. Instead, says the Secretary, we will deal separately with each case in the most appropriate manner, making full use of local defense forces. (meaning those of our allies.)

The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, Admiral Radford, ALSO told Senators today that our "new look" military strategy does not depend solely on massive atomic retaliation. He says its not correct to say we are relying exclusively on one weapon, or one service or that we are anticipating one kind of war. Admiral Radford said that in reading testimony by General Ridgeway he had the feeling that the army chief of staff was not satisfied with the new army budget.

House Speaker Martin said today--after a two and a half hour meeting with House Republicans..that he is confident they can defeat a Democratic drive to increase the income tax exemptions from the present $600 to $800 dollars. Martin says the President's speech of last night was very effective in convincing fellow Republicans. The President argued that the Democratic proposal is unsound...politically inspired..will lead to bigger deficits and more inflation..and undermine the cornerstone of his policies. Today, the Democratic National Committee said that under the Administration-sponsored tax law 80 per cent of all taxpayers would get only six per cent of all tax reductions. These are the people--says the committee-with incomes of 5-thousand dollars a year or less.

House Democratic Leader Rayburn says the Administration bill would favor the "few" taxpayers..not the "many." And Democratic Senator George says that with steel operating at only 69 per cent of capacity.. textile mills working only three or four days a week.. and "nearly every other key industry" in similar trouble, more tax relief should go to the workers. He says the nation's wealth does not lie in its business operations but in the profitably employed time of her workers.

Senator McCarthy's committee today agreed to investigate the army's charge that the Senator and Committee Counsel Roy Cohen USED [redacted] pressure [redacted] to TRY TO get special treatment for former committee aide, Private David Schine. The committee will also investigate McCarthy's charge that the army tried to BLACKMAIL [redacted] him with this report..to get him to call off an investigation of the army. The investigation chairman will be Republican Senator Mundt..and he will select a new staff to aide the committee COHN IS OUT until the investigation is over. McCarthy will be a member but not chairman, He'll be able to question witnesses, all of whom will testify under oath and in public.

The Senate Rules committee, by a five to four party vote, has asked the full Senate to decide WHETHER to unseat Democratic Senator Chavez of New Mexico. The Republicans claim "flagrant irregularities" marked his election victory in 1952.

The congressional atomic energy committee, says some classified papers are missing from the atomic plant at Hanford, Washington... but none are top secret.. and there are no indications of theft or espionage.

In Indo-China, the Viet Minh have knocked out two French landing fields near Dien Bien Phu. But fresh French parattroop reinforcements have stopped the attacking enemy, within a half mile of the heart of the fortress in the northwest. The French estimate they enemy has suffered 8-thousand casualties in four days of battle..in their biggest drive of the 8-year-old war. The 10-thousand man French garrison is now reported to be fighting against four times as many Vietminh troops.

Edward R. Murrow: March 16, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Paris once more is the hub of world events, and the political struggles going on there can have a decisive effect on the safety of many lands and many peoples, including our own. The fate of Indo-China is in the balance, and with it, the fate of all non-communist governments in Southeast Asia. The onlooker may say, that this is not so true about Paris as it is about Dien Bien Phu, where the most violent battle of the seven years' war in Indo-China is being fought. / But that battle is being waged chiefly for its influence on the coming Geneva conference. Both sides are paying a high price to buy bargaining power at Geneva. // But in Paris, the very nature of the French Union is at stake, and so is the loyalty of Vietnam to the anti-Communist struggle. And so is fruitful co-operation between France and the United States. And so is the future of the federation of Western Europe, and a European Army, and with it our own security. Seldom have so many vital interests been laid open to one government's decisions.

Negotiations between the French Government, and the delegation from Vietnam were suspended today, to give the French Cabinet the opportunity to heal a deep rift over the amount of independence to be granted members of the French Union. Vietnam demands complete independence, though it has promised to associate itself, as a free state, with France and give France a favored economic position. Vice Premier Paul Reynaud is supporting the Vietnam demand inside the Cabinet. He insists that the French Union must follow the example of the British Commonwealth and give members a full share in operating the union, as well as the freedom to secede. This goes beyond the French constitution. The opponents of the Vietnam demand, though constitutionally correct, run the risk of Vietnam pulling out of the family altogether. Certainly if the Vietnam delegation comes home with less than Dominion status, the Vietnam government will ~~tumble~~ fall, and that would be the end of resistance to the Communists.

But even if Reynaud wins, more decisions of a fateful nature remain. It is not well enough understood here what it means that France is already officially committed to seek peace in Indo-China at Geneva. This it can do through a direct bargain with the Chinese Communists. It would have to offer them benefits designed to induce them to give up support of Ho Chi Minh. France could offer recognition and support of Communist China's application to enter the United Nations. It could offer trade. It could offer facilities for Chinese freight through Indo-China, and even could give China a terminal and port in northern Indo-China, once assured to the Chinese Nationalists and then withdrawn.

All this might not be price enough to pay Peiping to drop support of Ho Chi Minh. That is why France hopes for more American co-operation at Geneva than Secretary Dulles may be in a position to give. What Mr. Dulles will be able to do is still a surmise. It might depend, for one thing, on the terms of peace in Korea. But so far as is known, his instructions have not yet been drafted or blessed by the National Security Council. But Mr. Dulles is not left much negotiating leeway by the rigid position of important Republicans in the Senate.

If France cannot end the Indo-China war at Geneva, another course is open. That is to deal with Ho direct. The Laniel government would not do it, since this would mean handing the Associated States over to ultimate communist control. But if France should fail at Geneva, the Laniel government probably would fall, and then the government that succeeds him might be more radical and be ready to deal with Ho.

France's relations with the United States are charged with electricity because of these possibilities, and the urgent issue of ratifying the European Army ~~defense community~~ treaty. Paris reports that pressure is being brought by the Pentagon to give American experts a much greater scope in training a large Vietnamese army. The French General Valluy, who has been in Washington, flew back to Paris to report on the Pentagon recommendations. General Paul Ely, who was to have come to Washington to explain how awkward the French were finding the American proposals, postponed his visit in order to confer with General Valluy, Premier Laniel and Foreign Secretary Bidault.

Valwe

Monsieur Bidault has been closeted for long intimate talks with Ambassador Dillon, presumably about a date for the European Defense Community debate. From the United States standpoint the treaty should be ratified before the Geneva conference. But it now appears that the Laniel government will only get the debate begun but not finished before the conference opens. The French suggest that since the vote on instituting the debate will tell the story of its final outcome, a final vote may not be crucial. But if the final vote is not cast before the Geneva conference gets around to discussing peace in Indo-China, France might be in a dubious position. It might be tempted - even if it did not yield - to bargain Asia for Europe - peace in Indo-China for non-ratification of E.D.C. - and that bargain, if made, would be a Western defeat, whatever its terms.

So one sees the importance of the battle of Dien Bien Phu. If the French lose it, their spirit to continue the war may snap altogether. That may be why the Vietminh rebels have risked their first great open battle and are fighting it at such frightful cost. If they win they may be clinching Southeast Asia for communism. If they lose they have lost only lives.

Both the French and the Communists are aware of the opportunities in the battle for control of Indo-China. And it may be, as Thomas Fuller once said that "a good cause makes a stout heart and a strong arm." But it is equally true, as G.R.H. Shafto remarked: "Opportunity passes by those who are not prepared to avail themselves of it."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 16, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says the President has the authority to order a counter-attack against an aggressor who attacks any of 33 allied countries. Mr. Dulles told reporters that under the North Atlantic pact and the Inter-American defense treaty, both approved by the Senate, the President could order instant retaliation against any aggressor. But the President himself said recently we will not become involved in any war without the approval of the Senate. Mr. Dulles holds that should London or Paris be bombed the President could call for retaliation just as he would if New York or Washington were attacked. The Secretary says that in most cases there would be consultation with the Senate and allied governments. And, he says, the President could decide the nature and extent of our counter-attack Tonight, Mr. Dulles writes in the Quarterly Foreign Affairs magazine that the cornerstone of our military and diplomatic policy is a system of alliances with other free nations. It is not a blind reliance on atomic weapons. And we have no intentionintention of depending merely on our "capacity for massive retaliation" to scare off possible Communist aggression. Instead, says the Secretary, we will deal separately with each case in the most appropriate manner, making full use of local defense forces, meaning those of our allies.

The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, Admiral Radford, also told Senators today that our "new look" military strategy does not depend solely on massive atomic retaliation. He says its not correct to say we are relying exclusively on one weapon, or one service or that we are anticipating one kind of war. Admiral Radford said that in reading testimony by General Ridgeway he had the feeling that the army chief of staff was not satisfied with the new army budget.

House Speaker Martin said today, after a two and a half hour meeting with House Republicans, that he is confident they can defeat a Democratic drive to increase the income tax exemptions from the present $600 to $800 dollars. Martin says the President's speech of last night was very effective in convincing fellow Republicans. The President argued that the Democratic proposal is unsound, politically inspired, will lead to bigger deficits and more inflation and undermine the cornerstone of his policies. Today, the Democratic National Committee said that under the Administration-sponsored tax law 80 percent of all taxpayers would get only six percent of all tax reductions. These are the people, says the committe with incomes of 5-thousand dollars a year or less.

House Democratic Leader Rayburn says the Administration bill would favor the "few" taxpayers, not the "many." And Democratic Senator George says that with steel operating at only 69 percent of capacity, textile mills working only three or four days a week and "nearly every other key industry" in similar trouble, more tax relief should go to the workers. He says the nation's wealth does not lie in its business operations but in the profitably employed time of her workers.

Senator McCarthy's committee today agreed to investigate the army's charge that the Senator and Committee Counsel Roy Cohn used pressure to try to get special treatment for former committee aide, Private David Schine. The committee will also investigate McCarthy's charge that the army tried to blackmail him with this report to get him to call off an investigation of the army. The investigation chairman will be Republican Senator Mundt and he will select a new staff to aide the committee.Cohn is out until the investigation is over. McCarthy will be a member but not chairman. He'll be able to question witnesses, all of whom will testify under oath and in public.

The Senate Rules committee by a five to four party vote has asked the full Senate to decide whether to unseat Democratic Senator Chavez of New Mexico. The Republicans claim "flagrant irregularities" marked his election victory in 1952.

The congressional atomic energy committee says some classified papers are missing from the atomic plant at Hanford, Washington, but none are top secret, and there are no indications of theft or espionage.

In Indo-China, the Viet Minh have knocked out two French landing fields near Dien Bien Phu. But fresh French paratroops reinforcements have stopped the attacking enemy within a half mile of the heart of the fortress in the northwest. The French estimate the enemy has suffered 8-thousand casualties in four days of battle in their biggest drive of the 8-year-old war. The 10-thousand man French garrison is now reported to be fighting against four times as many Vietminh troops.

Paris once more is the hub of world events, and the political struggles going on there can have a decisive effect on the safety of many lands and many peoples, including our own. The fate of Indo-China is in the balance, and with it the fate of all non-communist governments in Southeast Asia. The onlooker may say that this is not so true about Paris as it is about Dien Bien Phu, where the most violent battle of the seven years' war in Indo-China is being fought. But that battle is being waged chiefly for its influence on the coming Geneva conference. Both sides are paying a high price to buy bargaining power at Geneva. But in Paris, the very nature of the French Union is at stake, and so is the loyalty of Vietnam to the anti-Communist struggle. And so is fruitful cooperation between France and the United States. And so is the future of the federation of Western Europe and a European Army, and with it our own security. Seldom have os many vital interests been laid open to one government's decisions.

Negotiations between the French Government and the delegation from Vietnam were suspended today to give the French Cabinet the opportunity to heal a deep rift over the amount of independence to be granted members of the French Union. Vietnam demands complete independence, though it has promised to associate itself as a free state with France and give France a favored economic position. Vice Premier Paul Reynaud is supporting the Vietnam demand inside the Cabinet. He insists that the French Union must follow the example of the British Commonwealth and give members a full share in operating the union, as well as the freedom to secede. This goes beyond the French Constitution. The opponents of the Vietnam demand, though constitutionally correct, run the risk of Vietnam pulling out of the family altogether. Certainly if the Vietnam delegation comes home with less than Dominion status, the Vietnam government will fall, and that would be the end of resistance to the Communists.

But even if Reynaud wins, more decisions of a fateful nature remain. It is not well enough understood here what it means that France is already officially committed to seek peace in Indo-China at Geneva. This it can do through a direct bargain with the Chinese Communists. It would have to offer them benefits designed to induce them to give up support of Ho Chi Minh. France could offer recognition and support of Communist China's application to enter the United Nations. It could offer trade. It could offer facilities for Chinese freight through Indo-China, and even could give China a terminal and port in northern Indo-China, once assured to the Chinese Nationalists and then withdrawn.

All this might not be price enough to pay Peiping to drop support of Ho Chi Minh. That is why France hopes for more American cooperation at Geneva than Secretary Dulles may be in a position to give. What Mr. Dulles will be able to do is still a surmise. It might depend, for one thing, on the terms of peace in Korea. But so far as is known, his instructions have not yet been drafted or blessed by the National Security Council. But Mr. Dulles is not left much negotiating leeway by the rigid position of important Republicans in the Senate. If France cannot end the Indo-China war at Geneva, another course is open. That is to deal with Ho direct. The Laniel government would not do it, since this would mean handing the Associated States over to ultimate Communist control. But if France should fail at Geneva, the Laniel government probably would fall, and then the government that succeeds him might be more radical and be ready to deal with Ho.

France's relations with the United States are charged with electricity because of these possibilities, and the urgent issue of ratifying the European Army treaty. Paris reports that pressure is being brought by the Pentagon to give American experts a much greater scope in training a large Vietnamese army. The French General Valluy, who has been in Washington, flew back to Paris to report on the Pentagon recommendations. General Paul Ely, who was to have come to Washington to explain how awkward the French were finding the American proposals, postponed his visit in order to confer with General Valluy, Premier Laniel and Foreign Sec etary Bidault. Monsieur Bidault has been closeted for long intimate talks with Ambassador Dillon, presumably about a date for the European Defense Community debate. From the United States standpoint the treaty should be ratified before the Geneva conference. But it now appears that the Laniel government will only get the debate begun but not finished before the conference opens. The French suggest that since the vote on instituting the debate will tell the story of its final outcome, a final vote may not be crucial. But if the final vote is not cast before the Geneva conference gets around to discussing peace in Indo-China, France might be in a dubious position. It might be tempted - even if it did not yield - to bargain Asia for Europe - peace in Indo-China for non-ratification of E.D.C. and that bargain, if made, would be a Western defeat, whatever its terms. So one sees the importance of thebattle of Dien Bien Phu. If the French lose it, their spirit to continue the war may snap altogether. That may be why the Vietminh rebels have risked their first great open battle and are fighting it at such frightful cost. If they win, they may be clinching Southeast Asis for Communism. If they lose, they have lost only lives.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Both the French and the Communists are aware of the opportunities in the battle for control of Indo-China. And it may be, as Thomas Fuller once said that "a good cause makes a stout heart and a strong arm." But it is equally true, as G.R.H. Shafto remarked: "Opportunity passes by those who are not prepared to avail themselves of it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday Mar. 17, 1954

This is the news:

The President has full confidence in the honesty and integrity of Army Secretary Stevens. When White House reporters referred to the row between Stevens and [redacted] Senator McCarthy, the President said this: He believes in Stevens..if he didn't he would not be on the job in the Pentagon. Stevens may have made some mistakes..he may have been misinformed. But the President will stand by him as far as honor and integrity are concerned. Mr. Eisenhower was asked what effect, he thought, the argument between Stevens and McCarthy has had on army morale. He has no official report but he knows that army officials are hurt when they are (CRITICIZED JUSTLY) [redacted] And they feel a [redacted] mixture of anger, resentment and sadness when they are criticized unjustly. Then, in an explanation of the military's new look... which we'll hear in a few minutes..the President took occassion to warn against the fear created by unwise investigators at home.

Senator McCarthy told reporters "public hearings will demonstrate who is telling the truth..McCarthy or Stevens. And he also said that Stevens is..as he put it.."too nice and too innocent to be able to cope with "Pentagon" politicians." The Senator says somebody is "using" the secretary of the army in an attempt to distract his committee from its anti-Communist fight. And Republican Senator Mundt, who will be acting chairman of the committee when it investigates an army report and McCarthy memorandum said today that evidence will be turned over to the Department of Justice "if all parties concerned stick to the stories they have told."

At his newsconference today, the President said that the Democrats are in "error"..he chose the word carefully..when they charge that the Administration's tax bill is loaded in favor of wealthy people. Mr. Eisenhower noted that the people who now want to raise the income tax exemptions. (which would cost the government money.) are the same people who only a few months ago were against letting him raise the national debt limit. In regard to the charge that the Administration's tax bill favors the rich, Mr. Eisenhower offered a study of the United States Steel Corporation..with 300-thousand employes and 300-thousand stockholders. The Democrats object to a provision in the new bill that would give tax relief to stockholders by easing the tax on their dividends. The President says that 56 per cent of U.S. Steel's stockholders make less than 5-thousand dollars a year from all sources. He says the average steel worker makes an average wage of 45-hundred dollars a year. And 46 per cent of Big Steel's stockholders make less than that..more are in the two to three thousand dollar a year bracket.

The tax argument went on in the House where Chairman Reed of the Ways and Means committee said that the Democrats have presented what he called "dangerously misleading figures" to support their argument that corporations and wealthy individuals will get the most benefits from the new tax bill. And Republican Representative Brown of Ohio says the Democratic claims are "simply not true." But Democratic Representative Cooper of Tennesse said the Republicans were not telling the truth when they said more than half the benefits of the new bill would go to the average taxpayer.

Yet another argument arising out of the tax debate came from Democratic National Chairman Mitchell. He says the television networks imposed a "virtual dim out" on the Democratic answer last night to the President's Monday night tax speech. Mitchell says the failure to give the Democrats equal time to answer the President "raises serious questions about the fairness and impartiality of the television industry in its treatment of the two major political parties." He said radio took a different attitude and only CBS radio did not carry "the Democratic case."

Washington reporters today were told a number of details about the thermonuclear explosion at Baikini on March first. The only comment from a person who would permit his name to be used came from Representative Durham of North Carolina. He says the March first explosion was several times as powerful as the world's first hydrogen explosion at Eniwetok in 1952. He described it as "almost unbeliavable destruction." He said: "We don't talk about t.n.t. anymore. We talk about megatons now."

A megaton is one million tons of t.n.t. The atomic bombs dropped on Japan during the war were estimated to have the power of 20-thousand tons of t.n.t. There are responsible sources in Washington today who say the recent Bikini explosion turned loose destruction estimated at 600 times the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs.... they say it was as strong as 12 to 14 million tons of t.n.t. They also say: the shock was felt 175 miles away from Bikini...it sent a nuclear cloud 17 miles into the air.. and harmless nuclear dust fell on an uninhabitated island 330 miles away.

And in Tokyo American officials expressed "concern" and offered expert assistance in the treatment of 23 Japanese fishermen who were burned by radioactive dust from one of our test explosions.

In Washington an official Defense Department catalog of weapons shows that we now have at least 18 types of guided missiles either in use... in production or under test.

In Indo-China, Viet Minh rebels are reported starting to close-in on the surrounded French fortress at Dien Bien Phu. All day the enemy artillery bombarded the fortress and the Peiping radio says this is the greatest attack the rebels have launched against fortified French positions. The French--on their part--sent their planes over the enemy positions. And transport planes continued to drop tons of supplies to the ~~Ene~~ French garrison. The French now admit that the rebel's artillery fire recently destroyed several airlift planes..they don't say howmany.

In the Middle East there has been another incident between Isreal and Jordan. An Isreali spokesman says a gang of Arabs attacked a civilian bus in the Negev desert and massacred 11 Jews, including women and children. Four passengers survived. The Isreali government calls this "a warlike act". This incident is the worst of its kind since a raid by Isrealis killed 53 Arabs in a Jordan village last October. The United Nations formally censured Isreal for this violence.

In Venezeuala, the Inter-American conference today adopted a resolution calling for an end to colonialism and foreign occupation of territories in the western hemisphere. The vote was 19 to nothing on the Argentine proposal. The United States did not vote. The resolution, approved in committee, was aimed at the holdings of Great Britain, France and the Netherlands.

The Vatican City newspaper says that Pope Pius appears to be winning his fight against the longest and most serious illness of his 15-year reign.

And here in New York..as well as in hundreds of other cities..the Irish (MARCHED) today in the annual St. Patrick's Day parade. An estimated 100-thousand persons participated in New York's parade.

The government today dismissed a five year old anti-trust suit against four of the large meat packing firms.. "without prejudice."

And the Washington Post today purchased its morning newspaper rival, the Times-Herald, from Colonel McCormick of Chicago. Both newspapers will now be published under a single masthead. It will be the only morning paper in Washington. [The purchase price is reported at something between eight and a half and ten million dollars. McCormack bought the Times-Herald in 1949 for four and a half million.]

At his White House news conference today, a reporter asked the President if there is anything new in the nation's "new look" military policy. We've recorded for you the President's reply:

(runs 3;20 ending..
And that's what I believe is the answer

-0-

And one more note: The National Council of Churches today condemned what it called a growing tendency to LET the government determine "what is and what is not American." The Council says this is a basic threat to historic freedoms.

THIS IS ED MURROW.. I'll be back etc.

That was an excerpt from the Pres. news conference

C.B.S. Radio says,

~~As mentioned by Mr. Mitchell,~~ under longstanding policy, the ~~CBS Radio~~ Network does not grant time to reply to the President when he speaks as the Chief of State. #

We consider that ~~President Eisenhower talked Monday night~~ as Chief of State and ~~that it was not a "poli~~tical" broadcast, even though he may have expressed views on which all may not agree.

In any event, CBS Radio had already granted opportunity for the Democratic position on the President's talk to be heard by broadcasting, almost immediately following the President's Monday night talk, the Democratic Representative from Pennsylvania Herman P. Eberharter in a half-hour discussion program with Republican Representative Hugh Scott, also of Pennsylvania, on the President's tax recommendations.

[redacted]

from: CBS Radio

[redacted]

[redacted]

President Eisenhower spoke today of the necessity of faith - in ourselves and in each other. James Allen once wrote:"Into your hands will be placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present enviroment may be, you will fail, remain, or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire, as great as your dominant aspiration."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President has full confidence in the honesty and integrity of army Secretary Stevens. When White House reporters referred to the row between Stevens and Senator McCarthy, the President said this: He believes in Stevens - if he didn't he would not be on the job in the Pnetagon. Stevens may have made some mistakes, he may have been misinformed. But the President will stand by him as far as honor and integrity are concerned. Mr. Eisenhower was asked what effect, he thought, the argument between Stevens and McCarthy has had on army morale. He has no official report, but he knows that army officials are hurt when they are criticized justly. And they feel a mixture of anger, resentment and sadness when they are criticized unjustly. Then, in an explanation of the military's new look, which we'll hear in a few minutes, the President took occasion to warn against the fear created by unwise investigators at home.

Senator McCarthy told reporters "public hearings will demonstrate who is telling the truth, McCarthy or Stevens. And he also said that Stevens is, as he put it, "too nice and too innocent to be able to cope with Pentagon "politicans." The Senator says somebody is "using" the secretary of the army in an attempt to distract his committee from its anti-Communist fight. And Republican Senator Mundt, who will be acting chairman of the committee when it investigates an army report and McCarthy memorandum said today that evidence will be turned over to the Department of Justice "if all parties concerned stick to the stories they have told." At his news conference today, the President said that the Democrats are in "error" - he chose the word carefully - when they charge that the Administration' tax bill is loaded in favor of wealthy people. Mr. Eisenhower noted that the people who now want to raise the income tax exemptions which would cost the government money, are the same people, who only a few months ago, were against letting him raise the national debt limit. In regard to the charge that the Administration' tax bill favors the rich, Mr. Eisenhower offered a study of the United States Steel Corporation with 300-thousand employees and 300-thousand stockholders. The Democrats object to a provision in the new bill that would give tax relief to stockholders by easing the tax on their dividends. The President says that 56 per cent of U.S. Steel's stockholders make less than 5-thousand dollars a year from all sources. He says the average steel worker makes an average wage of 45-hundred dollars a year. And 46 percent of Big Steel's stockholders make less than that - more are in the two to three thousand dollar a year bracket.

The tax argument went on in the House where Chairman Reed of the Ways and Means committee said that the Democrats have presented what he called "dangerously misleading figures" to support their argument that corporations and wealthy individuals will get the most benefits from the new tax bill. And Republican Representative Brown of Ohio says the Democratic claims are "simply not true." But Democratic Representative Cooper of Tennessee said the Republicans were not telling the truth when they said more than half the benefits of the new bill would go to the average taxpayer.

Yet another argument arising out of the tax debate came from Democratic National Chairman Mitchell. He says the television networks imposed a "virtual dim out" on the Democratic answer last night to the President's Monday night tax speech. Mitchell says the failure to give the Democrats equal time to answer the President "raises serious questions about the fairness and impartiality of the television industry in its treatment of the two major political parties." He said radio took a different attitude and only CBS radio did not carry "the Democratic case."

Washington reporters today were told a number of details about the thermonuclear explosion at Bikini on March first. The only comment from a person who would permit his name to be used came from Representative Durham of North Carolina. He says the March first explosion was several times as powerful as the world's first hydrogen explosion at Eniwetok in 1952. He described it as "almost unbelievable destruction." He said: "We don't talk about t.n.t. anymore. We talk about megatons now." A megaton is one million tons of t.n.t. The atomic bombs dropped on Japan during the war were estimated to have the power of 20-thousand tons of t.n.t. There are responsible sources in Washington today who say the recent Bikini explosion turned loose destruction estimated at 600 times the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs. They say it was as strong as 12 to 14 million tons of t.n.t. They also say: the shock was felt 175 miles away from Bikini - it sent a nuclear cloud 17 miles into the air and harmless nuclear dust fell on an uninhabitated island 330 miles away.

And in Tokyo American officials expressed "concern" and offered expert assistance in the treatment of 23 Japanese fishermen who were burned by radioactive dust from one of our test explosions.

In Washington an official Defense Department catalog of weapons shows that we now have at least 18 types of guided missiles either in use in production or under test.

In Indo-China, Viet Minh rebels are reported starting to close in on the surrounded French fortress at Dien Bien Phu. All day the enemy artillery bombarded the fortress and the Peiping radio says this is the greatest attack the rebels have launched against fortified French positions. The French on their part, sent their planes over the enemy positions. And transport planes continued to drop tons of supplies to the French garrison. The French now admit that the rebel's artillery fire, recently destroyed several airlift planes, they don't say how many.

In the Middle East there has been another incident between Israel and Jordan. An Israeli spokesman says a gang of Arabs attacked a civilian bus in the Negev desert and massacred 11 Jews, including women and children. Four passengers survived. The Israeli government calls this "a warlike act." This incident is the worst of its kind since a raid by Israelis killed 53 Arabs in a Jordan village last October. The United Nations formally censured Israel for this violence.

In Venezuela, the Inter-American conference today adopted a resolution calling for an end to colonialism and foreign occupation of territories in the western hemisphere. The vote was 19 to nothing on the Argentine proposal. The United States did not vote. The resolution, approved in committee was aimed at the holdings of Great Britain, France and the Netherlands.

The Vatican City newspaper says that Pope Pius appears to be winning his fight against the longest and most serious illness of his 15-year-reign.

And here in New York, as well as in hundreds of other cities, the Irish marched today in the annual St. Patrick's Day parade. An estimated 100-thousand persons participated in New York's parade.

The government today dismissed a five year old anti-trust suit against four of the large meat packing firms "without prejudice."

And the Washington Post today purchased its morning newspaper rival, the Times-Herald from Colonel McCormick of Chicago. Both newspapers will not be published under a single masthead. It will be the only morning paper in Washington. The purchase price is reported at something between eight and a half and ten million dollars. McCormack bought the Times-Herald in 1949 for four and a half million.

CBS Radio says under longstanding policy, the Network does not grant time to reply to the President when he speaks as the Chief of State. In any event, CBS Radio had already granted opportunity for the Democratic position on the President's talk to be heard by broadcasting, almost immediately following the President's Monday night talk, the Democratic Representative from Pennsylvania Herman P. Eberharter in a half-hour discussion program with Republican Representative Hugh Scott, also of Pennsylvania, on the President's tax recommendations.

At his White House news conference today, a reporter asked the President if there is anything new in the nation's "new look" military policy. We've recorded for you the President's reply:

PRESIDENT: "All right. New look: Now, what do we mean? We mean this: You are not fighting with muzzle-loaders in any of the services. Every single day

Every single day things change in this world, and any staff or any group of leaders doing his job is re-examining the world situation, the advances of science, the whole situation, geographic and otherwise, of our country and of others, to see what is it that we now need most to insure our security and peaceful existence. You cannot possibly say that the kind of a unit and organization that I took to war or took over across the Channel in 1944 would have any usefulness today whatsoever. For example, you will recall we landed on June 6; we got out of that narrow little beach-head on about July 25; all right. Behind that we built up two artificial harbours and we were landing over the beaches. What would two atomic bombs have done to the whole thing? So you have - you just simply can't take in warfare or in any contemplation of war or preparation for war, and take old patterns and say that is by which we live. All that the 'new look' is is an attempt by intelligent people to keep abreast of the times; and if you want to call your today's clothes the 'new look' as compared to what Lincoln wore, all right, we are in the 'new look.' But I just don't like this expression because it doesn't mean much to me. I mean, we are striving our best to meet the grave responsibilities that are placed upon people whose job is to protect this country. Now, let me point out this: I hear people say 'bigger Army,' now, our most valued, our most costly asset, is our young men. Let's don't use them any more than we have to. For forty years I was in that Army, and I did one thing: Study how can you get an infantry platoon out of battle. The most terrible job in warfare is to be a second lieutenant leading a platoon when you are on the battlefield. Now, if we can do anything to lessen that number and, remember this, we are planning right now the greatest peacetime army we have ever held, one million men in time of peace - what are we talking about? It is, I think, there is too much hysteria. You know, the world is suffering from a multiplicity of fears. We fear the men in the Kremlin. We fear what they will do to our friends around them; we are fearing what unwise investigators will do to us here at home as they try to combat subversion or bribery or deceit within. We fear depression, we fear the loss of jobs,

All of these with their impact on the human mind makes us act almost hysterically, and you find hysterical reaction. We have got to look at each of those in its proper perspective, to make it - to understand what the whole sum total means. And remember this: The reason they are feared and bad is because there is a little element of truth in each, a little element of danger in each, and that means that finally there is left a little residue that you can meet only by faith, a faith in the destiny of America, and that is what I believe is the answer."

MURROW: And one more note: The National Council of Churches today condemned what it called a growing tendency to let the government determine "what is, and what is not, American." The Council says this is "a basic threat" to historic freedoms.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: President Eisenhower spoke today of the necessity of faith - in ourselves and in each other. James Allen once wrote: "Into your hands will be placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present environment may be, you will fail, remain, or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire, as great as your dominant aspiration."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, March 18, 1954

This is the news:

The House today defeated a Democratic attempt to raise the individual income tax exemption from 600 to 700 dollars a year. And then the House passed the new tax revision bill approved by the Administration. It was a victory for the President who on Monday told the nation that the Democratic proposal was unsound election year politics. The plan to raise the exemptions lost by six votes.. then the bill was passed 339 to 80. [redacted]

Tonight Treasury Secretary Humphrey calls the House action "fortunate for the country." He said this bill is "the cornerstone of the Administration's program to make America a better country for us all to live in."

The Joint Atomic Energy Committee today released a statement by Representative Holifield saying that in the recent H-bomb test at Bikini the explosion was larger than expected. And on the Senate floor, Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin called on the President to tell the country the effect of the H-bomb. But Republican Senator Butler of Maryland said if the facts were known they would be "so horrifying they would upset the well-being of the people." [redacted]

~~"I hope the Senator won't press too hard for revelations regarding such weapons. I can assure him they are everything he can hope they to be."~~

I'd like to discuss [redacted] this developments in a fewminutes.

At a hearing of the Senate's armed services committee, Senator Symington observed...in the presence of the witness..Defense Secretary Wilson.. that it is unfortunate, that the attention of senators should be focused on the controversey between the army and Senator McCarthy, in viewof "world-shaking developments" dramatized in the H-bomb test. To ~~this~~ Wilson said:"If you feel you are fiddling while Rome burns, I agree too." In the course of his testimony Wilson had this to say: no case of subversion in the armed forces has been turned up, that was not previously known by the proper officials. There has been no coddling of Communists in the armed services. The DD [redacted] have 20 loyalty or security cases, among drafted doctors and dentists..(out of 15-thousand medical personnel) And under the law these men must be commissioned or discharged. Wilson said his department does not need help from Congressional committees in rooting out Communists. But, he said, "we welcome it, if its the order of the day." IN regard to the Army-McCarthy-COHN [redacted] controversey, Secretary Wilson said: he has complete confidence in Army Secretary Stevens. He has confidence "as far as I know about him" in army counsel John G. Adams. He is confident about the truthfulness of the army's report that Roy Cohn, McCarthy's committee counsel, threatened that Army Secretary Stevens would be through, and the army would be wrecked, if Private David Schine were sent overseas. Wilson says that McCarthy's charge, that the army used this report in an attempt to blackmail him..to call off the committee investigation of the army, was "never a proper charge." And the Secretary acknowledged, that the army report is not complete..that parts have been edited out..that there are some transcripts of phone conversations..all of which will be given the Senate.

In Chicago, Senator McCarthy said:"We'll have the complete story before we get through." He challenged critics of his methods to "produce one little communist." And he charged that recently on a television show "Edward R. Murrow spent a half hour explaining what an awful S.O.B. McCarthy was." (The Senator's language appears to be deteriorating.")

Attorney General Brownell said today that the nation must place "chief reliance" on the Justice Department and the F.B.I. in the fight against Communist conspirators. He warned against making a political issue of Communism, and "sacrificing our own liberties, in our efforts to combat those who would destroy" them.

~~Ambassador Lodge said at the United Nations today he will use the veto in the Security Council if necessary to keep Red China out of the U.N.~~

General McArthur today called at the White House and reviewed the world military situation with the President..including the war in Indo-China. Today, the French forces there continued to pound the enemy with artillery and airpower.

~~Adlai Stevenson, in Boston today, predicts that the Democrats will win the congressional elections this fall. He says they may possibly win a majority in the Senate.~~

Here in New York, Mayor Wagner has pledged police protection to all men who want to go back to work on the strike-bound waterfront. He said he would call for state or federal reinforcements if there aren't enough police.

Stockholders of R.K.O. Pictures Corporation..voted nearly three to one to accept Howard Hughes offer of nearly 24-million dollars for all assets of the corporation.

And a spokesman for the Israeli government says Israel will call to the attention of the United Nations yesterday's attack by Arabs on a passenger bus. Eleven persons were killed. UNited Nations observers are investigating on the scene.

Edward R. Murrow: March 18, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

One of the phenomena of the atomic age is that ideas and facts about world power can change almost overnight. The first atomic bomb immediately changed the relationship of power by giving the United States a balance against the Soviet Union's preponderance of ground forces. Thereafter, as Sir Winston Churchill so often said, America's possession of the atomic bomb saved Europe from Soviet domination.

Then the Soviet Union made its atomic bomb, and the balance was modified. As it happened, the United States and its allies in the meantime had armed heavily because of the Korean aggression. So they didn't fall as low in the power equation as might have been expected. And when the United States added the thermo-nuclear bomb to its arsenal, it went ahead again.

But our superiority didn't last long. Our first thermo-nuclear bomb went off at Eniwetok a year ago. But the Russians made their first thermo-nuclear explosion in August. The New York Times now reports that the Soviet explosion may have been stronger than ours and may have represented techniques which we did not possess.

It is a coincidence that just as President Eisenhower, Secretary Dulles and Admiral Radford are explaining the "new look" in our military strategy, the news should come of our latest thermo-nuclear explosion at Bikini on March 1st. It was far stronger than the explosion of a year ago, and, we are informed, it is to be followed by the test of a device three times as powerful. We also are told, that the March 1st explosion was of a bomb that can be delivered to a target. In other words, it already is a weapon of war, and stockpiling of Thermo-nuclear bombs has begun.

The "new look" in American strategy has been described as enabling massive retaliation, at a time and place of our own choosing. By the time the Washington authorities got through explaining what it meant, it turned out to be the "old look" adapted to current changes, and somewhat rhetorically re-stated. The "old look" also permitted massive retaliation, and both looks, rely on other means and methods, to meet local dangers. Now what must be recognized is, that the thermo-nuclear bomb has given a new look to our strategy, that is not yet part of the official version of the new look. This is because the Russians have the hydrogen bomb. We think of the Russians as a target for our massive retaliation. But the United States is considerably more vulnerable than the Soviet Union, particularly to atomic bombs. Our industry is more closely concentrated, in more compact areas. Whatever we can do to the Soviet Union in massive retaliation, we must expect the Soviet Union to be able to do to us.

Perhaps it can be argued, that the whole purpose of massive retaliation is to deter, and since we shall never launch an aggression, and don't need to be deterred, it does not matter to us, what deterring power the Kremlin possesses. We do think the Soviet Union needs to be deterred, so we keep on hand the power to destroy it. But what is now true, is that we can't use this power, without danger of being destroyed ourselves. And since we cannot use our deterrent power with any safety to ourselves, there would seem to be a stalemate. And a stalemate is something that doesn't fit into our power formula, or something that neither the new look nor the old look contemplated.

Not long ago Washington considered giving the public the grim facts about the atomic age. A publicity campaign called Operation Candor almost reached the point of operating. Since then, expectations about thermo-nuclear weapons, that were only a surmise have become facts, even bigger facts than had been foreseen. So the operation may be all the more called for.

The figures about the thermo-nuclear explosions have not been officially verified, and naturally are subject to correction. But we are told that the Eniwetok explosion of a year ago had a strength of five megatons. At that time it was far and away the biggest explosion man had ever made, two hundred and fifty times stronger than Hiroshima. Five megatons is the equivalent of 5 million tons of TNT. The total explosive power of all the bombs dropped on Europe by the United States and Britain in all of World War Two - bombs that made rubble XXXXXXXX of parts of dozens of cities, wrecked hundreds of factories, blew up the railroads over vast areas of France, Germany and Italy - the total force of all these bombs was less than three megatons, little more than half of the single Eniwetok explosion.

The explosion of March 1st, we are told, was nearly 14 megatons, almost three times stronger. And it is reported that an explosion of forty-five megatons is to be produced before the Bikini tests end. [Such figures are beyond comprehension.] The area of total destruction caused by a five-megaton bomb would be around one hundred and sixty square miles. That is, everything in that area would be demolished, while the range of burns fatal to persons would be much larger. A forty-five megaton bomb would produce total destruction in an area of nearly 520 square miles. New York has an area of 315 square miles, Chicago 207, Washington 61, Pittsburgh 54. Our most sprawling city, Los Angeles, has 450 square miles. Even if the forty-five megaton bomb were a myth, the fourteen megaton bomb is not, and the area of its total destruction is about 216 square miles.

So we have a new look at an astonishing peril. Even more than other dangers it has to be faced, thought through and met. But here is one danger that cannot be met and overcome by creating a greater danger.

The prospect of a world engaged in a war of fearsome weapons is reason enough for men and nations to discuss the problem fully and honestly. And we might do worse than follow Oscar Wilde's advice that "whenever one has anything unpleasant to say, one should always be quite candid." For as Machiavelli once pointed out:"A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The House today defeated a Democratic attempt to raise the individual income tax exemption from 600 to 700 dollars a year. And then the House passed the new tax revision bill a proved by the Administration. It was a victory for the President who on Monday told the nation that the Democratic proposal was unsound election year politics. The plan to raise the exemption lost by six votes then the bill was passed 339 to 80. Tonight Treasury Secretary Humphrey calls the House action "fortunate for the country." He said this bill is "the cornerstone of the Administration's program to make America a better country for us all to live in."

The Joint Atomic Energy Committee today released a statement by Representative Holifield saying that in the recent H-bomb test at Bikini the explosion was larger than expected. And on the Senate floor, Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin called on the President to tell the country the effect of the H-bomb. But Republican Senator Butler of Maryland said if the facts were known they would be "so horrifying they would upset the well-being of the people." I'd like to discuss this development in a few minutes.

At a hearing of the Senate's armed services committee, Senator Symington observed in the presence of the witness, Defense Secretary Wilson, that it is unfortunate that the attention of senators should be focused on the controversey between the army and Senator McCarthy in view of "world-shaking developments" dramatized in the H-bomb test. To this Wilson said: "If you feel you are fiddling while Rome burns, I agree too." In the course of his testimony Wilson had this to say: no case of subversion in the armed forces has been turned up that was not previously known by the proper officials. There has been no coddling of Communists in the armed services. They do have 20 loyalty of security cases among drafted doctors and dentists - out of 15-thousand medical personnel. And under the law these men must be commissioned or discharged. Wilson said his department does not need help from Congressional committees in rooting out Communists. But, he said, "we welcome it, if its the order of the day." In regard to the Army-McCarthy Cohn controversey, Secretary Wilson said: he has complete confidence in Army Secretary Stevens. He has confidence "as far as I know about him" in army counsel John G. Adams. He is confident about the truthfullness of the army's report that Roy Cohn, McCarthy's committee counsel, threatened that Army Secretary Stevens would be through and the army would be wrecked if Private David Schine were sent overseas. Wilson says that McCarthy's charge that the army used this report in an attempt to blackmail him - to call off the committee investigation of the army - this was "never a proper charge." And the Secretary acknowledged that the army report is not complete - that parts have been edited out - that there are some transcripts of phone conversations - all of which will be given the Senate.

In Chicago, Senator McCarthy said: "We'll have the complete story before we get through." He challenged critics of his methods to "produce one little Communist." And he charged that recently on a television show "Edward R. Murrow spent a half hour explaining what an awful S.O.B. McCarthy was." The Senator's language appears to be deteriorating."

Attorney General Brownell said today that the nation must place "chief reliance" on the Justice Department and the F.B.I. in the fight against Communist conspirators. He warned against making a political issue of Communism and "sacrificing our own liberties in our efforts to combat those who would destroy" them.

General McCarthur today called at the White House and reviewed the world military situation with the President - including the war in Indo-China. Today, the French forces there continued to pound the enemy with artillery and airpower.

Here in New York, Mayor Wagner has pledged police protection to all men who want to go back to work on the strike-bound waterfront. He said he would call for state or federal reinforcements if there aren't enough police.

Stockholders of R.K.O. Pictures Corporation voted nearly three to one to accept Howard Hughes offer of nearly 24-million dollars for all assets of the corporation.

And a spokesman for the Israeli government says Israel will call to the attention of the United Nations yesterday's attack by Arabs on a passenger bus. Eleven persons were killed. United Nations observers are investigating on the scene.

One of the phenomena of the atomic age is that ideas and facts about world power can change almost overnight. The first atomic bomb immediately changed the relationship of power by giving the United States a balance against the Soviet Union's preponderance of ground forces. Thereafter, as Sir Winston Churchill so often said, America's possession of the atomic bomb saved Europe from Soviet domination. Then the Soviet Union made its atomic bomb, and the balance was modified. As it happened, the United States and its allies in the meantime had armed heavily because of the Korean aggression. So they didn't fall as low in the power equation as might have been expected. And when the United States added the thermo-nuclear bomb to its arsenal, it went ahead again.

But our superiority didn't last long. Our first thermo-nuclear bomb went off at Eniwetok a year ago. But the Russians made their first thermo-nuclear explosion in August. The New York Times now reports that the Soviet explosion may have been stronger than ours and may have represented techniques which we did not possess.

It is a coincidence that just as President Eisenhower, Secretary Dulles and Admiral Radford are explaining the "new look" in our military strategy the news should come of our latest thermo-nuclear explosion at Bikini on March 1st. It was far stronger than the explosion of a year ago, and, we are informed, it is to be followed by the test of a device three times as powerful. We also are told that the March 1st explosion was of a bomb that can be delivered to a target. In other words, it already is a weapon of war, and stockpiling of thermo-nuclear bombs has begun. The "new look" in American strategy has been described as enabling massive retaliation at a time and place of our own choosing. By the time the Washington authorities got through explaining what it meant, it turned out to be the "old look" adapted to current changes, and some hat rhetorically re-stated. The "old look" also permitted massive retaliation, and both looks rely on other means and methods to meet local dangers. Now what must be recognized is that the thermo-nuclear bomb has given a new look to our strategy that is not yet part of the official version of the new look. This is because the Russians have the hydrogen bomb. We think of the Russians as a target for our massive retaliation. But the United States is considerably more vulnerable than the Soviet Union, particularly to atomic bombs. Our industry is more closely concentrated in more compact areas. Whatever we can do to the Soviet Union in massive retaliation we must expect the Soviet Union to be able to do to us. Perhaps it can be argued that the whole purpose of massive retaliation is to deter, and since we shall never launch an aggression, and don't need to be deterred, it does not matter to us what deterring power the Kremlin possesses. We do think the Soviet Union needs to be deterred, so we keep on hand the power to destroy it. But what is now true is that we can't use this power without danger of being destroyed ourselves. And since we cannot use our deterrent power with any safety to ourselves, there would seem to be a stalemate. And a stalemate is something that doesn't fit into our power formuh, or something that neither the new look nor the old look contemplated. Not long ago Washington considered giving the public the grim facts about the atomic age. A publicity campaign called Operation Candor almost reached the point of operating. Since then, expectations about thermo-nuclear weapons that were only a surmise have become facts, even bigger facts than had been foreseen. So the operation may be all the more called for. The figures about the thermo-nuclear explosions have not been officially verified, and naturally are subject to correction. But we are told that the Eniwetok explosion of a year ago had a strength of five mega-atons. At that time it was far and away the biggest explosion men had ever made, two hundred and fifty times stronger than Hiroshima. Five megatons is the equivalent of 5 millions tons of TNT. The total explosive power of all the bombs dropped on Europe by the United States and Britain in all of World War Two - bombs that made rubble of parts of dozens of cities, wrecked hundreds of factories, blew up the railroads over vast areas of France, Germany and Italy - the total force of all these bombs was less than three megatons, little more than half of the single Eniwetok explosion. The explosion of March 1st, we are told, was nearly 14 megatons, almost three times stronger. And it is reported that an explosion of forty-five megatons is to be produced before the Bikini tests end. Such figures are beyond comprehension. The area of total destruction caused by a five megaton bomb would be around one hundred and sixty square miles. That is, everything in that area would be demolished, while the range of burns fatal to persons would be much larger. A forty-five megaton bomb would produce total destruction in an area of nearly 520 square miles. New York has an area of 315 square miles, Chicago 207, Washington 61, Pittsburgh 54. Our most sprawling city, Los Angeles, has 540 square miles. Even if the forty-five megaton bomb were a myth, the fourteen megaton bomb is not, and the area of its total destruction is about 216 square miles. So we have a new look at an astonishing peril. Even more than other dangers it has to be faced, thought through and met. But here is one danger that cannot be met and overcome by creating a greater danger.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The prospect of a world engaged in a war of fearsome weapons is reason enough for men and nations to discuss the problem fully and honestly. And we might do worse than follow Oscar Wilde's advice that "whenever one has anything unpleasant to say, one should always be quite candid." For as Machiavelli once pointed out: "A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday March 19, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles, testifying before a Senate committee on the new look military policy, said today: "It is not our intention to turn every local war into a general war." Mr. Dulles said we (would) consult our allies before launching a massive retaliation against any aggressor. And in further clarification of the "new look", the Secretary said we must be able to meet any attack "with a wide range of air, sea and land power based on both conventional and atomic weapons."

And General Ridgeway, the army chief of staff, said today that any future wars, big or small, will be won or lost (by) ground forces.

A congressional investigation has started to determine whether adequate safety and security precautions were taken during the test of a "hydrogen device" in the Pacific on March first. Our ambassador to Japan, John M. Allison, says we will make ("JUST) compensation" if we find that 23 Japanese fishermen were innocently injured by the same explosion. And Chairman Short of the House Armed Services Committee, says an evaluation of the Bikini explosion indicates that hydrogen weapons "are getting so big that if they get much bigger, we won't be able to test them."

The State Department today gave the Russians what it calls "a concrete plan" for using atomic power for peaceful purposes. The plan was not made public but it's reported to call for: an international atomic energy agency...this agency to take charge of a pool of atomic materials, to be responsible for safeguarding it and preventing seizure by any nation bent on war. The agency would also mobilize experts to develop atomic enegery for power purposes in areas that lack sufficient electrical power.

The Treasury reported today that the government went into the red by eight billion 100-million dollars in the first eight months of the current fiscal year. [redacted]

The Senate Finance Committee today voted to cut excise taxes by 50-million dollars more than the 912-million reduction approved by the House. Even as Administration leaders pleaded "we need the money to pay our bills", the committee decided to wipe out all admission taxes on movie tickets costing less than 60 cents. The House had cut the admission tax from 20 to ten per cent.

The Labor Department reports that during March unemployment--which had been largely (CONFINED) to a few selected industries early this winter--continued to rise and to spread to " a wide range of industries." The President said last month that March would be the key month in the unemployment situation. ~~Senate Democrats say they'll have little trouble getting approval of an income tax cut if unemployment continues in March.~~

In Milwaukee today, Senator (MC CARTHY) was suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis but said he would go on with his speech (COMMENTING ON) one MADE recently by Adlai Stevenson. And in Washington, General Ridgeway told the National Press Club that "when the full story of unfolding events becomes known" the country will be deeply (PROUD) of Army Secretary Stevens. This was an obvious reference to the forthcoming hearings on McCarthy's row with the army. ~~Senator Symington, Missouri Democrat, says he wants all the information in this case to be made available to the public. And~~

Secretary of State Dulles today refused to answer questions by Democratic Senator Fulbright on whether McCarthy's tactics have hurt our relations with our allies. Mr. Dulles, at a Senate hearing, said this was a legislative problem and he didn't think "my responsibility as a member of the executive department is to get into the problem you raise."

State Department Security Officer Scott McLeod has told a House committee that he found fewer State Department employes "with subversive tendencies" than he expected to find.

And Administration officials told the committee that despite a law passed last year to admit 214-thousand refugees to this country only six visas have been used. Robert Alexander, assistant administrator for refugee relief, says less than 50 visas were issued. He says the program has been snarled up by security investigations and other red tape.

Representative Bentley of Michigan told reporters today he has been assured of 100 per cent recovery from the wounds suffered when Puerto Rican nationalists shot up the House of Representatives.

In Indo-China, French planes continued their attacks on enemy positions surrounding Dien Bien Phu. Some probing enemy units were reported as close as 200 yards to the main barbed wire barricades.

In the Middle East, Lieut. General John Glubb Pasha, the British commander of Jordan's arab legion, has offered to help track down the murderers of eleven Isreali bus passengers. Isreal has accepted his offer.

In Vatican City, Pope Pius made the first public appearance since be became ill two months ago. He stood at an open window for sixty seconds.

Communist Poland's premier..Boleslaw Bierut..has resigned to become first secretary of his country's communist party.

Edward R. Murrow: March 19, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The announcement by Premier Mario Scelba of a far-flung campaign to curb communists in Italy opens one of the crucial battles of our times. Italy has the largest Communist movement of any non-communist state in the world. Some of its strength has been due to government laxity, and government laxity has been due chiefly to fear. Communists in the government are so numerous as actually to hamper the conduct of state business. Communist informers always can tip off the party about any government action against it. Some of the Communists' largest periodicals actually are printed on government presses. Communists occupy many former fascist buildings now owned by the state, and pay not a lira for them. And the power of the communists is shown by their command of theaters, ~~cinemas~~ Movie houses and powerful trading organizations and by their majority in the ranks of organized labor. The communists fill about 70 percent of all shop steward posts, and control sixty percent or more of the trades unions. In politics one voter out of three votes communist, though many who vote that way are not party members. But party membership is now more than 2,200,000, which is 180,000 higher than last year, and the total for the first time has passed the peak figure of 1948.

Italy is a land that for a generation has tasted much woe. It has experienced tyranny, war and humiliating defeat. It also is a land where much has been done to redeem the sordid failures of fascism, where democratic vitality has been revived, economic recovery has made gratifying headway, and yet where the glaring contrast between luxury and poverty is a constant political peril.

Premier Scelba announced the new campaign in the midst of a national scandal involving the police and some men of prominence. The scandal has to do with vice and drugs, and it has shaken the government. Maybe these tremors were necessary to unite the cabinet behind the premier's new policy, though Signor Scelba himself did not need such prodding. He is a potential strong man, noted for his stern treatment of communists in past years. This fight is the chance of his lifetime. Either he will emerge the most forceful and successful of Italy's recent leaders, or Italy will sink into confusion, and perhaps into the morass of communism, and be lost altogether to the family of democratic nations.

Whether this is the time and occasion for launching so crucial a battle need not be asked. It has been launched. The fight is on. Whether Premier Scelba's slim majority, dependent on a handful of right wing socialists, is steadfast enough to bear the brunt of battle, only events will show. The Communists already are crying that Scelba wants to be dictator, and are appealing to the democratic freedoms they have exploited to entrench themselves. They will try to weaken Scelba by stirring up hatred for America.

But the premier is expected to be ready to meet them head on. He will take measures to get all avowed communists out of government. He will try to oust them from control of credit institutions, theaters and motion pictures. He will put a stop to a practise of exporters selling to Iron Curtain countries through an agency that pays part of their earnings to the Communist party. He will make the Communist party pay for using former fascist quarters. All this would seriously weaken what now is the richest party in Italy. It is not to be expected that the Communists will bow or even bend under this pressure. They are much too powerful, and they have formidable means of incitement and resistance.

One factor in Premier Scelba's favor is his record of opposition to fascism. Only recently complaints were loud that he was breaking up fascist meetings but doing nothing to curb the communists. Evidently he wasn't yet ready to launch the present crusade.

One thing outsiders should bear in mind about Italy. It is not a country where anything that is anti-communist is by that fact acceptable to the democrats. "It would be difficult for us Christian Democrats to form a government with the Monarchists" said former premier De Gasperi, as quoted in the New York Times. "To begin with, it would pose the question of the type of regime, and that is very important. The danger comes more from a Rightist revival than from Communism. You cannot expect us Democrats who fought fascism to join with fascism. If the Monarchists come in, the Social Democrats and Republicans will work with the Communists and they will be lost forever".

Students of Italy know that much of the present strength of communism was the response to fascism. Communism was relatively weak when fascism came in, and high when it ended. So Premier Scelda will not link hands with the fascists in his attempt to cut down communist power.

That fact points to the always pertinent truism about fighting communism abroad, that the best way is to hasten social reforms. The Christian Democratic regimes since the war, with generous contributions from the United States, can point to considerable progress, though it falls short of what is called for. Now that a showdown struggle has begun, continued American aid becomes vital. Dollars will not decide the outcome, which naturally has to be decided by Italians. But dollars are tokens of Western solidarity and Western loyalty. Italy's continued partnership with the West may well be at stake.

We have learned from past events...or at least we should have... that what happens in any part of the world today, ultimately will affect us too. Even in the days of the Romans, Seneca was aware of this when he said:"No man can live happily who regards himself alone, who turns everything to his own advantage. Thou must live for another if thou wishest to live for thyself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 19, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles, testifying before a Senate committee on the new look military policy, said today: "It is not our intention to turn every local war into a general war." Mr. Dulles said we would consult our allies before launching a massive retaliation against any aggressor. And in further clarification of the "new look" the Secretary said we must be able to meet any attack "with a wide range of air, sea and land power based on both conventional and atomic weapons."

And General Ridgeway, the army chief of staff, said today that any future wars, big or small, will be won or lost by ground forces.

A Congressional investigation has started to determine whether adequate safety and security precautions were taken during the test of a "hydrogen device" in the Pacific on March first. Our ambassador to Japan, John M. Allison, says we will make "just compensation" if we find that 23 Japanese fishermen were innocently injured by the same explosion. And Chairman Short of the House Armed Services Committee says an evaluation of the Bikini explosion indicates that hydrogen weapons "are getting so big that if they get much bigger we won't be able to test them."

The State Department today gave the Russians what it calls "a concrete plan" for using atomic power for peaceful purposes. The plan was not made public but its reported to call for: an international atomic energy agency - this agency to take charge of a pool of atomic materials, to be responsible for safeguarding it and preventing seizure by any nation bent on war. The agency would also mobilize experts to develop atomic energy for power purposes in areas that lack sufficient electrical power.

The Treasury reported today that the government went into the red by eight billion 100-million dollars in the first eight months of the current fiscal year.

The Senate Finance Committee today voted to cut excise taxes by 50-million dollars more than the 912-million reduction approved by the House. Even as Administration leaders pleaded "we need the money to pay our bills" the committee decided to wipe out all admission taxes on movie tickets costing less than 60 cents. The House had cut the admission tax from 20 to ten percent.

The Labor Department reports that during March unemployment which had been largely confined to a few selected industries early this winter continued to rise and to spread to "a wide range of industries." The President said last month that March would be the key month in the unemployment situation.

In Milwaukee today, Senator McCarthy was suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis but said he would go on with his speech commenting on one made recently by Adlai Stevenson. And in Washington, General Ridgeway told the National Press Club that "when the full story of unfolding events becomes known" the country will be deeply proud of Army Secretary Stevens. This was an obvious reference to the forthcoming hearings on McCarthy's row with the army. Secretary of State Dulles today refused to answer questions by Democratic Senator Fulbright on whether McCarthy's tactics have hurt our relations with our allies. Mr. Dulles, at a Senate hearing, said this was a legislative problem and he didn't think "my responsibility as a member of the executive department is to get into the problem you raise."

State Department Security Officer Scott McLeod has told a House committee that he found fewer State Department employees "with subversive tendencies" than he expected to find.

And Administration officials told the committee that despite a law passed last year to admit 214-thousand refugees to this country only six visas have been used. Robert Alexander, assistant administrator for refugee relief, says less than 50 visas were issued. He says the program has been snarled up by security investigations and other red tape.

Representative Bentley of Michigan told reporters today he has been assured of 100 percent recovery from the wounds suffered when Puerto Rican nationalists shot up the House of Representatives.

In Indo-China, French planes continued their attacks on enemy positions surrounding Dien Bien Phu. Some probing enemy units were reported as close as 200 yards to the main barbed wire barricades.

In the Middle East, Lieutenant General John Glubb Pasha, the British commander of Jordan's arab legion, has offered to help track down the murderers of eleven Israeli bus passengers. Israel has accepted his offer.

In Vatican City, Pope Pius made the first public appearance since he became ill two months ago. He stood at an open window for sixty seconds. Communist Poland's premier, Boleslaw Bierut, has resigned to become first secretary of his country's communist party.

The announcement by Premier Mario Scelba of a far-flung campaign to curb communists in Italy opens one of the crucial battles of our times. Italy has the largest Communist movement of any non-communist state in the world. Some of its strength has been due to government laxity, and government laxity has been due chiefly to fear. Communists in the government are so numerous as actually to hamper the conduct of state business. Communist informers always can tip off the party about any government action against it. Some of the Communists' largest periodicals actually are printed on government presses. Communists occupy many former fascist buildings now owned by the state, and pay not a lira for them. And the power of the communists is shown by their command of theaters, movie houses and powerful trading organizations and by their majority in the ranks of organized labor. The communists fill about 70 percent of all shop steward posts, and control sixty percent or more of the trade unions. In politics one voter out of three votes communist, though many who vote that way are not party members. But party membership is now more than 2,200,000, which is 180,000 higher than last year, and the total for the first time has passed the peak figure of 1948.

Italy is a land that for a generation has tasted much woe. It has experienced tyranny, war and humiliating defeat. It also is a land where much has been done to redeem t e sordid failures of fascism, where democratic vitality has been revived, economic recovery has made gratifying headway, and yet where the glaring contrast between luxury and poverty is a constant political peril. Premier Scelba announced the new campaign in the midst of a national scandal involving the police and some men of prominence. The scandal has to do with vice and drugs and it has shaken the government. Maybe these tremors were necessary to unite the cabinet behind the premier's new policy, though Signor Scelba himself did not need such prodding. He is a potential strong man, noted for his stern treatment of communists in past years. This fight is the chance of his lifetime. Either he will emerge the most forceful and successful of Italy's recent leaders, or Italy will sink into confusion, and perhaps into the morass of Communism, and be lost altogether to the family of democratic nations,

Whether this is the time and occasion for launching so crucial a battle need not be asked. It has been launched. The fight is one. Whether Premier Scelba's slim majority, dependent on a handful of right wing socialists, is steadfast enough to bear the brunt of battle, only events will show. The Communists already are crying that Scelba wants to be dictator, and are appealing to the democratic freedoms they have exploited to entrench themselves. They will try to weaken Scelba by stirring up hatred for America. But the premier is expected to be ready to meet them head on. He will take measures to get all avowed communists out of government. He will try to oust them from control of credit institutions, theaters and motion pictures. He will put a stop to a practice of exporters selling to Iron Curtain countries through an agency that pays part of their earnings to the Communist party. He will make the Communist party pay for using former fascist quarters. All this would seriously weaken what now is the richest party in Italy. It is not to be expected that the Communists will bow or even bend under this pressure. They are much too powerful, and they have formidable means of incitement and resistance. One factor in Premier Scelba's favor is his record of opposition to fascism. Only recently complaints were loud that he was breaking up fascist meetings but doing nothing to curb the communists. Evidently he wasn't yet ready to launch the present crusade. One thing outsiders should bear in mind about Italy. It is not a country where anything that is anti-communist is by that fact acceptable to the democrats. "It would be difficult for us Christian Democrats to form a government with the Monarchists" said former premier De Gasperi, as quoted in the New York Times. "To begin with, it would pose the question of the type of regime, and that is very important. The danger comes more from a Rightist revival than from Communism. You cannot expect us Democrats who fought fascims to join with fascism. If the Monarchists come in, the Social Democrats and Republicans will work with the Communists and they will be lost forever." Students of Italy know that much of the present strength of communism was the response to fascism. Communism was relatively weak when fascism came in, and highwhen it ended. So Premier Scelba will not link hands with the fascists in his attempt to cut down communist power. That fact points to the always pertinent truism about fighting communism abroad, that the best way is to hasten social reforms. The Christian Democratic regimes since the war, with generous contributions from the United States, can point to considerable progress, though it falls short of what is called for. Now that a showdown struggle has begun, continued American aid becomes vital. Dollars will not decide the outcome, which naturally has to be decided by Italians. But dollars are tokens of Western solidarity and Western loyalty. Italy's continued partnership with the West may well be at stake.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have learned from past events or at least we should have that what happens in any part of the world today, ultimately will affect us too. Even in the days of the Romans, Seneca was aware of this when he said: "No man can live happily who regards himself alone, who turns everything to his own advantage. Thou must live for another if thou wishest to live for thyself."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, March 22, 1954

This is the news:

The president of the American Bar Association has turned down an offer to serve as chief counsel for the Senate committee that will investigate the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy. The acting committee chairman, Senator Mundt, says William J. Jameson of Billings, Montana.. the bar association leader.. offered two reasons for not accepting the position: eleven of the 16 directors of the Association feel this would disrupt his speaking commitments before state bar groups for too long a time; and they fear that because the Association has members of various grades and shades of opinion, the President of the Bar Association should not take a leading role in a controversial inquiry.

Senator Mundt says the committee will seek other counsel...and Mundt says he will consider Senator McCarthy's proposal that all witnesses submit to lie detector tests. Senator Potter, another committee member, calls this "poppycock." And Adlai Stevenson says:"I think it gets to a lamentable state when such methods are proposed in an investigation of public questions."

Mc Carthy today told reporters he insists on the right to cross-examine any witnesses who testify on his row with the Army. And he wants the committee's chief counsel, Roy Cohn, to be given a similar privilege. McCarthy says: "No one except a liar need fear cross-examination."

Today, at a Senate appropriations subcommittee hearing on funds for the Justice Department, McCarthy asked Attorney General Brownell what had happened to what he called espionage charges against a newspaperman who was not named. Democratic Senator Ellendar suggested the Senator could get this answer by mail without..as he put it.."making a big show of it." Democratic Senator McCarran said: "We are not trying espionage cases here." And Republican Senator Dirksen said McCarran's point is "well taken." Then Brownell promised to look into the matter.

The Marine Corps revealed today that Senator McCarthy was promoted to leiutenant colonel in the reserve a year ago.

And the Army today disclosed that it has issued orders for all officers to sign new loyalty certificates. Persons who do not sign such certificates cannot be promoted, decorated, commended, reassigned, seperated or ordered to active duty..pending final action in each case. And the Army wants to know quickly of any cases involving officers who refuse to sign such certificates for fear of inrciminating themselves.

The Army makes it clear that these new orders are due to the case of Major Peress whose promotion and honorable discharge, started the army-McCarthy charges.

The President today spent thirty minutes (CONFERRING) with Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, and France's top general.. Paul Ely. Admiral Radford said that if the French request more American planes for Indo-China, we will certainly consider sending them B-26's. He said the Indo-China aid program is being discussed and modified daily. And the Admiral believes the French "are going to win the battle" at Dien Bien Phu.

The French High command says enemy infiltrators appear to have penetrated close to the heart of the French fortress.

In Canada today, Prime Minister St. Laurent said he knows of no consideration being given by Canada to recognizing Communist China or supporting her for membership in the United Nations .

And in Toronto, Secretary of Commerce Weeks said the United States economy is "in excellent shape."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee in Washington that he looks for no particular change in the eceonomic situation before May. Recently the President indicated he would take action if employment did not improve in March. But Humphrey told Senators today: uncertainty over tax legislation and a late Easter buying (SEASON) mean its going to be a late spring as far as any upturn in business is concerned.

Here in New York today coffee prices went up another five to six cents a pound at the wholesale and retail level.

The Department of Commerce reports tonight that last year our foreign aid hit a record high of over six and a quarter billion dollars... with four and a third billion going for military aid.

The Senate again debated a recommendation that New Mexico's Democratic Senator Chavez be ousted because of a ballot dispute in the 1952 election. Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri said the Republican majority on an elections subcommittee used " every available means to discredit Chavez but failed utterly and dismally."

The United States today expressed "deep regret" over the shooting of eleven Israelis in the Negev desert last week. We are "closely following" a United Nations investigation of Isreal's charge that Arabs from Jordan did the shooting.

The British today told Egypt they will not resume talks on the Suez Canal until the Egyptians stop sniping and ambushing British troops at Suez. Foreign Secretary Eden says four soldiers were killed, several others wounded, in the last few days.

And the British are said to have offered to co-operate "more closely" with the proposed European army..when it is formed.

The Times of London said TODAY in an EDITORIAL on the United States that :"No nation (besides the United States) has ever come into possession of such powers for good or ill, for freedom or tyranny, for friendship or enmity among the peoples of the world, and no nation in history has used those powers, by and large, with greater vision, restraint, responsibility and courage."

Representative Holfield of California said today that our recent hydrogen bomb test at Bikini was so much bigger than anticipated "that you might say it was out of control."

And here in New York there was no back-to-work movement on the strike-bound waterfront even though Mayor Wagner says "the strong-arm boys" have been cleared from the port.

[redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: March 22, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Occasionally in the dreary deluge of despatches describing the state of the world, there appears a relatively obscure item, calculated to lift the heart - one dealing with familiar symbols or symptoms. One such crossed this reporter's desk today - one that is perhaps designed to lift the feet, rather than the heart - but it is welcome none the less. We are indebted for it to Alton Blakeslee, the Associated Press Science reporter. He was writing from Cleveland, Ohio, where he is covering the meeting of The American Academy of General Practise. It would appear that two orthopedic surgeons of New York City - Drs. Harry C. Stein, and I.E. Fixel - have stated an obvious proposition. They contend that we are becoming a nation of "foot cripples," with aching feet, bunions and other troubles, largely because our shoes aren't best engineered for our feet.

The desire of these two doctors is to make our feet the boss of our shoes, instead of our shoes bossing our feet. Anyone who ever went barefoot in his youth, and faced the awful prospect of shoes in the Autumn, will agree that this is an altogether laudable project. The two doctors are bone specialists, presumably, although it is not so stated in the despatch, concerned primarily with the bones of the feet. If they can't make us happier in the head, it is their purpose to ease the tensions in the feet.

The two doctors suggest shoes equipped with a kind of automatic gearshift as one way of bringing more happiness to our feet. They contend that when we stand we use one set of bone gears in the feet. When we walk we switch to a different set of gears, or set of bones and muscles. The orthopedic surgeons further assert that shoes having a rigid shank or sole, don't permit an easy switch of gears. So special joints were designed in the shank reinforcement which permit the shoe to follow the natural gear action of walking. There is another change, too. The heel section of the shoe is slightly offset to one side, so the weight-bearing motion is directed toward the big toe. They explain that natural walking motion starts from the heel, (which it certainly does,) goes along the outer side of the foot, then across to the ball of the big toe, with that big toe giving the final take-off push. Shoes which put the heel more in line with the little toe than the big toe, make the push-off force for a step come more from the outer side of the foot than the inner side. As evidence to support their contention, they say the way rubber heels and the soles of shoes wear down on the outside are signs of this fault.

Most sober-minded and reasonably observant citizens will at least agree that there is something wrong with the grace and rhythm displayed by the man or woman who wears down the sole or heel on the inside. The doctors add that shoes often are designed as though the big toe were in the center of the foot, and this throws the walking action inward, which in turn curves the big toe inward.

There is another proposal, and that is to put a movable center - I suppose it might be called a fluid transmission - in the rubber heel itself, so that when the heel first strikes the ground, the rubber heel bends to provide a rolling rocker action. I do not quite understand this, nor am I quite clear what results might follow if the wearer attempted to walk backward. However, ~~MEXXEAX~~ lest you rush out to purchase these almost self-propelled, automatic gearshift shoes, Mr. Blakeslee, careful reporter that he is, points out that these research findings have not yet been adapted to other than ~~experiment~~ experimental shoes.

If you're still interested in this subject, the average person is said to walk about eight miles a day, taking fourteen thousand or more steps. (This is probably just a rough average.) A 200 pound man puts a 704 ton daily work load on each foot, and faulty mechanics in shoes can cause an enormous waste of energy.

These two doctors may or may not have devised a device to ease the foot ills of the nation. Time and toes will probably tell. But reading this despatch I was reminded of something Thomas Paine wrote on the subject of disease. As you will remember he wrote not of the feet but of the mind and the spirit: "The nearer any disease approaches to a crisis, the nearer it is to a cure. Danger and deliverance make their advances together, and it is only the last push in which one or the other takes the lead. There are many men who will do their duty when it is not wanted, but a genuine public spirit always appears most when there is most occasion for it."

We were talking of the possibility of a new-type shoe. And somehow it reminded me of something Will Rogers once said:"Every invention during our lifetime has been to save time and time is the only commodity that every American has plenty of. Half our life is spent trying to find something to do with the time we have rushed through life trying to save."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The president of the American Bar Association has turned down an offer to serve as chief counsel for the Senate committee that will investigate the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy. The acting committee chairman, Senator Mundt, says William J. Jameson of Billings, Montana, the bar association leader, offered two reasons for not accepting the position: eleven of the 16 directors of the Associstion feel this would disrupt his speaking committments before state bar groups for too long a time; and they fear that because the Association has members of various grades and shades of opinion, the President of the Bar Association should not take a leading role in a controversial inquiry.

Senator Mundt says the committee will seek other counsel and Mundt says he will consider Senator McCarthy's proposal that all witnesses submit to lie detector tests. Senator Potter, another committee member, calls this "poppycock." And Adlai Stevenson says: "I think it gets to a lamentable state when such methods are proposed in an investigation of public questions."

McCarthy today told reporters he insists on the right to cross-examine any witnesses who testify on his row with the Army. And he wants the committee's chief counsel, Roy Cohn, to be given a similar privilege. McCarthy says: "No one except a liar need fear cross-examination."

Today, at a Senate appropriations subcommittee hearing on funds for the Justice Department, McCarthy asked Attorney General Brownell what had happened to what he called espionage charges against a newspaperman who was not named. Democratic Senator Ellendar suggested the Senator could get this answer by mail without as he put it "making a big show of it. Democratic Senator McCarran said: "We are not trying espionage cases here." And Republican Senator Dirksen said McCarran's point is "well taken." Then Brownell promised to look into the matter.

The Marine Corps revealed today that Senator McCarthy was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in the reserve a year ago.

And the Army today disclosed that it has issued orders for all officers to sign new loyalty certificates. Persons who do not sign such certificates cannot be promoted, decorated, commended, reassigned, separated or ordered to active duty... pending final action in each case. And the Army wants to know quickly of any cases involving officers who refuse to sign such certificates for fear of incriminating themselves. The Army makes it clear that these new orders are due to the case of Major Peress whosepromotion and honorable discharge, started the army-McCarthy charges.

The President today spent thirty minutes conferring with Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, and France's top general, Paul Ely. Admiral Radford said that if the French request more American planes for Indo China we will certainly consider sending them B-26's. He said the Indo-China aid program is being discussed and modified daily. And the Admiral believes the French "are going to win the battle" at Dien Bien Phu.

The French High command says enemy infiltrators appear to have penetrated close to the heart of the French fortress.

In Canada today, Prime Minister St. Laurent said he knows of no consideration being given by Canada to recognizing Communist China or supporting her for membership in the United Nations.

And in Toronto, Secretary of Commerce Weeks said the United States economy is "in excellent shape."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee in Washington that he looks for no particular change in the economic situation before May. Recently the President indicated he would take action if employment did not improve in March. But Humphrey told Senators today: uncertainty over tax legislation and a late Easter buying season mean its going to be a late spring as far as any upturn in business is concerned.

Here in New York today coffee prices went up another five to six cents a pound at the wholesale and retail level.

The Department of Commerce reports tonight that last year our foreign aid hit a record high of over six and a quarter billion dollars with four and a third billion going for military aid.

The Senate again debated a recommendation that New Mexico's Democratic Senator Chavez be ousted because of a ballot dispute in the 1952 election. Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri said the Republican majority on an elections subcommittee used "every available means to discredit Chavez but failed utterly and dismally."

The United States today expressed "deep regret" over the shooting of eleven Israelis in the Negev desert last week. We are "closely following" a United Nations investigation of Israel's charge that Arabs from Jordan did the shooting.

The British today told Egypt they will not resume talks on the Suez Canal until the Egyptians stop sniping and ambushing British troops at Suez. Foreign Secretary Eden says four soldiers were killed, several others wounded, in the last few days.

And the British are said to have offered to cooperate "more closely" with the proposed European army when it is formed.

The Times of London said today in an editorial on the United States that: "No nation (besides the United States) has ever come into possession of such powers for good or ill, for freedom or tyranny, for friendship or enmity among the peoples of the world, and no nation in history has used those powers, by and large, with greater vision, restraint, responsibility and courage."

Representative Holfield of California said today that our recent hydrogen bomb test at Bikini was so much bigger than anticipated "that you might say it was out of control."

And here in New York there was no back-to-work movement on the strike-bound waterfront even though Mayor Wagner says "the strong-arm boys" have been cleared from the port.

Occasionally in the dreary deluge of despatches describing the state of the world there appears a relatively obscrue item, calculated to life the heart - one dealing with familiar symbols or symptoms. One such crossed this reporter's desk today - one that is perhaps designed to life the feet, rather than the heart - but it is welcome none the less. We are indebted for it to Alton Blakeslee, the Associated Press Science reporter. He was writing from Cleveland, Ohio, where he's covering the meeting of The American Academy of General Practice. It would appear that two orthopedic surgeons of New York City - Drs. Harry C. Stein, and I.E. Fixel - have stated an obvious proposition. They contend that we are becoming a nation of "foot cripples," with aching feet, bunions and other troubles, largely because our shoes aren't best engineered for our feet.

The desire of these two doctors is to make our feet the boss of our shoes, instead of our shoes bossing our feet. Anyone who ever went barefoot in his youth, and faced the awful prospect of shoes in the Autumn, will agree that this is an altogether laudable project. The two doctors are bone specialists, presumably although it is not so stated in the despatch concerned primarily with the bones of the feet. If they can't make us happier in the head, it is their purpose to ease the tensions in the feet. The two doctors suggest shoes equipped with a kind of automatic gearshift as one way of bringing more happiness to our feet. They contend that when we stand we use one set of bone gears in the feet. When we walk we switch to a different set of gears, or set of bones and muscles. The orthopedic surgeons further assert that shoes having a rigid shank or sole, don't permit an easy switch of gears. So special joints were designed in the shank reinforcement which permit the shoe to follow the natural gear action of walking. There is another change, too. The heel section of the shoe is slightly offset to one side, so the weight-bearing motion is directed toward the big toe. They explain that natural walking motion starts from the heel, which it certainly does, goes along the outer side of the foot, then across to the ball of the big toe, with that big toe giving the final takeoff push. Shoes which put the heel more in line with the little toe than the big toe, make the push-off force for a step come more from the outer side of the foot than the inner side. As evidence to support their contention, they say the way rubber heels and the soles of shoes wear down on the outside are signs of this fault. Most sober-minded and reasonably observant citizens will at least agree that there is something wrong with the grace and rhythm displayed by the man or woman who wears down the sole or heel on the inside. The doctors add that shoes often are designed as though the big toe were in the center of the foot, and this throws the walking action inward, which in turn curves the big toe inward. There is another proposal, and that is to put a movable center - I suppose it might be called a fluid transmission - in the rubber heel itself, so that when the heel first strikes the ground, the rubber heel bends to provide a rolling rocker action. I do not quite understand this, nor am I quite clear what results might follow if the wearer attempted to walk backward; however, lest you rush out to purchase these almost self-propelled, automatic gearshift shoes, Mr. Balkeslee, careful reporter that he is, points out that these research findings have not yet been adapted to other than experimental shoes. If you're still interested in this subject, the average person is said to walk about eight miles a day, taking fourteen thousand or more steps. This is probably just a rough average. A 200 pound man puts a 704 ton daily work load on each foot, and faulty mechanics in shoes can cause an enormous waste of energy. These two doctors may or may not have devised a device to ease the foot ills of the nation. Time and toes will probably tell.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the possibility of a new-type shoe. And somehow it reminded me of something Will Rogers once said: "Every invention during our lifetime has been to save time and time is the only commodity that every American has plenty of. Half our life is spent trying to find something to do with the time we have rushed through life trying to save." Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, Mar 23, 1954

This is the news:

The French in Indo-China said today that their bombers have [redacted] "completely destroyed" two battalions of Communist reinforcements moving toward Dien Bien Phu. They estimate that twelve hundred men were killed by surprise, low-level fire-bombing and strafing. [redacted]

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that we will take quick action if the French ask for more military equipment. And he is still confident the French will defeat the rebels.."according to the French plan".. in about a year.

And Defense Secretary Wilson told reporters [redacted] that we would like to have more Indo-Chinese trained on a more intensive basis.. he wants "a more aggressive training program". And Wilson says the visiting French General Ely is "receptive" to the American view that the hope of winning in Indo-China will rest largely on the native people.

At the same news conference, Mr. Wilson said the battle between the army and Senator McCarthy is most unfortunate..he hopes the press will turn to more important things. [redacted] He feels the whole thing has been blown up out of all proportion in relation to the facts.

And Senator McCarthy feels the same way. He told reporter he wants to get on with his committee work. He said:"I [redacted] can't in good conscience have our staff of trained investigators idle. I dislike very much holding up work because of the blown up fight between Mr. Cohn and Mr. Adams." Cohn is McCarthy's chief counsel who, with the Senator, has been accused of seeking special favors for Army Private David Schine. [redacted] Adams..is John G. Adams.. the army's legal counsel. Mc Carthy has charged that the Army tried to blackmail him with a report on Cohn's alleged activities on behalf of Schine..in the hopes of having Mc Carthy call-off an investigation of the army.

For an hour today the Senator had plans to discuss two new investigations with committee members tomorrow...bribery and fraud [redacted] in Alaska.. and an investigation [redacted] of 91 cases where, he says, workers in defense plants [redacted], have records of communist activities. But later three committee members said [redacted]

Mc Carthy told them this was off. (It was only a week ago that the committee decided to hold no hearings on any business until it had determined whether the army or Senator McCarthy and Roy Cohn were telling the truth in the Schine matter.)

At today's committee meeting, McCarthy offered to give up his vote in this hearing. But he insists on retaining the right to cross- examine witnesses. Republican Chairman Hall THINKS it would be fair play for McCarthy to step a side. Democratic Senator Symington said he wants McCarthy barred from cross-examining witnesses. Democratic Senator McClellan thinks McCarthy should "step down" from an active part as a committee member. And Republican Senator Potter of Michigan says: "I'd be happy if McCarthy would voluntarily take himself out of the picture as far as cross-examination is concerned."

The committee has not yet chosen a special counsel. Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington state says when a man is chosen it will take "many days" for him to familiarize himself with committee rulles and procedures. Acting Chairman Mundt hopes the hearing may start "sometime next week."

Secretary of State Dulles said today that he has called for the appointment of a special security board to hear more evidence in the case of Career Diplomat John Paton Davies, Junior. Davies, a frequent target of McCarthy, has been cleared seven times (IN THE PAST) by State Department loyalty-security boards, [redacted] Now, Secretary Dulles says there are some matters " bearing upon reliability, which are suspceptible of conflicting interpretations and which seem to call for clarification by testimony under oath" by Davies and others.

The Senate today defeated a Republican move to oust New Mexico's Democratic Senator Chavez. The vote was 53 to 36..mostly along party lines.

The F.B.I. has notified all police to be on guard against the smuggling of atomic weapons into this country. I'd like to discuss the warning in a few minutes.

And prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today [redacted] he supports the American policy of "massive retaliation" against aggression. He has an agreement with Washington that American bases in Great Britain will not be used for such atomic retaliation without consultations between the two governments.

~~In Jerusalem, a mixed armistice commission failed to uphold Israel's claim that Arabs massacred eleven Israeli bus passengers. There were two Israeli, two Jordan members on the commission with United States Navy Commander Hutchison. He refused to break a deadlock vote.~~

~~And in Washington seven Arab nations accused Israel of building up tension in the Middle East. They told Secretary of State Dulles that if Israel attacked any of these nations all would retaliate.~~

~~Italian Premier Scelba's government tonight forced the postponment until July first of a Communist demand for debate on the Wilma Montessi scandal. The death of this 22 year old party girl on a beach last April has has repercussions high in Italian government and society. Premier Scelba has promised to make public the whole record of an investigation that is now in progress.~~

Here in New York, the executive Board of the C.I.O. says the Eisenhower Administration has a "do nothing, look-the-other way" policy on rising unemployment. It calls the situation both "dangerous and disgraceful."

And in Los Angeles, the district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service has ordered Singer Dick Haymes to be deported to his native Argentina. ~~He was found to be ineligible for citizenship because the [illegible] "We draft exemption as a mutual aid."~~ Haymes' lawyer has appealed what he calls this "cruel and inhuman banishment."

The rest of my time is to be devoted to the reading of some scientific information - It almost ~~said some~~ sounds like "science fiction". But though it sounds like that, it is real, and from an official report of the United States Government. It has been published for the guidance of the police, and the instruction of the public, about atomic weapons that might be smuggled into the United States.

This is the latest chapter of the education of this country, in the realities of the atomic era. It follows closely on the thermo-nuclear explosion at Bikini, the greatest explosion ever set off by man. The information I shall read has to do with the other end of the scale of size; it is of an atomic weapon, small enough to be carried by a single person. (But it is an atomic weapon all the same.) And if it includes a mass of fifty pounds of fissionable material, as the report suggests, that might cause an explosion ten times as powerful as the original Hiroshima bomb. (I state that only as a possibility.) The report says nothing about its power. But improved techniques are known to have multiplied the effectiveness of atomic explosions, and with the right material the effectiveness, even of a small bomb - one that could be carried by a person - could be the equivalent of 200,000 tons of TNT.

The official report goes into greater detail than any past statements about atomic weapons. "In order that citizens of the United States may intelligently assist in the defense of the country", it says, "they should have sufficient information regarding atomic weapons, to enable them to recognize bombs, or parts of bombs, which might be smuggled into the United States by enemy agents. It is impossible to describe exactly what foreign bombs will look like. On the other hand, it is possible to explain the basic idea which will govern their design. . . Atomic explosions result when, 1) certain amounts of fissionable material in two pieces or more, are brought quickly together to form one piece, and when, 2) a certain amount of fissionable material is quickly made dense by squeezing it together. . .

"In the first case we would look for some kind of gun-barrel device, using high explosive to blow one piece of fissionable material from the breech end of the gun, down through the barrel, into another piece of fissionable material, firmly anchored in the muzzle end of the gun. In the second case we should look for a device using high explosive to squeeze fissionable material.

"We note that the essential features of the gun-type device are the gun-barrel itself, and fissionable material; and the two essential features of the second type are high explosives that could be used to build up a sphere, and, again, fissionable material.

"We see by this that we shall be able to help protect ourselves and our country if we can recognize any one of three essential components. They are, 1) fissionable material; 2) a gun-barrel type device; and 3) high explosives.

"Fissionable material is uranium and/or plutonium, which are extremely heavy metals, weighing half again as much as lead of the same size. Fifty pounds of these heavy fissionable materials would be approximately 5 inches in diameter, about the size of a soft-ball. Since both these metals can be coated, with other metal or plastics, and can be machined into all sorts of shapes, we should be especially alert regarding any article that is extremely heavy for its size." (That is, they don't necessarily register on a geiger-counter). "Pieces which might be smuggled would probably be of a size that could be carried on the person.

"The gun-barrel device will probably be made of steel. The diameter of the bore of such a gun-barrel, would probably be not less than two inches or more than ten inches. We may expect the outer diameter of the gun-barrel to range from about five inches to about twelve inches. Both ends of the barrel may be closed by breech block-type devices, so that the bore of the gun will not be visible. It is, of course, possible that the gun tube, and the two breech blocks, may be carried in three separate pieces; in this case the inner bore may be visible.

"The fissionable material for this gun-type weapon may be concealed within, or usually at the end of, the gun-barrel, or it may be carried in separate packages, for later assembly with the barrel. We may visualize the gun-type device then, as a gun-barrel in which a projectile of fissionable material is fired down a gun-barrel, into another plug of fissionable material in the muzzle of the gun-barrel. The length of the entire device need not exceed about two-and-a-half feet.

"The high explosives of the other type of weapon will probably be in specially fabricated shapes, one side of which will be part of a spherical surface."

I have read the report, with some abbreviation, so as to make what contribution I can to the public education. I should add that if anyone finds one of these atomic weapons, he is not to try to dismantle it. That task is to be entrusted to certain Explosive Ordnance Disposal Units, under Army jurisdiction. The police are to notify the F.B.I. if an atomic weapon is discovered.

The only appropriate comment is to express the hope, however far-fetched it may seem, that any foreign agent entering this country with a soft-ball size or less of fissionable material, on his or her person, will be recognized instantly. We have a long frontier, and no training in looking for strangers concealing specially heavy things. It also is to be hoped that we shall not have to sharpen the wits of our detection on the whetstone of experience. We have been warned.

It is usually in times of crises that we find ourselves concerned about things that should have been defined and discussed in less tense moments. Thus, tonight's reading of the government's atomic ~~reports~~ WARNING. Centuries ago, the Roman Cato remarked:"He that is warned is half armed. So, to sound warnings let prudence lend an ear."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French in Indo-China said today that their bombers have "completely destroyed" two battalions of Communist reinforcements moving toward Dien Bien Phu. They estimate that twelve hundred men were killed by surprise, low-level fire-bombing and strafing.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that we will take quick action if the French ask for more military equipment. And he is still confident the French will defeat the rebels "according to the French plan" in about a year.

And Defense Secretary Wilson told reporters that we would like to have more Indo-Chinese trained on a more intensive basis - he wants "a more aggressive training program." And Wilson says the visiting French General Ely is "receptive" to the American view that the hope of winning in Indo-China will rest largely on the native people.

At the same news conference, Mr. Wilson said the battle between the army and Senator McCarthy is most unfortunate - he hopes the press willturn to more important things. He feels the whole thing has been blown up out of all proportion in relation to the facts.

And Senator McCarthy feels the same way. He told reporter he wants to get on with his committee work. He said: "I can't in good conscience have our staff of trained investigators idle. I dislike very much holding up work because of the blown up fight between Mr. Cohn and Mr. Adams." Cohn is McCarthy's chief counsel who with the Senator, has been accused of seeking special favors for Army Private David Schine. Adams is John G. Adams the army's legal counsel. McCarthy has charged that the Army tried to blackmail him with a report on Cohn's alleged activities on behalf of Schine in the hopes of having McCarthy call-off an investigation of the army.

For an hour today, the Senator had plans to discuss two new investigations with committee members tomorrow - bribery and fraud in Alaska and an investigation of 91 cases where, he says, workers in defense plants have records of communist activities. But later three committee members said McCarthy told them this was off. It was only a week ago that the committee decided to hold no hearings on any business until it had determined whether the army or Senator McCarthy and Roy Cohn were telling the truth in the Schine matter.

At today's committee meeting, McCarthy offered to give up his vote in this hearing. But he insists on retaining the right to cross-examine witnesses. Republican Chairman Hall t inks it would be fair play for McCarthy to step aside. Democratic Senator Symington said he wants McCarthy barred from cross-examining witnesses. Democratic Senator McClellan thinks McCarthy should "step down" from an active part as a committee member. And Republican Senator Potter of Michigan says: "I'd be happy if McCarthy would voluntarily take himself out of the picture as far as cross-examination is concerned."

The committee has not yet chosen a special counsel. Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington state says when a man is chosen it will take "many days" for him to familiarize himself with committee rules and procedures. Acting Chairman Mundt hopes the hearing may start "sometime next week."

Secretary of State Dulles said today that he has called for the appointment of a special security board to hear more evidence in the case of Career Diplomat John Paton Davies, Junior. Davies, a frequent target of McCarthy, has been cleared seven times in the past by State Department loyalty-security boards. Now, Secretary Dulles says there are some matters "bearing upon reliability which are susceptible of conflicting interpretations and which seem to call for clarification by testimony under oath" by Davies and others.

The Senate today defeated a Republican move to oust New Mexico's Democratic Senator Chavez. The vote was 53 to 36 - mostly along party lines.

The F.B.I. has notified all police to be on guard against the smuggling of atomic weapons into this country. I'd like to discuss the warning in a few minutes.

And prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today he supports the American policy of "massive retaliation" against aggression. He has an agreement with Washington that American bases in Great Britain will not be used for such atomic retaliation without consultations between the two governments.

Here in New York, the executive board of the CIO says the Eisenhower Administration has "do nothing, look-the-other way" policy on rising unemployment. It calls the situation both "dangerous and disgraceful."

And in Los Angeles, the district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service has ordered Singer Dick Haymes to be deported to his native Argentina. Haymes' lawyer has appealed what he calls this "cruel and inhuman banishment."

The rest of my time is to be devoted to the reading of some scientific information - it almost sounds like "science fiction." But though it sounds like that, it is real, and from an official report of the United States Government. It has been published for the guidance of the police, and the instruction of the public, about atomic weapons that might be smuggled into the United States. This is th latest chapter of the education of this country, in the realities of the atomic age. It follows closely on the thermo-nuclear explosion at Bikini, the greatest explosion ever set off by man. The information I shall read has to do with the other end of the scale of size; it is of an atomic weapon, small enough to be carried by a single person. But it is an atomic weaponall the same. And if it includes a mass of fifty pounds of fissionable material, as the report suggests, that might cause an explosion ten times as powerful as the original Hiroshima bomb. I state that only as a possibility. The report says nothing about its power. But improved techniques are known to have multiplied the effectiveness of atomic explosions, and with the right material the effectiveness, even of a small bomb - one that could be carried by a person - could be the equivalent of 200,000 tons of TNT.

The official report goes into greater detail that any past statements about atomic weapons. "In order that citizens of the United States may intelligently assist in the defense of the country," it says, "they should have sufficient information regarding atomic weapons, to enable them to recognize bombs, or parts of bombs, which might be smuggled into the United States by enemy agents. It is impossible to describe exactly what foreign bombs will look like.

"In the first case we would look for some kind of gun-barrel device, using high explosive to blow one piece of fissionable material from the breech end of the gun, down through the barrel, into another piece of fissionable material, firmly anchored in the muzzle end of the gun. In the second case we should look for a device using high explosive to squeeze fissionable material.

"We note that the essential features of the gun-type device are the gun-barrel itself, and fissionable material; and the two essential features of the second type are high explosives that could be used to build up a sphere, and, again, fissionable material.

"We see by this that we shall be able to help protect ourselves and our country if we can recognize any one of three essential components. They are (1) fissionable material; (2) a gun-barrel type device and (3) high explosives.

"Fissionable material is uranium and/or plutonium, which are extremely heavy metals, weighing half again as much as lead of the same size. Fifty pounds of these heavy fissionable materials would be approximately 5 inches in diameter, about the size of a soft-ball. Since both these metals can be coated, with other metal or plastics, and can be machined into all sorts of shapes, we should be especially alert regarding anyarticle that is extremely heavy for its size." That is, they don't necessarily register on a geiger-counter. "Pieces which might be smuggled would probably be of a size that could be carried on the person.

"The gun-barrel device will probably be made of steel. The diameter of the bore of such a gun-barrel, would probably be not less than two inches or more than ten inches. We may expect the outer diameter of the gun-barrel to range from about five inches to about twelve inches. Both ends of the barrel may be closed by breech block-type devices, so that the bore of the gun will not be visible. It is, of course, possible that the gun tube, and the two breech blocks, may be carried in three separate pieces; in this case the inner bore may be visible.

"The fissionable material for this gun-type weapon may be concealed within, or usually at the end of, the gun-barrel, or it may be carried in separate packages, for later assembly with the barrel. The length of the entire device need not exceed about two-and-a-half feet.

"The high explosives of the other type of weapon will probably be in specially fabricated shapes, one side of which will be part of a spherical surface."

I have read the report, with some abbreviation, so as to make what contribution I can to the public education. I should add that if anyone finds one of these atomic weapons he is not to try to dismantle it. That task is to be entrusted to certain Explosive Ordanance Disposal Units, under Army jurisdiction. The police are to notify the F.B.I. if an atomic weapon is discovered. The only appropriate comment is to express the hope, however farfetched it may seem, that any foreign agent entering this country with a soft-ball size or less of fissionable material, on his or her person, will be recognized instantly. We have a long frontier, and no training in looking for strangers concealing specially heavy things. It also is to be hoped that we shall not have to sharpen the wits of our detection on the whetstone of experience. We have been warned.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCAIL

MURROW: It is usually in times of crises that we find ourselves concerned about things that should have been defined and discussed in less tnese moments. Thus, tonight's reading of the government's atomic warning. Centuries ago, the Roman Cato remarked: "He that is warned is half armed. So, to sound warnings, let prudence lend an ear."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Mar. 24, 1954

This is the news:

The French today carried out the biggest fire-bomb air attack of the war in Indo-China. The high command says American-supplied flying box cars, and Dakota transports..all piloted by Frenchmen.. joined smaller planes in striking at enemy columns moving supplies and ~~and~~ reinforcements to surrounded Dien Bien Phu.

And French military quarters in Saigon made it known today that they strongly oppose Defense Secretary Wilson's suggestion, that American military men be sent to Indo-China to train the new Viet Nam Army.

The President--at his news conference today-- had high praise for the French colonel conducting the defense of Dien Bien Phu..said he was doing a wonderful job. Old-soldier Eisenhower, said the big question there is morale.. the situation is comparable to that at Anzio in World War Two... if the French keep their morale high, they can win. And again Mr. Eisenhower said that until conditions change, there will be no change of the Administration's position against admitting Communist China to the United Nations.

In Korea, President Rhee said that unless we help South

Korea unify all of Korea by force..or give him an army that would need no help "if peaceful efforts fail", South Korea will not attend the Geneva conference.

The government today reported a small drop in living costs. ~~And~~ Commerce Secretary Weeks says there are "some indications" of a slight drop in unemployment this month. And the President told reporters there is no need yet for a "slamb-bang" government emergency program to combat unemployment. He said rising unemployment is admittedly dangerous but it has not reached a point where the government has to step in. ~~The President said its difficult to get a true picture of economic conditions because of the lateness of the Easter season and the delay in spring buying.~~

At his news conference the President was asked about Senator McCarthy and the scheduled investigation by his committee of the McCarthy-Cohn-Army charges. The President said "In America, if a man is party to a dispute, directly or indirectly, he does not sit in judgmenet on his own case. And"--said the President--"I don't believe that any leadership can escape responsibility for carrying on that tradition and practise."

The Senator later told reporters he and the President agree with each other completely. He said:"It was decided long ago that I would not vote on these matters. I'm not sitting in judgment." But the Senator insists on the right to cross-examination.

Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate Armed Services Committee today heard the armed forces testify that in the past five years they discharged 624 men, in all the services, as "security risks in cases involving loyalty connotations." Saltonstall said the discharged men represent a mere handful of the MILLIONS who have served in the armed forces. He added: "It is plain that extraneous factors have made this problem larger than it really is." Senator McCarthy has accused the army of coddling Communists.

McCarthy today charged that Columnist Drew Pearson had violated the "espionage act" with two former government employes. Pearson says he'd be delighted to have the matter investigated by anyone who is "competent and sane."

The Christian Advocate.. official Methodist church weekly..tonight urges the President to appoint a non-partisan commission to replace Congressional committees investigating Communism in government. ~~The Advocate says this is not a political issue" and [illegible] peril to the welfare of our country. The paper says the President "seems to be sufficiently [illegible] from the sad spectacle of recent weeks to see"~~

Today at his news conference the President said that certain types of F.B.I. files will be kept inviolate..will never be released to Congressional committee s.

And when reporters asked about the recent hydrogen explosion at Bikini Mr. Eisenhower said: the effects apparently surprised and astonished our scientists..things happened which apparently never happened before.. we must take precautions in future tests. ~~The Navy discloses that the tanker Tatuposs, with 22 men aboard, had been contaminated by "fallout" of ashes from the Bikini test. None of the seamen dangerously exposed.~~

And the Atomic Energy Commission has told Congress it is raising the production of "new type" atomic and hydrogen weapons in a drive that is cutting national defense costs.

5

The magazine Christian Herald reported today that a survey shows that more than four million Roman Catholics have become Protestants in this country in the last ten years. The magazine says this is nearly four times the number of conversions to Catholicism.

~~The magazine Christian Herald reported today that a survey shows that four million Roman Catholics have been converted to Protestantism in this country in the past ten years. The Magazine says the Catholics had reported that one million 71 thousand persons had been converted from Protestantism to Catholicism in the same period.~~

Isreal's Premier Moshe Sharett today told his parliament, that "if the United Nations is unable to control Arab aggressors, Isreal is obliged to protect her own interests."

And both the Dutch and Greek governments today TURNED DOWN ~~replied to~~ recent Soviet protests over American bases in both countries. ~~The Dutch said American flyers will be based in the Netherlands if the Russians like it or not. The Greeks said they need the bases because of fear of forces beyond Greek borders, such as in Communist Bulgaria.~~

We are not the only nation concerned with domestic problems. Italy has also been having troubles. And so tonight I asked my colleague Bill Downs to give us a fill-in from Rome and this is what he had to record:

(runs 6:15
comes at 7;50;55
return cue: This is Bill Downs recording from Rome)

And this is Ed Murrow...I'll be back in a minute etc.

Italy's Premier Scelba has much to accomplish if he is to maintain his power. It's as Lynn Landrum once said: "Responsibility gravitates to the power that can carry out that responsibility. If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that "oughtness" rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours."

Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 24, 1954
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... We are not the only nation concerned with domestic problems. Italy has also been having troubles and so tonight I asked my colleague, Bill Downs, to give us a fill-in from Rome and this is what he had to record.

DOWNS: For the past two months the people of Italy have been on a kind of scandal binge and, if Americans have been intrigued with the alleged adventures of the privileged private, then multiply the sensationalism a hundred times and you have an idea of how all Italy has been rocked by the now-notorious Montesi case. As you know, the libel hearings in the affair now have been temporarily suspended and the politicians now have a few weeks to assess the situation, but the charges of murder, narcotics, corruption, and worse have made a serious dent in the prestige and public confidence in the Christian Democratic Party, the Party which the western Allies are depending upon to maintain freedom and democracy in this country against the growing menace of totalitarianism.

The Montesi case started out being a police mystery centering around the death of an unknown Roman party girl, Wilma Montesi, whose body was found on a near-by resort beach last April, but now some of the most prominent names in Italy, including that of Premier Mario Scelba himself, have been mentioned in connection with the case and the fat is in the fire. The question now is - how is it going to be pulled from the flames and who is going to get burned? The Italian press, particularly the Communist publications, have been feeding the people a steady diet of sensationalism and, although much of the evidence presented is hearsay, there appears to be enough truth behind the stories so that the great mass of the population is shocked. The man most mentioned in the stories coming out of the trial is Ugo Montagna, a kind of Italian Henry Grunewald whose mysterious mechanizations in Washington were so intriguing a few years ago. Montagna listed as close friends the Vice Secretary of the Christian Democratic Party, also the Italian chief of police who resigned after being mentioned in the Montesi case, also the personal physician to Pope Pius XII, and last week the Left-wing press printed pictures of Premier Scelba attending a wedding, sitting beside Montagna, also Scelba and Montagna attending the swearing-in of the resigned police chief together.

In addition to the highly-placed Government and social connections, a carabiniere report reveals some less notable contacts of Montagna. This report charges Montagna was an informer for the Fascists, a spy for the Nazis, and an Intelligence agent for the Allies. He also is alleged to have connections with Italy's extensive dope traffic. Witnesses have testified that he "fixed" the police when the son of Italy's Foreign Minister, Piero Piccioni, became involved in the famous Montag ... (correction by speaker) Montesi case. In other words, the situation in Italy is a mess.

Though Christian Democratic leaders have declined to discuss the Montesi scandals publicly, but they know they are in trouble.-(sentence sic) In fact, in an uproarious session of the Chamber of Deputies last night the Montesi case provided a doubtful kind of cement for the Christian Democrats and the other anti-Communist Parties. Scel ... Premier Scelba's Government got a whopping 270-198-vote victory in the Chamber of Deputies on the question of whether to debate the scandals before the police and Government investigations are completed. Scelba received implied support in this vote from the monarchists who presumably abstained from the secret balloting an indication of how wide the scandals have spread.

Well, for the Italian people the stories of decadence, dope, and immorality among their Government leaders, the so-called fast aristocracy and some of the nation's top families, these revelations become political arguments now being exploited by the Communists. The contrast of unemployment, poverty, and misery is too great.

Well, the question of whether Italy is going Communist has been widely debated here and abroad and some very good reporters have pooh-poohed the idea. They point out that even in last June's election, in which the Centrist Parties received a set-back, that still some 65% of the people did not vote for the Communist Party. Well, what these arguments ignore are the dynamics of the political situation here and the factors which will govern future elections in Italy cannot be measured by what happened in the last one. This is where the Montesi scandals enter the picture. American Republicans credit the five-percenterscandals as a major factor in the recent Democratic defeat. The Montesi affair is a hundred times more shocking. Italian political reporters tell me that if an election were held in this country tomorrow the Christian Democrats would be repudiated.

Well, a few days before the Montesi court hearings were suspended Premier Scelba made the strongest statement against the Italian Communist Party that any Rome Government has dared to make since the end of the war. Scelba said he was going to attack the Communists financially, economically, and culturally. He indicated Red organizations would be thrown out of former Fascist buildings, a step that should have been taken long ago. He said the Communist Party export monopoly, wherein the Party receives a commission on every truck or pound of rice shipped behind the Iron Curtain, that this would be abolished. He hinted that there would be a crackdown on Communists now employed in the nation's extensive bureaucracy. Scelba also announced he would go ahead with planned social and economic reforms. Well, perhaps if the Scelba Government can do these things, - reform his Government's complacent attitude towards the Communists, reform his nation's economy for a more equitable distribution of the tax burden and the nation's wealth, and also show himself as a moral reformer, in the Montesi case as well, then he may be able to give Italy the kind of strong, progressive government the country needs. As of now, Premier Scelba has a few weeks, or months, between scandals in which to act.

This Bill Downs recording from Rome.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French today carried out the biggest fire-bomb air attack of the war in Indo-China. The high command says American-supplied flying box cars and Dakota transports - all piloted by Frenchmen - joined smaller planes in striking at enemy columns moving supplies and reinforcements to surrounded Dien Bien Phu.

And French military quarters in Saigon made it known today that they strongly oppose Defense Secretary Wilson's suggestion that American military men be sent to Indo-China to train the new Viet Nam Army.

The President - at his news conference today - had high praise for the French colonel conducting the defense of Dien Bien Phy said he was doing a wonderful job. Old-soldier Eisenhower, said the big question there is morale - the situation is comparable to that at Anzio in World War Two - if the French keep their morale high, they can win. And again Mr. Eisenhower said that until conditions change there will be no change of the Administration's position against admitting Communist China to the United Nations.

In Korea, President Rhee said that unless we help South Korea unify all of Korea by force - or give him an army that would need no help "if peaceful efforts fail", South Korea will not attend the Geneva conference.

The government today reported a small drop in living costs. Commerce Secretary Weeks says there are "some indications" of a slight drop in unemployment this month. And the President told reporters there is no need yet for a slamb-bang" government emergency program to combat unemployment. He said rising unemployment is admittedly dangerous but it has not reached a point where the government has to step in.

At his news conference, the President was asked about Senator McCarthy and the scheduled investigation by his committee of the McCarthy-Cohn-Army charges.

The President said: "In America, if a man is party to a dispute, directly or indirectly, he does not sit in judgement on his own case. And" said the President, "I don't believe that any leadership can escape responsibility for carrying on that tradition and practice."

The Senator later told reporters he and the President agree with each other completely. He said: "It was decided long ago that I would not vote on these matters. I'm not sitting in judgment." But the Senator insists on the right to cross-examination.

Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate Armed Services Committee today heard the armed forces tistify that in the past five years they discharged 624 men, in all the services, as "security risks in cases involving loyalty connotations." Saltonstall said the discharged men represent a mere handful of the millions who have served in the armed forces. He added: "It is plain that extraneous factors have made this problem larger than it really is." Senator McCarthy has accused the army of coddling Communists.

McCarthy today charged that Columnist Drew Pearson had violated the "espionage act" with two former government employees. Pearson says he'd be delighted to have the matter investigated by anyone who is "competent and sane."

The Christian Advocate, official Methodist church weekly, tonight urges the President to appoint a non-partisan commission to replace Congressional committees investigating Communism in government.

Today at his news conference the President said that certain types of F.B.I. files will be kept inviolate - will never be released to Congressional committees.

And when reporters asked about the recent hydrogen explosion at Bikini Mr. Eisenhower siad: the effects apparently surprised and astonished our scientists - things happened which apparently never happened before - we must take precautions in future tests.

And the Atomic Energy Commission has told Congress it is raising the production of "new type" atomic and hydrogen weapons in a drive that is cutting national defense costs.

The magazine Christian Herald reported today that a survey shows that more than four million Roman Catholics have become Protestants in this country in the last ten years. The magazine says this is nearly four times the number of conversions to Catholicism.

Israel's Premier Moshe Sharett today told his parliament that "if the United Nations is unable to control Arab aggressors, Israel is obliged to protect her own interests."

And both the Dutch and Greek governments today turned down recent Soviet protests over American bases in both countries.

We are not the only nation concerned with domestic problems. Italy has also been having troubles. And so tonight I asked my colleague Bill Downs to give us a fill-in from Rome and this is what he had to record:

DOWNS: For the past two months the people of Italy have been on a kind of scandal binge and, if Americans have been intrigued with the alleged adventures of the privileged private, then multiply the sensationalism a hundred times and you have an idea of how all Italy has been rocked by the now-notorious Montesi case. As you know, the libel hearings in the affair now have been temporarily suspended and the politicians now have a few weeks to assess the situation, but the charges of murder, narcotics, corruption, and worse have made a serious dent in the prestige and public confidence in the Christian Democratic Party, the Party which the Western Allies are depending upon to maintain freedom and democracy in this country against the growing menace of totalitarianism. The Montesi case started out being a police myster centering around the death of an unknown Roman party girl, Wilma Montesi, whose body was found on a near-by resort beach last April, but now some of the most prominent names in Italy, including that of Premier Scelba himself, have been mentioned in connection with the case and the fat is in the fire. The question now is - how is it going to be pulled from the flames and who is going to get burned? The Italian press, particularly the Communist publications, have been feeding the people a steady diet of sensationalism and, although much of the evidence presented is hearsay, there appears to be enough truth behind the stories so that the great mass of the population is shocked. The man most mentioned in the stories coming out of the trial is Ugo Montagna, a kind of Italina Henry Grunewald whose mysterious mechanizations in Washington were so intriguing a few years ago. Montagna listed as close friends the Vice Secretary of the Christian Democratic Party, also the Italian chief of police who resigned after being mentioned in the case, also the personal physician to Pope Pius XII, and last week the Left-wing press printed pictures of Premier Scelba attending a wedding, sitting beside Montagna, also Scelba and Montagna attending the swearing-in of the resigned police chief together. In addition to the highly-placed Government and social connections, a carabiniere report reveals some less notable contacts of Montagna. This report charges Montagna was an informer for the Fascists, a spy for the Nazis, and an Intelligence agent for the Allies. He also is alleged to have connections with Italy's extensive dope traffic. Witnesses have testified that he "fixed" the police when the son of Italy's Foreign Minister, Piero Piccini, became involved in the famous Montest case. In other words, the situation in Italy is a mess. Though Christian Democratic leaders have declined to discuss the Montesi scandals publicly, they know they are in trouble. In fact, in an uproarious session of the Chamber of Deputies last night the Montesi case provided a doubtful kind of cement for the Christian Democrats and the other anti-Communist Parties. Premier Scelba's Government got a whopping 270-198 vote victory in the Chamber of Deputies on the question of whether to debate the scandals before the police and Government investigations are completed. Scelba received implied support in this vote from the monarchists who presumably abstained from the secret balloting an indication of how wide the scandals have spread. Well, for the Italian people the stories of decadence, dope, and immorality among their Government leaders, the so-called fast aristocracy and some of the nation's top families, these revelations become political arguments now being exploited by the Communists. The contrast of unemployment, poverty, and misery is too great.

Well, the question of whether Italy is going Communist has been widely debated here and abroad and some very good reporters have pooh-poohed the idea. They point out that even in last June's election, in which the Centrist Parties received a set-back, that still some 65% of the people did not vote for the Communist Party. Well, what these arguments ignore are the dynamics of the political situation here and the factors which will govern future elections in Italy cannot be measured b what happened in the last one. This is where the Montesi scandals enter the picture. American Republicans credit the five-percenter scandals as a major factor in the recent Democratic defeat. The Montesi affair is a hundred times more shocking. Italian political reporters tell me that if an election were held in this country tomorrow the Christian Democrats would be repudiated. Well, a few days before the Montesi court hearings were suspended, Premier Scelba made the strongest statement against the Italian Communist Party that any Rome Government has dared to make since the end of the war. Scelba said he was going to attack the Communists financially, economically, and culturally. He indicated Red organizations would be thrown out of former Fascist buildings, a step that should have been taken long ago. He said the Communist Party export monopoly, wherein the Party receives a commission on every truck or pound of rice shipped behind the Iron Curtain, that this would be abolished. He hinted that there would be a crackdown on Communists now employed in the nation's extensive bureaucracy. Scelba also announced he would go ahead with planned social and economic reforms. Well, perhaps if the Scelba Government can do these things, - reform his Government's complacent attitude towards the Communists, reform his nation's economy for a more equitable distribution of the tax burden and the nation's wealth, and also show himself as a moral reformer, in the Montesi case as well, then he may be able to give Italy the kind of strong, progressive government the country needs. As of now, Premier Scelba has a few weeks, or months, between scandals in which to act. This is Bill Downs, recording from Rome.

MURROW: And this is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Premier Scelba has much to accomplish if he is to maintain his power. It's as Lynn Landrum once said: "Responsibility gravitates to the power that can carry out that responsibility. If you alone can do what ought to be done then that "oughtness" rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday Mar. 25, 1954

This is the news:

The East German news agency says the Soviet Union HAS declared Germany's East Zone, to be a soverign state..with full freedom to control its own domestic and foreign affairs. The announcement says, this will give the East German government the same relation to the Soviet Union, as all other soverign states. And the Red Army will stay in the zone.. and reserve such rights as are necessary to guard its security.

The State Department says the announcement is "a sheer facade"..the significant fact is that Soviet troops will remain in East Germany. Earlier, the western powers in Bonn approved amendments to the West German constiution. They authorize the German president to sign a peace contract with the west and approve the European Defense Community. But there is still French-German FRICTION which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes.

A Moscow newspaper today accused four American military attaches in Moscow of spying..while on a trip by railroad from Moscow to Siberia. Washington officials, who have not yet had any report from our embassy, say the charges are probably phoney. And for a second time, we have refused to give the Russians any details on one of their former diplomats who disappeared in Tokyo two months ago.

In Indo-China today, French transport planes dumped more than 12-thousand gallons of napalm on enemy trenches. And French infantrymen, in the Dien Bien Phu area, stopped a Communist drive aimed at cutting a vital road to the south. A former premier of Viet Nam today called for a cease-fire in the war and joined the nationalists who favor a reconciliation with the rebels.

In Egypt, Premier Naguib won a promise from the ruling Revolutionary Council to end his country's military dictatorship on July 24th. But a group of army officers calling themselves "Terrorist Free Rebels" issued a proclomation opposing the elections pledged for July.

The secretary general of the United Nations, Dag Hammershold, says he is suspending his efforts to get Isreal and Jordan to settle their border troubles at a conference table. Isreal agreed but Jordan refused to attend. An Isreali spokesman calls this "the most serious breach of the armistice agreement since it was signed."

In Washington, the Senate today refused to approve a cut in sales taxes on automobiles, radio and television sets and phonograph receivers. The votes were taken after Democratic Senator George made it known he would oppose any further cuts in the excise tax bill.

Spruille Braden, a former ambassador to Colombia, Cuba and Argentina, told a Senate committee today that the same "young Soviets" who pulled wires in the State Department in World War Two are apparently still at work today. Braden said:"Swarms of state interventionists have been injected or absorbed into agencies having to do with our foreign operations. Behind them, in the wings, developing and pushing plans, infiltrating not only our political structures but education, the press and elsewhere, exists an unidentifiable 'they." Braden added:"Among the 'they' we may expect to find the dangerous communists and traitors." He said he could give no names.

The United Press reports from Washington that a Republican senator today suggested in the presence of seven other Republican senators and four White House officials that Senator McCarthy's feud with the army could be settled with two resignations: that of McCarthy Committee Counsel Cohn and Army Counsel Adams. Democratic Senator McClellan, speaking for the three Democratic members of the Mc Carthy committee, said no resignation or dismissals could resolve the controversey. He added:"There will be no brush off, cover-up or whitewash." A source close to the White House says the Administration would have "nothing to do" with such a deal.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee said today that Representative Kearney, a New York Republican member of the committee, has fallen for "a sucker pitch aimed at diverting attention from subversion." Kearney says the committee's staff is in an intolerable condition. Velde says, in effect, this is the line of "left-wing editorialists and extremists who have found themselves on the outs with the change of Administration and who have been attempting to sow seeds of dissension" in the Republican party.

Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey has called off hearings on changes in the Taft-Hartley law until the White House makes it clear whether it favors federal or state jurisdiction in labor-management relations.

New York's Mayor Wagner today sent the President an urgent appeal to intervene in the city's 21-day old longshoremen's strike. He said the lack of decisive action by the National Labor Relations Board has "contributed greatly to the crisis." [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: March 25, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The present frustration of an agreement between France and Germany that would permit completion of the European Defense Community is a familiar experience, and on that account may be misleading. In the past, the differences have risen and then often have ebbed again. And until there is outright failure, one cannot say positively that the present crisis will not be surmounted. Where national feuds are of long standing they may have to grow worse before the situation can grow better. But it takes more than this capsule of philosophy to permit the present impasse to be viewed without disquiet. This time the chance of a change for the better is not bright. While the French today made one concession in regard to the amendments of the Bonn constitution, that is good only as far as it goes. And even an optimist cannot say it goes far.

It is now clear that the French are deliberately delaying an agreement with the Bonn Government. That, in turn, delays the debate in the French Assembly on the E.D.C. treaty. And that in turn would permit France to go to the Geneva conference in a position to bargain there - peace in Asia in return for scuttling the Defense Community.

Let it be said that this ugly possibility does not look from here to be the result of a plot by a few selfish or disloyal men. It is the result of a parliamentary deadlock. At the bottom of the trouble is the fact that the Laniel government is now fairly sure it will be overthrown if it insists on a vote on E.D.C. at this time. And if it is ousted, the government that succeeds it might carry France into even more drastic and uncooperative policies.

The United States and Britain are bringing all the pressure they can on the French. They had one minor success over the German constitution today. But it is now taken for granted in Paris that Monsieur Bidault cannot win his fight. He promised Mr. Dulles at the Berlin conference that if Mr. Dulles would sit down with the Chinese communists in a peace conference, he would do his utmost to get the E.D.C. treaty debated and accepted before that conference. Presumably Monsieur Bidault has done his utmost, though some Paris observers question it. Anyhow he has not won. As things look tonight, the debate and vote on the E.D.C. cannot be completed before the start of the Geneva conference. And it is the Laniel government that has taken the steps to make sure that they wouldn't be.

It has used certain outstanding issues to produce the delays. One is the Saar. The French are complaining that the Germans at the last moment came up with unacceptable terms. The Germans say the same thing of the French. Certain diplomats who know the details, and who usually side with the French against the Germans, this time are blaming the French. The French have made it clear that the Saar settlement has to be reached before the E.D.C. treaty is laid before the Assembly. But the terms they set for the agreement are virtually sure to be rejected by Dr. Adenauer. Moreover, opponents of E.D.C. in the French Assembly ~~of E.D.C.~~ are warning Bidault that if he doesn't get still more concessions in the Saar they will defeat the Saar accord and therewith the E.D.C.

The French have used two other conditions to delay action. One is the British pledge of close co-operation with the European Army, the other a pledge by the United States to keep its present forces in Europe. The British sent their pledge in the form of a secret undertaking that was to be made public at the psychological moment in the Assembly debate. They complain that the French leaked the agreement so that it already has lost its psychological impact. As to the American undertaking, Washington has said it cannot be announced till the date of the E.D.C. debate is set. The French say they can't set the date of the debate first.

That of itself isn't a basic difficulty. The basic difficulty is that the French are contriving delays. That was what they tried in the matter of the amendments to the German constitution. To be valid, these amendments, which permit the Bonn government to join the E.D.C. and recruit forces for a European Army, have to have the unanimous approval of the United States, British and French high commissioners in Germany. The French commissioner refused his approval, on the ground that as the amendments read, the Germans could go ahead and recruit an army before E.D.C. came into existence. Thereupon, the other commissioners, with German consent, inserted a stipulation, that the German forces were not to be recruited before E.D.C. was created. Then the French tried another tack. They insisted that the Germans ratify a set of six protocols to the E.D.C. treaty, drafted and initialed some time ago, that give France a favored position in E.D.C. It wasn't the content of the protocols that made for trouble, it was insistence on their being ~~ratified~~ agreed to before German ratification could take effect. That would mean going through all the legislative routine of committee hearings and debate, which might last perhaps six months. This is the demand the French today dropped.

The Germans suspect that the French are trying to madden them into explosive action, so they can blame their own rejection of E.D.C., on a rebirth of extreme German nationalism. All told, it is a dark and ominous situation. [And if still another capsule of philosophy is wanted, one can say it always is darkest before dawn. Only the trouble is that Franco-German relations are not, and never have been, blessed with daily sunrises.

What applies to nations also applies to individuals. And both the Germans and the French could do worse than recall something Thackeray once wrote: "To endure is greater than to dare; to tire out hostile fortune; to be daunted by no difficulty; to keep heart when all have lost it; to go through intrigue spotless; to forego even ambition when the end is gained - who can say this is not greatness."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The East German news agency says the Soviet Union has declared Germany's East Zone to be a sovereign state with full freedom to control its own domestic and foreign affairs. The announcement says this will give the East German government the same relation to the Soviet Union as all other sovereign states. And the Red Army will stay in the zone and reserve such rights as are necessary to guard its security.

The State Department says the announcement is "a sheer facade" the significant fact is that Soviet troops will remain in East Germany. Earlier, the western powers in Bonn approved amendments to the West Germany constitution they authorize the German president to sign a peace contract with the west and approve the European Defense Community. But there is still French-German friction which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes.

A Moscow newspaper today accused four American military attaches in Moscow of spying while on a trip by railroad from Moscow to Siberia. Washington officials, who have not yet had any deport from our embassy, say the charges are probably phoney. And for a second time we have refused to give the Russians any details on one of their former diplomats who disappeared in Tokyo two months ago.

In Indo-China today, French transport planes dumped more than 12-thousand gallons of napalm on enemy trenches. And French infantrymen, in the Dien Bien Phu area, stopped a Communist drive aimed at cuttinga vital road to the south. A former premier of Viet Nam today called for a cease-fire in the war and joined the nationalist who favor a reconciliation with the rebels.

In Egypt, Premier Naguib won a promise from the ruling Revolutionary Council to end his country's military dictatorship on July 24th. But a group of army officers calling themselves "Terrorist Free Rebels" issued a proclamation opposing the elections pledged for July.

The Secretary general of the United Nations, Dag Hammershold, says he is suspending his efforts to get Israel and Jordan to settle their border troubles at a conference table. Israel agreed, but Jordan refused to attend. An Israeli spokesman calls this "the most serious breach of the armistice agreement since it was signed."

In Washington, the Senate today refused to approve a cut in sales taxes on automobiles, radio and television sets and phonograph receivers. The votes were taken after Democratic Senator George made it known he would oppose any further cuts in the excise tax bill.

Spruille Braden, a former ambassador to Colombia, Cuba and Argentina, told a Senate committee today that the same "youn Soviets" who pulled wires in the State Department in World War Two are apparently still at work today. Braden said: "Swarms of state interventionists have been injected or absorbed into agencies having to do with our foreign operations. Behind them, in the wings, developing and pushing plans, infiltrating not only our political structures but education, the press and elsewhere, exists an unidentifiable 'they.'. Braden added: "Among the 'they' we may expect to find the dangerous communists and traitors." He said he could give no names.

The United Press reports from Washington that a Republican senator today suggested in the presence of seven other Republican senators and four White House officials that Senator McCarthy's feud with the army could be settled with two resignations: that of McCarthy Committee Counsel Cohn and Army Counsel Adams. Democratic McClellan, speaking for the three Democratic members of the McCarthy committee, said no resignation or dismissals could resolve the controversey. He added: "There will be no brush off, cover-up or whitewash." A source close to the White House says the Administration woudl have "nothing to do" with such a deal.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee said today that Represnetative Kearney, a New York Rpublican member of the committee, has fallen for "a sucker pitch aimed at diverting attention from subversion." Kearney says the committee's staff is an intolerable condition. Velde says, in effect, this is the line of "left-wing editorialists and extremists who have found themselves on the outs with the change of Administration and who have been attempting to sow seeds of dissension" in the Republican party.

Republican Senator Smoth of New Jersey has called off hearings on changes in the Taft-Hartley law until the White House makes it clear whether it favors federal or state jurisdiction in labor-management relations.

New York's Mayor Wagner today sent the President an urgent appeal to intervene in the city's 21-day old longshoremen's strike. He said the lack of decisive action by the National Labor Relations Board has "contributed greatly to the crisis."

The present frustration of anagreement between France and Germany that would permit completion of the European Defense Community is a familiar experience, and on that accoun may be misleading. In the past, the differences have risen and then often have ebbed again. And until there is outright failure, one cannot say positively that the present crisis will not be surmounted. Where national feuds are of long standing they may have to grow worse before the situation can grow better. But it takes more than this capsule of philosophy to permit the presnnt impasse to be viewed without disquiet. This time the chance of a change for the better is not bright. While the French today made one concession in regard to the amendments of the Bonn constitution, that is good only as far as it goes. And even an optimist cannot say it goes far. It is now clear that the French are deliberately delaying an agreement with the Bonn Government. That, in turn, delays the debate in the French Assembly on the E.D.C. treaty. And that in turn would permit France to go to the Geneva conference in a position to bargain there - peace in Asia in return for scuttling the Defense Community. Let it be said that this ugly possibility does not look from here to be the result of a plot by a few selfish or disloyal men. It is the result of a parliamentary deadlock. At the bottom of the trouble is the fact that the Laniel government is now farily sure it will be overthrown if it insists on a vote on D.C.C. at this time. And if it is ousted, the government that that succeeds it might carry France into even more drastic and uncooperative policies. The United States and Britain are bringing all the pressure they can on the French. They had one minor success over the German constitution today. But it is now taken for granted in Paris that Monsieur Bidault cannot win his fight. He promised Mr. Dulles at the Berlin conference that if Mr. Dulles would sit down with the Chinese communists in a peace conference, he would do his utmost to get the EDC treaty debated and accepted before that conference. Presumably Monsieur Bidault has done his utmost, though some Paris observers question it. Anyhow he has not won. As things look tonight, the debate and vote on the E.D.C. cannot be completed before the start of the Geneva conference. And it is the Laniel government that has taken the steps to make sure that they wouldn't be. It has used certain outstanding issues to produce the delays. One is the Saar. The French are complaining that the Germans at the last moment came up with unacceptable terms. The Germans say the same thing of the French. Certain diplomats who know the details, and who usually side with the French against the Germans, this time are blaming the French. The French have made it clear that the Saar settlement has to be reached before the E.D.C. treaty is laid before the Assembly. But the terms they set for the agreement are virtually sure to be rejected by Dr. Adenauer. Moreover, opponents of E.D.C. in the French Assembly are warning Bidault that if he doesn't get still more concessions in the Saar they will defeat the Saar accord and therewith the E.D.C. The Frenchhave used two other conditions to delay action. One is the British pledge of close cooperation with the European Army, the other a pledge by the United States to keep its present forces in Europe. The British sent their pledge in the form of a secret undertaking that was to be made public at the psychological moment in the Assembly debate. They complain that the Frenchleaked the agreement so that it already has lostits psychological impact. As to the American undertaking, Washington has said it cannot be announced until the date of the E.D.C. debate is set. The French say they can't set the date of the debate first. That of itself isn't a basic difficulty. The basic difficulty is that the French are contriving delays. That was what they tried in the matter of the amendments to the German constitution. TO be valid these amendments, which permit the Bonn government to join the E.D.C. and recruit forces for a European Army, have to have the unanimous approval of the United States, British and French high commissioners in Germany. The French commissioner refused his approval on the ground that as the amendments read, the Germans could go ahead and recurit an army before E.D.C. came into existence. Thereupon, the other commissioners, with German consent, inserted a stipulation that the German forces were not to be recruited before E.D.C. was created. Then the French tried another tack. They insisted that the Germans ratify a set of six protocols to the E.D.C. treaty drafted and initialed some time ago, that give France a favored position in E.D.C. It wasn't the content of the protocols that made for trouble, it was insistence on their being agreed to before German ratification could take effect. That would mean going through all the legislative routine of committee hearings and debate, which might last perhaps six months. This is the demand the French today dropped. The Germans suspect that the French are trying to madden them into explosive action so they can blame their own rejection of E.D.C. on a rebirth of extreme German nationalism. All told, it is a dark and ominous situation. And if still another capsule of philosophy is wanted, one can say it always is darkest before dawn. Only the trouble is that Franco-German relations are not, and never have been, blessed with daily sunrises.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What applies to nations also applies to individuals. And both the Germans and the French could do worse than recall something Thackeray once wrote: "To endure is greater than to dare; to tire out hostile fortune; to be daunted by no difficulty; to keep heart when all have lost it; to go through intrigue spotless; to forego even ambition when the end is gained - who can say this is not greatness."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday Mar 26, 1954

This is the news:

The Defense Department says we will send another 25 B-26 [redacted]-bombers to Indo China "in the near future." With the planes will go ammunition, parachutes and other supplies, to help the French beat back the enemy drive in northwest Indo-China.

The President today authorized a bigger government stockpiling program for metals and minerals. The White House says the decision is based on the assumption that, "in the event of an emergency, some supplies from domestic sources may not be available in view of the fact that the Soviets now have the capability of an attack on the United States." The program is also aimed at helping out the "distressed" mining industry [redacted] in western states.

And Mr. Eisenhower urged the Congress to tighten up the Taft-Hartley law, by giving the states broader jurisdiction over labor-management disputes.

The United States Chamber of Commerce said today, that the President's plan for limited government support of private health indurance plans, could lead to socialized medicine. Mr. Eisenhower has said he is opposed to socialized medicine. But Edwin J. Faulkner, a Nebraska insurance man, speaking for the Chamber, told a House committee the ultimate end of the President's plan "could well be socialized medicine, under a compulsory health insurance plan.. William McNary of the American Hospital Association, testified in favor of the plan.

The House appropriations committee today recommended that the President's request for 140-thousand public housing units, in the next four years, be scaled down to 35-thousand units.. The committee would end the program after two years.

And this group also voted to give the Atomic Energy Commission every penny it requested for weapons, in the fiscal year starting in July. It comes to one billion 61-million dollars. Chairman Straws says we are "increasing the variety and versatility" of atomic weapons.

The President has authorized the release of a 28-minute movie of the hydrogen blast set off in the Pacific in November of 1952.

The Army said today that Mrs. Annie Lee Moss can return to her job with the Signal Corps on Monday.. until a final decision is made on her case by a loyalty board. Mrs. Moss was suspended after a witness before the McCarthy committee said she was a Communist. Mrs. Moss denied this.

Senator Mundt, acting chairman of the McCarthy committee, said today he has been unable to find a counsel to conduct the hearings on the Army-McCarthy arguments. He says this will mean a delay in starting the hearings. And the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee says former Treasury Secretary Snyder will testify on Tuesday on the alleged Communist penetration of the federal government.

Republican Chairman Hall says the "effectiveness of Senator McCarthy has diminished in the last few weeks because of his dispute with the army. Hall says this feud has not helped anyone. He says McCarthy is still in great demand as a congressional campaign speaker. And Hall feels that "economic conditions will have a lot to do" with the outcome of this year's congressional elections. He says the Democrats are playing politics by harping on unemployment and trying to get higher income tax exemptions.

Russia today agreed to turn back to us 38 small naval vessels we loaned the Soviet Union under the lend lease program. They'll be transferred to our control in Turkey in May and June.

The State Department says that at the Geneva Conference it will seek the release of 32 Americans imprisoned in Communist China "if it appears their plight can usefully be taken up." (Representative Roosevelt says the Department is ducking the issue)

An examiner for the National Labor Relations Board recommended today that the recent collective bargaining election on the New York waterfront be thrown out. He says that the independent International Longshoremen's Union.. which apparently won the election over the A.F. of L union.. was responsible for intimidation and violence during the December voting. He wants a new election. The I.L.A. says this recommendation is the result of political pressure..."orders from Governor Dewey." The port has now been shut down for 22 days.

The official Catholic publication of the Boston archdiocese..the Pilot.. today questioned the accuracy of a survey by a Protestant publication that 4-million Catholics had (BECOME) Protestants in the past ten years. The Pilot questions the poll because it did not indicate the percentage of returns from 25-thousand persons.

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenaur says the Russian grant of "sovereignty" to East Germany is an old trick "to bring more delusion to the East Germans."

And Isreal's Ambassador AbbaEban has told Secretary of State Dulles that the Arabs are preparing "for new assaults upon Isreal's independence and intregity."

Edward R. Murrow: March 26, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The difference between a Congressional Committee investigation, and a court of law is great, so great that some people lose sight of the truth, that certain legal rights apply to both of them. In theory, the purpose of a Congressional Committee investigation is simply to inform the Congress, so that it can write legislation on a given subject. It does not conduct a trial. And that is why the rights of the committee, and the rights of those appearing before it, have not always been understood. A Congressional Committee has the power to compel testimony, and that is one of the strong compulsions in a modern state. It is this power, and its use, that now have come under nation-wide discussion. It can count as a deliberate under-statement on my part if I say that the power over witnesses of one or two Congressional Committees has not always been exercised to everyone's satisfaction. Only Congress can correct that condition. For the only power a committee has, is delegated to it by Congress. The committee "as such" has no rights of its own, neither does the chairman as such have rights of his own. They exercise rights only on behalf of Congress. That being so, the present controversy about the conduct of Congressional investigations, should be aimed at Congress first of all, and on what Congress could or should do to correct all that needs correction.

Dean Erwin N. Griswold of the Harvard Law School has made a contribution to this discussion, that will interest a wider audience than heard him speak at Mount Holyoke College a day or so ago. He advocated the adoption of a proper code of practise for legislative investigators, and he suggested a number of provisions it should contain. He pointed out, that one or two of the states are ahead of the Federal government in this respect, notably Massachusetts. In Congress, he said, a number of members have been working on the problem. "There has been leadership, and good leadership" he declared, "but it has been hard for the leaders to get an effective following. The matter is too important to be longer neglected."

First of all, Dean Griswold would eliminate the one-man sub-committee, in any proceedings involving a witness who appears involuntarily. As long as a witness testifies because he wants to, Mr. Griswold sees no objection to his doing so before any body, including a sub-committee of one. But when the witness is there under subpoena, he is there under the power of Congress, and Congress should not be represented by a single member.

He considers certain practises now current in issuing subpoenas to be highly improper. In some committees the chairman signs blank subpoenas which the committee staff then fills in with the witness's name. Mr. Griswold believes that only the committee itself, and nobody else, not even the chairman, should have the power to compel testimony.

When a witness is summoned, he continues, he should be entitled to know in advance, the subject and scope of the inquiry. Further he should have the right to counsel, and counsel should be entitled to speak on his behalf. He notes that while in many committees the right to counsel now is recognized, the counsel is restricted to giving advice to his client when called upon. Counsel who have sought to address the committee, have been ejected from the hearing room. The right to counsel, Mr. Griswold points out, should be to effective counsel.

No testimony should be taken in executive session, unless the witness is willing, Dean Griswold contends. And then the evidence should not be made available in selected portions, or summaries, or incomplete versions. Nor should the committee chairman be allowed to say that the committee has evidence about something, unless the evidence is actually produced in an open hearing.

The Harvard law dean is firmly against requiring a witness to submit to broadcasting, television and newsreel cameras. "It is high time" he says, "that we recognize and accept the fact, that legislative investigations are not part of the show business."

Mr. Griswold considers it improper, that the sole or basic purpose of a legislative investigation, should be to expose people, or develop evidence, for use in criminal prosecutions. He notes that that has been the announced purpose of hearings by certain chairmen. "I would hope that the courts when properly invoked," he says, "would decide there was no legislative power for such a purpose."

As a final ~~batch~~ ghout of recommendations, Mr. Griswold says that a summoned person should have due notice of the nature of evidence wanted from him, that he should ~~have the notice of the nature of evidence~~ be entitled to explain his answers, and that he should have an opportunity to answer charges made against him, or any evidence produced against him by other witnesses.

Dean Griswold underscored the sole responsibility of Congress for proper procedures. "Complaints against the President, or others outside Congress" he said, "are misdirected. / Congress has the power to provide proper procedures, and it should meet its clear responsibility". # He paid his respects to the many members of both Houses who, he said, "have not abused their powers and have been scrupulous in the exercise of their authority."

We were talking of the rights of the individual before Congressional Committees. Recently, I came across these lines. I don't know who wrote them, but they're appropriate:"It is not difficult to get away into retirement, and there live upon your own conviction; nor is it difficult to mix with men, and follow their convictions; but to enter into the world, and there live firmly and fearlessly, according to your own conscience - that is Christian greatness."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Defense Department says we will send another 25 B-26 bomber to Indo China "in the near future." With the planes will go ammunition, parachutes and other supplies to help the French beat back the enemy drive in northwest Indo-China.

The President today authorized a bigger government stockpiling program for metals and minerals. The White House says the decision is based on the assumption that "in the event of an emergency some supplies from domestic sources may not be available in view of the fact that the Soviets now have the capability of an attack on the United States." The program is also aimed at helping out the "distressed" mining industry in western states.

And Mr. Eisenhower urged the Congress to tighten up the Taft-Hartley law by giving the states broader jurisdiction over labor-management disputes.

The United States Chamber of Commerce said today that the President's plan for limited government support of private health insurance plans could lead to socialized medicine. Mr. Eisenhower has said he is opposed to socialized medicine. But Edwin J. Faulkner, a Nebraska insurance man speaking for the Chamber told a House committee the ultimate end of the President's plan "could well be socialized medicine under a compulsory health insurance plan. William McNary of the American Hospital Association, testified in favor of the plan.

The House appropriations committee today recommended that the President's request for 140-thousand public housing units in the next four years be scaled down to 35-thousand units. The committee would end the program after two years.

And this group also voted to give the Atomic Energy Commission every penny it requested for weapons in the fiscal year starting in July. It comes to one billion 61-million dollars. Chairman Straws says we are "increasing the variety and versatility" of atomic weapons.

The President has authorized the release of a 28-minute movie of the hydrogen blast set off in the Pacific in November of 1952.

The Army said today that Mrs. Annie Lee Moss can return to her job with the Signal Corps on Monday until a final decision is made on her case by a loyalty board. Mrs. Moss was suspended after a witness before the McCarthy committee said she was a Communist. Mrs. Moss denied this.

Senator Mundt, acting chairman of the McCarthy committee, said today he has been unable to find a counsel to conduct the hearings on the Army-McCarthy arguments. He says this will mean a delay in starting the hearings. And the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee says former Treasury Secretary Snyder will testify on Tuesday on the alleged Communist penetration of the federal government.

Republican Chairman Hall says the "effectiveness of Senator McCarthy has disminished in the last few weeks because of his dispute with the army. Hall says this feud has not helped anyone. He says McCarthy is still in great demand as a congressional campaign speaker. And Hall feels that "economic conditions will have a lot to do" with the outcome of this year's congressional elections. He says the Democrats are playing politics by harping on unemployment and trying to get higher income tax exemptions.

Russia today agreed to turn back to us 38 small naval vessels we loaned the Soviet Union under the lend lease program. They'll be transferred to our control in Turkey in May and June.

The State Department says that at the Geneva Conference it will seek the release of 32 Americans imprisoned in Communist China "if it appears their plight can usefully be taken up." Representative Roosevelt says the Department is ducking the issue.

An examiner for the National Labor Relations Board recommended today that the recent collective bargaining election on the New York waterfront be thrown out. He says that the independent International Longshoremen's Union which apparently won the election over the AFL union was responsible for intimidation and violence during the December voting. He wants a new election. The I.L.A. says this recommendation is the result of political pressure "orders from Governor Dewey." The port has now been shut down for 22 days.

The official Catholic publication of the Boston archdiocese, the Pilot, today questioned the accuracy of a survey by a Protestant publication that 4-million Catholics had become Protestants in the past ten years. The Pilot questions the poll because it did not indicate the percentage of returns from 25-thousand persons.

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenaur says the Russian grant of "sovereignty" to East Germany is an old trick "to bring more delusion to the East Germans."

And Israel's Ambassador Ebba Eban has told Secretary of State Dulles that the Arabs are preparing "for new assaults upon Israel's independence and integrity."

The difference between a Congressional Committee investigation, and a court of law is great, so great that some people lose sight of the truth, that certain legal rights apply to both of them. In theory, the purpose of a Congressional Committee investigation is simply to inform the Congress, so that it can write legislation on a given subject. It does not conduct a trial. And that is why the rights of the committee, and the rights of those appearing before it, have not always been understood. A Congressional Committee has the power to compel testimony and that is one of the strong compulsions in a modern state. It is this power, and its use, that now have come under nation-wide discussion. It can count as a deliberate under-statement on my part if I say that the power over witnesses of one or two Congressional Committees has not always been exercised to everyone's satisfaction. Only Congress can correct that condition. For the only power a committee has, is delegated to it by Congress. The committee "as such" has no rights of its own, neither does the chairman as such have rights of his own. They exercise rights only on behalf of Congress. That being so, the present controversy about the conduct of Congressional investigations, should be aimed at Congress first of all, and on what Congress could or should do to correct all that needs correction.

Dean Erwin N. Griswold of the Harvard Law School has made a contribution to this discussion, that will interest a wider audience than heard him speak at Mount Holyoke College a day or so ago. He advocated the adoption of a proper code of practice for legislative investigators, and he suggested a number of provisions it should contain. He pointed out, that one or two of the states are ahead of the Federal government in this respect, notably Massachusetts. In Congress, he said, a number of members have been working on the problem. "There has been leadership, and good leadership" he declared, "but it has been hard for the leaders to get an effective following. The matter is too important to be longer neglected."

First of all, Dean Griswold would eliminate the one-man sub-committee, in any proceedings involving a witness who appears involuntarily. As long as a witness testifies because he wants to, Mr. Griswold sees no objection to his doing so before any body, including a sub-committee of one. But when the witness is there under subpoena, he is there under the power of Congress, and Congress should not be represented by a single member. He considers certain practices now current in issuing subpoenas to be highly improper. In some committees the chairman signs blank subpoenas which the committee staff then fills in with the witness's name. Mr. Griswold believes that only the committee itself, and nobody else, not even the chairman, should have the power to compel testimony. When a witness is summoned, he continues, he should be entitled to know in advance, the subject and scope of the inquiry. Further he should have the right to counsel, and counsel should be entitled to speak on his behalf. He notes that while in many committees the right to counsel now is recognized, the counsel is restricted to giving advice to his client when called upon. Counsel who have sought to address the committee, have been ejected from the hearing room. The right to counsel, Mr. Griswold points out, should be to effective counsel.

No testimony should be taken in executive session, unless the witness is willing, Dean Griswold contends. And then the evidence should not be made available in selected portions, or summaries, or incomplete versions. Nor should the committee chairman be allowed to say that th. committee has evidence about something, unless the evidence is actually produced in an open hearing.

The Harvard law dean is firmly against requiring a witness to submit to broadcasting, television and newsreel cameras. "It is high time" he says, "that we recognize and accept the fact, the legislative investigations are not part of the show business."

Mr. Griswold considers it improper that the sole or basic purpose of a legislative investigation, should be to expose people or develop evidence, for use in criminal prosecutions. He notes that that has been the announced purpose of hearings by certain chairmen. "I would hope that the courts when properly invoked," he says, "would decide there was no legislative power for such a purpose."

As a final group of recommendations, Mr. Griswold says that a summoned person should have due notice of the nature of evidence wanted from him, that he should be entitled to explain his answers, and that he should have an opportunity to answer charges made against him, or any evidence produced against him by other witnesses.

Dean Griswold underscored the sole responsibility of Congress for proper procedures, and it should meet its clear responsibility." He paid his respects to the many members of both Houses who, he said, "have not abused their powers and have been scrupulous in the exercise of their authority."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the rights of the individual before Congressional Committees. Recently, I came across these lines. I don't know who wrote them, but they're appropriate: "It is not difficult to get away into retirement and there live upon your own conviction; nor is to difficult to mix with men and follow their convictions; but to enter into the world, and there live firmly and fearlessly according to your own conscience - that is Christian greatness."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday March 29/1954

This is the news:

We have set off another hydrogen explosion at our (TESTING) grounds in the Pacific. The atomic energy commission says it happened last Friday.. it was "successfully carried out"... "information highly important to national defense is being derived from this test series." The announcement also says that before the explosion, naval and air units searched the area visually and by radar. No shipping was discovered in the area.

This announcement came after India's Prime Minister Nehru called for a halt to such tests saying: they are dangerous and likely to bring havoc and destruction in their wake." And reports from London said Prime Minister Churchill tomorrow will answer questions on our hydrogen experiments raised by Laborite members of the House of Commons.

And in Washington, Representative Holifield who saw the effects of the March first test said a bomb of this type could destroy an area of 28-and-a-quarter miles and severly damage everything in an area of 314 square miles. Holifield called on the President to give the people a full statement on the Bikini test.

[redacted]:

The French in Indo-China have carried out a two-hour raid from their surrounded fortress at Dien Bien Phu. They killed an estimated one thousand troops..wiped out all soldiers in two villages..lost twenty of their own men and then pulled back, with their tanks and mobile artillery, to their fortress.

In the Near East, Jordan charged that an armed Isreali band invaded a border village killed nine Arabs and injured 16 in a midnight raid. Jordan has called for an emergency meeting of the mixed United Nations armistice commission to discuss the attack. Isreal has been boycotting the commission since it failed to back-up Isreal's charge that Jordan forces ambushed an Isreali bus and killed eleven passengers. In London, British Foreign Secretary Eden said he hopes the United Nations Security Council will meet soon to consider the mounting tension between Isreal and Jordan.

3

At the United Nations today the Russians cast their 58th security council veto when Andrei Vishinsky objected to a resolution demanding, again, that Egypt drop restrictions it has placed on Isreal-bound cargoes passing through the Suez Canal.

In Egypt today there was another switch in the government's plans for the future. General Naguib remains as president, premier and chairman of the revolution council but his plan to restore parliamentary government is out. Egypt's ruling military council appears to be back in the saddle and dispatches from Cairo indicate that Deputy Premier Colonel ~~Abdel Gamel~~ Nasser is the new (Boss of) ~~boss of~~ Egypt. A government spokesman says the military regime will continue because the people want it to fulfill its aims.

West Germany today signed the allied-west German peace contract and the European army pact. The next step is for the Germans to officially send the papers to the French Foreign Ministry. Holland already has done so. Belgium and Luxembourg are in the process of ratifying the agreements. France and Italy have yet to start debate.

A Senate-House conference committee today approved a compromise tax bill that would cut excise taxes by 999-million dollars..beginning Thursday. The bill, which now goes back to both houses, retains the Senate-approved five percent cut in the old 10 per cent sales tax on refrigerators, stoves and many other household appliances. It also wipes out the tax on movie admissions costing fifty cents or less. And it established a flat ten per cent sales tax on certain items that used to be taxed from eleven to 25 per cent.

The House Rules committee today refused to approve an Appropriation committee recommendation to continue the public housing program, on a skeleton basis, in the next fiscal year. Democrats say this is "a complete repudiation of the President's plan."

A spokesman for the National Farmers union says Secretary of Agriculture Benson is trying to incite "civil war" in the farmlands with his demands for lower price support levels.// Republican Senator Young of North Dakota says no one who approves flexible supports will be elected in November... And Benson says that when the government's dairy price support program shifts to a new basis on Thursday, some retail outlets will sell butter for 59 cents a pound... its now generally above 75 cents.

In Washington today an estimated [redacted] one thousand longshoremen picketed the White House in an attempt tp speed up settlement of the New York dock strike. Later, in Philadelphia, Captain Bradley, president of the independent Longshoremens Association, said the union would not call a general East Coast strike to support the New York longshoremen's walkout.

And three Republican Senators..Hendrickson of New Jersey, Langer of North Dakota and Case of South Dakota..intorudced a bill to clean up what they describe as a multi-million dollar traffic in "insidious filth" purveyed in illicit films and booklets."

Edward R. Murrow: March 29, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Shortly after this broadcast, Secretary Dulles will make a speech in New York on the subject of Indo-China. Dispatches from Washington say that the Administration is launching a campaign to tell the American public clearly and dramatically what is at stake in Indo-China. So Mr. Dulles may be both clear and dramatic. Some Americans already know what is at stake in Indo-China, but they are relatively few. And it will take a great deal of clarity and a great deal of drama to inform and convince those who don't.

This Administration has not yet talked clearly and dramatically about power, as such, in the present power struggle. In this respect its delinquency is matched by that of the preceding Administration. For some mysterious reason it isn't considered good politics to talk about power in terms of power.

An illustration of this is what happened during the Truman Administration when the British served notice on us that they could no longer be responsible for the defense of Greece and for financing the security of Turkey. If the British withdrew, a vacuum of power would remain in the Middle East which could be filled either by the United States or the Soviet Union. As the Middle East is the hub of a vast wheel of power reaching into Europe, Africa and Asia, there could be no question of allowing the Soviet Union to fill the position the British were giving up. One should imagine that any Congressman would understand the issue if it were explained to him in terms of power. Action should have followed quickly, quietly and confidently.

The Truman administration took action, but this simple problem of power was laid before Congress in the elaborate costuming of a doctrine - the Truman doctrine. It still is so called. And the doctrine was, that the United States must defend the threat to democracy in Greece and Turkey. The doctrine as such is worthy, and the aid to Greece and Turkey had to be given whether the democracy was weak or strong. It had to, to prevent the Soviet Union from winning a tremendous power victory. That was what was at stake. But what Congress voted for, after blowing off a lot of rhetoric, was aid to democracies, and not for the security of the United States. It turned out all right, our security was duly served, and in fact Greece and Turkey subsequently became a great deal more democratic. But the episode demonstrated that this country, though one of two great powers in a world of great power rivalry, still hadn't learned to think in terms of that power.

Suppose this question were asked: What has been the most outstanding defeat in terms of power since the end of the war? There may be several good answers. It may be when the Chinese Nationalists were driven from the Asian mainland. But it also may be it was the defeat suffered by the Soviet Union when it was excluded from sharing the Administration of Japan. Not that Japan now counts positively in the balance of power. But if the Soviet Union had had a foothold there, Japan would be hard to keep on our side. One reason for the importance of Korea, in terms of power, is that whoever holds Korea affects decisively the security of Japan. That is not the only reason the Truman Administration chose to stand and fight for Korea. But it was one motive. Another reason - probably a bigger one - was that the Communists were trying to seize Korea by aggression, and if they succeeded, the same kind of aggression would have to be met elsewhere. So the U.N. and all the free nations were involved.

Since the defeat of the aggression in Korea, the United States has signed a treaty to defend the Korean Republic, and so is formally committed to the defense of a piece of the Asian mainland. For us this is revolutionary, but in terms of power it is considered desirable if we are to keep Japan a member of the non-communist family. This is true regardless of our interest in our Korean friends, though that also is genuine.

Now to the main point about Indo-China: Our interest there is probably still greater than our interest in Korea. Not that Japan would be threatened at once if the Communists were to swallow Indo-China. But if all the free nations in Southeast Asia were swallowed, Japan's security also would be affected. But that is only part of the story. Indo-China is one of the richest rice-bowls in Asia, and control over it is of first-rate political value. Then Indo-China protects Thailand and Burma geographically, and also is a shield to Malaya. If the Communists absorb Indo-China they are well along to the control of all of Southeast Asia. They also would menace Indonesia and the Philippines, and our main line of Pacific defense. And if no free countries remain east of India, on the Asian mainland, what remains free in all of Asia may be doomed.

Outright military victory - a total victory - in Indo-China may be out of the question. But it still should be possible to save the region from falling to the Communists. Even if France is too confused politically to contribute further, the other free nations should realize what is at stake. It may take collective action, perhaps U.N. action. But if crucial power interests are consulted, talk of an armistice should wait, at almost any cost, until the certainty is demonstrated that the region can be saved from Communism. Not till then would it be safe to negotiate. #

It may well be that before the problems of Indo-China are finally resolved, the free nations of the world will be compelled to take collective action. But as Emerson and Lord Byron once pointed out: "We are taught by great actions that the universe is the property of every individual in it...and it sometimes is better to sink beneath the shock than moulder piecemeal on the rock."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

We have set off another hydrogen explosion at our testing grounds in the Pacific. The atomic energy commission says it happened last Friday - it was "successfully carried out" "information highly important to national defense is being derived from this test series." The announcement also says that before the explosion, naval and air units searched the area visually and by radar. No shipping was discovered in the area.

This announcement came after India's Prime Minister Nehru called for a halt to such tests saying: they are dangerous and likely to bring havoc and destruction in their wake." And reports from London said Prime Minister Churchill tomorrow will answer questions on our hydrogen experiments raised by Laborite members of the House of Commons.

And in Washington, Representative Holifield who saw the effects of the March first test said a bomb of this type could destroy an area of 28 and a quarter miles and severly damage everything in an area of 314 square miles. Holifield called on the President to give the people a full statement on the Bikini test.

The French in Indo-China have carried out a two hour raid from their surrounded fortress at Dien Bien Phu. They killed an estimated one thousand troops - wiped out all soldiers in two villages - lost twenty of their own men and then pulled back, with their tanks and mobile artillery, to their fortress.

In the Near East, Jordan charges that an armed Israeli band invaded a border village killed nine Arabs and injured 16 in a midnight raid. Jordan has called for an emergency meeting of the mixed United Nations armistice commission to discuss the attack. Israel has been boycotting the commission since it failed to back up Israel's charge that Jordan forces ambushed an Israeli bus and killed eleven passengers. In London, British Foreign Secretary Eden said he hopes the United Nations Security Council will meet soon to consider the mounting tension between Israel and Jordan.

At the United Nations today the Russians cast their 58th security council veto when Andrei Vishinsky objected to a resolution demanding, again, that Egypt drop restrictions it has placed on Israel-bound cargoes passing through the Suez Canal.

In Egypt today there was another switch in the government's plans for the future. General Naguib remains as president, premier and chairman of the revolution council but his plan to restore parliamentary government is out. Egypt's ruling military council appears to be back in the saddle and dispatches from Cairo indicate that Deputy Premier Colonel Nasser is the new boss of Egypt. A government spokesman says the military regime will continue because the people want it to fulfill its aims.

West Germany today signed the allied-west German peace contract and the European army pact. The next step is for the Germans to officially send the papers to the French Foreign Ministry. Holland already has done so. Belgium and Luxembourg are in the process of ratifying the agreements. France and Italy have yet to start debate.

A Senate-House conference committee today approved a compromise tax bill that would cut excise taxes by 999-million dollars beginning Thursday. The bill, which now goes back to both houses, retains the Senate-approved five percent cut in the old 10 percent sales tax on refrigerators, stoves and many other household appliances. It also wipes out the tax on movie admissions costing fifty cents or less. And it established a flat ten percent sales tax on certain items that used to be taxed from eleven to 25 percent.

The House Rules committee today refused to approve an Appropriation committee recommendation to continue the public housing program, on a skeleton basis, in the next fiscal year. Democrats say this is "a complete repudiation of the President's plan."

A spokesman for the National Farmers union says Secretary of Agriculture Benson is trying to incite "civil war" in the farmlands with his demands for lower price support levels. Republican Senator Young of North Dakota says no one who approves flexible supports will be elected in November. And Benson says that when the government's dairy price support program shifts to a new basis on Thursday, some retail outlets will sell butter for 59 cents a pound - its now generally above 75 cents.

In Washington today an estimated one thousand longshoremen picketed the White House in an attempt to speed up settlement of the New York dock strike. Later, in Philadelphia, Captain Bradley, president of the independent Longshoremens Association, said the union would not call a general East Coast strike to support the New York longshoremen's walkout.

And three Republican Senators, Hendrickson of New Jersey, Langer of North Dakota and Case of South Dakota, introduced a bill to clean up what they describe as a multi-million dollar traffic in "insidious filth" purveyed in illicit films and booklets."

Shortley after this broadcast, Secretary Dulles will make a speech in New York on the subject of Indo-China. Dispatches from Washington say that the Administration is launching a campaign to tell the American public clearly and dramatically what is at stake in Indo-China. So Mr. Dulles may be both clear and dramatic. Some Americans already know what is at stake in Indo-China, but they are relatively few. And it will take a great deal of clarity and a great deal of drama to inform and convince those who don't.

This Administration has not yet talked clearly and dramatically about power, as such, in the present power struggle. In this respect its delinquency is matched by that of the preceding Administration. For some mysterious reason it isn't considered good politics to talk about power in terms of power.

An illustration of this is what happened during the Truman Administration when the British served notice on us that they could no longer be responsible for the defense of Greece and for financing the security of Turkey. If the British withdrew, a vacuum of power would remain in the Middle East which could be filled either by the United States or the Soviet Union. As the Middle East is the hub of a vast wheel of power reaching into Europe, Africa and Asia, there could be no question of allowing the Soviet Union to fill the position the British were giving up. One should imagine that any Congressman would understand the issue if it were explained to him in terms of power. Action should have followed quickly, quietly and confidently.

The Truman administration took action, but this simple problem of power was laid before Congress in the elaborate costuming of a doctrine - the Truman doctrine. It still is so called. And the doctrine was, that the United States must defend the threat to democracy in Greece and Turkey. The doctrine as such is worthy, and the aid to Greece and Turkey had to be given whether the democracy was weak or strong. It had to, to prevent the Soviet Union from winning a tremendous power victory. That was what was at stake. But what Congress voted for, after blowing off a lot of rhetoric, was aid to democracies, and not for the security of the United States. It turned out all right, our security was duly served, and in fact Greece and Turkey subsequently became a great deal more democratic. But the episode demonstrated that this country, though one of two great powers in a world of great power rivalry, still hadn't learned to think in terms of that power. Suppose this question were asked: What has been the most outstanding defeat in terms of power since the end of the war? There may be several good answers. It may be when the Chinese Nationalists were driven from the Asian mainland. But it also may be it was the defeat suffered by the Soviet Union when it was excluded from sharing the Administration of Japan. Not that Japan now counts positively in the balance of power. But if the Soviet Union had had a foothold there, Japan would be hard to keep on our side. One reason for the importance of Korea, in terms of power, is that whoever holds Korea affects decisively the security of Japan. That is not the only reason the Truman Administration chose to stand and fight for Korea. But it was one motive. Another reason - probably a bigger one - was that the Communists were trying to seize Korea by aggression, and if they succeeded, the same kind of aggression would have to be met elsewhere. So the U.N. and all the free nations were involved. Since the defeat of the aggression in Korea, the United States has signed a treaty to defend the Korean Republic, and so is formally committed to the defense of a piece of the Asian mainland. For us this is revolutionary, but in terms of power it is considered desirable if we are to keep Japan a member of the non-communist family. This is true regardless of our interest in our Korean friends, though that also is genuine.

Now to the main point about Indo-China: Our interest there is probably still greater than our interest in Korea. Not that Japan would be threatened at once if the Communists were to swallow Indo-China. But if all the free nations in Southeast Asia were swallowed, Japan's security also would be affected. But that is only part of the story. Indo-China is one of the richest rice-bowls in Asia, and control over it is of first rate political value. Then Indo-China protects Thailand and Burma geographically, and also is a shield to Malaya. If the Communist absorb Indo-China they are well along to the control of all of Southeast Asia. They also would menace Indonesia and the Philippines, and our main line of Pacific defense. And if no free countries remain east of India, on the Asian mainland, what remains free in all of Asiamay be doomed. Outright military victory - a total victory - in Indo-China may be out of the question. But it still should be possible to save the region from falling to the Communists. Even if France is too confused politicall to contribute further, the other free nations should realize what is at stake. It may take collective action, perhaps U.N. action. But if crucial power interests are consulted, talk of an armistice should wait, at almost any cost, until the certainty is demonstrated that the region can be saved from Communism. Not till then would it be safe to negotiate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It may well be that before the problems of Indo-China are finally resolved, the free nations of the world will be compelled to take collective action. But as Emerson and Lord Byron once pointed out : "We are taught by great actions that the universe is the property of every individual in it - and it sometimes is better to sink beneath the shock than moulder piecemeal on the rock."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday March 30, 1954

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Wilson told reporters today: the results of our hydrogen bomb explosions, are almost unbelivable. He says the relative power of the H-bomb to the atomic bomb is the same as the ratio between the A-bomb and conventional t.n.t. explosions. Wilson was asked if the people might be told more about the tests. He said:"I don't think you should scare everybody, so they can't sleep nights."

Chairman Straws of the atomic energy commission, says he sees no reason for concern over the unexpected fury of the March first test.

And Representative Holfield, who recently returned from Bikini, says "the danger of destroying civilization has become real."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill rejected Laborite demands that he try to persuade us to halt further tests. He said that on the basis of British scientific knowledge, there is no foundation for fears that the American explosions might get out of control. And again he said our possession of the H-Bomb is the greatest possible deterrent against the outbreak of World War Three.

A British Foreign Office spokesman said today, that Britain and the United States will undoubtedly talk over Secretary of State Dulles' call for united action against the Communist threat in Asia. Last night Mr. Dulles warned of the grave danger to the free world if Indo-china and other southeast Asia nations fall under communist control. He called for "united action"..but did not explain what he meant by this. A French foreign office spokesman says this is "affirmation of the determination in Washington to prevent positions of first importance in southeast Asia falling under communist domination.

In Washington today the President asked Congress for power to cut tariffs 15 per cent to strengthen the economy of the nation and the free world. And the United States, Great Britain and France have agreed to expand trade with Russia "compatible with security requirements." The three governments would continue present controls on trade with Red China and North Korea. (I should like to discuss these trade developments in a few minutes.)

Congress today passed and sent to the White House a bill to reduce excise taxes by 999-million dollars a year ..beginning Thursday. And the White House says the president probably will sign the bill tomorrow.

Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri says the Administration's "new look" defense policy means a two year delay in building up our air force power to maximum strength. He called it a foot-dragging program, that will mean a two year delay in the air force buildup. Symington called the military budgets "incredible" and called on the Administration to tell the people "all the truth" about relative American and Soviet strength. But Senator ~~Hamgnm~~ Ferguson says Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, has convinced him, that the nation's defense preparations are "adequate and sound."

~~for power to maximum strength.~~

At the United Nations today, Preston Hotchkis, an American delegate, said that "to admit Communist China, which believes in the use of war as an instrument of national policy, would " defeat the whole purpose of the U.N.

In Indo-China, French warplanes again attacked enemy positions around Dien Bien Phu. The action between ground forces was comparatively quiet.

In Jerusalem, the United Nations armistice commission condemned Isreal for an attack on a Jordan village, in which nine Arabs were killed. The commission, composed of Jordan and the commission's American chairman, called on Isreal to seize and punish those responsible.

Thousands of Egyptian students in Cairo today, demonstrated against the revolutionary council's decision to continue its military rule of Egypt.

In East Germany, Deputy Premier Ulbricht demanded that the western powers get their military missions out o east Germany.

In Washington, Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate armed services committee, has introduced legislation to force all present and future veterans to sign loyalty oaths, or forfeit most veterans' benefits. He said he wants to make sure that "we are not paying pensions to communists."

Here in New York, the state today asked the National Labor Relations Board, to disqualify the independent International Longshoremen's Association as a bonafide labor union. The state is also supporting an American Federation of Labor request, to set aside last December's bargaining election on the New York waterfront..and hold a new election.

~~And Acting chairman Kundt of the McCarthy committee~~

Edward R. Murrow: March 30, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

It pays, when possible, to relate what happens in a given week, to larger trends and deeper motives. With the President's message to Congress on trade policy today, and with Mr. Stassen's activities abroad, in connection with East-West trade, this could rightly be called "World Trade Week." But even a big name like that, doesn't set down the full significance of what is happening. It would, if there were any prospect of creating a single world market. But that is not to be, not now. The world is too deeply divided into two parts, and the purpose of one part, continues to be to destroy the other.

In his famous revision of Soviet policy in October 1952, Stalin taught the inevitability of war, and the necessity to destroy what he called imperialism. He did this, though he laid down the campaign for peace, and the prevention of another world war as the ostensible aim of Soviet policy. "With all these successes of the movement for peace" he wrote, "imperialism will continue to remain in force, consequently there will remain in force, the inevitability of wars. In order to destroy the inevitability of wars, it is necessary to destroy imperialism." Previously he had identified the United States, Britain and France as the imperialist countries.

To recall still more of what Stalin wrote, he did not forecast the destruction of imperialism by a great war between the Soviet Union and the United States. The sensation of his analysis, was that it played down an early solution of this kind, and in its place, put the rise of discord between the United States and its Allies, ending in wars between the capitalist countries. Britain and France would try to wrench themselves free from the American grasp, and later Germany and Japan would do the same. The Soviet role, as he saw it, would be to try to prevent war, postpone it, seek to replace a warlike government, with a peaceful one. And this, he said, would be very good. But it wouldn't be enough. War was inevitable, for to end its inevitability, imperialism would have to be destroyed.

It may seem a far cry from World Trade Week, to this half-forgotten analysis of Stalin's. But the connection is not far-fetched. The half-forgotten analysis is not forgotten in the Kremlin. It is the very heart of Soviet policy. The Soviet Union has been throwing out glittering promises of trade to the West. What it wants, of course, is to eliminate the boycott on strategic goods. Soviet industry is under a great strain trying to supply itself, China and other countries of the Soviet family, with capital goods. It can't do it, and take care of its clamoring consumers at the same time. So it is bidding for consumer goods from the West, as a starter on getting rid of the boycott.

This promise of trade, interests Britain and Germany in particular, and France only less so, though France is still more interested in Soviet help, in getting an armistice in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles last night put the quietus on an early armistice. And Mr. Stassen, while not opposed to greater East-West trade, is doing his best to keep it in governable channels.

The connection between East-West trade, and the Eisenhower trade policy, as laid before Congress today, is close. For if the United States is to discourage its allies from trading freely with the Soviet bloc, it must provide some other market, in which they can expand and promote their prosperity. The only market over which this country disposes is its own.

Mr. Eisenhower is urging Congress to adopt the recommendations of the Randall Commission, which are to renew the reciprocal trade act for three years, empower the President to reduce certain tariffs for three years, and reform customs procedures. The President appointed the Randall commission, and now supports its recommendations. He has done this much ~~at least~~. It is not his fault, that the Randall report represents a compromise, and does not go far enough to suit those economists who want trade barriers reduced still further. As it stands, it is the least that can be adopted to prevent serious discord with our allies. Observers in Washington report that the President must assert leadership as never before to get this much.

If the Republicans balk at the Randall recommendations and the half-way liberal trade policy is defeated, discord with the allies will be assured. Then the Allies can be expected to insist on trading with the Soviet bloc, in any goods they please. And then the first phase of Soviet policy will be fulfilled. Our friends will be trying to wrench themselves free from our economic grip. And the Soviet Union can behave as Stalin directed, it can talk of peace, while watching the capitalist world tear itself apart for the Soviet benefit.

Disunity among the Allies has grown since the end of the Korean war. The great coalition now will feel the pressure of the Indo-China crisis. But nothing creates discord so effectively as economic differences. Our promise has been trade not aid, and we are cutting down the aid. If we do not increase the trade the Kremlin alone will reap the benefit. The Communists in 1952 spelled out - in greater detail than Hitler did in "Mein Kampf" - just how they plan to destroy the coalition of free nations.

All the forces that are creating disunity can be controlled. What it takes is intelligence and a deep appreciation of self-interest. And for our part in it, the control starts in Congress.

The foreign policies of any nation are determined to a considerable degree by the amount of self-interest involved. Mark Twain once remarked:"Do I seem to be seeking the good of the world ? That is the idea. It is my public attitude; privately I am merely seeking my own profit. We all do it, but it is sound and it is virtuous, for no public interest is anything other or nobler than a massed accumulation of private interests."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Wilson told reporters today: the results of our hydrogen bomb explosions are almost unbelievable. He says the relative power of the H-bomb to the atomic bomb is the same as the ratio between the A-bomb and conventional t.n.t. explosions. Wilson was asked if the people might be told more about the tests. He said: "I don't think you should scare everybody so that they can't sleep nights."

Chairman Straws of the atomic energy commission says he sees no reason for concern over the unexpected fury of the March first test.

And Representative Holifield who recently returned from Bikini says "the danger of destroying civilization has become real."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill rejected Laborite demands that he try to persuade us to halt further tests. He said that on the basis of British scientifi knowledge there is no foundation for fears that the American explosions might get out of control. And again he said our possession of the H-bomb is the greatest possible deterrent against the outbreak of World War Three.

A British Foreign Office spokesman said today that Britain and the United States will undoubtedly talk over Secretary of State Dulles' call for united action against the Communist threat in Asia. Last night Mr. Dulles warned of the grave danger to the free world if Indo-China and other southeast Asia nations fall under communist control. He called for "united action" but did not explain what he meant by this. A French foreign office spokesman says this is "affirmation of the determination in Washington to prevent positions of first importance in southeast Asia falling under Communist domination.

In Washington today the President asked Congress for power to cut tariffs 15 percent to strengthen the economy of the nation and the free world. And the United States, Great Britain and France have agreed to expand trade with Russia

"compatible with security requirements." The three governments would continue present controls on trade with Red China and North Korea. I should like to discuss these trade developments in a few minutes.

Congress today passed and sent to the White House a bill to reduce excise taxes by 999-million dollars a year - beginning Thursday. And the White House says the president probably will sign the bill tomorrow.

Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri says the Administration's "new look" defense policy means a two year delay in building up our air force power to maximum strength. He called it a foot-dragging program that will mean a two year delay in the air force buildup. Symington called the military budgets "incredible" and called on the Administration to tell the people "all the truth" about relative American and Soviet strength. But Senator Ferguson says Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, has convinced him that the nation's defense preparations are "adequate and sound."

At the United Nations today, Preston Hotchkis, an American delegate, said that "to admit Communist China, which believes in the use of war as an instrument of national policy, would "defeat the whole purpose of the U.N.

In Indo-China, French warplanes again attacked enemy positions around Dien Bien Phu. The action between ground forces was comparatively quiet.

In Jerusalem, the United Nations armistice commission condemned Israel for an attack on a Jordan village in which nine Arabs were killed. The commission, composed of Jordan and the commission's American chairman, called on Israel to seize and punish those responsible.

Thousands of Egyptian students in Cairo today demonstrated against the revolutionary council's decision to continue its military rule of Egypt.

In East Germany, Deputy Premier Ulbricht demanded that the western powers get their military missions out of east Germany.

In Washington, Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate armed services committee has introduced legislation to force all present and future veterans to sign loyalty oaths or forfeit most veterans' benefits. He said he wants to make sure that "we are not paying pensions to communists."

Here in New York, the state today asked the National Labor Relations Board to disqualify the independent International Longshoremen's Association as a bonafide labor union. The state is also supporting an American Federation of Labor request to set aside last December's bargaining election on the New York and hold a new election.

It pays, when possible, to relate what happens in a given week, to larger trends and deeper motives. With the President's message to Congress on trade policy today, and with Mr. Stassen's activities abroad, in connection with East-West trade, this could rightly be called "World Trade Week." But even a big name like that, doesn't set down the full significance of what is happening. It would, if there were any prospect of creating a single world market. But that is not to be, now now. The world is too deeply divided into two parts, and the purpose of one part, continues to be to destroy the other. In his famous revision of Soviet policy in October 1952, Stalin taught the inevitability of war, and the necessity to destroy what he called imperialism. He did this, though he laid down the dampaign for peace, and the prevention of another world war as the ostensible aim of Soviet policy. "With all these successes of the movement for peace" he wrote, "imperialism will continue to remain in force, consequently there will remain in force, the inevitability of wars. In order to destroy the inevitability of wars, it is necessary to destroy imperialism." Previously he had identified the United States, Britain and France as the imperialist countries. To recall still more of what Stalin wrote, he did not forecast the destruction of imperialims by a great war between the Soviet Union and the United States. The sensation of his analysis, was that it played down an early solution of this kind, and in its place put the rise of discord between the United States and its Allies, ending in wars between the capitalist countries. Britain and France would try to wrench themselves free from the American grasp, and later Germany and Japan would do the same. The Soviet role, as he saw it, would be to try to prevent war, postpone it, seek to replace a warlike government with a peaceful one. And this, he said, would be very good. But it wouldn't be enough. War was inevitable, for to end its inevitability, imperialism would have to be destroyed. It may seem a far cry from World Trade Week to this half-forgotten analysis of Stalin's. But the connection is not far-fetched. The half-forgotten analysis is not forgotten in the Kremlin. It is the very heart of Soviet policy. The Soviet Union has been throwing out glittering promises of trade to the West. What it wants, of course, is to eliminate the boycott on strategic goods. Soviet industry is under a great strain trying to supply itself, China and other countries of the Soviet family with capital goods. It can't do it, and take care of its clamoring consumers at the same time. So it is bidding for consumer goods from the West, as a starter on getting rid of the boycott. This promise of trade interests Britain and Germany in particular, and France only less so, though France is still more interested in Soviet help in getting an armistice in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles last night put the quietus on an early armistice. And Mr. Stassen, while not opposed to greater East-West trade, is doing his best to keep it in governable channels. The connection between East-West trade and the Eisenhower trade policy, as laid before Congress today is close. For if the United States is to discourage its allies from trading freely with the Soviet bloc, it must provide some other market in which they can expand and promote their prosperity. The only market over which this country disposes is its own. Mr. Eisenhower is urging Congress to adopt the recommendations of the Randall Commission, which are to renew the reciprocal trade act for three years, empower the President to reduce certain tariffs for three years, and reform customs procedures. The President appointed the Randall commission, and now supports its recommendations. He has done this much. It is not his fault that the Randall report represents a compromise, and does not go far enough to suit those economists who want trade barriers reduced still further. As it stands, it is the least that can be adopted to prevent serious discord with our allies. Observers in Washington report that the President must assert leadership as never before to get this much.

If the Republicans balk at the Randall recommendations and the half-way liberal trade policy is defeated, discord with the allies will be assured. Then the Allies can be expected to insist on trading with the Soviet bloc, in any goods they please. And then the first phase of Soviet policy will be fulfilled. Our friends will be trying to wrench themselves free from our economic grip. And the Soviet Union can behave as Stalin directed, it can talk of peace, while watching the capitalist world tear itself apart for the Soviet benefit.

Disunity among the Allies has grown since the end of the Korean war. The great coalition now will feel the pressure of the Indo-China crisis. But nothing creates discord so effectively as economic differences. Our promise has been trade not aid, and we are cutting down the aid. If we do not increase the trade the Kremlin alone will reap the benefit. The Communists in 1952 spelled out - in greater detail than Hitler did in "Mein Kampf" - just how they plan to destroy the coalition of free nations. All the forces that are creating disunity can be controlled. What it takes is intelligence and a deep appreciation of self-interest. And for our part in it, the control starts in Congress.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The foreign policies of any nation are determined to a considerable degree by the amount of self-interest involved. Mark Twain once remarked: "Do I seem to be seeking the good of the world? That is the idea. It is my public attitude; privately I am merely seeking my own profit. We all do it, but it is sound and it is virtuous, for no public interest is anything other or nobler than a massed accumulation of private interests."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, March 31, 195

This is the news:

We can now build a hydrogen bomb, powerful enough to put any city in the world out of commission./ Chairman Straws of the atomic energy commission told reporters today: The bomb could be made as large as military requirements demand./ Such a bomb could "take out".. a city the size of metropolitan New York..that's an area of three thousand five hundred and fifty square miles./ Straws spoke at the President's news conference. And as Mr. Eisenhower stared at the floor, and shook his head, the Atomic Energy commissioner told reporters: the recent Hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific were stupendous.. in the "megaton range"..meaning power equal to more than a million tons of t.n.t.(Some unofficial sources estimate the power of the hydrogen bomb is 12 to 14 megatons.) Straws says the March first test at Bikini "was about double the calculated estimate". He said this was a margin of error "not incompatible with a totally new weapon.", ~~He believes the Russians started work on an H bomb before we did.~~ And he denies published reports, that the explosion was out of control... that it destroyed an entire island or atoll (actually it destroyed a sandspit or reef, especially created for the test.) Chairman Straws also said there was not any widespread contamination of tuna or other fish, as the result of the explosion..the Japanese fisherman who were AFFECTED [redacted] were in a danger zone..our best checking had not been able to spot them./Straws denies that there is any danger of a "fallout" of [redacted] radioactive materials over the United States. He says we have now made such progress that soon we will be "more free to increase our impetus on the peaceful uses of atomic power."/We have moved much nearer to the "satisfaction of military requirements."

The Japanese today formally asked us not to conduct any new atomic or hydrogen tests in the Pacific from November through March..the best fishing season./And in London, Prime Minister Churchill, yielding to pressure from some Laborites, scheduled a debate on the hydrogen bomb for Monday. In a few minutes we'll hear a report on what Europe's reaction has been to these developments.

The President said at his news conference today that he completely supports Secretary of State Dulles' call for united action [redacted] against a possible Communist conquest of Indo-China and Southeast Asia. The president says we must be ready to meet any kind of attack.. that's the kind of united action we are seeking. When a reporter asked if this means possible use of American troops in Indo-China, the President said:

He can conceive of no greater disadvantage to the United States than to employ our [redacted] ground forces all around the world...we are trying to make our allies strong enough to take care of local situations themselves..each case must be acted upon individually...there can be no general answer..[redacted] we will do what our best interests dictate.

In Indo-China today, the French are holding fast to their Dien Bien Phu fortress, which is under heavy Communist attack. The French say they've killed more than 13-hundred enemy troops. But they acknowledge that they are outnumbered four to one.[redacted] This showdown struggle..biggest of the Indo-Chinese war.. is now in its second night. And as one French officer at headquarters put it:"One side or the other won't come out of this."

At his news conference today, the President said he is still all out for the European Defense Community. And the Russians today gave the western powers a note OFFERING [redacted] to join NATO..the North Atlantic Treaty Organization..if [redacted] the United States joins Moscow's planned European security system. As part of the deal the Russians would have us junk the European Defense Community and its proposed German troops. The State Department calls this a sly manuver to try to undermine the security of the WEST [redacted]. NATO was formed to protect Western Europe against Communist aggression.

British Foreign Secretary Eden today told the House of Commons that if Jordan should become engaged in war with Isreal, Britain must "immediately come to the aid of Jordan". And the President Eisenhower said that both sides should restrain their extremists and use judgment to ease their difficulties. Jordan has asked the United Nations for "drastic and immediate action" to prevent Isreal from making any more attacks on Jordan villages. And Isreal charges Jordan with new border violations.

Here in Washington, the President has signed the new tax bill...it calls for 999-million dollars in cuts in excise taxes and goes into effect ~~tonight~~ tomorrow. The President says the reductions are bigger than he wanted. He hopes this will not damage, too much, his efforts to balance the budget.

Mr. Eisenhower also says that the government is prepared to intervene in New York's 27-day-old dock strike..if necessary. Preliminary steps are being taken for quick action should that become advisable. Today, leaders of the striking independent dock workers rejected a wage offer by shippers. And the American Federation of Labor charges that the New York Shipping Association is acting in collusion with the strikers.

The Senate Labor committee today approved all but one of the President's proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley law. It took no action on the recommendation that secret ballots be required before unions may call strikes. The Democrats say they were not allowed to offer any of their own amendments. ~~The most controversial feature of the new bill is that which says that federal law does not interfere with state laws covering labor disputes that create a "clear and present danger"...to the health or safety of the residents of a state. Democratic Senator Lehman says this gives governors the power to break any strikes.~~

The House Judiciary committee has approved a bill legalizing wire-tapping, and the use of wire-tapped evidence in federal courts...in the prosecution of spies and saboteurs. The bill gives the Attorney General sole authority to authorize wiretapping by the F.B.I., and military intelligence agents.

In Buffalo, ten elementary school children were killed, and 24 pupils and teachers injured, when a flash fire destroyed a frame school building.

The American people are not alone in trying to evaluate the future implications of our recent hydrogen bomb tests. The people of Europe are equally concerned. Today I asked Howard K. Smith, the chief of our European staff, to record for us some of his impressions. And from London, this is what he has to say:

(runs 5 minutes.. return cue:
This is HS recording from London)

And this is Ed Murrow ~~reporting from NY.~~ I'll be back etc

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 31, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The American people are not alone in trying to evaluate the future implications of our recent hydrogen bomb tests. The people of Europe are equally concerned. Today I asked Howard K. Smith, the chief of our European staff, to record for us some his impressions and from London, this is what he has to say:

SMITH: People in Europe are too practised in the art of crisis to take alarm very easily. In fact, they have a tendency, subconscious in most cases, to look down on Americans forallegedly being given to hysteria. It has therefore puzzled some American observers here how deeply alarmed people in Europe have become, in the past week, over the hydrogen bomb explosions in the Pacific, which apparently have caused nothing like the same stir in the United States.

The "London Times," perhaps the soberest and least hysterical newspaper in the world, has joined Left-Wing Laborites in calling for a top-level world conference between Churchill, Eisenhower and Malenkov to try to control the new weapon. Britain's chief cancer research expert, Dr. Alexander Hadow?, has - like the tabloid newspapers here - proposed the immediate outlawing of all further nuclear explosions even for experimental purposes. Over one hundred members of Parliament have put their names to a motion before the House of Commons, calling for Churchill to intercede with the United States against continuing the explosions. Churchill, yesterday, in a heated session, refused to take such action, but he made it clear that he refused not because he disagreed with his critics on substance, he simply thought it would be unwise political tactics to intervene in American affairs. His choked voice, his flushed face, the tears that welled in his eyes as he talked about this matterin the House yesterday, left no doubt that he was even more concerned than his opponents were about it. The Laborites are pressing their motion anyhow. And this morning a conservative newspaper, "The London Daily Sketch", has taken the unusual step of sidding with them against Churchill. In an editorial the newspaper said: "Many sincere friends of Sir Winston, we among them, will find it impossible to support him in his decision not to intercede with America." In somewhat less degree most of the other peoples in Europe seem to share this concern. But as frequently happens in moments of crisis, they tend tacitly to accept Britain, in particular Churchill, as a spokesman for all.

For example the Paris newspaper "Compa?", this morning accusesthe Prime Minister of letting France down. It wrote: "All those of us - and that means a large majority - who hoped that Churchill would yesterday bring comfort to an anguished world, have experienced grave disappointment." Another Paris paper reprints a London editorial cartoon showing a baby labelled: The present little level of humanity tossing a hydrogen bomb in the air and babbling "Don't worry, I know what I'm doing, I think."

The cause of this deep concern, in a degree that is apparently not shared in America, appears to be a combination of things. To begin with - there'sthe frightening impression that the bomb has got out of control of the scientists and this impression persists despiteall denials. President Eisenhower gave this impression at his news conference last week when he said "things had happened that had not been expected by the scientists." Statements made at the President's news conference today will,when they become generally known here, possibly have an allaying effect on this.

There's been other alarming statements, like Defense Secretary Charles Wilson's statement yesterday that the effects of the latest explosion were "unbelievable." Mr. Strauss toning down that remark today will no doubt help.

Alongwith these frightening teasers have come, in the past week, no information. That is forbidden by U.S. law. Ourallies are thus suffering from the fear that comes from the unknown which is said to be the worst kind of fearthere can be.

There're two aspects of this matter that make it ratherworse for Europeans than it would be for Americans. In the first place, there's the frustrating feeling here that they, the Europeans, have no control or influence whatever over the new weapon while Americans through their elective representatives do have. Yet, people here feel that they are the most likely and the most vulnerable victims if H-bomb warfare should ever happen. They're all nearer to a potential enemy. Many of them have airbases for U.S. atom bombers, which an enemy would want to wipe out at the very beginning of a conflict. It is probably considerations of this order that have made for that much greater degree of concern herethan there is in the United States.

I asked a member of Parliament here this morning what he thought should be done. He answered "Either lay off the alarming statements or else provide us with information to remove ignorance and fear. Certainly," he said, "few scenes could be more pitiful than thescene here yesterday in Parliament, America's leading friend, Sir Winston Churchill, striving to withstand a barrage of criticism of the U.S. but with no fix information to use in defense." This is Howard K. Smith recording in London.

MURROW: ...

(30)

No one can measure the fear and concern created by the figures regarding the destructive capabilities of the Hydrogen bomb...(Humans appreach the point where they can destroy humanity.). ~~xxxxxx~~ James Hall once said...The thing that numbs the heart is this,that men cannot devise some scheme of life,to banish the fear that lurks in most mens eyes...."and someone else said..."We must expect everything,and fear everything, from time,and from men.!!

good night and good luck...

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

We can now build a hydrogen bomb powerful enough to put any city in the world out of commission. Chairman Straws of the atomic energy commission told reporters today: the bomb could be made as large as military requirements demand. Such a bomb could "take out" a city the size of metropolitan New York - that's an area of three thousand five hundred and fifty square miles. Straws spoke at the President's news conference. And as Mr. Eisenhower stared at the floor and shook his head, the Atomic Energy commissioner told reporters: the recent hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific were stupendous in the "megaton range" meaning power equal to more than a million tons of t.m.t. Some unofficial sources estimate the power of the hydrogen bomb is 12 to 14 megatons. Straws says the March first test at Bikini "was about double the calculated estimate." He said this was a margin of error "not incompatible with a totally new weapon." And he denies published reports that the explosion was out of control - that it destroyed an entire island or atoll (actually it destroyed a sandpit or reef especially created for the test. Chairman Straws also said: there was not any widespread contamination of tuna or other fish as the result of the explosion - the Japanese fishermen who were affected were in a danger zone - our best checking had not been able to spot them. Straws denies that there is any danger of a "fallout" of radioactive materials over the United States. He says we have now made such progress that soon we will be "more free to increase our impetus on the peaceful uses of atomic power." We have moved much nearer to the "satisfaction of military requirements."

The Japanese today formally asked us not to conduct any new atomic or hydrogen tests in the Pacific from November through March - the best fishing season. And in London, Prime Minister Churchill, yielding to pressure from some Laborites, scheduled a debate on the hydrogen bomb for Monday. In a few minutes we'll hear a report on what Europe's reaction has been to these developments.

The President said at his news conference today that he completely supports

Secretary of State Dulles' call for united action against a possible Communist conquest of Indo-China and Southeast Asia. The president says we must be ready to meet any kind of attack - that's the kind of united action we are seeking. When a reporter asked if this means possible use of American troops in Indo-China, the President said: he can conceive of no greater disadvantage to the United States than to employ our ground forces all around the world - we are trying to make our allies strong enough to take care of local situations themselves - each case must be acted upon individually - there can be no general answer - we will do what our best interests dictate.

In Indo-China today the French are holding fast to their Dien Bien Phu fortress which is under heavy Communist attack. The French say they've killed more than 13-hundred enemy troops. But they acknowledge that they are outnumbered four to one. This showdown struggle - biggest of the Indo-Chinese war - is now in its second night. And as one French officer at headquarters put it: "One side or the other won't come out of this."

At his news conference today the President said he is still all out for the European Defense Community. And the Russians today gave the western powers a note offering to join NATO - the North Atlantic Treaty Organization if the United States joins Moscow's planned European security system. As part of the deal the Russians would have us junk the European Defense Community and its proposed German troops. The State Department calls this a sly maneuver to try to undermine the security of the West. NATO was formed to protect Western Europe against Communist aggression.

British Foreign Secretary Eden today told the House of Commons that if Jordan should become engaged in war with Israel, Britain must "immediately come to the aid of Jordan." And President Eisenhower said that both sides should restrain their extremists and use judgment to east their difficulties. Jordan has asked the United Nations for "drastic and immediate action" to prevent Israel from making any more attacks on Jordan villages. And Israel charges Jordan with new border violations.

Here in Washington, the President has signed the new tax bill - it calls for 999-million dollars in cuts in excise taxes and goes into effect tomorrow. The President says the reductions are bigger than he wanted. He hopes this will not damage too much his efforts to balance the budget.

Mr. Eisenhower also says that the government is prepared to intervene in New York's 27-day-old dock strike if necessary. Preliminary steps are being taken for quick action should that become advisable. Today, leaders of the striking independent dock workers rejected a wage offer by shippers. And the American Federation of Labor charges that the New York Shipping Association is acting in collusion with the strikers.

The Senate Labor committee today approved all but one of the President's proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley law. It took no action on the recommendation that secret ballots be required before unions may call strikes. The Democrats say they were not allowed to offer any of their own amendments.

The House Judiciary committee has approved a bill legalizing wire-tapping, and the use of wire-tapped evidence in federal courts in the prosecution of spies and saboteurs. The bill gives the Attorney General sole authority to authorize wiretapping by the F.B.I. and military intelligence agents.

In Buffalo, ten elementary school children were killed, and 24 pupils and teachers injured, when a flash fire destroyed a frame school building.

The American people are not alone in trying to evaluate the future implications of our recent hydrogen bomb tests. The people of Europe are equally concerned. Today I asked Howard K. Smith, the chief of our European staff, to record for us some of his impressions. And from London, this is what he has to say:

SMITH: People in Europe are too practiced in the art of crisis to take alarm very easity. In fact, they have a tendency, subconscious in most cases, to look down on Americans for allegedly being given to hysteria. It has therefore puzzled some American observers here how deeply alarmed people in Europe have become in the past week, over the hydrogen bomb explosions in the Pacific, which apparently have caused nothing like the same stir in the United States.

The "London Times," perhaps the soberest and least hysterical newspaper in the world, has joined Left-Wing Laborites in calling for a top-level workd conference between Churchill, Eisenhower and Malenkov to try to control the new weapon. Britain's chief cancer research expert, Dr. Alexander Hadow, has - like the tabloid newspapers here - proposed the immediate outlawing of all further nuclear explosions even for experimental purposes. Over one hundred members of Parliament have put their names to a motion before the House of Commons, calling for Churchill to intercede with the United States against continuing the explosions. Churchill, yesterday, in a heated session, refused to take such action, but he made it clear that he refused not because he disagreed with his critics on substance, he simply thought it would be unwise political tactics to intervene in American affairs. His choked voice, his flushed face, the tears that welled in his eyes as he talked about this matter in the House yesterday, left no doubt that he was even more concerned than his opponents were about it. The Laborites are pressing their motion anyhow. And this morning a conservative newspaper, "The London Daily Sketch," has taken the unusual step of sidding with them against Churchill. In an editorial the newspaper said: "Many sincere friends of Sir Winston, we among them, will find it impossible to support him in his decision not to intercede with America." In somewhat less degree most of the other peoples in Europe seem to share this concern. But as frequently happens in moments of crisis, they tend tacitly to accept Britain, in parricular Churchill, as a spokesman for all.

For example a Paris newspaper this morning accuses the Prime Minister of letting France down. It wrote: "All those of us - and that means a large majority - who hoped that Churchill would yesterday bring comfort to an anguished world, have experienced grave disappointment." Another Paris paper reprints a London editorial cartoon showing a baby labelled: The present little level of humanity tossing a hydrogen bomb in the air and babbling "Don't worry, I know what I'm doing, I think."

The cause of this deep concern, in a degree that is apparently not shared in America, appears to be a combination of things. To begin with - there's the frightening impression that the bomb has got out of control of the scientists and this impression persists despite all denials. President Eisenhower gave this impression at his news conference last week when he said "things had happened that had not been expected by the scientists." Statements made at the President's news conference today will, when they become generally known here, possibly have an allaying effect on this.

There's been other alarming statements, like Defense Secretary Charles Wilson's statement yesterday that the effects of the latest explosion were "unbelievable." Mr. Strauss' toning down that remark today will no doubt help.

Alongwith these frightening teasers have come, in the past week, no information. That is forbidden by U.S. law. Our allies are thus suffering from the fear that comes from the unknown which is said to be the worst kind of fear there can be.

There're two aspects of this matter that make it rather worse for Europeans than it would be for Americans. In the first place, there's the frustrating feeling here that they, the Europeans, have no control or influence whatever over the new weapon while Americans through their elective representatives do have. Yet, people here feel that they are the most likely and the most vulnerable victims if H-bomb warfare should ever happen. They're all nearer to a potential enemy. Many of them have airbases for U.S. atom bombers, which an enemy would want to wipe out at the very beginning of a conflict. It is probably considerations of this order that have made for that much greater degree of concern here than there is in the United States. I asked a member of Parliament here this morning what he thought should be done. He answered "Either lay off the alarming statements or else provide us with information to remove ignorance and fear. Certainly," he said, "few scenes could be more pitiful than the scene here yesterday in Parliament, America's leading friend, Sir Winston Churchill, striving to withstand a barrage of criticism of the U.S. but with no information to use in defense. This is Howard K. Smith recording in London.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No one can measure the fear and concern created by the figures regarding the destructive capabilities of the hydrogen bomb - humans approach the point where they can destroy humanity. James Hall once said: "The thing that numbs the heart is this, that men cannot devise some scheme of life, to banish the fear that lurks in most mens' eyes" and someone else said: "We must expect everything, and fear everything, from time and from men."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday - April 1 1954

This is the news:

The French commander at Dien Bien Phu, has made an urgent appeal for reinforcements. The Communists have seized three positions from the outnumbered defenders. The French garrison has been ordered to "stand or die." Officials admit the situation is "very confused." Several French planes have been shot down, trying to land ~~at an~~ on the airstrip at Dien Bien Phu. And a spokesman for Supreme French Commander, General Navarre, says every effort will be made to get through with reinforcements..despite very strong Communist anti-aircraft fire.

In Paris, the French government has fired its top military commander.. Field Marshal Juin.. because he ignored Premier Laniel's summons to explain criticism of the European Defense [redacted] Community.

And today, British Foreign Secretary Eden joined Washington, in rejecting Moscow's bid to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, if we give up the European army plan, and join the Russian idea of a European security system. One British source says the Russian proposal amounts to "the robbers wanting to join the cops." The State Department says there will be a prompt exchange of views on the subject with the British and French.

The British have also joined us in denying that there is any intention of making the Geneva conference a Big Five meeting..with Red China joining the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union. On Monday Secretary of State Dulles said that Molotov had agreed it would not be a Big Five meeting. Moscow says that's "entirely baseless." ..that Mr. Dulles agreed to put the Chinese on an equal footing with the other powers.

~~Peiping radio says we timed our hyrdorgen bomb xplosions to "have a better bargaining position" at Geneva. And in London, the Labor party has formally called on Prime Minister Churchill to seek a meeting with the President and Malenkov to control the H-bomb.~~

The Arabs tonight demanded a (special) meeting of the United Nations security council to take up the Isreal raid on a Jordan village where nine Arabs were killed last Friday.

The Senate today approved a bill to grant statehood to both Hawaii and Alaska. The vote was 57 to 28. Republican leaders in the House are opposed to statehood for Alaska but favor Hawaii.

Acting Chairman Mundt of the McCarthy committee says the group has unanimously approved Samuel P. Sears of Boston to be its counsel in the investigation of the Army's row with Senator McCarthy and Committee Counsel Cohn. Mundt hopes Sears will get to work Monday..with the (HEARINGS) ~~hearings~~ to start the following week. Sears is 58.. a career trial lawyer...three times president of the Massachusetts Bar Association.. a member of the American Bar Association Board of delegates. He is a Republican. He told reporters in Washington he is resolved (to) ~~the~~ conduct the hearings "as (DISPASSIONOTELY) ~~dispassionately~~ as I can and without letting partisanship enter into it." ~~In answer to questions, Sears said he recently objected violently to the use of alumni funds for scholarships for students who used the fifth amendment to avoid answering questions before the Jenner Committee. He said he also has objected to a branch of the National Lawyers Guild at Harvard.~~ He was asked if he had ever taken a stand on Mc Carthy or McCarthyism. And he replied:"Not publicly and not privately." But the Associated Press reports that Boston newspapers reveal that after Senator McCarthy's re-election , Sears was quoted as saying:"McCarthy has done a great job and will continue to do so as he drives the pinks and commies out of government." Harvard Law Professor Mark de Wolfe Howe says Sears has a political reputation in Boston legal circles as being on the McCarthy side. Howe says: "A lot of people will doubt" whether Sears can conduct an impartial investigation. But Committee members Mundt and Potter and Democrats Symington and McClelland say they feel Sears will do a fair job. Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State says he wants more facts.. may want to reconsider the appointment. Republican Senator Saltonstall says Sears wrote him expressing an interest in the job and he turned the letter over to Senator Mundt with a high recommendation.

Here in New York, the striking independent longshoremen's association says it is willing to recommend an end to its 28-day-old strike if work passes are returned to the men from whom they were taken. The announcement came after the National Labor Relations Board ordered a new bargaining election. The strikers were warned they would not be on the ballot unless they end THE STRIKE "forthwith." And Attorney General Brownell has ordered a grand jury to determine whether there have been any anti-trust violations during the strike. There have been charges that officials of steamship companies and stevedoring firms conspired with the striking union.

Navy Lieutenant Commander Francis X. Brady today flew a Grummann F-9-F Cougar from San Diego to New York in three hours, 45 minutes and 30 seconds.. the first time man has spanned the country in less than four hours.

Supreme Court Justice Jackson has suffered a mild heart attack but is reported "out of immediate danger." And the Air Force says former chief of staff, General (Hoyt) Vandenbergh "has taken a turn for the worse and is failing rapidly" at Walter Reed army hospital.

Edward R. Murrow: April 1, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Most of the talk about the hydrogen bomb is about ours, whereas the great concern should be about the one the Russians have. Security considerations put a limit on what can be told about our own hydrogen bomb, because such information would help the Soviet Union. But there is no major security interest to keep us from hearing all that can be told about the Soviet bomb. We can't be told anything about it that the Russians don't know. There may be a minor security consideration in telling them to what extent we know what they know, but that is all. And it should be legitimate to talk about the Soviet bomb if it isn't done in too great detail.

The statement has been published that the Soviet hydrogen bomb of last August was stronger than our hydrogen bomb of the previous November. Yesterday, Harry Schwarz, the Russian specialist of the New York Times, made some startling assertions about the Soviet bomb. "It can be authoritatively stated" he wrote, "that the Soviet advance revealed in August surprised United States technicians and touched off an all-out American effort to duplicate the Soviet feat."

He says the Russians obtained their knowledge of the hydrogen bomb from the British atom spy, Dr. Klaus Fuchs. It may be that he told them of two processes, and that we later developed one of these, and the Russians the other. The Russians presumably went to work as soon as they got the information in 1945. We had stopped work on the hydrogen bomb, and did not resume it until 1950, after the Russians set off their first atomic explosion. So the Russians got ahead, and they used techniques and materials we did not use. A United Press dispatch quotes an authority as saying that at Bikini last month we used the triggering method, and the material that the Russians had used in August. In other words, we caught up with the Russians. Mr. Schwarz quotes one source as saying that the Russians had used a chemical trigger, instead of relying solely on an atomic bomb to set off their explosion. He also says they used a light metal, probably lithium, to obtain an even stronger explosion than if they had depended solely on deuterium and tritium.

But another writer in the Times disagrees with some of Mr. Schwarz's information. William L. Laurence, the newspaper's authority on atomic subjects, says today that he doubts that the Russians are technically ahead in the hydrogen bomb field. He believes they are far behind despite their head start. And he says categorically that there is no such a thing as a chemical triggering of the hydrogen explosion. However, he speaks in detail about the use of lithium. ~~I shall not be technical about it.~~ What he suggests is that deuterium - or heavy hydrogen - can be used as a solid, instead of a liquid, by combining it in a chemical compound with an isotope of lithium. Perhaps that is the chemical factor that has been wrongly called a chemical trigger. Anyhow, Mr. Lawrence says this combination of heavy hydrogen and lithium may well turn out to be the ideal hydrogen bomb element. It is very light, and is three times as powerful as Uranium 235 or plutonium. A hundred kilograms - two hundred and twenty pounds - of this substance added to a fission bomb, he says, would increase its power by a factor of six million.

The working of the security mentality can be utterly mysterious. Howard K. Smith complained from London this morning that Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill hadn't been told as much about the Bikini tests by the United States government, as Admiral Strauss yesterday told the American press. Thereupon the London Daily Mirror today blasted the Prime Minister as an old and tired man, whose influence with the United States is negligible. Mr. Smith remarked that it is beginning to look as though Churchill's political career may become the chief victim of the hydrogen bomb explosion.

There may be reason for a bitterness worse than gall in Sir Winston's heart. He was the man who made the great renunciation of Britain's atomic knowledge, and its foremost atomic scientists, early in the war, so that the joint research with the United States could be done in this country, under the most favorable conditions. He never has told his countrymen on what terms he took this great step. It would be strange if he had not obtained a promise, that Britain was to share the fruits of the joint effort, and had not obtained the promise in writing. But he has never produced a document containing such a pledge signed by Mr. Roosevelt.

I am going to suggest, that if he has not produced such a document, it may be because it was signed in secrecy, and so has no legal validity. But at the time, any such agreement would have to be secret. Then by the time the war was over, and the bomb was there, Congress p~~assionately~~y passed the atomic secrecy act, forbidding the sharing of atomic secrets.

If Sir Winston did have such a document, and did not press the moral claim at that time, it would have been because he did not wish to strain Anglo-American relations. And having kept silent then, no more useful time has come to speak out. So he stood helpless and uninformed before the House of Commons this week. His eyes were wet with tears. But he did not utter a syllable of reproach against the United States. To his opponents he looked a pitiful figure. But his restraint may have made this one of the most honorable moments in his life.

These words were spoken by Winston Churchill in 1949:"No technical knowledge can outweigh knowledge of the humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded slowly conceived codes of honor, morals and manners, the passionate convictions which so many hundreds of millions share together of the principles of freedom and justice, are far more precious to us than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French commander at Dien Bien Phu has made an urgent appeal for reinforcements. The Communists have seized three positions from the outnumbered defenders. The French garrison has been ordered to "stand or die." Officials admit the situation is "very confused." Several French planes have been shot down trying to land on the airstrip at Dien Bien Phu. And a spokesman for Supreme French Commander, General Navarre, says every effort will be made to get through with reinforcements - despite very strong Communist anti-aircraft fire.

In Paris, the French government has fired its top military commander - Field Marshal Juin - because he ignored Premier Laniel's summons to explain criticism of the European Defense Community.

And today, British Foreign Secretary Eden joined Washington in rejecting Moscow's bid to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization if we give up the European army plan and join the Russian idea of a European security system. One British source says the Russian proposal amounts to "the robbers wanting to join the cops." The State Department says there will be a prompt exchange of views on the subject with the British and French. The British have also joined us in denying that there is any intention of making the Geneva conference a Big Five meeting with Red China joining the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union. On Monday Secretary of State Dulles said that Molotov had agreed to would not be a Big Five meeting. Moscow says that's "entirely baseless;" that Mr. Dulles agreed to put the Chinese on an equal footing with the other powers.

The Arabs tonight demanded a special meeting of the United Nations security council to take up the Israel raid on a Jordan village where nine Arabs were killed last Friday.

The Senate today approved a bill to grant statehood to both Hawaii and Alaska. The vote was 57 to 28. Republican leaders in the House are opposed to statehood for Alaska but favor Hawaii.

Acting Chairman Mundt of the McCarthy committee says the group has unanimously approved Samuel P. Sears of Boston to be its counsel in the investigation of the Army's row with Senator McCarthy and Committee Counsel Cohn. Mundt hopes Sears will get to work Monday with the hearings to start the following week. Sears is 58 - a career trial lawyer - three times president of the Massachusetts Bar Association, a member of the American Bar Association Board of delegates. He is a Republican. He told reporters in Washington he is resolved to conduct the hearings "as dispassionately as I can and without letting partisanship enter into it." He was asked if he had ever taken a stand on McCarthy or McCarthyism. And he replied: "Not publicly and not privately." But the Associated Press reports that Boston newspapers reveal that after Senator McCarthy's re-election, Sears was quoted as saying: "McCarthy has done a great job and will continue to do so as he drives the pinks and commies out of government." Harvard Law Professor Mark de Wolfe Hose says Sears has a political reputation in Boston legal circles as being on the McCarthy side. Howe says: "A lot of people will doubt" whether Sears can conduct an impartial investigation. But Committee members Mundt and Potter and Democrats Symington and McClellan say they feel Sears will do a fair job. Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State says he wants more facts - may want to reconsider the appointment. Republican Senator Saltonstall says Sears wrote him expressing an interest in the job and he turned the letter over to Senator Mundt with a high recommendation.

Here in New York, the striking independent longshoremen's association says it is willing to recommend an end to its 28-day old strike if work passes are returned to the men from whom they were taken. The announcement came after the National Labor Relations Board ordered a new bargaining election. The strikers were warned they would not be on the ballot unless they end the strike "forthwith." And Attorney General Brownell has ordered a grand jury to determine whether there have been any anti-trust violations during the strike. There have been charges that officials of steamship companies and stevedoring firms conspired with the striking union.

Navy Lieutenant Commander Francis X. Brady today flew a Grummann F-9-F Cougar from San Diego to New York in three hours, 45 minutes and 30 seconds - the first time man has spanned the country in less than four hours.

Supreme Court Justice Jackson has suffered a mild heart attack but is reported "out of immediate danger." And the Air Force says former chief of staff, General Hoyt Vandenbergh "has taken a turn for the worse and is failing rapidly" at Walter Reed army hospital.

Most of the talk about the hydrogen bomb is about ours, whereas the great concern should be about the one the Russians have. Security considerations put a limit on what can be told about our own hydrogen bomb, because such information would help the Soviet Union. But there is no major security interest to keep us from hearing all that can be told about the Soviet bomb. We can't be told anything about it that the Russians don't know. There may be a minor security consideration in telling them to what extent we know what they know, but that is all. And it should be legitimate to talk about the Soviet bomb if it isn't done in too great detail.

The statement has been published that the Soviet hydrogen bomb of last August was stronger than our hydrogen bomb of the previous November. Yesterday, Harry Schwarz, the Russian specialist of the New York Times, made some startling assertions about the Soviet bomb. "It can be authoritatively stated" he wrote, "that the Soviet advance revealed in August surprised United States technicians and touched off an all-out American effort to duplicate the Soviet feat."

He says the Russians obtained their knowledge of the hydrogen bomb from the British atom spy, Dr. Klaus Fuchs. It may be that he told them of two processes, and that we later developed one of these and the Russians the other. The Russians presumably went to work as soon as they got the information in 1945. We had stopped work on the hydrogen bomb and did not resume it until 1950, after the Russians set off their first atomic explosion. So the Russians got ahead and they used techniques and materials we did not use. A United Press dispatch quotes an authority as saying that at Bikini last month we used the triggering method, and the material that the Russians had used in August. In other words, we caught up with the Russians. Mr. Schwarz quotes one source as saying that the Russians had used a chemical trigger, instead of relying solely on an atomic bomb to set off their explosion. He also says they used a light metal, probably lithium, to obtain an even stronger explosion than if they had depended solely on deuterium and tritium. But another writer in the Times disagrees with some of Mr. Schwarz's information. William L. Laurence, the newspaper's authority on atomic subjects, says today that he doubts that the Russians are technically ahead in the hydrogen bomb field. He believes they are far behind despite their head start. And he says categorically that there is no such a thing as a chemical triggering of the hydrogen explosion. However, he speaks in detail about the use of lithium. What he suggests is that deuterium - or heavy hydrogen - can be used as a solid instead of a liquid by combining it in a chemical compound with an isotope of lithium. Perhaps that is the chemical factor that has been wrongly called a chemical trigger. Anyhow, Mr. Lawrence says this combination of heavy hydrogen and lithium may well turn out to be the ideal hydrogen bomb element. It is very light and is three times as powerful as Uranium 235 or plutonium. A hundred kilograms - two hundred and twenty pounds - of this substance added to a fission bomb, he says, would increase its power by a factor of six million. The working of the security mentality can be utterly mysterious. Howard K. Smith complained from London this morning that Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill hadn't been told as much about the Bikini tests by the United States government as Admiral Strauss yesterday told the American press. Thereupon the London Daily Mirror today blasted the Prime Minister as an old and tired man whose influence with the United States is negligible. Mr. Smith remarked that it is beginning to look as though Churchill's political career may become the chief victim of the hydrogen bomb explosion. There may be reason for a bitterness worse than gall in Sir Winston's heart. He was the man who made the great renunciation of Britain's atomic knowledge and its foremost atomic scientists, early in the war, so that the joint research with the United States could be done in this country under the most favorable conditions.

He never has told his countrymen on what terms he took this great step. It would be strange if he had not obtained a promise that Britain was to share the fruits of the joint effort, and had not obtained the promise in writing. But he has never produced a domument containing such a pledge signed by Mr. Roosevelt. I am going to suggest that if he has not produced such a document it may be because it was signed in secrecy, and so has no legal validity. But at the time, any such agreement would have to be secret. Then by the time the war was over and the bomb was there, Congress passed the atomic secrecy act forbidding the sharing of atomic secrets If Sir Winston did have such a document and did not press the moral claim at that time, it would have been because he did not wish to strain Anglo-American relations. And having kept silent then, no more useful time has come to speak out. So he stood helpless and uninformed before the House of Commons this week. His eyes were wet with tears. But he did not utter a syllable of reproach against the United States. To his opponents he looked a pitiful figure. But his restraint may have made this one of the most honorable moments in his life.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These words were spoken by Winston Churchill in 1949: "No technical knowledge can outweigh knowledge of the humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded slowly conceived codes of honor, morals and manners, the passionate convictions which so many hundreds of millions share together of the principles of freedom and justice, are far more precious to us than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, April 2, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will speak to the nation on radio and television Monday night. We're told he will discuss the criticial questions confronting us in this Atomic Age. And will elaborate on some of the broad problems discussed at his news conference several weeks ago. At that time the President said we are besieged by a "multiplicity of fears" that tend to produce "hysterical reactions." #

It was also made known that next Friday, Attorney General Brownell will give a report to the people, on the work of the Justice Department, the FBI, and the Courts, in combatting Communism. The President's news Secretary, James Hagerty, said Brownell will give a "complete and detailed report."

In a speech tonite in Charlotte, North Carolina, Adlai Stevenson will say that Mr. Eisenhower has the choice "of uniting his party, and uniting his nation." With reference to Senator Mc Carthy, Mr. Stevenson says, the "Republicans regard him as a scoundrel when he attacks Republicans, but a patriot when he attacks ordinary people, or calls men like Roosevelt or Truman the patrons of triators." He charges the Administration with "calculated use for political effect of misbranding, misstatement, misrepresentation on great issues. When our President bestirs himself, ignores the expedient counsel of small-bore politicians, and clears the high-pressure salesmen, out of his house, then I confidently predict, Mr. Stevenson says, that the American people will be enthusiastically and gratefully behind him."

Republican Senator Mundt, said earlier today, that there is a left-wing effort to smear Samuel Sears, the Boston Attorney, chosen to conduct the investigation of Senator Mc Carthy's dispute with the army. Sears has been quoted as having made statements favorable to Mc Carthy and his activities. Republican Senator Potter, a member of the investigating sub-committee, wants Sears to say whether he feels he can conduct an impartial inquiry. Democratic Senator Monroney says he favored Sears appointment, but didn't know where he stood on Mc Carthy when he made the original recommendation.

INSERT

And the Army tonite reported that Private David Schine, former counsel to Mc Carthy, can not take an advanced criminal investigation course at Camp Gordon, Georgia, because he doesn't have sufficient experience to qualify.

[redacted]

(2A)

The Army also announced (TONITE) that it has turned over to the Justice Department for "possible action" the case of former Major Irving Peress. He was the dentist Senator Mc Carthy accused of being a "fifth amendment Communist."

In Indo-China the battle for Dien Bien Phu is reported "critical." The Communists have thrown a fresh division into the attack and have invaded the Kingdom of Cambodia in which the French say is an obvious diversionary action. The garrison at Dien Bien Phu is now out-numbered 6 to 1.

[redacted]

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, the former Air Force chief of staff, died today of cancer. He was 55 years old. / President Eisenhower sent a personal message of sympathy to Mrs. Vandenberg. / "The nation," it said, "mourns the passing of a devoted and able military leader, and will hold him in grateful remembrance."

[redacted]

The House today voted down President Eisenhower's request for a new program of low-rent public housing. / The vote was (211 to 176) and leaves no authority for further construction after units already under contract are built. Mr. Eisenhower had asked for authority to build 35-thousand units over each of the next four years. (The House did agree, however, to [redacted] lower down payments and monthly payments for homes and home improvements. [redacted] It also voted to step up the slum-clearance program. [redacted]

[redacted]

House this year. [redacted] Alaska at [redacted] Martin said he sees little chance of [redacted]e [redacted]al.

The House Labor Committee [redacted] today to require unions t[redacted] by a [redacted] the Government, before [redacted] This [redacted] Taft-Hartley [redacted] by th[redacted], although Mr. Eisenh[redacted] never specified whether the vote should [redacted] for or aff[redacted]n.

The 29-day-old dock strike, here in New York, has been called off. The independent longshoremen's association said it will send the strikers back to work tomorrow, in the face of a Government order the end the walkout or be stricken from the ballot in a forthcoming bargaining election. The strike is estimated to have cost a million dollars a day.

A [redacted] in grain mills in 13 states [redacted] their jobs in the [redacted] in the history of the [redacted]. Negotiati[redacted] for a new [redacted] collapsed when agreement [redacted] be reached on a wori[redacted] Twenty-seven General Mills plants [redacted] affected.

A Federal Court in Washington has convicted Ben Gold, president of the independent fur and leather workers union, of lying when he denied ever belonging to the Communist Party. Gold was allowed to remain free on 10-thousand dollars bail. No date was set for passing sentence.

The government announced today that unemployment in the United States increased by 54-thousand in March, a four-year high. [redacted] (BUT) the Commerce Department says the job situation appears to have "leveled off".

Edward R. Murrow: April 2, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The London News Chronicle today accused the State Department of "shooting from the hip" in issuing its statement rejecting the Soviet Union's self-invitation to join NATO, and doing so before consulting the other NATO members. British Labor members also criticized American haste.

The Soviet note had been astonishing. It knocked at the door of NATO, it also reversed Mr. Molotov's position at the Berlin conference, against continued United States participation in European security. So it had the outward appearance of an almost revolutionary note. To untrained ears it sounded as though the Kremlin may have undergone a change of mind, or even more, a change of its nature. And the accent in the note on the hydrogen bomb might even be mistaken as an explanation of how something so profound could come about. Critics of prompt rejection consequently asked, how we could be so sure the Kremlin didn't mean it.

The answer is not hard to find. If the Soviet Union really meant anything so basic, it would have taken the greatest pains to confide privately in the Western leaders in advance. It would have worked out with them at least an acceptable outline, of what would amount to a new world order. If the cold war is to end, agreement has to come into view on several grave issues. Such things don't happen in a hurry. Sending a note for public consumption is something that would be far down the line of procedure. It would be sent at a time carefully chosen, and the West would be alerted to appreciate and appraise, the gratifying new prospects.

The way things are done, often reveals their real purpose. Any earnest effort by the Kremlin to end the cold war and create conditions of trust and co-operation would not be voiced in a surprise note. So the surprise note must have had another purpose. Actually it was the Kremlin that was shooting from the hip. And if much time had been spent before replying, that would have helped build up the very illusion the Kremlin was trying to create.

The fact that the United States now draws criticism from the London press, and the British Labor Party, shows that Soviet diplomacy at any rate is smart. It is creating a condition in which some well-meaning people can ask if the West is rejecting a bid to end the cold war. And it adds to their perplexity to read, that reliable Western diplomats in Moscow, credit the Kremlin with being sincere, in fearing a revival of German militarism and wanting the cold war to end.

It may be true that Soviet thinking is changing. One should hope that it is. The Soviet public for the first time is being given a few of the grim truths about the destructiveness of atomic weapons, and that is an important fact. It is an admission that the Soviet masters have helped bring about a world in which their power cannot assure the survival of their subject people. Such an admission might be the prelude to a more co-operative policy on international control of atomic weapons, and arms reductions. It would be in this field that a change in Soviet thinking would mean something.

But the latest Soviet note does not deal with this subject. And there is no point in going through it with a fine-toothed comb looking for some solid particle promising peace. Of course the Kremlin wants peace. So did Hitler. He kept saying he wanted peace, meaning only that he must have it on his own terms. So must the Kremlin. What the Kremlin insists on is that Germans shall not be armed as part of a European Army. The standard Kremlin version is to say that the Soviet Union must not permit the revival of German militarism. The assertion can also be put in the simple language of power: if Germany joins the West and contributes to Western defense, the Soviet Union suffers a severe power defeat. It would be a defeat that restored some balance in the power relationship between East and West. For in that relationship the East has been consistently stronger, ever since the Soviet Union developed the atomic bomb.

The real cleverness of the Soviet note is not its effect in London, for that is secondary. The reaction in France is primary. Here the loud shouting about German militarism adds to the fright the French already have from their own memories of Germany. This fright, in addition to their war-weariness in Indo-China, is the reason they are balking on ratifying E.D.C. before the Geneva conference, if at all. Quite a few Frenchmen today believe they would rather entrust their country to an E.D.C., with the Soviet Union in it, than one with Germany in it. They do not seem able to take in the fact, that the Bonn government may perish, as a genuinely democratic regime, unless the European community is established. Dr. Adenauer is anti-nationalist, anti-militarist, pro-European. If his democracy goes, some kind of nationalism to replace it would seem inescapable. That the French should risk this, looks at this distance like the maddest kind of inconsistency. For they themselves had invented the idea of a European Army, to make the re-birth of German militarism impossible. But the Kremlin loves the confusion in France, and knows how to exploit it. And though the French Foreign Office has joined the NATO chorus in rejecting the Soviet note, Premier Laniel has not set the date of the debate of the E.D.C. treaty. And the latest word about that is that it may not be held before Autumn.

One of the difficulties in trying to put acts of international diplomacy in their proper perspective, is that it's often hard to learn the motives which prompt such actions. But La Rochefoucauld once remarked:"However brilliant an action may be, it should not be accounted great, when it is not the result of a great purpose." For as Richard Steele put it:"The noblest motive, is the public good."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will speak to the nation on radio and television Monday night. We're told he will discuss the critical questions confronting us in this atomic age. And will elaborate on some of the broad problems discussed at his news conference several weeks ago. At that time the President said we are besieged by a "multiplicity of fears" that tned to produce "hysterical reactions."

It was also made known that next Friday, Attorney General Brownell will give a report to the people on the work of the Justice Department, the FBI, and the Courts in combatting Communism. Th President's news Secretary, James Hagerty, said Brownell will give a "complete and detailed report."

In a speech tonight in Charlotte, North Carolina, Adlai Stevenson will say that Mr. Eisenhower has the choice "of uniting his party and uniting his nation." With reference to Senator McCarthy, Mr. Stevenson says the "Republicans regard him as a scoundrel when he attacks Republicans, but a patriot when he attacks ordinary people or calls men like Roosevelt or Truman the patrons of traitors." He charges the Administration with "calculated use for political effect of misbranding mis-statement, misrepresentation on great issues. When our President bestirs himself, ignores the expedient counsel of small-bore politicians and clears the high-pressure salesmen out o his house, then I confidently preduct, Mr. Stevenson says, that the American people will be enthusiastically and gratefully behind him."

Republican Senator Mundt, said earlier today, that there is a left-wing effort to smear Samuel Sears, the Boston Attorney chosen to conduct the investigation of Senator McCarthy's dispute with the army. Sears has been quoted as having made statements favorable to McCarthy and his activities. Republican Senator Potter, a member of the investigating sub-committee, wants Sears to say whether he feels he can conduct an impartial inquiry. Democratic Senator Monroney says he favored Sears appointment, but didn't know where he stood on McCarthy when he made the original recommendation.

And the Army tonight reported that Private David Schine, former counsel to McCarthy cannot take an advanced criminal investigation course at Camp Gordon, Georgia because he doesn't have sufficient experience to qualify.

The Army also announced tonight that it has turned over to the Justice Department for "possible action" the case of former Major Irving Peress. He was the dentist Senator McCarthy accused of being a "fifth amendment Communist."

In Indo-China the battle for Dien Bien Phu is reported "critical." The Communists have thrown a fresh division into the attack and have invaded the Kingdom of Cambodia which the French say is an obvious diversionary action. The garrison at Dien Bien Phy us now out-numbered 6 to 1.

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, the former Air Force Chief of staff, died today of cancer. He was 55 years old. President Eisenhower sent a personal message of sympathy to Mrs. Vandenberg. "The nation," it said, "mourns the passing of a devoted and able military leader, and will hold him in grateful remembrance."

The House today voted down President Eisenhower's request for a new program of low-rent public housing. The vote was 211 to 176 and leaves no authority for further construction after units already under contract are built. Mr. Eisenhower had asked for authority to build 35-thousand units over each of the next four years. The House did agree, however, to lower down payments and monthly payments for homes and home improvements. It also voted to step up the slum-clearance program.

The 29-day-old dock strike, here in New York, has been called off. The independent longshoremen's association said it will send the strikers back to work tomorrow, in the face of a Government order the end the walkout or be stricken from the ballot in a forthcoming bargaining election. The strike is estimated to have cost a million dollars a day.

A Federal Court in Washington has convicted Ben Gold, president of the independent fur and leather workers union, of lying when he denied ever belonging to the Communist Party. Gold was allowed to remain free on 10-thousand dollars bail. No date was set for passing sentence.

The government announced today that unemployment in the United States increased by 54-thousand in March, a four-year high. But the Commerce Department says the job situation appears to have "leveled off."

The London News Chronicle today accused the State Department of "shooting from the hip" in issuing its statement rejecting the Soviet Union's self-invitation to join NATO, and doing so before consulting the other NATO members. British Labor members also criticized American haste. The Soviet note had been astonishing. It knocked at the door of NATO, it also reversed Mr. Molotov's position at the Berlin conference against continued United States participation in European security. So it had the outward appearance of an almost revolutionary note. To untrained ears it sounded as though the Kremlin may have undergone a change of mind, or even more, a change of its nature. And the accent in the note on the hydrogen bomb might even be mistaken as an explanation of how something so profound could come about. // Critics of prompt rejection consequently asked, how we could be so sure the Kremlin didn't mean it. The answer is not hard to find. If the Soviet Union really meant anything so basic, it would have taken the greatest pains to confide privately in the Western leaders in advance. It would have worked out with them at least an acceptable outline of what would amount to a new world order. If the cold war is to end, agreement has to come into view on several grave issues. Such things don't happen in a hurry. //

Left out

Sending a note for public consumption is something that would be far down the line of procedure. It would be sent at a time carefully chosen, and the West would be alerted to appreciate and appraise, the gratifying new prospects. // The way things are done, often reveals their real purpose. // Any earnest effort by the Kremlin to end the cold war and create conditions of trust and cooperation would not be voiced in a surprise note. So the surprise note must have had another purpose. Actually it was the Kremlin that was shooting from the hip. And if much time had been spent before replying, that would have helped build up the very illusion the Kremlin was trying to create. The fact that the United States now draws criticisms from the London press, and the British Labor Party, shows that Soviet diplomacy at any rate is smart. It is creating a condition in which some well-meaning people can ask if the West is rejecting a bid to end the cold war. And it adds to their perplexity to read, that reliable Western diplomats in Moscow, credit the Kremlin with being sincere, in fearing a revival of German militarism and wanting the cold war to end. It may be true that Soviet thinking is changing. One should hope that it is. The Soviet public for the first time is being given a few of the grim truths about the destructiveness of atomic weapons, and that is an important fact. It is an admission that the Soviet masters have helped bring about a world in which their power cannot assure the survival of their subject people. Such an admission might be the prelude to a more cooperative policy on international control of atomic weapons, and arms reductions It would be in this field that a change in Soviet thinking would mean something. But the latest Soviet note does not deal with this subject. And their is no point in going through it with a fine-toothed comb looking for some solid particle promising peace. Of course the Kremlin wants peace. So did Hitler. He kept saying he wanted peace, meaning only that he must have it on his own terms. So must the Kremlin. What the Kremlin insists on is that Germans shall not be armed as part of a European Army. The standard Kremlin version is to say that the Soviet Union must not permit the revival of German militarism. The assertion can also be put in the simple language of power: if Germany joins the West and contributes to Western defense, the Soviet Union suffers a severe power defeat. It would be a defeat that restored some balance in the power relationship between East and West. For in that relationship the East has been consistently stronger, ever since the Soviet Union developed the atomic bomb. The real cleverness of the Soviet note is not its effect in London, for that is secondary. The reaction in France is primary. Here the loud shouting about German militarism adds to the fright the French already have from their own memories of Germany. This fright, in addition to their war-weariness in Indo-China, is the reason they are balking on ratifying E.D.C. before the Geneva conference, if at all. Quite a few Frenchmen today believe they would rather entrust their country to an E.D.C. with the Soviet Union in it, than one with Germany in it. They do not seem able to take in the fact, that the Bonn government may perish as a genuinely democratic regime, unless the European community is established. Dr. Adenauer is anti-nationalist, antimilitarist, pro-European. If his democracy goes, some kind of nationalism to replace it would seem inescapable. That the French should risk this, looks at this distance like the maddest kind of inconsistency. For they themselves had invented the idea of a European Army to make the re-birth of German militarism impossible. But the Kremlin loves the confusion in France, and knows how to exploit it. And though the French Foreign Office has joined the NATO chorus in rejecting the Soviet note, Premier Laniel has not set the date of the debate of the E.D.C. treaty. And the latest word about that is that it may not be held before Autumn.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: One of the difficulties in trying to put acts of international diplomacy in their proper perspective is that it's often hard to learn the motives which prompt such actions. But La Rochefoucauld once remarked: "However brilliant an action may be, it should not be accounted great when it is not the result of a great purpose." For as Richard Steele put it: "The noblest motive is the public good."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday April 5, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of States Dulles says the Chinese Communists are coming "awful close" to the kind of open aggression that might call for our "massive retaliation." Testifying before a House committee, on the war in Indo-China, the Secretary said: we have freshly verified information that, [redacted] "members of the Chinese military establishment"..are operating anti-aircraft guns at Dien Bien Phu. We know there are a score of Chinese technical advisers in Indo-China..under command of a Chinese Communist general at staff headquarters. Representative MORANO [redacted] of Connecticut asked: "Doesn't this mean the active participation that you said would bring retaliation on the Chinese mainland?" Mr. Dulles replied: "I said if the Chinese sent their red armies into Indo-China it would be apt to produce action which might not be confined to Indo-China. Technically, they have not done the thing I defined. They're coming awful close to it." In answer to another question, the Secretary said we are not committed to send American troops to Indo-China. The French foreign ministry says Mr. Dulles' testimony on the Chinese [redacted] is "generally correct but incomplete."

The French command today ordered their planes into an all-out attack on an estimated 20-thousand Communist troops, reported to be on the way to Dien Bien Phu, as reinforcements. We'll hear a report on this situation in a few minutes.

Secretary Dulles told the House committee that the development of the hydrogen bomb makes the allied system of global security "more essential than ever." And in London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons, that our hydrogen bomb tests "have increased the chance of world peace rather than world war." Sir Winston said he believes hydrogen bomb production is now underway in the United States on a large scale...and in Russia, to a lesser degree. He said the Soviet Union is much closer on our heels in hydrogen bomb production, than they were in making atomic bombs. And he revealed a secret agreement made in 1943 with the late President Roosevelt. Both men said their countries would never use the atomic bomb against the other. They agreed not to use it against a third party, without consultation. Sir Winston charged that when the Atlee government was in power it lost for Britain the right of control, and even information, on the bomb. Mr. Atlee said this was due to the McMahon act passed by the Congress. And today the White House said the agreement mentioned by Sir Winston is "not in effect at the present time."

Tonight.. a half hour from now at 8;30 pm. eastern time.. the President will be heard over many of these stations clarifying some of the questions raised by the Hydrogen bomb.

The United Nations disarmament commission will meet Friday to renew its work on arms reduction.

And Isreal has called on the Security Council to take action on its charge of armistice violations committed by Jordan. Last week Lebanon asked for U.N. action against Isreal.

Attorney General Brownell is going to speak to the nation Friday night on his proposals for more laws to strengthen our defenses against "the communist conspiracy."

And tomorrow the McCarthy committee..temporarily headed by Senator Mundt..will again question Samuel Sears of Boston who has been chosen as the committee's temporary counsel for the McArthy-Army investigation. Another Boston lawyer, James M. Walsh, said today that Mrs. McCarthy had recommended Sears to support the McArthy side in a debate that was later cancelled.

The Supreme Court today over-ruled the Federal Communications Commission and put a stamp of legality on most radio and television give-away programs.

Narcotics Commissioner Anslinger says a million dollars worth of heroin..smuggled in from Communist China.. has been seized in San Fransisco. Eight persons were arrested.

And in Washington, General Hoyt Vandenbergh, former air force chief of staff, was buried in Arlington cemetery. The President and many of our present and past military leaders attended the last services.

In Berlin, the western powers and west Germany today agreed to refuse diplomatic recognition to Soviet Russia's East German satellite state.

The war in Indo-China has brought with it repercussions throughout the world..particularly on the French people and the French government. Tonight I asked my colleague David Schoenbrun, in Paris, to record the situation as he sees it:

(runs 6;25 ending.. This is DS recording in Paris)

This is EM. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

But first here is Bob Dixon.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, April 5, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The war in Indochina has brought with it repercussions thruout the world, particularly on the French people and the French Government. So tonite I asked my colleague, David Schoenbrun, in Paris to record the situation as he sees it.

SCHOENBRUN: The French Government has been warned that the Communists are preparing a last desperate assault on the bastion of Dienbienphu. The message from the High Command at Hanoi said that the full fury of the new offensive must be expected momentarily and that planes are urgently needed, bombers and transports, to drop fire bombs on the enemy and plasma for the French, whose wounded cannot be evacuated. The American Ambassador to Paris, Douglas Dillon, has assured the French that at least two dozen more B-26s would be rushed with all speed to the Indochinese front. He was called in to report to the French Prime Minister during a restrictive council meeting late last nite in an unprecedented appearance of a foreign envoy at a Cabinet session. The Premier/~~thanked~~ thanked him and replied, "there must not be a moment's delay. Every plane is needed now, in this last crucial stage of the battle." There are only two or three weeks left before the summer monsoons swamp the Vietnam jungle and both sides are fighting against the skies. One to win before the rains stop all movement, the other to hold until rescue comes from the clouds.

The French will not retreat from Dienbienphu. They call it the Verdun of Vietnam; and the planes that drop their supplies are being called the modern taxis of the Marne. This avocation of the great names of World War I, the heroism of Verdun -- still the greatest battle ever fought in the history of warfare -- and the spirit of the taxicab army that rushed to the River Marne to break the back of the German offensive, these images have again gripped the hearts of the people of France, who so often in history have risen to great occasions to find a new national unity on the brink of disaster. But will they do it again? Can they do it again, after the terrible blood-lettings that have drained France this century. This is an agonizing question tonite for France and for her allies, for this country is the linchpin in the complex machine called the Atlantic Alliance. The driving power of this alliance comes from the United States, but the alliance itself will come apart if this vital link of France cracks or pulls away. And there are all too dangerous signs tonite that the strain is near the cracking point.

The men in Dienbienphu cannot fight on indefinitely without sleep, as they have the last five days and nites, in that inferno. France itself cannot go on indefinitely trying to hold the worldwide empire together under attack from foe and friend alike. Tempers here are very near the breaking point in Paris. Never in the history of the French Republic has there been so shocking a scene as yesterday's riots in the shadow of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, when extreme Right-wing demonstrators attacked the Prime Minister and Defense Minister, who had come there to honor the soldiers of Indochina.

A weak French Government has paid dearly for its failure to assert authority. Marshal Juin, France's highest-ranking soldier, defied this Government publicly, criticized its weakness and its policy of sponsoring European union and then refused to answer a summons from the Premier to explain his insubordination. Belatedly, Premier Laniel acted to strip the Marshal of his national functions. That was the cause of the rioting yesterday by Juin's supporters. But the Marshal still has an international function: Commander of the vital central sector of the European front - and the Government has not removed him from that post. The Marshal called upon the Premier today, as the Council of the North Atlantic Alliance was meeting to decide what action to take in his case. I learned from the highest sources that the NATO Council decided that France itself, this Government, must take responsibility for its own commander, must either ask for Juin's dismissal or persuade him to resign. NATO will not do it. The Government up to this moment has remained silent, but not the Marshal. He has just issued his own communique, announcing (and I quote): "Satisfaction has been given to Marshal Juin, who could not envisage resigning under present circumstances." The statement from his office went on to explain that the Marshal before resigning wants to be sure that he'll be replaced by another French general with the same full command of air, sea and ground forces in the center of Western Europe. Only the weakest kind of democracy could invite such assumption of authority by a soldier. And it must be said that this Government of Premier Joseph Laniel has lacked authority for many months. It has hesitated to take any positive action on a number of vital national issues, notably the European Army, a constant cause of friction between France and the United States, to say nothing of France's neighbors, Belgium, Holland and Germany, who have ratified the European Army treaty and are marking time, waiting for France. The closest friends of France and some members of the Government itself are highly critical of the Prime Minister's indecision. One high-ranking diplomat, a long-time friend of France, told a Cabinet minister recently: "You have a perfect right to change your mind and to reject the European Army concept now if you desire. But you do not have a right not to have a mind about it at all. Say yes or say no, which befits a great nation, but greatness is not built on perhaps."

Tonite all that can be said by the closest friends of France is that this Government has no policy other than perhaps, maybe, wait and see. The world has been waiting, trying to see what France is going to do, for a very long time. It is impossible tonite to answer that question. Another question must be asked: How long will the world go on waiting? Secretary of State Dulles, President Eisenhower have given indications very recently that at least one part of the world is not going to wait forever.

This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

It would seem from the report of my colleague David Schoenbrun that the people of France - not unlike others - are growing impatient over the inaction of the present government. Alfred North Whitehead once remarked:"We can not always think first, and act afterwards. From the moment of birth we are immersed in action, and can only fitfully guide it by taking thought."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says the Chinese Communists are coming "awful close" to the kind of open aggression that might call for our "massive retaliation." Testifying before a House committee, on the war in Indo-China, the Secretary said: we have freshly verified information that "members of the Chinese military establishment" are operating anti-aircraft guns at Dien Bien Phu. We know there are a score of Chinese technical advisers in Indo-China under command of a Chinese Communist general at staff headquarters. Representative Morano of Connecticut asked: "Doesn't this mean the active participation that you said would bring retaliation on the Chinese mainland?" Mr. Dulles replied: "I said if the Chinese sent their red armies into Indo-China it would be apt to produce action which might not be confined to Indo-China. Technically, they have not done the thing I defined. They're coming awful close to it." In answer to another question, the Secretary said we are not committed to send American troops to Indo-China. The French foreign ministry says Mr. Dulles' testimony on the Chinese is "generally correct but incomplete."

The French command today ordered their planes into an allout attack on an estimated 20-thousand Communist troops reported to be on the way to Dien Bien Phu as reinforcements. We'll hear a report on this situation in a few minutes.

Secretary Dulles told the House committee that the development of the hydrogen bomb makes the allied system of global security "more essential than ever." And in London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that our hydrogen bomb tests "have increased the chance of world peace rather than world war." Sir Winston said he believes hydrogen bomb production is now underway in the United States on a large scale and in Russia, to a lesser degree. He said the Soviet Union is much closer on our heels in hydrogen bomb production than they were in making atomic bombs. And he revealed a secret agreement made in 1943 with the late President Roosevelt. Both men said their countries would never use the atomic bomb against the other. They agreed not to use it against a third party without consultation. Sir Winston charged that when the Atlee government was in power it lost for Britain the right of control and even information on the bomb. Mr. Atlee said this was due to the McMahon act passed by the Congress. And today the White House said the agreement mentioned by Sir Winston is "not in effect at the Present time."

Tonight, a half hour from now at 8:30 p.m. eastern time, the President will be heard over many of these stations clarifying some of the questions raised by the hydrogen bomb.

The United Nations disarmament commission will meet Friday to renew its work on arms reduction.

And Israel has called on the Security Council to take action on its charge of armistice violations committed by Jordan. Last week Lebanon asked for U.N. action against Israel.

Attorney General Brownell is going to speak to the nation Friday night on his proposals for more laws to strengthen our defenses against "the communist conspiracy."

And tomorrow the McCarthy committee temporarily headed by Senator Mundt will again question Samuel Sears of Boston who has been chosen as the committee's temporary counsel for the McCarthy-Army investigation. Another Boston lawyer, James M. Walsh, said today that Mrs. McCarthy had recommended Sears to support the McCarthy side in a debate that was later cancelled.

The Supreme Court today over-ruled the Federal Communications Commission and put a stamp of legality on most radio and television give-away programs.

Narcotics Commissioner Anslinger says a million dollars worth of heroin smuggled in from Communist China has been seized in San Francisco. Eight persons were arrested.

And in Washington, General Hoyt Vandenbergh, former air force chief of staff, was buried in Arlington cemetery. The President and many of our present and past military leaders attended the last services.

In Berlin, the western powers and west Germany today agreed to refuse diplomatic recognition to Soviet Russia's East German satellite state.

The war in Indo-China has brought with it repercussions throughout the world - particularly on the French people and the French government. Tonight I asked my colleague David Schoenbrun, in Paris, to record the situation as he sees it:
SCHOENBRUN: The French Government has been warned that the Communists are preparing a last desperate assault on the bastion of Dien Bien Phu. The message from the High Command at Hanoi said that the full fury of the new offensive must be expected momentarily and that planes are urgently needed, bombers and transports, to drop fire bombs on the enemy and plasma for the French, whose wounded cannot be evacuated. The American Ambassador to Paris, Douglas Dillon, has assured the French that at least two dozen more B-26's would be rushed with all speed to the Indochinese front. He was called in to report to the French Prime Minister during a restrictive council meeting late last night in an unprecedented appearance of a foreign envoy at a Cabinet session. The Premier thanked him and replied, "there must not be a moment's delay. Every plane is needed now, in this last crucial stage of the battle." There are only two or three weeks left before the summer monsoons swamp the Vietnam jungle and both sides are fighting against the skies. One to win before the rains stop all movement, the other to hold until rescue comes from the clouds. The French will not retreat from Dien Bien Phu. They call it the Verdun of Vietnam; and the planes that drop their supplies are being called the modern taxis of the Marne. This avocation of the great names of World War I, the heroism of Verdun - still the greatest battle ever fought in the history of warfare and the spirit of the taxicab army that rushed to the River Marne to break the back of the German offensive, these images have again gripped the hearts of the people of France, who so often in history have risen to great occasions to find a new national unity on the brink of disaster. But will they do it again? Can they do it again, after the terrible blood-lettings that have drained France this century. This is an agonizing question tonight for France and for her allies, for this country is the linchpin in the complex machine called the Atlantic Alliance. The driving power of this alliance comes from the United States, but the alliance itself will come apart if this vital link of France cracks or pulls away. And there are all too dangerous signs tonight that the strain is near the cracking point. The men in Dien Bien Phu cannot fight on indefinitely without sleep, as they have the last five days and nights in that inferno. France itself cannot go on indefinitely trying to hold the worldwide empire together under attack from foe and friend alike. Tempers here are very near the breaking point in Paris. Never in the history of the French Republic has there been so shocking a scene as yesterday's riots in the shadow of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, when extreme Right-wing demonstrators attacked the Prime Minister and Defense Minister, who had come there to honor the soldiers of Indochina. A weak French Government has paid dearly for its failure to assert authority. Marshal Juin, France's highest-ranking soldier, defied this Government publicly, criticized its weakness and its policy of sponsoring European union and then refused to answer a summons from the Premier to explain his insubordination. Belatedly, Premier Laniel acted to strip the Marshal of his national functions. That was the cause of the rioting yesterday by Juin's supporters. But the Marshal still has an international function: Commander of the vital central sector of the European front - and the Government has not removed him from that post. The Marshal called upon the Premier today, as the Council of the North Atlantic Alliance was meeting to decide what action to take in his case. I learned from the highest sources that the NATO Council decided that France itself, this Government, must take responsibility for its own commander, must either ask for Juin's dismissal or persuade him to resign. NATO will not do it. The government up to this moment has remained silent, but not the Marshal. He has just issued his own communique announcing (and I quote): "Satisfaction has been given to Marshal Juin, who could not envisage resigning under present circumstances." The statement from his office went on to explain that the Marshal before resigning wants to be sure that he'll be replaced by another French general with the same full command of air, sea and ground forces in the center of Western Europe. Only the weakest kind of democracy could invite such assumption of authority by a soldier. And it must be said that this Government of Premier Joseph Laniel has lacked authority for many months. It has hesitated to take any positive action on a number of vital national issues, notably the European Army, a constant cause of friction between France and the United States, to say nothing of France's neighbors, Belgium, Holland and Germany, who have ratified the European Army treaty and are marking time, waiting for France. The closest friends of France and some members of the Government itself are highly critical of the Prime Minister's indecision. One high-ranking diplomat, a longtime friend of France, told a Cabinet minister recently: "You have a perfect right to change your mind and to reject the European Army concept now if you desire. But you do not have a right not to have a mind about it at all. Say yes or no, which befits a great nation, but greatness is not built on perhaps." Tonight all that can be said by the closest friends of France is that this Government has no policy other than perhaps, maybe, wait and see. The world has been waiting, trying to see what France is going to do, for a very long time. It is impossible tonight to answer that question. Another question must be asked: How long will the world go on waiting? Secretary of State Dulles, President Eisenhower have given indications very recently that at least one part of the world is not going to wait forever. This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris!

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem from the report of my colleague David Schoenbrun that the people of France - not unlike others - are growing impatient over the inaction of the present government. Alfred North Whitehead once remarked: "We cannot always think first and act afterwards. From the moment of birth we are immersed in action and can only fitfully guide it by taking thought."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday April 6, 1954.

This is the news:

The French today carried out their heaviest air attacks of the Indo-China war..in an attempt to aid their surrounded garrison at Dien Bien Phu. And in at least six capitals of the free world, there were consultations on some sort of American proposal, to prevent new victories for the Communists in southeast Asia. The State Department says Secretary Dulles has conferred with representatives of Great Britain, France, Australia, New zealand, Thailand and the Phillippines. We are not told what has been discussed. But the British Foreign Office says it is consdering an American proposal, for a declaration aimed at protecting Indo-China, and the rest of Southeast Asia, from further Communist aggression. Australian sources say Mr. Dulles wants a firm declaration of support for France .. as much as necessary to preserve Indo-China from Communist domination.

~~It is suggested that this could be something like the declaration by the 16 nations that fought in Korea, warning that a break in the armistice may might mean a spread of that war.~~

The French have decided to make an urgent appeal to Washington for 50 heavy bombers, and other war materials that are needed in Indo-China now.

And on the Senate floor, Majority Leader Knowland said: the free nations of the world cannot ignore or sidestep any Chinese Communist entry--in force--into the Indo-China war. Knowland says our allies, who have received much aid from us, must now stand up and be counted on their intentions in Southeast Asia. He says they cannot stand on the sidelines while we assume the major burden as we did in Korea.

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington state called on the President to tell Congress, in person, just what his policy is for Southeast Asia. Then, said Jackson, an informed Congress will do everything possible to back up the president. Democratic Senator Kennedy of [redacted]t Massachusetts said the fighting is hopeless unless it is recognized that the objective is to free people and not to maintain French colonialism. He said Secretary Dulles' recent call for "united action" in Indo-China indicates we would take the ultimate step to prevent a Communist victory. [redacted]

The President today asked Congress for one ~~million~~ billion 133-million dollars for military and economic aid for Indo China..the largest single item in his new foreign aid budget. The total budget is roughly three and a half billion... smallest since the foreign aid program started in 1948.

Samuel P. Sears of Boston, today voluntarily resigned as special counsel for the Senate committee that will investigate the McCarthy-Army row. Sears said:"I am completely satisfied in my own mind, that I am thoroughly competent to conduct the inquiry objectively, impartially, and in fairness to all. However, that is not the test. The investigation"...he said..."must go forward, not only with the full confidence of those involved but, perhaps more important, with absolute confidence of the people." There had been various charges that in the past Sears had revealed a bias in favor of Senator McCarthy. His resignation was accepted unanimously by the six committee members, who must now seek a new counsel.

The president today chose Deputy Budget Director Rowland R. Hughes to be budget director, replacing Joseph M. Dodge, who is returning to the Detroit bank as board chairman. And the President nominated ten Republicans as federal judges in seven [redacted]t states.

The Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company today told a Senate committee, that there will be "further substantial increases" in coffee prices. A spokesman says this will raise the price of the cheapest grade above $1.30 a pound..its now a [redacted] $1.09. A. and P. raised coffee prices five cents a pound yesterday.

~~Here in New York, the nation's largest stevedoring firm and its president pleaded guilty to bribing steamship company officials to obtain business. The president, Frank W. Noland, interrupted the trial in its second day to plead guilty.~~

General Bradley writes in the Staurday Evening Post that Russia is dangerously close to winning a major strategic victory in Europe.. because of the delay in incorporating German divisions into the European army. General Bradley says we now have available enough heavy equipment for six German divisions..and the west Germans are ready. Bradley says he's convinced a large majority of the French people are not opposed to German rearmament.

The North Atlantic Treaty council today informed French Marshal Juin that he has violated NATO policy BY CRITICIZING the proposed European defense community. Delegates from the 14 North Atlantic powers said Juin's statements were "contrary to the explicit and repeated declarations OF policy issued by the council under whose AUTHORITY all NATO commanders hold their appointments."

We've had some disagreement today on whether or not a 1945 atomic agreement, between the late President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill is still in effect. Former President Truman says it is. But Senator Hickenlooper and White House Secretary Hagerty say no. Today Sir Winston told the House of Commons that British planes were permitted to fly over the sites of our hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific, a few hours after the tests. Hagerty says this was the same courtesy the British gave us after their nuclear tests in Australia. Sir Winston's announcement came as the British press was still condemning his attitude in yesterday's bomb debate. For a recorded summary of that, here is our chief European correspondent Howard K. Smith from London:

(runs 5;25

This is HKS recording from London)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the wor d for today. But first here is Bob Dixon.

Sir Winston Churchill is under heavy attack. And it could ~~well~~ be that he is confronted with the most serious challenge of his political career. Fifty Six years ago, Mr. Churchill observed that "nothing in life is so exhilarating as to be shot at without result." 14 years ago in a more temperate moment he said:"The only guide to a man is his conscience; the only shield to his memory is the sincereity of his actions." Nothing that has happened before or since has apparently changed Mr. Churchill's views.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, April 6, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... Today Sir Winston Churchill told the House of Commons that British planes were permitted to fly over the sites of our hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific a few hours after the West. Mr. Hagerty says this was the same courtesy the British gave us after their nuclear tests in Australia. Sir Winston Churchill's announcement came as the British press was still condemning his attitude in yesterday's bomb debate in the House of Commons. For a recorded summary of that, here is our chief European correspondent, Howard K. Smith, speaking from London.

SMITH: Today has been BudgetDay in Britain, the day the Chancellor of the Exchequer tells Parliament and the people how much of their money he's going to take from them in the coming fiscal year. Usually it's a day of high excitement, but today few people have been interested. For all its importance, the budget comes to the people as anticlimax after yesterday's session of Parliament, one of the strangest and most heart-rending days in the recent history of the House of Commons. It is all that people here are talking about, still, twenty-four hours later. The debate yesterday was on the hydrogen bomb. The purpose of the debate was to make a demonstration of national unity on a grave issue. In fact, it turned into one of the worst-tempered, most tumultuous sessions of the House of Commons since the years of war. There is wide agreement that during it the prestige of the Prime Minister, Sir Winston Churchill, suffered one of the worst blows of his political career. The debate was held at the insistence of the leader of the Labor opposition, the former Prime Minister, Clement Attlee. Attlee wanted the debate in order to erase the impression of national division caused by some nasty exchanges in the House of Commons on the H-bomb issue last week.

In opening the debate, Attlee made a speech which, by common consent, was about the best he had ever made. He called for national unity and the burying of partisan feeling on this momentous issue. He called on the Prime Minister to take an immediate initiative to call Big Three talks at the top level and he ended by expressing faith in Churchill, whom he called "the greatest of the Big Three".

Churchill then rose to answer. He quickly revealed that he was not in the same frame of mind. He was obviously still angry over last week's exchanges in the House of Commons, when the opposition had belabored him for not asserting Britain's demands to the U.S. Government for more information about the bomb. Labor newspapers on that occasion had severely criticized Churchill, one of them saying, "He obviously had no more influence with America and was clearly too old to take an initiative or to lead Britain." So, yesterday, still smarting from those attacks, Churchill built his speech around the proposition that it was not his fault that Britain could get no information about the bomb. He had, he said, signed a secret agreement during the war with President Roosevelt, assuring Britain of access to atomic information; but, he said, the Labor Government under Attlee, after the war, had let this agreement lapse. Attlee hopped to his feet and denied this. Churchill insisted on it, and the House broke into a tumult of charges and countercharges that drowned out speech.

As the storm proceeded, it became clear that Churchill was getting the worst of it. Laborites kept shouting to him to resign. But the Conservatives in the House settled down to silence. They sat frozen-faced, giving no support to their leader. One Tory member of Parliament, Sir Robert Boothby, demonstratively stomped out of the chamber in protest against Churchill's standpoint. "The opposition's anger," as the London Times reporter put it, "gradually yielded to a weary contempt which proved deadlier to Churchill than the sharpest of their criticisms." No one cared very much about the issue the Prime Minister had raised, a long-past squabble about the outdated atom bomb. What was needed, it was felt on both sides of the House, was a lead in the present age of the hydrogen bomb. The general impression was that, tho the nation was waiting to be united and given a lead, the Prime Minister had divided the nation, single-handed, and had failed to point a way.

Here are some of the harsh comments that have appeared in the London press today. The London Times writes: "A debate that opened on a grave, nonpartisan note by Attlee degenerated into a sterile, angry, pitiful wrangle - and the responsibility was the Prime Minister's." Says the Manchester Guardian: "The debate was a disaster, and the agent of disaster was Winston Churchill." The middle-road News Chronicle writes: "It is hard to say it, but yesterday/Sir Winston Churchill turned what should have been a council of the nation into as bitter a parliamentary brawl as observers can remember." Only one Conservative paper actively defended the Prime Minister. That was the Daily Express, owned and run by Churchill's great personal friend, Lord Beaverbrook. And even it wrote: "The Prime Minister's speech has put him in his most critical position since the last elections."

A curious feature in all this adverse comment is that no newspaper dares to come out and say what is obviously on all their minds - that is, that with this setback occurring in his eightieth year the old warrior's political career is virtually finished. The reason for their caution about this probably is the fact that many of these same editorial columns have on five distinct occasions over the past fifty years agreed that Winston Churchill's career was finished. After the fifth irretrievable collapse of his fortunes, Churchill became, in 1940, Prime Minister and probably the greatest man of his time.

This is Howard K. Smith reporting from London.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French today carried out their heaviest air attacks of the Indo-China war in an attempt to aid their surrounded garrison at Dien Bien Phu. And in at least six capitals of the free world there were consultations on some sort of American proposal to prevent new victories for the Communists in southeast Asia. The State Department says Secretary Dulles has conferred with representatives of Great Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand, Thailand and the Philippines. We are not told what has been discussed. But the British Foreign Office says it is considering an American proposal for a declaration aimed at protecting Indo-China and the rest of Southeast Asia from further Communist aggression. Australian sources say Mr. Dulles wants a firm declaration of support for France as much as necessary to preserve Indo-China from Communist domination. The French have decided to make an urgent appeal to Washington for 50 heavy bombers and other war materials that are needed in Indo-China now.

And on the Senate floor, Majority Leader Knowland said: the free nations of the world cannot ignore or sidestep any Chinese Communist entry in force into the Indo-China war. Knowland says our allies, who have received much aid from us, must now stand up and be counted on their intentions in Southeast Asia. He says they cannot stand on the sidelines while we assume the major burden as we did in Korea.

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State called on the President to tell Congress, in person, just what his policy is for Southeast Asia. Then, said Jackson, an informed Congress will do everything possible to back up the president. Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts said the fighting is hopeless unless it is recognized that the objective is to free people and not to maintain French colonialims. He said Secretary Dulles' recent call for "united action" in Indo-China indicates we would take the ultimate step to prevent a Communist victory.

The President today asked Congress for one billion 133-million dollars for military and economic aid for Indo China the largest single item in his new foreign aid budget. The total budget is roughly three and a half billion - smallest since the foreign aid program started in 1948.

Samuel P. Sears of Boston today voluntarily resigned as special counsel for the Senate committee that will investigate the McCarthy-Army row. Sears said: "I am completely satisfied in my own mind that I am thoroughly competent to conduct the inquiry objectively, impartially and in fairness to all. However, this is not the test. The investigation" he said, "must go forward not only with the full confidence of those involved but, perhaps more important, with absolute confidence of the people." There had been various charges that in the past Sears had revealed a bias in favor of Senator McCarthy. His resignation was accepted unanimously by the six committee members who must now seek a new counsel.

The president today chose Deputy Budget Director Rowland R. Hughes to be budget director, replacing Joseph M. Dodge who is returning to the Detroit bank as board chairman. And the President nominated ten Republicans as federal judges in seven states.

The Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company today told a Senate committee that there will be "further substantial increases" in coffee prices. A spokesman says this will raise the price of the cheapest grade above $1.30 a pound - it's now $1.09. A. and P. raised coffee prices five cents a pound yesterday.

General Bradley writes in the Saturday Evening Post that Russia is dangerously close to winning a major strategic victory in Europe because of the delay in incorporating German divisions into the European army. General Bradley says we now have available enough heavy equipment for six German divisions and the west Germans are ready. Bradley says he's convinced a large majority of the French people are not opposed to German rearmament.

The North Atlantic Treaty council today informed French Marshal Juin that he has violated NATO policy by criticizing the proposed European defense community.

Delegates from the 14 North Atlantic powers said Juin's statements were "contrary to the explicit and repeated declarations of policy issued by the council under whose authority all NATO commanders hold their appointments."

We've had some disagreement today on whether or not a 1945 atomic agreement, between the late President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill is still in effect. Former President Truman says it is. But Senator Hickenlooper and White House Secretary Hagerty say no. Today Sir Winston told the House of Commons that British planes were permitted to fly over the sites of our hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific, a few hours after the tests. Hagerty says this was the same courtesy the British gave us after their nuclear tests in Australia. Sir Winston's announcement came as the British press was still condemning his attitude in yesterday's bomb debate. For a recorded summary of that, here is our chief European correspondent Howard K. Smith from London:

SMITH: Today has been Budget Day in Britain, the day the Chancellor of the Exchequer tells Parliament and the people how much of their money he's going to take from them in the coming fiscal year. Usually it's a day of high excitement, but today few people have been interested. For all its importance, the budget comes to the peoole as anticlimax after yesterday's session of Parliament, one of the strangest and most heart-rending days in the recent history of the House of Commons. It is all that people here are talking about, still, twenty-four hours later. The debate yesterday was on the hydrogen bomb. The purpose of the debate was to make a demonstration of national unity on a grave issue. In fact, it turned into one of the worst-tempered, most tumultuous sessions of the House of Commons since the years of war. There is wide agreement that during it the prestige of the Prime Minister, Sir Winston Churchill, suffered one of the worst blows of his political career. The debate was held at the insistence of the leader of the Labor opposition, the former Prime Minister, Clement Attlee. Attlee wanted the debate in order to erase the impression of national division caused by some nasty exchanges in the House of Commons on the H-bomb issue last week.

In opening the debate, Attlee made a speech which, by common consent, was about the best he had ever made. He called for national unity and the burying of partisan feeling on this momentous issue. He called on the Prime Minister to take an immediate initiative to call Big Three talks at the top level and he ended by expressing faith in Churchill, whom he called "the greatest of the Big Three."

Churchill then rose to answer. He quickly revealed that he was not in the same frame of mind. He was obviously still angry over last week's exchanges in the House of Commons, when the opposition had belabored him for not asserting Britain's demands to the U.S. Government for more information about the bomb. Labor newspapers on that occasion had severely criticized Churchill, one of them saying, "He obviously had no more influence with America and was clearly too old to take an initiative or to lead Britain." So, yesterday, still smarting from those attacks, Churchill built his speech around the proposition that it was not his fault that Britain could get no information about the bomb. He had, he said, signed a secret agreement during the war with President Roosevelt, assuring Britain of access to atomic information; but, he said, the Labor Government under Attlee, after the war, had let this agreement lapse. Attlee hopped to his feet and denied this. Churchill insisted on it, and the House broke into a tumult of charges and countercharges that drowned out speech. As the storm proceeded, it became clear that Churchill was getting the worst of it. Laborites kept shouting to him to resign. But the Conservatives in the House settled down to silence. They sat frozen-faced, giving no support to their leader. One Tory member of Parliament, Sir Robert Boothby, demonstratively stomped out of the chamber in protest against Churchill's standpoint. "The opposition's anger," as the London Times reporter put it, "gradually yielded to a weary contempt which proved deadlier to Churchill than the sharpest of their criticisms." No one cared very much about the issue the Prime Minister had raised, a long-past squabble about the outdated atom bomb. What was needed, it was felt on both sides of the House, was a lead in the present age of the hydrogen bomb. The general impression was that, thought the nation was waiting to be united and given a lead, the Prime Minister had divided the nation, single-handed, and had failed to point a way. Here are some of the harsh comments that have appeared in the London Press today. The London Times writes: "A debate that opened on a grave, nonpartisan note by Attlee degenerated into a sterile, angry, pitiful wrangle - and the responsibility was the Prime Minister's." Says the Manchester Guardian: "The debate was a disaster, and the agent of disaster was Winston Churchill." The middle-road News Chronicle writes: "It is hard to say it, but yesterday Sir Winston Churchill turned what should have been a council of the nation into as bitter a parliamentary brawl as observers can remember." Only one Conservative paper actively defended the Prime Minister. That was the Daily Express, owned and run by Churchill's great personal friend, Lord Beaverbrook. And even it wrote: "The Prime Minister's speech has put him in his most critical position since the last elections." A curious feature in all this adverse comment is that no newspaper dares to come out and say what is obviously on all their minds - that is, that with this setback occurring in his eightieth year the old warrior's political career is virtually finished. The reason for their caution about this probably is the fact that many of these same editorial columns have on five distinct occasions over the past fifty years agreed that Winston Churchill's career was finished. After the fifth irretrievable collapse of his fortunes, Churchill became, in 1940, Prime Minister and probably the greatest man of his time. This is Howard K. Smith reporting from London.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Sir Winston Churchill is under heavy attack. And it could be that he is confronted with the most serious challenge of his political career. Fifty six years ago, Mr. Churchill observed that "nothing in life is so exhilarating as to be shot at without result." 14 years ago in a more temperate moment he said: "The only guide to a man is his conscience; the only shield to his memory is the sincerety of his actions Nothing that has happened before or since has apparently changed Mr. Churchill's views. - Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday April 7, 1954

This is the news:

The French have parachuted strong reinforcements into Dien Bien Phu. As the ground lull continued for another day, French airmen reported a continuing enemy buildup for an attack. And in Paris, the Foreign Ministry reveals it has again asked Washington for more aid: planes and aviation material. The French cabinet today decided to take no action that might annoy either Russia or Communist China, before the April 26 conference at Geneva. That means no decision now on any concerted warning to the Chinese, about further interference in Indo-China..and no action on the European army plan. General de Gaulle said today that the European plan would hurt France..he says his country already has abdicated to the wishes of the United States. But Luxembourg today ratified the European Defense Community, to become the fourth nation to do so. Only France and Italy have not yet acted.

While the French..and the British..showed no disposition to hurry on any decision for "united action" in Indo-China and ~~the~~ Southeast Asia, both the President and Secretary of State Dulles again made it clear, that they consider this a primary problem. The President says what to do about Indo-China is of the utmost importance to the free world..and is getting more attention, than almost any other thing. We cannot afford further losses to the Communists in this area of the world. The consequences of a Communist victory here, and elsewhere in Southeast Asia, would be incalculable. And Secretary of State Dulles says: the potential danger to the free world in this area is very great, and there exists the risk of a great disaster. He told a group of Republican women: we are trying to develop a united will among friendly nations interested in the area, that would make less necessary the need for united action.

54685

Atomic Energy Commissioner Straws says the President has ordered "greatly increased production" of atomic weapons..including the hydrogen bomb. This was made known shortly after the announcement of a third nuclear explosion at the Pacific testing grounds, yesterday...presumably another hydrogen bomb. And the President told reporters today our bombs are now big enough to meet military requirements. We do not intend to see how big we can make them. [redacted]

The President was asked today about a charge by Senator McCarthy that research on the H-bomb was deliberately stalled for 18 mnths.

McCarthy asked: "If there were no Communists in our government, why did we delay?" The President said he never heard of any delay. Former President Truman, who ordered the bomb [redacted] experiment, says: there was no delay. The order was issued as soon as the scientists were ready to go to work. Senator Hickenlooper, the former chairman of the joint congressional atomic energy commission, says he doesn't have the least idea what McCarthy is talking about. The presnt chairman, Representative Cole, says there was a delay but there was nothing sinsister about it. Committee member Van Zandt of Pennsylvania says if McCarthy has such evidence he should present it to the committee. Democratic member Price says the McCarthy charge is absolutely ridiculous.

The charge was made last night on my television program. And today, Joseph C. Harsch, of the Christian Science Monitor and NBC asked the President if he would care to say anything about "the loyalty and patriotism of Edward R. Murrow." Mr. Eisenhower said: He has known this man for many years.. always thought of him as a friend. [redacted]

The President also reported that he finds many day-to-day encouragements in the economic picture: the rising unemployment curve shows very definite signs of flattening out. The important thing is for the people not to get panicky.

The Senate Investigations subcommittee today chose a new counsel to conduct the McCarthy-Army inquiry. He is Ray H. Jenkins..57.. [redacted] of Knoxville, Tennessee. He's a trial lawyer.. 1940 campaign manager in Tennessee for Wendell Willkie.. a Republican..veteran of World war one. Jenkins told reporters: "I have no record, publicly or otherwise, in respect to Senator McCarthy or what is called McCarthyism. I have no preconceived [redacted] notions on the merits of this controversy. My mind is completely open." He said he would "present the facts without favoritism." Committee members emphasize that [redacted] Jenkins did not volunteer for the job. And Acting Chairman Mundt says the hearings will start two weeks from today.

Edward R. Murrow: April 7, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Authentic talk about the realities of power is as rare as it is important, and General Omar Bradley's article in the Saturday Evening Post, called IS RUSSIA WINNING THE BATTLE OF EUROPE, is a useful pronouncement on this theme. The article is not a disclosure. It is an analysis. But it is an analysis by a man bracketed with President Eisenhower as one of the two ablest soldiers of the last war. The answer to the question IS RUSSIA WINNING THE BATTLE OF EUROPE is,not yet, and the West does not need to lose it. Germans still can be equipped to take part in the defense of their country, and hence of Western Europe, which General Bradley is sure is an essential factor of adequate defense.

General Bradley does not give up on ratification of the European Defense Community, and he tells his countrymen there are one or two contributions the United States still can make to help bring it about.

Before reporting some of the main points in General Bradley's analysis I want to repeat an anecdote he tells. At the NATO conference of 1952 in Lisbon, France was faced with the necessity of raising twelve and a third divisions for the European Army, if it was to be somewhat stronger than Western Germany with twelve divisions. The issue was, who was to foot the bill. The French Premier at the time was Edgar Faure. Monsieur Faure couldn't raise the twelve and a third divisions without increasing his military budget, and he couldn't increase his military budget, without being overthrown. The American Defense Secretary at Lisbon was Mr. Lovett, and he couldn't scrape together another unspent nickel for France, from the funds Congress had voted. There the matter rested, General Bradley writes, when he received a mysterious summons to a dinner arranged by his aide, by the aide of his opposite number in France, and by an American radio correspondent. I can readily guess that the radio correspondent was David Schoenbrun of C.B.S. "I discovered" writes General Bradley, "that the other guest was none other than the Premier of France.... It was the first opportunity Monsieur Faure had had, to sit down with a military man in an atmosphere of private conversation, rather than the tension of a formal conference to discuss military necessities. At the end of the evening Monsieur Faure sighed and said: 'Very well, I shall announce tomorrow morning, that we shall raise the twelve and a third divisions, and increase the military budget. But I must tell you, that my government will fall within thirty days.'" It did fall - four days after the close of the conference. General Bradley praises Premier Faure for courage and self-sacrifice. For though he fell, France has held to the decision he made. The inference is that where there is courage like this, there can be progress like this.

General Bradley tells Americans that the defense of Western Europe is almost of as much concern to the United States as the defense of New York, Detroit or the Panama Canal. That is because its resources in most respects are greater than those of the entire communist bloc. "Western Europe, free, tips the scales in our favor" he says. "Western Europe, conquered, weights the balance in terms of communism."

He points out that Western Europe cannot again be traded for time, as it was in World War Two. Another liberation of Europe, in the atomic-hydrogen age, he bluntly calls a strategic impossibility.

He also disposes of the idea that super-modern weapons can take the place of plenty of ground troops in defending Europe. "Tactical atomic weapons" he says, "are of no real value without sufficient ground strength to force an invading army to mass itself into a suitable target." The sufficient ground strength, he points out, will only be realized when the Germans are armed.

He answers the arguments heard in France against the E.D.C., though he says it is his information that 70 percent of the French people are not opposed to German re-armament as such. One argument is the nationalist one that France would lose its historic identity in a federation. But all nations, he shows, now must accept limitations on their sovereignty. The United States has to keep its policies in accord with those of thirteen NATO allies, and its military strategy subject to direction by NATO's standing group, and NATO's military command.

France's fear of German domination he finds understandable, but thinks the least danger comes from German power limited to a European Army. And the danger of Germany dragging Western Europe into a war is less, he argues, if Germany is in the European Army than if it is taken over disarmed by the Soviet Union.

The United States, General Bradley says, can help assure E.D.C. in two ways. It can increase its NATO commitment to fifty years, and it can give assurance to its allies in Europe about tactical atomic weapons. It can share atomic information with the ground commanders of our allies, and at least promise them tactical atomic weapons the instant war comes.

If France rejects the E.D.C. solution, General Bradley sees two alternatives. One is taking Germany into NATO, armed by us and the British, or by us alone. The other is the "agonizing re-appraisal" ending in peripheral defense. It is a look at these alternatives that leads General

Bradley to feel so strongly that the failure of E.D.C. would hand to the Soviet Union a major strategic victory without a single trigger being pulled.

General Bradley was talking about the need for greater unity with Western Europe. Here is something Lord Halifax once said on the subject: "There is no room in the modern world for easy indifference to the world's needs - we are all our brother's ~~keeper~~ keeper. And only by translating this truth into terms of daily life can we hope to establish true understanding between men and nations - and make the world more worthy of all the sacrifices that twice in a generation has been spent to save it."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French have parachuted strong reinforcements into Dien Bien Phu. As the ground lull continued for another day, French airmen reported a continuing enemy buildup for an attack. And in Paris, the Foreign Ministry reveals it has again asked Washington for more aid: planes and aviation material. The French cabinet today decided to take no action that might annoy either Russia or Communist China before the April 26 conference at Geneva. That means no decision now on any concerted warning to the Chinese about further interference in Indo-China and no action on the European army plan. General de Gaulle said today that the European plan would hurt France - he says his country already has abdicated to the wishes of the United States. But Luxembourg today ratified the European Defense Community to become the fourth nation to do so. Only France and Italy have not yet acted.

While the French and the British showed no disposition to hurry on any decision for "united action" in Indo-China and Southeast Asia both the President and Secretary of State Dulles again made it clear that they consider this a primary problem. The President says what to do about Indo-China is of the utmost importance to the free world and is getting more attention than almost any other thing. We cannot afford further losses to the Communists in this area of the world. The consequences of a Communist victory here and elsewhere in Southeast Asia would be incalculable. And Secretary of State Dulles says: the potential danger to the free world in this area is very great and there exists the risk of a great disaster. He told a group of Republican women: we are trying to develop a united will among friendly nations interested in the area that would make less necessary the need for united action.

Atomic Energy Commissioner Straws says the President has ordered "greatly increased production" of atomic weapons including the hydrogen bomb. This was made known shortly after the announcement of a third nuclear explosion at the Pacific testing grounds yesterday presumably another hydrogen bomb. And the President told reporters today our bombs are now big enough to meet military requirements. We do not intend to see how big we can make them.

The President was asked today about a charge by Senator McCarthy that research on the H-bomb was deliberately stalled for 18 months. McCarthy asked: "If there were no Communists in our government, why did we delay?" The President said he never heard of any delay. Former President Truman, who ordered the bomb experiment, says: "there was no delay. The order was issued as soon as the scientists were ready to go to work." Senator Hickenlooper, the former chairman of the joint congressional atomic energy commission, says he doesn't have the least idea what McCarthy is talking about. The present chairman, Representative Cole, says there was a delay but there was nothing sinister about it. Committee member Van Zandt of Pennsylvania says if McCarthy has such evidence he should present it to the committee Democratic member Price says the McCarthy charge is absolutely ridiculous. The charge was made last night on my television program. And today, Joseph C. Harsch, of the Christian Science Minitor and NBC asked the President if he would care to say anything about "the loyalty and patriotism of Edward R. Murrow." Mr. Eisenhower said he has known this man for many years always thought of him as a friend.

The Senate Investigations subcommittee today chose a new counsel to conduct the McCarthy-Army inquiry. He is Ray H. Jenkins 57, of Knoxville, Tennessee. He's a trial lawyer 1940 campaign manager in Tennessee for Wendell Wilkie, a Republican, veteran of World War I. Jenkins told reporters: "I have no record, publicly or otherwise, in respect to Senator MCCarthy or what is called McCarthyism. I have no preconceived notions on the merits of this controversey. My mind is completely open." He said he would "present the facts without favoritism." Committee members emphasize that Jenkins did not volunteer for the job. And Acting Chairman Mundt says the hearings will start two weeks from today.

Authentic talk about the realities of power is as rare as it is important, and General Omar Bradley's article in the Saturday Evening Post, called IS RUSSIA WINNING THE BATTLE OF EUROPE, is a useful pronouncement on this theme. The article is not a disclosure. It is an analysis. But it is an analysis by a man bracketed with President Eisenhower as one of the two ablest soldiers of the last war. The answer to the question IS RUSSIA WINNING THE BATTLE OF EUROPE is, not yet, and the West does not need to lose it. Germans still can be equipped to take part in the defense of their country, and hence of Western Europe, which General Bradley is sure, is an essential factor of adequate defense. General Bradley does not give up on ratification of the European Defense Community, and he tells his countrymen there are one or two contributions the United States still can make to help bring it about. Before reporting some of the main points in General Bradley's analysis I want to repeat an anedcote he tells. At the NATO conference of 1952 in Lisbon, France was faced with the necessity of raising twelve and a third divisions for the European Army, if it was to be somewhat stronger than Western Germany with twelve divisions. The issue was, who was to foot the bill. The French Premier at the time was Edgar Faure. Monsieur Faure couldn't raise the twelve and a third divisions without increasing his military budget, and he couldn't increase his military budget without being overthrown. The American Defense Secretary at Lisbon was Mr. Lovett, and he couldn't scrape together another unspent nickel for France from the funds Congress had voted. There the matter rested, General Bradley writes, when he received a mysterious summons to a dinner arranged by his aide by the aide of his opposite number in France, and by an American radio correspondent. I can readily guess that the radio correspondent was David Schoenbrun of CBS. "I discovered" writes General Bradley, "that the other guest was none other than the Premier of France. It was the first opportunity Monsieur Faure had had to sit down with a military man in an atmosphere of private conversation rather than the tension of a formal conference to discuss military necessities. At the end of the evening Monsieur Faure sighed and said: 'Very well, I shall announce tomorrow morning that we shall raise the twelve and a third divisions, and increase the military budget. But I must tell you that my government will fall within thirty days.'" It did fall - four days after the close of the conference. General Bradley praises Premier Faure for courage and self-sacrifice. For though he fell, France has held to the decision he made. The inference is that where there is courage like this, there can be progress like this. General Bradley tells Americans that the defense of Western Europe is almost of as much concern to the United States as the defense of New York, Detroit or the Panama Canal. That is because its resources in most respects are greater than those of the entire communist bloc. "Western Europe, free, tips the scales in our favor" he says. "Western Europe, conquered, weights the balance in terms of communism." He points out that Western Europe cannot again be traded for time, as it was in World War Two. Another liberation of Europe, in the atomic-hydrogen age, he bluntly calls a strategic impossibility. He also disposes of the idea that super-modern weapons can take the place of plenty of ground troops in defending Europe. "Tactical atomic weapons" he says, "are of no real value without sufficient ground strength to force an invading army to mass itself into a suitable target." The sufficient ground strength, he points out, will only be realized when the Germans are armed.

He answers the arguments heard in France against the EDC though he says it is his information that 70 percent of the French people are not opposed to German re-armament as such. One argument is the nationalist one that France would lose its historic identity in a federation. But all nations, he shows, now must accept limitations on their sovereignty. The United States has to keep its policies in accord with those of thirteen NATO allies, and its military strategy subject to direction by NATO's standing group, and NATO's military command. France's fear of German domination he finds understandable, but thinks the least danger comes from German power limited to a European Army. And the danger of Germany dragging Western Europe into a war is less, he argues, if Germany is in the European Army than if it is taken over disarmed by the Soviet Union. The United States, General Bradley says, can help assure EDC in two ways. It can increase its NATO committment to fifty years, and it can give assurance to its allies in Europe about tactical atomic weapons. It can share atomic information with the ground commanders of our allies, and at least promise them tactical atomic weapons the instant war comes.

If France rejects the EDC solution, General Bradley sees two alternatives. One is taking Germany into NATO, armed by us and the British, or by us alone. The other is the "agonizing re-appraisal" ending in peripheral defense. It is a look at these alternatives that leads General Bradley to feel so strongly that the failure of EDC would hand to the Soviet Union a major strategic victory without a single trigger being pulled.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Bradley was talking about the need for greater unity with Western Europe. Here is something Lord Halifax once said on the subject; "There is no room in the modern world for easy indifference to the world's needs - we are all our brother's keeper. And only by translating this truth into terms of daily life can we hope to establish true understanding between men and nations - and make the world more worthy of all the sacrifice that twice in a generation has been spent to save it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday - April 8 1954

This is the news:

French flyers today reported direct hits one one of the enemy's chief storage depots in Indo-China. The French high command says B-26 bombers attacked the chief storing place for arms and ammunition from Communist China. The scene of the attack was about 150 miles northeast of Dien Bien Phu. Today the French sent troops and tanks about two miles to the west of their fortress..without meeting heavy resistance. But the enemy continued to build his new foxholes and trenches for an expected new attack. French news agencies report: more c-47 transport planes have arrived from the United States.. the King of Cambodia plans to APPEAL the enemy's "invasion" to the United Nations. And the Chinese Communist radio says not a single French plane has been able to land at the Dien Bien Phu airfield in the past week.

Secretary of State Dulles is preparing to make a quick trip to London and Paris to try to rally support for our suggested plan for "united action" to stop the Communists in Indo-China and southeast Asia. The State Department says this is under consideration. European sources are a bit more certain. Both the British and French have been reluctant to enter any agreement on united action in Southeast Asia....

at least until they see what happens at the Geneva conference on April 26.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland told reporters today that since some nations (meaning the French and British) want to delay until after Geneva, a response to Secretary Dulles' inquiry, there is a growing sentiment in the Congress to delay, until after Geneva, any decision on foreign aid to our allies.. "particularly those countries who have dragged their feet, on the European Defense Community" (meaning France and Italy). And Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada said: "The time has come when our allies must stand up and be counted. If they're not with us, they should not be getting help from us." Mc Carran added: "We should find out now, the sooner the better, whether we're going to have to fight in Indo-China alone." But Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas said he's against any attempt to use foreign aid as a bargaining weapon. He said: "You can justify foreign aid only on the basis of, what's good for the country."

The House armed services subcommittee today urged France to give us a bigger advisory role in Indo-China.. particularly in the training of native VIETNAM [redacted] troops. The committee says the French cannot win the war without training more natives. The committee also SUGGESTS [redacted] that the time has come, when we must decide whether we want to keep the Chinese Nationalist forces on Formosa for defensive purposes, or for use against the Chinese mainland. The group adds: "considerable expansion of the Nationalist army is necessary to give it the capability of landing on the mainland in force."

Two Japanese fishing boats returned to their home ports today with cargoes of radioactive tuna. Both were reported to have been outside the 450-mile danger area, when our second hydrogen bomb test was made on March 26. Health officials ordered part of both catches destroyed.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today, that in his opinion, his secret atomic agreement with the late President Roosevelt, would also have applied to the hydrogen bomb. This is contrary to the White House view. And Laborite Herbert Morrison, who served in Britain's wartime coalition cabinet, said Sir Winston never told the cabinet about this agreement with Mr. Roosevelt.

In Washington, Chairman Cole of the Congressional atomic energy committee, has rejected proposals that Senator McCarthy be called to offer evidence supporting his charge that Communists in government may have delayed the development of our H-bomb for 18 months. Cole says the issue is closed.

Senator McCarthy, vacationing in Arizona at the home of newspaper columnist Westbrook Pegler, said today he'll return to Washington on Saturday. And Chairman Mundt of the Senate Investigating committee told reporters the decision to start the McCarthy-Army hearings on April 21 was taken without knowing that McCarthy had a speaking engagement in Texas on that day. Today, Hugh Roy Cullen, the Houston oil millionaire who invited the Senator to make the speech, [redacted] told reporters: "The scheduling of the hearing is a cold-blooded action of interference with free speech." He charges the subcommittee is pulling something "dirty" AND ADDS: "The American people don't like unfair play."

In Las Vegas, a federal grand jury today indicted Publisher H.M. [redacted] Greenspun of the Las Vegas Sun on charges OF SENDING [redacted] THROUGH THE MAILS [redacted] his paper in which he wrote material "tending to incite the murder or assassination" of Senator McCarthy. The grand jury was called on a complaint made by the Post Office Department in Washington. Greenspun says this is an effort to "muzzle a newspaper which has been critical of the junior senator from Wisconsin." He has been a bitter [redacted] cirtic of McCarthy.

The House today passed a bill legalizing wire-tapping in national security cases..where espionage or sabotage is suspected. But the House refused to approve the Administration's request to give the Attorney General a free hand in such investigations. Instead it decided that the Attorney General must first get the approval of a federal court. [redacted]

The bill, which now goes to the Senate, would end a 20-year-old ban on using wire-tapped evidence in federal courts. It permits the [redacted] use of material recorded in the past and now in F.B.I. files. This could be made public without a court order.

Defense Secretary Wilson today made public a new security program for the armed forces. Its aimed at getting rid of subversives and other securirty risks and keeping them out of [redacted] uniform in the future. Among other things the new order requires loyalty certificates from all applicants for enlistment, draftees and members of reserve units. Those who don't [redacted] fill out the questionnaires satisfactorily would be kept in non-sensitive assignments at the lowest pay-grade until they have been investigated.

Here in New York today, William J. O'Hara, a former naval officer, testified that intelligence files on Communism in the New York naval district "just disappeared" one week-end in 1944. But O'Hara added that information on Communists was passed on to the F.B.I. by the Navy "as fast as it was received."

There was an "incident" at a State AND Post office department good will luncheon today when diplomatic representatives of five Arab states walked out of the meeting because Dr. Norman Salit, president of the Synagogue Council of America, described Israel as the only democratic nation in the Near East. Dr. Salit later apologized.. said he has no wish to offend any feelings or insult any one.

Edward R. Murrow: April 8, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

It seems to become increasingly clear that we and our Allies are not in agreement as to the possibility of doing business with the Communists at the Conference in Geneva on April 26th. Mr. Dulles has gone about as far as he can go in warning the Chinese Communists that if they intervene directly in the war in Indo-China, the consequences or the retribution may fall on them. The Chinese are already in Indo-China, with certain technical personnel and anti-aircraft units. There is increasing talk in Washington of the possibility of American air and naval intervention. There is also the memory that it was in that fashion in which we entered the war in Korea.

Secretary Dulles has been trying to get from our Allies a statement of unity, common purpose and action in connection with the crisis in Indo-China. Senator Knowland has bluntly warned the British and French that the Senate may want to take another long look at the whole question of aid for our Allies, if they do not go along with our proposals.

The British and French do not want to do anything in advance of the Geneva Conference which might preclude the possibility of reaching an agreement there. The French remain unwilling to permit us to take a real hand in training Vietnamese troops. They are also unwilling to ratify the European Army plan. ¶ We are required to face squarely the possibility that unless agreement can be reached, Southeast Asia may come under Communist control, and our grand strategy for the defense of Western Europe may have to be revised. In other words, we could lose in Asia and in Europe at the same time.

In Indo-China, the Chinese have intervened a little, and we have intervened a little, with aircraft and technicians. Our allies, including the French, who are doing the dying in Indo-China, are apparently unwilling to take up a more belligerent posture, in advance of the Geneva Conference. They apparently feel that the chances of agreement there are greater than we judge them to be. That's why Mr. Dulles is flying to Europe on the week-end, in an effort to persuade the British and French, that now is the time for a demonstration of unity and determination; that the free world will not permit the conquest of Indo-China by the Communists.

The stature of our Secretary of State in both France and Britain went up very considerably, as a result of his skill and diplomacy at the Berlin Foreign Ministers' Conference. He has powerful arguments to present - arguments that are economic, military and diplomatic. If he fails in this mission, the unity of the free world will be further strained, for the time has clearly passed when words, however solemn, will be effective. What is now required is a demonstration of unity.

The bitter battle at Dien Bien Phu will not determine the fate of Indo-China. It appears to be going not badly for the French - the defenders have had a couple of night's sleep, and have been able to go over to some strictly limited spoiling attacks. This is the first major battle the Communists have risked, and both sides are fighting to strengthen the hands of their representatives at Geneva. If the French can hold till the end of this month, the rains will fall and there will be a military stalemate. But the fate of Indo-China will not be settled at Dien Bien Phu. It may well be settled by the success or failure of Mr. Dulles's mission to Europe.

We were speaking of the need for unity in times of crisis. Here are a few lines from Oliver Wendel Holmes:

"Union is river, lake, ocean and sky;
Man breaks not the medal when God cuts the die.
Though darkened with sulphur, though cloven with steel,
The Blue arch will brighten, the waters will heal."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

French flyers today reported direct hits on one of the enemy's chief storage depots in Indo-China. The French high command says B-26 bombers attacked the chief storing place for arms and ammunition from Communist China. The scene of the attack was about 150 miles northeast of Dien Bien Phu. Today the French sent troops and tanks about two miles to the west of their fortress without meeting heavy resistance. But the enemy continued to build his new foxholes and trenches for an expected new attack. French news agencies report: more C-47 transport planes have arrived from the United States. The King of Cambodia plans to appeal the enemy's "invasion" to the United Nations. And the Chinese Communist radio says not a single French plane has been able to land at the Dien Bien Phu airfield in the past week.

Secretary of State Dulles is preparing to make a quick trip to London and Paris to try to rally support for our suggested plan for "united action" to stop the Communists in Indo-China and southeast Asia. The State Department says this is under consideration. European sources are a bit more certain. Both the British and French have been reluctant to enter any agreement on united action in Southeast Asia at least until they see what happens at the Geneva conference on April 26.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland told reporters today that since some nations (meaning the French and British) want to delay until after Geneva a response to Secretary Dulles' inquiry, there is a growing sentiment in the Congress to delay, until after Geneva, any decision on foreign aid to our allies "particularly those countries who have dragged their feet on the European Defense Community" meaning France and Italy. And Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada said: "The time has come when our allies must stand up and be counted. If they're not with us they should not be getting help from us." McCarran added: "We should find out now - the sooner the better, whether we're going to have to fight in Indo-China alone." But Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas said he's against any attempt to use foreign aid as a bargaining weapon. He said: "You can justify foreign aid only on the basis of what's good for the country."

The House armed services subcommittee today urged France to give us a bigger advisory role in Indo-China - particularly in the training of native Vietnam troops. The committee says the French cannot win the war without training more natives. The committee also suggests that the time has come when we must decide whether we want to keep the Chinese Nationalist forces on Formosa for defensive purposes or for use against the Chinese mainland. The group adds: "considerable expansion of the Nationalist Army is necessary to give it the capability of landing on the mainland in force."

Two Japanese fighing boats returned to their home ports today with cargoes of radioactive tuna. Both were reported to have been outside the 450-mile danger area when our second hydrogen bomb test was made on March 26. Health officials ordered part of both catches destroyed.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that in his opinion his secret atomic agreement with the late President Roosevelt would also have applied to the hydrogen bomb. This is contrary to the White House view. And Laborite Herbert Morrison, who served in Britain's wartime coalition cabinet, said Sir Winston never told the cabinet about this agreement with Mr. Roosevelt.

In Washington, Chairman Cole of the Congressional atomic energy committee has rejected proposals that Senator MCCarthy be called to offer evidence supporting his charge that Communists in government may have delayed the development of our H-bomb for 18 months. Cole says the issue is closed.

Senator McCarthy, vacationing in Arizona at the home of newspaper columnist Westbrook Pegler, said today he'll return to Washington on Saturday. And Chairman Mundt of the Senate Investigating committee told reporters the decision to start the McCarthy-Army hearings on April 21 was taken without knowing that McCarthy had a speaking engagement in Texas on that day. Today, Hugh Roy Cullen, the Houston oil millionaire who invited the Senator to make the speech, told reporters: "The scheduling of the hearing is a cold-blooded action of interference with free speech." He charges the subcommittee is pulling something "dirty", and adds: "The American people don't like unfair play."

In Las Vegas, a federal grand jury today indicted Publisher H.M. Greenspun of the Las Vegas Sun on charges of sending through the mails his paper in which he wrote material "tending to incite the murder or assassination" of Senator McCarthy. The grand jury was called on a complaint made by the Post Office Department in Washington. Greenspun says this is an effort ot "muzzle a newspaper which has been critical of the junior senator from Wisconsin." He has been a bitter critic of McCarthy.

The House today passed a bill legalizing wire-tapping in national security cases where espionage or sabotage is suspected. But the House refused to approve the Administration's request to give the Attorney General a free hand in such investigations. Instead it decided that the Attorney General must first get the approval of a federal court. The bill, which now goes to the Senate, would end a 20-year-old ban on using wire-tapped evidence in federal courts. It permits the use of material recorded in the past and now in FBI files. This could be made public without a court order.

Defense Secretary Wilson today made public a new security program for the armed forces. Its aimed at getting rid of subversives and other security risks and keeping them out of uniform in the future. Among other things the new order requires loyalty certificates from all applicants for enlistment, draftees and members of reserve units. Those who don't fill out the questionnaires satisfactorily would be kept in non-sensitive assignments at the lowest pay-grade until they have been investigated.

Here in New York today, William J. O'Hara, a former naval officer, testified that intelligence files on Communism in the New York naval district "just disappeared" one week-end in 1944. But O'Hara added that information on Communists was passed on to the FBI by the Navy "as fast as it was received."

There was an "incident" at a State and Post Office department goodwill luncheon today when diplomatic representatives of five Arab states walked out of the meeting because Dr. Norman Salit, president of the Synagogue Council of America, described Israel as the only democratic nation in the Near East. Dr. Salit later apologized said he has no wish to offend any feelings or insult anyone.

It seems to become increasingly clear that we and our Allies are not in agreement as to the possibility of doing business with the Communists at the Conference in Geneva on April 26th. Mr. Dulles has gone about as far as he can go in warning the Chinese Communists that if they intervene directly in the war in Indo-China, the consequences or the retribution may fall on them. The Chinese are already in Indo-China, with certain technical personnel and anti-aircraft units. There is increasing talk in Washington of the possibility of American air and naval intervention. There is also the memory that it was in that fashion in which we entered the war in Korea. Secretary Dulles has been trying to get from our Allies a statement of unity, common purpose and action in connection with the crisis in Indo-China. Senator Knowland has bluntly warned the British and French that the Senate may want to take another long look at the whole question of aid for our Allies, if they do not go along with our proposals.

The British and French do not want to do anything in advance of the Geneva Conference which might preclude the possibility of reaching an agreement there. The French remain unwilling to permit us to take a real hand in training Vietnamese troops. They are also unwilling to ratify the European Army plan. We are required to face squarely the possibility that unless agreement can be reached, Southeast Asia may come under Communist control, and our grand strategy for the defense of Western Europe may have to be revised. In other words, we could lose in Asia and in Europe at the same time.

In Indo-China, the Chinese have intervened a little, and we have intervened a little with aircraft and technicians. Our allies, including the French who are doing the dying in Indo-China, are apparently unwilling to take up a more belligerent posture in advance of the Geneva Conference. They apparently feel that the chances of agreement there are greater than we judge them to be. That's why Mr. Dulles is flying to Europe on the weekend, in an effort to persuade the British and French that now is the time for a demonstration of unity and determination; that the free world will not permit the conquest of Indo-China by the Communists. The stature of our Secretary of State in both France and Britain went up very considerably as a result of his skill and diplomacy at the Berlin Foreign Ministers' Conference. He has powerful arguments to present - arguments that are economic, military and diplomatic. If he fails in this mission, the unity of the free world will be further strained, for the time has clearly passed when words, however solemn, will be effective. What is now required is a demonstration of unity.

The bitter battle at Dien Bien Phu will not determine the fate of Indo-China. It appears to be going not badly for the French - the defenders have had a couple of night's sleep, and have been able to go over to some strictly limited spoiling attacks. This is the first major battle the Communists have risked, and both sides are fighting to strengthen the hands of their representatives at Geneva. If the French can hold till the end of this month, the rains will fall and there will be a military stalemate. But the fate of Indo-China will not be settled at Dien Bien Phu. It may well be settled by the success or failure of Mr. Dulles's mission to Europe.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of the need for unity in time of crisis. Here are a few lines from Oliver Wendel Holmes:

> "Union is river, lake, ocean and sky;
> Man breaks not the medal when God cuts the die.
> Though darkened with sulphur, though cloven with steel,
> The Blue arch will brighten, the waters will heal."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, April 9, 1954

This is the news:

The White House says Secretary of State Dulles will confer with the President tomorrow morning and then leave by plane for Paris and London. The State Department says the Secretary will discuss with French and British leaders the Geneva conference and our plan for a united front in Indo-China and southeast Asia. Both Britain and France have been hesitatnt to join any such move until they see what happens at Geneva. The State Department says Thailand has become the first nation to accept the Secretary's call...12 days ago..for united action.

[redacted]

Republican Senator Bridges said today that the Congress should reappraise the whole "foreign aid picture in the light of the current world situation." He made it clear that he favors continuing aid to those who will join us in "action not words" to halt Communist aggression in southeast Asia. But Democratic Senator [redacted] Humphrey warned that any effort to use foreign aid to pressure Britian and France to follow our proposals "would play right into the Kremlin's hands." [redacted] And in London, left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan said today that Britain must tell the United States "in the clearest possible terms that we are not prepared to be dragged into military action in Indo-China. Bevan also said: the time will soon come to tell America that the presence of her military personnel in Great Britain is "intolerable if our policies no longer march together."

In Indo-China, French and enemy artillery dueled through the day. [redacted]

And in Paris, French Premier Laniel told his [redacted] people for the first time that the Chinese Communists are helping the rebels. He said: "This aid must stop." Laniel said it will be the policy of his government to "resist gloriously" at Dien Bien Phu with the help of supplies from the United States. And the French will "in complete liberty" seek a peaceful solution to the war at the Geneva conference.

Harold Stassen, the foreign aid chief, today told a Senate committee that the free world is ready to do more business with the Soviet bloc in the interests of peace. [redacted] Stassen said the new policy of expanded trade is based on the belief that we face a long-term struggle with the Soviet..ten years or more..rather than an early or inevitable war.

IN Kansas City today, former President Truman produced names, dates and portions of official communiques to support his contention that a 1943 Anglo-American atomic agreement is still in effect..in amended form.

And in Arziona, Senator Mc Carthy said he finds it difficult to believe that President Eisenhower SAYS he knows nothing about McCarthy's charge that there WAS a delay in making the hydrogen bomb. He is also surprised at the same reaction from Mister Truman. The Senator asked for, and received, a one-day postponment in the scheduled opening of the McCarthy-Army hearings. (He has scheduled a speech in Texas.) And he had "no comment" on an attack made on him today by Roman Catholic Bishop Sheil in Chicago.

Bishop Sheil, talking to a C.I.O. auto workers education conference said: "We have been victims in the last few years of a kind of shell game. We have been treated like country rubes taken in by a city slicker from Appelton" ...(Senator McCarthy's home in Wisconsin.) Bishop Sheil, making it very plain he was speaking for himself and not for his church, said: "It is time to cry out against the phoney anti-communism that mocks our way of life, flouts our traditions and democratic procedures and our sense of fair play." The 66-year-old bishop, who is widely known as the founder of the Catholic Youth Organization, asked: "Are we more to be feared by the Communists because of the hundreds of headlines the senator from Wisconsin has piled up? I don't believe so".. he answered. And Bishop Sheil said: the church takes no position on "such matters of public controversey." But it does take a position on "lies, calumny, the absence of charity and calculated deceit. These things are wrong even if they are mistakenly thought of as a means to a good end. They are morally evil," he said," and to call them good or to act as if they were permissable under certain circumstances is itself a monstrous perversion of morality." Bishop Sheil said congressional committees do good work. The nation is faced with the job of protecting itself from subversion from within and aggression from without. But Bishop Sheil said in handling the job "we should drop the cops and robbers game that has been going on." He said the serious anti-communist is interested in seeing that people have decent homes and enough to eat and in removing class, religious and nationality barriers. A spokesman for Samuel Cardinal Stritch.. head of the largest Catholic archdiocese in the nation.. said there will be no comment on his assistant's speech.

Labor Secretary Mitchell today reported a sharp drop in claims for unemployment compensation last month. He says this is the first break in the rise in unemployment which began last fall.

The American Federation of Labor today urged Senators to cut income taxes about four billion dollars more..to boost purchasing power.

The House Appropriations committee accused Secretary of Agriculture Benson of "a breach of faith" and "arbitrary and unrealistic actions" and then voted his department more funds than it had requested.

Racketeer Joe Adonis today was sentenced to serve from eight to 24 months in prison on charges of lying to the Kefauver crime committee.

Tonight, Attorney General Brownell speaks to the nation on steps the government has taken to protect our internal security. He'll be heard over many of these stations at 10;30 eastern time.

Edward R. Murrow: April 9, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

A look at the behavior of the political problem children of other countries is sometimes rewarding. It can take the mind off the problem children closer at hand. And it also can throw a sudden flash of light on the danger another country is in.

General Charles de Gaulle has a long record as one of France's most unpredictable problem children. During the war he often was as difficult as a fabled operatic tenor. After the war as political leader he soon found most of France out of step with him, and withdrew for a prolonged sulk. Later he set up his own political group in the Assembly. The opposition of this group, together with the Communists, has supplied the hard core of the resistance to the European army idea.

It is not easy to define De Gaulle's politics. He has interesting ideas, but he is distinctly authoritarian in flavor. His vanity is nothing less than magnificent. And he has been waiting for a moment that has seemed most unlikely to come, when France would turn to him again. Now he looms on the horizon because France is seething from pressures at home and abroad that it is incapable of easing.

General De Gaulle chose this week to re-emerge personally on the political stage by holding a NEWS conference that had some frightening implications. # For one thing, he espoused the cause of rebellious Marshal Juin. # A would-be authoritarian, with only one-sixth of the Assembly behind him, might be no great danger. But an ambitious man with disaffected army leaders in his train is something else. Marshal Juin had revolted against the European army. He had been summoned to explain his insubordination by Premier Laniel, and refused to go. Thereupon he had been stripped of all his authority. # Paris hears that hundreds of French officers devoted to Juin are ready to refuse to serve in a European army under any conditions.

At his news conference General de Gaulle declared: "If the E.D.C. should be ratified by the Assembly, it would produce a state of permanent revolt. All organization of defense would be impossible." This was nothing less than a threat of an army strike, against a vote of the Assembly. General De Gaulle defended Marshal Juin for refusing to obey the command to appear before the Premier. The Laniel government, he explained, was full of mediocrities, it was not really a government. So why, he asked, should Marshal Juin obey it?

He was asked what he would have done as Premier if he had been disobeyed in the same way. Drawing himself up in his most impressive pose he declaimed: "I was France! I was the state! I was the incarnation of the French interests! Everybody obeyed me!" This statement was greeted with rhapsodic applause at the conference. It has to be explained that the De Gaulle news conference was carefully packed by De Gaulle supporters, who outnumbered the journalists five to one. They repeatedly burst into thunderous applause in support of the leader, and turned a news conference into an overheated public meeting.

General De Gaulle went on to tell this meeting he would refuse to take part in the Paris armistice ceremonies of May eighth. Instead he would go to the Arc de Triomphe the day after. That is Joan of Arc day. De Gaulle sometimes speaks of himself as though he were the living perpetuation of the spirit of this heroine. He almost chanted his words as he told his audience: "I will go - alone - without followers, under this holy arch! I will stand there - alone! I will salute the Unknown Soldier - alone! And then I will go away - alone!" Then, after a dramatic pause he said solemnly: "The people will be there!" Indeed more than the people would be there, for the General announced: "The garrison of France will render the honors. The glorious police of France will assure the services of order and circulation. And all this", he foresaw, "in the most absolute silence!"

This was menacing melodrama, but it also was astute. For now the government can't very well prevent a mass celebration on Joan of Arc day. The top brass of the army is with De Gaulle, so the Paris garrison presumably will have to be allowed to be at the arch. And for so huge a celebration the police must be on hand. So General De Gaulle will have his tremendous show on May 9th. On that day the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Assembly will be discussing the E.D.C. treaty for the fourth day, [redacted] according to present plans. So the General will be bringing his utmost pressure to bear against the European Army Plan - short of overt action.

General de Gaulle has long had a tendency to regard himself as a combination of Napoleon and Joan of Arc. He has been known to quote Napoleon in the following terms: "I am the state. I alone am here the representative of the people. Even if I had done wrong, you should not have reproached me in public - people wash their dirty linen at home. France has more need of me than I of France."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House says Secretary of State Dulles will confer with the President tomorrow morning and then leave by plane for Paris and London. The State Department says the Sec etary will discuss with French and British leaders the Geneva conference and our plan for a united front in Indo-China and southeast Asia. Both Britain and France have been hesitant to join any such move until they see what happens at Geneva. The State Department says Thailand has become the first nation to accept the Secretary's call 12 days ago for united action.

Republican Senator Bridges said today that the Congress should reappraise the whole "foreign aid picture in the light of the current world situation." He made it clear that he favors continuing aid to those who will join us in "action not words" to halt Communist aggression in southeast Asia. But Democratic Senator Humphrey warned that any effort to use foreign aid to pressure Britain and France to follow our proposals "would play right into the Kremlin's hands." And in London, left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan said today that Britain must tell the United States "in the clearest possible terms that we are not prepared to be dragged into military action in Indo-China. Bevan also said: the time will soon come to tell America that the presence of her military personnel in Great Britain is "intolerable if our policies no longer march together."

In Indo-China, French and enemy artillery dueled through the day. And in Paris, French Premier Laniel told his people for the first time that the Chinese Communists are helping the rebels. He said: "This aid must stop." Laniel said it will be the policy of his government to "resist gloriously" at Dien Bien Phu with the help of supplies from the United States. And the French will "in complete liberty" seek a peaceful solution to the war at the Geneva conference.

Harold Stassen, the foreign aid chief, today told a Senate committee that the free world is ready to do more business with the Soviet bloc in the interests of peace. Stassen said the new policy of expanded trade is based on the belief that we face a long-term struggle with the Soviet - ten years or more - rather than an early or inevitable war.

In Kansas City today, former President Truman produced names, dates and portions of official communiques to support his contention that a 1943 Anglo-American atomic agreement is still in effect in amended form.

And in Arizona, Senator McCarthy said he finds it difficult to believe that President Eisenhower says he knows nothing about McCarthy's charge that there was a delay in making the hydrogen bomb. He is also surprised at the same reaction from Mister Truman. The Senator asked for, and received, a one-day postponment in the scheduled opening of the McCarthy-Army hearings. (He has scheduled a speech in Texas.) And he had "no comment" on an attack made on him today by Roman Catholic Bishop Sheil in Chicago. Bishop Sheil, talking to a C.I.O. auto workers education conference said: "We have been victims in the last few years of a kind of shell game. We have been treated like country rubes taken in by a city slicker from Appelton" (Senator McCarthy's home in Wisconsin.) Bishop Sheil, making it very plain he was speaking for himself and not for his church, said: "It is time to cry out against the phoney anti-communism that mocks our way of life, flouts our traditions and democratic producures and our sense of fair play." The 66-year-old bishop who is widely known as the founder of the Catholic Youth Organization, asked: "Are we more to be feared by the Communists because of the hundreds of headlines the senator from Wisconsin has piled up? I don't believe so," he answered. And Bishop Sheil said: the church takes no position on "such matters of public controversey." But it does take a position on "lies, calumny, the absence of charity and calculted deceit. These things are wrong even if they are mistakenly thought of as a means to a good end. They are morally evil," he said," and to call them good or to act as if they were permissable under certain circumstances is itself a monstrous perversion of morality." Bishop Sheil said congressional committees do good work. The nation is faced with the job of protecting itself from subversion from within and aggression from without. But Bishop Sheil said in handling the job

"we should drop the cops and robbers game that has been going on." He said the serious anti-communist is interested in seeing that people have decent homes and enough to eat and in removing class, religious and nationality barriers. A spokesman for Samuel Cardinal Stritch, head of the largest Catholic archdiocese in the nation said there will be no comment on his assistant's speech.

Labor Secretary Mitchell today reported a sharp drop in claims for unemployment compensation last month. He says this is the first break in the rise in unemployment which began last fall.

The American Federation of Labor today urged Senators to cut income taxes about four billion dollars more to boost purchasing power.

The House Appropriations committee accused Secretary of Agriculture Benson of "a breach of faith" and "arbitrary and unrealistic actions" and then voted his department more funds than it had requested.

Racketeer Joe Adonis today was sentenced to serve from eight to 24 months in prison on charges of lying to the Kefauver crime committee.

Tonight, Attorney General Brownell speaks to the nation on steps the government has taken to protect our internal security. He'll be heard over many of these stations at 10:30 eastern time.

A look at the behavior of the political problem children of other countries is sometimes rewarding. It can take the mind off the problem children closer at hand. And it also can throw a sudden flash of light on the danger another country is in. General Charles de Gaulle has a long record as one of France's most unpredictable problem children. During the war he often was as difficult as a fabled operatic tenor. After the war as political leader he soon found most of France out of step with him, and withdrew for a prolonged sulk. Later he set up his own political group in the Assembly. The opposition of this group, together with the Communists, has supplied the hard core of the resistance to the European army idea.

It is not easy to define De Gaulle's politics. He has interesting ideas, but he is distinctly authoritarian in flavor. His vanity is nothing less than magnificent. And he has been waiting for a moment that has seemed most unlikely to come, when France would turn to him again. Now he looms on the horizon because France is seething from pressures at home and abroad that it is incapable of easing.

General De Gaulle chose this week to re-emerge personally on the political stage by holding a news conference that had some frightening implications. For one thing, he espoused the cause of rebellious Marshal Juin. A would-be authoritarian, with only one-sixth of the Assembly behind him, might be no great danger. But an ambitious man with disaffected army leaders in his train is something else. Marshal Juin had revolted against the European Army. He had been summoned to explain his insubordination by Premier Laniel and refused to go. Thereupon he had been stipped of all his authority. Paris hears that hundreds of French officers devoted to Juin are ready to refuse to serve in a European army under any conditions.

At his news conference General de Gaulle declared: "If the EDC should be ratified by the Assembly, it would produce a state of permanent revolt. All organization of defense would be impossible." This was nothing less than a threat of any army strike, against a vote of the Assembly. General De Gaulle defended Marshal Juin for refusing to obey the command to appear before the Premier. The Laniel government, he explained, was full of mediocrities, it was not really a government. So why, he asked, should Marshal Juin obey it? He was asked what he would have done as Premier if he had been disobeyed in the same way. Drawing himself up in his most impressive pose he declaimed: "I was France! I was the state! I was the incarnation of the French interests! Everybody obeyed me!" This statement was greeted with rhapsodic applause at the conference. It has to be explained that the De Gaulle news conference was carefully packed by De Gaulle supporters, who outnumbered the journalists five to one. They repeatedly burst into thunderous applause in support of the leader, and turned a news conference into an overheated public meeting. General De Gaulle went on to tell this meeting he would refuse to take part in the Paris armistice ceremonies of May eighth. Instead he would go to the Arc de Triomphe the day after. That is Joan of Arc day. De Gaulle sometimes speaks of himself as thoughhe were the living perpetuation of the spirit of this heroine. He almost chanted his words as he told his audience: "I will go - alone-without followers, under this holy arch! I will stand there - alone. I will salute the Unknown Soldier - alone! And then I will go away - alone!" Then, after a dramatic pause he said solemnly: "The people will be there!" Indeed more than the people would be there, for the General announced: "The garrison of France will render the honors. The glorious police of France will assure the services of order and circulation. And all this", he foresaw, "in the most absolute silence!" This was menacing melodrama, but it also was astute. For now the government can't very well prevent a mass celebration on Joan of Arc day. Some of the top brass of the army is with De Gaulle, so the Paris garrison presumably will have to be allowed to be at the arch. And for so huge a celebration the police must be on hand. So General De Gaulle will have his tremendous show on May 9th. On that day the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Assembly will be discussing the EDC treaty for the fourth day, according to present plans. So the General will be bringing his utmost pressure to bear against the European Army Plan - short of overt action.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General de Gaulle has long had a tendency to regard himself as a combination of Napoleon and Joan of Arc. He has been known to quote Napoleon in the following terms: "I am the State. I alone am here the representative of the people. Even if I had done wrong, you should not have reproached me in public - people wash their dirty linen at home. France has more need of me than I of France."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday April 12, 1954

This is the news:

The French have stopped another enemy counter-attack at Dien Bien Phu. Over the week-end French union forces seized a hill overlooking their fortress. Six times, since then, the rebels have tried to recapture it..without success. And the new Viet Nam war cabinet today called for the drafting of another 140-thousand men... all aged from 20 to 25..to join the French union forces.

Secretary of State Dulles was in London today trying to win the British to his plan for united action to stop Communism in Southeast Asia. British informants says Foreign Secretary Eden has offered a compromise: the British would support a plan for a ring of anti-Communist nations around Communist China. But they oppose any ultimatum to the Chinese before the April 26 conference at Geneva. Tomorrow Mr. Dulles flys to Paris. And the French are said to feel that there is little need for them to go beyond the British offer. I'd like to discuss the French situation in a few minutes.

The State Department announced today that two young brothers, held by the Communist government of Romania, have been set free. Constantin and Peter Georgescu..now 20 and 15 years old..met their father in Munich for the first time in seven years. The father, Valerin Georgescu left the boys with their grandmother seven years ago..intending to be gone for two months. But then, he told the State Department, he was approached by a Romanian official in this country AND TOLD ~~that~~ in order to get his sons back he would have to spy for Romania. Georgescu refused and made his story public. Today, the State Department says the release of the boys came about "as the result of a long series of approaches by the department in which President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles took a personal interest." The department says no concessions were granted to Romania.

The White House announced today that the President has accepted the resignation of Guy T. O. Hollyday, as Federal Housing COMMISSIONER. [redacted] The President has ordered the seizure of all F.H.A. files and records. The White House says this is being done to make it easier to investigate the F.H.A. Housing Administrator Albert Cole says the [redacted] government may have lost millions of dollars as a result of "alleged [redacted] illegal or unethical actions." Cole says 14 senior officials of the [redacted] FHA will find their conduct under scrutiny. [redacted]

Attorney General Brownell today told a House committee that he is opposed to any law outlawing the Communist party and making membership a crime. He said this would involve "constitutional doubts"..force the Communists underground and increase the difficulties of the F.B.I. He said the idea that outlawing the Communist party would mean the quick conviction of a large number of Communists..is a false impression."

The Mundt committee today heard from Army Secretary Stevens in a closed session and prepared to call Senator McCarthy to a similar meeting tomorrow. The committee wants to determine "the dimensions" of the Army-McCarthy controversey..find out what witnesses will be called.. and what charges will be made. And today Ray H. Jenkins, the committee's new counsel, and his staff, were told not to discuss the case with reporters or on radio or television programs. Jenkins requested this ruling.

The Supreme Court today upheld a district court decision that the National Labor Relations Board does not have the power to inquire into the ACCURACY of non-Communist affidavits signed by union officers.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he's confident that if the Congress votes to continue rigid price supports for another year, the President would veto the law.

Republican Senator Griswold of Nebraska died of a heart attack early today. He was 60 years old. And Nebraska's Republican Governor Crosby is expected to name a Republican to replace Griswold, who had served his state as governor three times.

At the United Nations today, American Delegate Preston Hotchkis, condemned the Chinese Communists, for "the brutal kidnaping" of two American newsmen and a ship's captain a year ago. He called on the Peiping government to set these men free, and to release 30 other Americans held in Chinese jails.

And Andrei Vishinsky sided with the Arabs in the Security Council, against a western plan for a general review of problems in Palestine.

At Augusta, Georgia, Sam Snead defeated Ben Hogan in an 18-hole play-off for the masters golf champaionship. Snead finished with a two-under-par 70....one stroke under Hogan's 71. Snead joins Jimmy Demaret, the only other man to win the masters three times.

Edward R. Murrow: April 12, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

By the time Mr. Dulles gets back from his European trip we will be only one week away from the Geneva Conference. At the moment it appears that he will not get any ringing declaration of united action in Indo-China from our European allies. The British and French are unwilling to risk even the slimmest chance of agreement at Geneva, by taking up a more belligerent attitude in advance of that meeting. At the same time it is unlikely that either country will want our Secretary of State to come home without some kind of formula that will indicate increased unity rather than open signs of discord in the free world. Mr. Dulles himself does not appear to be pressing the Indo-China problem with any urgency. His talks this morning at the British Foreign Office dealt with Israeli-Arab relations and other problems, and the question of Indo-China didn't come up till this afternoon.

The most encouraging news of the day probably came from France. David Schoenbrun cables me that French Premier Laniel today took a bold and perhaps decisive step when he approved the British treaty associating that country with the European Defense Community. This means, in effect, that the French Government is now committed formally to the European Army Plan. The De Gaullist members of the Cabinet threatened to resign, which would have provoked another political crisis. The French Parliament is now in recess, and any effort to unseat the Laniel government would have to wait until the parliament comes back in session on May 4th. In any event, the Laniel government is now committed more firmly than ever before to the European Army Plan. It was a climactic decision on a momentous issue, and there must now be a final test of strength between those who oppose and those who approve the European Army Plan in France.

Schoenbrun reports that the French government still finds it impossible to accept the full implications of Mr. Dulles's proposal for united action against China at this time. He feels that some compromise will be found re-affirming the determination of France and America not to allow Southeast Asia to fall under Communist domination. There is unlikely to be anything in the nature of an ultimatum. The French feel that nothing must be done to create the impression that the Western Powers are torpedoing the Geneva Conference in advance. The French contend that if Geneva fails, there will be plenty of time for the Allies to take the united action recommended by Mr. Dulles.

One result of our Secretary of State's visit to Paris may be to bring French and American policy statements regarding Indo-China into closer accord. For the last month official American spokesmen have been promising that the French would win a military victory in Indo-China within two years or less. At the same time the French Premier kept promising his people that his government was looking towards Geneva for a peace settlement that would end the war; while Paul Reynaud was saying repeatedly "settlement at Geneva with China is the only way - I repeat the only way - to end the Indo-Chinese war." This remains official French policy repeated as recently as last Friday by Premier Laniel, who assured the French Parliament that his government would "maintain liberty of action at Geneva." This must be regarded as a clear warning that France will not tie her hands in advance of the Geneva meeting. The French still believe that the Western Allies ought to recognize Communist China, and negotiate extensive trade deals, if the Chinese will agree to give up their support of Ho-Chi-Minh. This may appear to be a forlorn hope, but the French cling to it.

Probably the point where French policy is weakest, and where they expect stout criticism from Mr. Dulles, is their failure to conclude a genuine independence treaty with Vietnam - the sort of treaty that would permit the Nationalist leaders to use it as a rallying point - definite proof that this is not a Colonial war. French Foreign Minister Bidault is said to believe that if France is defeated, either militarily or politically, or if she permits American or United Nations participation in policy decisions, then France will lose her position as one of the world's great powers. Opponents of Mr. Bidault contend that there is no hope of winning either a military or political victory in Indo-China, unless the people can be stirred to fight, in a cause which they believe to be their own. They contend that freedom and independence are the only answers to Ho-Chi-Minh's communist challenge. Schoenbrun quotes a high-ranking member of the Vietnam delegation now in Paris, as saying that they demand not only independence from France, but also from Emperor Bao Dai's personal one-man rule. And he added: "If the French give us independence, only to let us stay under a feudal regime, that's very little improvement, and in many ways a step backwards."

Emperor Bao Dai is now in France; his representatives have been in touch with our Ambassador Dillon, and a meeting between Mr. Dulles and Bao Dai is a possibility.

The Geneva Conference, even more than the Berlin Conference, begins to take on the appearance of one of the real pivots, upon which history turns.

The struggle for Indo-China is no less involved in the political field than it is on the battlefield. And the question of freedom and independence is apparent in both areas. Nothing could point up the issue clearer than these two observations. Lenin said:"It is true that liberty is precious - so precious that it must be rationed." General Mac Arthur said:"The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French have stopped another enemy counter-attack at Dien Bien Phu. Over the week-end French union forces seized a hill overlooking their fortress. Six times, since then, the rebels have tried to recapture it without success. And the new Viet Nam war cabinet today called for the drafting of another 140-thousand men all aged from 20 to 25 to join the French union forces.

Secretary of State Dulles was in London today trying to win the British to his plan for united action to stop Communism in Southeast Asia. British informants says Foreign Secretary Eden has offered a compromise: the British would support a plan for a ring of anti-Communist nations around Communist China. But they oppose any ultimatum to the Chinese before the April 26 conference at Geneva. Tomorrow Mr. Dulles flies to Paris. And the French are said to feel that there is little need for them to go beyond the British offer. I'd like to discuss the French situation in a few minutes.

The State Department announced today that two young brothers, held by the Communist government of Romania, have been set free. Constantin and Peter Georgescu now 20 and 15 years old met their father in Munich for the first time in seven years. The father, Valerin Georgescu left the boys with their grandmother seven years ago intending to be gone for two months. But then, he told the State Department, he was approached by a Romanian official in this country and told that in order to get his sons back he would have to spy for Romania. Georgescu refused and made his story public. Today, the State Department says the release of the boys came about "as the result of a long series of approaches by the Department in which President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles took a personal interest." The department says no concessions were granted to Romania.

The White House announced today that the President has accepted the resignation of Guy T.O. Hollyday, as Federal Housing Commissioner. The President has ordered the seizure of all FHA files and records. The White House says this is being done to make it easier to investigate the FHA. Housing Administrator Albert Cole says the government may have lost millions of dollars as a result of "alleged illegal or unethical actions." Cole says 14 senior officials of the FHA will find their conduct under scrutiny.

Attorney General Brownell today told a House committee that he is opposed to any law outlawing the Communist party and making membership a crime. He said this would involve "constitutional doubts" force the Communists underground and increase the difficulties of the FBI. He said the idea that outlawing the Communist party would mean the quick conviction of a large number of Communists is a "false impression."

The Mundt committee today heard from Army Secretary Stevens in a closed session and prepared to call Senator McCarthy to a similar meeting tomorrow. The committee wants to determine "the dimensions" of the Army-McCarthy controversey - find out what witnesses will be called and what charges will be made. And today Jay H. Jenkins, the committee's new counsel, and his staff, were told not to discuss the case with reporters or on radio or television programs. Jenkins requested this ruling.

The Supreme Court today upheld a district court decision that the National Labor Relations Board does not have the power to inquire into the accuracy of non-Communist affidavits signed by union officers.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he's confident that if the Congress votes to continue rigid price supports for another year the President would veto the law.

Republican Senator Griswold of Nebraska died of a heart attack early today. He was 60 years old. And Nebraska's Republican Governor Crosby is expected to name a Republican to replace Griswold, who had served his state as governor three times.

At the United Nations today, American Delegate Preston Hotchkis, condemned the Chinese Communists for "the brutal kidnapping" of two American newsmen and a ship's captain a year ago. He called on the Peiping government to set these men free and to release 30 other Americans held in Chinese jails.

And Andrei Vishinsky sided with the Arabs in the Security Council against a western plan for a general review of problems in Palestine.

At Augusta, Georgia, Sam Snead defeated Ben Hogan in an 18-hold play-off for the masters golf championship. Snead finished with a two-under par 70 - one stroke under Hogan's 71. Snead joing Jimmy Demaret, the only other man to win the masters three times.

By the time Mr. Dulles gets back from his European trip we will be only one week away from the Geneva Conference. At the moment it appears that he will not get any ringing declaration of united action in Indo-China from our European allies. The British and French are unwilling to risk even the slimmest chance of agreement at Geneva, by taking up a more belligerent attitude in advance of that meeting. At the same time it is unlikely that either country will want our Secretary of State to come home without some kind of formula that will indicate increased unity rather than open signs of discord in the free world. Mr. Dulles himself does not appear to be pressing the Indo-China problem with any urgency. His talks this morning at the British Foreign Office dealt with Israeli-Arab relations and other problems, and the question of Indo-China didn't come up till this afternoon. The most encouraging news of the day probably came from France. David Schoenbrun cables me that French Premier Laniel today took a bold and perhaps decisive step when he approved the British treaty associating that country with the European Defense Community. This means, in effect, that the French Government is now committed formally to the European Army Plan. The De Gaullist members of the Cabinet threatened to resign, which would have provoked another political crisis. The French Parliament is now in recess, and any effort to unseat the Laniel government would have to wait until the parliament comes back in session on May 4th. In any event, the Laniel government is now committed more firmly than ever before to the European Army Plan. It was a climactic decision on a momentuous issue, and there must now be a final test of strength between those who oppose and those who approve the European Army Plan in France. Schoenbrun cables that the French government still finds it impossible to accept the full implications of Mr. Dulles's proposal for united action against China at this time. He feels that some compromise will be found re-affirming the determination of France and America not to allow Southeast Asia to fall under Communist domination. There is unlikely to be anything in the nature of an ultimatum. The French feel that nothing must be done to create the impression that the Western Powers are torpedoing the Geneva Conference in advance. The French contend that if Geneva fails, there will be plenty of time for the Allies to take the united action recommended by Mr. Dulles. One result of our Secretary of State's visit to Paris may be to bring French and American policy statements regarding Indo-China into closer accord. For the last month official American spokesmen have been promising that the French would win a military victory in Indo-China within two years or less. At the same time the French Premier kept promising his people that his government was looking towards Geneva for a peace settlement that would end the war; while Paul Reynaud was saying repeatedly "settlement at Geneva with China is the only way - I repeat the only way - to end the Indo-Chinese war." This remains official French policy repeated as recently as last Friday by Premier Laniel, who assured the French Parliament that his government would "maintain liberty of action at Geneva." This must be regarded as a clear warning that France will not tie her hands in advance of the Geneva meeting. The French still believe that the Western Allies ought to recognize Communist China, and negotiate extensive trade deals, if the Chinese will agree to give up their support of Ho-Chi-Minh. This may appear to be a forlorn hope, but the French cling to it. Probably the point where French policy is weakest, and where they expect stout criticism from Mr. Dulles, is their failure to conclude a genuine independence treaty with Vietnam - the sort of treaty that would permit the Nationalist leaders to use it as a rallying point - definite proof that this is not a Colonial war. French Foreign Minister Bidault is said to believe that if France is defeated either militarily or politically, or if she permits American or United Nations participation in policy decisions, then France will lose her position as one of the world's great powers. Opponents of Mr.Bidault contend that there is no hope of winning either a military or political victory in Indo-China, unless the people can be stirred to fight in a cause which they believe to be their own. They contend that freedom and independence are the only answers to Ho-Chi-Minh's communist challenge. Schoenbrun quotes a high-ranking member of the Vietnam delegation now in Paris as saying that they demand not only independence from France, but also from Emperor Bao Dai's personal one-man rule. And he added: "If the French give us independence only to let us stay under a feudal regime, that's very little improvement and in many ways a step backwards."

Emperor Bao Dai is now in France; his representatives have been in touch with out Ambassador Dillon, and a meeting between Mr. Dulles and Bao Dai is a possibility. The Geneva Conference, even more than the Berlin Conference, begins to take on the appearance of one of the real pivots upon which history turns.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The struggle for Indo-China is not less involved in the political field than it is on the battlefield. And the question of freedom and independence is apparent in both areas. Nothing could point up the issue clearer than these two observations. Lenin said: "It is true that liberty is precious - so precious that it must be rationed." General MacArthur said: "The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, April 13, 1954

This is the news:

The President has ordered "a blank wall to be placed between Dr. Robert Oppenheimer and any secret" government data on our atomic or hydrogen developments. Dr. Oppenheimer is the man who directed the building of our first atomic bomb. Now a special three-man panel is (CONSIDERING) [redacted] security charges against him... charges that he associated with Communists and tried to [redacted] block the development of the hydrogen bomb. In a few minutes I'd like to discuss some of these charges and Dr. Oppenheimer's detailed reply in which he holds that he is not unfit for public service.

Dr. Hans Bethe, president of the American Physical society and a (PIONEER) [redacted] in the theoretical work that (LED) [redacted] to the H-bomb, said today he is shocked by the charges [redacted] against Oppenheimer. He told reporters: "Without Dr. Oppenheimer, the United States might not have the atom bomb because it was his insight and devotion more than anything else that led Los Alamaos to success during the war." Representative Holfield a member of the Congressional atomic energy committee says committee members have "known about the charges for years." Senator McCarthy says the suspension of Oppenheimer was long overdue.. (SHOULD) [redacted] have been taken years ago."

General Leslie Groves, who picked Oppenheimer to head the work on the atomic bomb, says he thinks his choice was sound. A reporter asked if he now considers Oppenheimer [redacted] trustworthy. The general said: "I don't know. How can you tell if your own husband or wife is trustworthy?" And (HERBERT) Maass, chairman of the board of trustees of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton.. where Oppenheimer is director.. said today:""Throughout his service with the Institute we have never had any occasion to doubt his complete loyalty and sincerity."

The Mundt Committee that will investigate the McCarthy-Army row suggested today that it might have to postpone the opening of the hearings now set for a week from Thursday. Chairman Mundt says this is a possibility. Today, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr, two members of the staff who are key figures in the inquiry with Senator McCarthy, promised full cooperation in the committee's effort to get an agreement on the scope and rules for the inquiry.

Former President Truman told Westminster College students today to guard our form of government and "don't encourage a man on horseback to take it away from you." Mr. Truman also said: any president who sits idly by and lets Congress run over him gets what he deserves."

In London today, the United States and Great Britain agreed to push for a new 10-nation military agreement in the Pacific like the North Atlantic Treaty organization. Secretary of State Dulles and British Foreign Secretary Eden agreed to "examine the possibility" of such an organization with other countries. In the House of Commons, left-wing laborites charged that Eden has made a "deliberate attempt to sabotage the Geneva conference". Aneurin Bevan said Eden has "submitted to a surrender to American pressure." Eden replied: "Mr. Dulles will be criticized in the same terms in his own country." Secretary Dulles flew on to Paris for more consultations and said the western allies want to end the war in Indo-China "on conditions that will guarantee liberty and justice for all the people" of southeast Asia. Authoritative sources in London say that while there Secretary Dulles "never even mentioned the possibility of a joint warning to Communist China."

In Indo-China, French planes parachuted tons of ammunition to the garrison at Dien Bien Phu. And the French announced that their forces have sealed off the enemy's main communication route into south and central Laos. The operation was carried out in the past ten days..without a fight.

Australian Prime Minister Menzies announced today that the Soviet embassy's third secretary in Canberra has fled the Russians..asked for asylum.. and turned over to the Australians a number of documents naming Australians as participating in a Soviet espionage network. A royal commission has been appointed to investigate.

The case is similar to that of Igor Guzenko who left the Russian embassy in Ottawa in 1945 under similar conditions. Today, the Jenner committee revealed that in its recent questioning of Guzenko in Canada he gave them no new information.

~~The President today named Norman T. Mason of Massachusetts to be acting commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, while the F.B.I. and other government agents investigate a scandal in the F.H.A.~~

[redacted], The President TODAY threw [redacted] an over-hand pitch at Griffith Stadium to [redacted] open the baseball season OFFICIALLY. And after the game... (the Washington Senators beat the Yankees five to three...) the President left by plane for a golfing vacation at Augusta, Georgia.

Edward R. Murrow: April 13, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The charges against Dr. Oppenheimer fall into two categories. Some are old and have been repeatedly investigated, without affecting his employment by the government. The others are charges that have developed more recently. Some of them challenge Dr. Oppenheimer's answers to the earlier charges. The others deal with the hydrogen bomb, and bear on the question whether his conduct and views delayed its development.

Two facts can be stressed. The charges now published are charges only. The public has not seen the evidence on them. The other is that Dr. Oppenheimer was given the opportunity to resign. Had he done so he would not have been suspended and be undergoing a formal security hearing.

~~The publicity given the charges at this stage is [illegible] injury~~ ~~suff[illegible] Some th[illegible] is [illegible]~~ ~~without his being [illegible] at the time [illegible]~~ ~~diagno[illegible] charges [illegible]~~ ~~is [illegible] by which he [illegible] cured.~~

It should be pointed out that the decision to press the charges against Dr. Oppenheimer was made last December. At that time the limelight was on former President Truman for having promoted Harry Dexter White when many accusations of communist association had been made against him. ~~It is not~~

~~as[redacted] of [redacted] wh[redacted] ch[redacted]~~

It is also to the point to say that the charges about a delay in making the hydrogen bomb were under investigation last year, before Senator McCarthy was heard on this theme. So the suspension of Dr. Oppenheimer and the A.E.C. security hearing are not in any way the consequence of Senator McCarthy's remarks [redacted] a week ago.

Dr. Oppenheimer has admitted repeatedly his association with left wing persons, before the start of the atomic project. His brother and his brother's wife had been communists. His own wife had previously been married to a communist, who fell in the Spanish Civil War, and she had been a member of the party. "I didn't know in those days" he writes, "who was and was not a member of the communist party." He confesses that he was without knowledge or experience of the political world for many years. He did not even hear of the stockmarket crash of 1929 until months after it occurred. His first contact with political realities was colored by the left wing persons he associated with. He had been virtually engaged to the daughter of a leading professor. SHE was a communist, though not active in the party. When he married his present wife her attachment to the Spanish Loyalist cause affected his outlook.

~~One of the charges against him is that he [redacted] $150 a month to the Communist party. He explai[redacted] for his contrib[redacted] to the Spanish Loyalist, and [redacted].~~ In the charges against him the names are given of seven persons who testified that he was a member of the party who had to work without identification as such. "I have no knowledge what these people might have said," he writes. "What I do know is that I never was a member of the party, concealed or open." Two of the seven persons, he says, are strangers to him. He may have met a third, while two others were the most casual acquaintances. Because of the associations he admits, and his financial contributions, Dr. Oppenheimer says: "I might well have appeared at the time as quite close to the Communist party - perhaps even to some people as belonging to it. But I never was a member. I never accepted Communist dogma or theory, in fact it never made sense to me."

One charge is that a closed meeting of the Communist party actually was held in Dr. Oppenheimer's Berkeley house. He wracked his memory, he says, for anything that might have given rise to this report but could come on nothing. He could not even remember having lent his house to young people on the campus for a meeting. Then he was able to establish that he had left Berkeley nineteen days before the approximate date given for this meeting.

It was charged that Dr. Oppenheimer employed known Communists at Los Alamos. He answered in detail about those named. Two of them, he says, never worked at Los Alamos. If he recommended the others, he says, it was only with the knowledge that they would have to pass the normal security check. It is charged that he said that he knew of several persons employed at Los Alamos who had been communists. The only one he knew, he says, was his wife, of whose loyalty to the United States at the time there could be no question.

As to the hydrogen bomb, Dr. Oppenheimer himself had been one of the pioneers in calling attention to the possibility of making it. Study of it was progressing at the time the Soviet bomb exploded. That event brought up the proposal to concentrate on the hydrogen bomb. Eight members of the advisory committee of the A.E.C. voted against it. The ninth member was absent. "I think I am correct in asserting" says Dr. Oppenheimer, "that the unanimous opposition we expressed was based on conviction, to which technical and other considerations contributed, that because of our over-all situation at that time, such a program might weaken rather than strengthen the position of the United States." "It would have been my duty so to report" he remarks, "had I been alone in my views."

As Chairman of the committee he had to explain the position taken on several occasions, once at a meeting of the Joint Congressional Committee. "This," he writes, "is the full story of my quote 'opposition to the hydrogen bomb' unquote. It is a story that ends once and for all, when in January 1950 President Truman announced the decision to proceed with the program. I never urged anyone not to work on the hydrogen bomb project. I never made or caused any distribution of the advisory committee report, except to the commission itself."

The closing paragraph of Dr. Oppenheimer's 47-page letter is highly quotable: "In preparing this letter" he writes, "I have reviewed two decades of my life. I have recalled instances where I acted unwisely. What I have hoped for was, not that I could wholly avoid error, but that I might learn from it. What I have learned has, I think, made me more fit to serve my country." His fitness will be judged in due course by the proper authorities.

The newest controversey concerned with our security and involving Dr. Oppenheimer will be resolved only when the truth is established and made known. John Milton once remarked:"Let truth and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worst in a free and open encounter. For as W.R. White concluded:"There is no problem in dealing with error if truth is presented intelligently."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Oppenheimer

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President has ordered "a blank wall to be placed between Dr. Robert Oppenheimer and any secret" government data on our atomic or hydrogen developments. Dr. Oppenheimer is the man who directed the building of our first atomic bomb. Now a special three-man panel is considering security charges against him - charges that he associated with Communists and tried to block the development of the hydrogen bomb. In a few minutes I'd like to discuss some of these charges and Dr. Oppenheimer detailed reply in which he holds that he is not unfit for public service.

Dr. Hans Bethe, president of the American Physical society and a pioneer in the theoretical work that led to the H-bomb, said today he is shocked by the charges against Oppenheimer. He told reporters: "Without Dr. Oppenheimer, the United States might not have the atom bomb because it was his insight and devotion more than anything else that led Los Alamos to success during the war." Representative Holifield a member of the Congressional atomic energy committee says committee members have known about the charges for years. Senator McCarthy says the suspension of Oppenheimer was long overdue. Should have been taken years ago. General Leslie Groves, who picked Oppenheimer to head the work on the atomic bomb, says he thinks his choice was sound. A reporter asked if he now considers Oppenheimer trustworthy. The general said: "I don't know. How can you tell if your own husband or wife is trustworthy." And Herbert Maass, chairman of the board of Trustees of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton where Oppenheimer is director said today: "Throughout his service with the Institute we have never had any occasion to doubt his complete loyalty and sincerity."

The Mundt Committee that will investigate the McCarthy-Army row suggested today that it might have to postpone the opening of the hearings now set for a week from Thursday. Chairman Mundt says this is a possibility. Today, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr, two members of the staff who are key figures in the inquiry with Senator McCarthy, promised full cooperation in the committee's effort to get an agreement on the scope and rules for the inquiry.

Formmr President Truman told Westminster College students today to guard our form of government and "don't encourage a man on horseback to take it away from you." Mr. Truman also said: any president who sits idly by and lets Congress run over him gets what he deserves."

In London today, the United States and Great Britain agreed to push for a new 10-nation military agreement in the Pacific like the North Atlantic Treaty organization. Secretary of State Dulles and British Foreign Secretary Eden agreed to "examine the possibility" of such an organization with other countries. In the House of Commons, left-wing laborites charged that Eden has made a "deliberate attempt to sabotage the Geneva conference." Aneurin Bevan said Eden has "submitted to a surrender to American pressure." Eden replied: "Mr. Dulles will be criticized in the same terms in his own country." Secretary Dulles flew on to Paris for more consultations and said the western allies want to end the war in Indo-China "on conditions that will guarantee liberty and justice for all the people" of southeast Asia. Authoritative sources in London say that while there, Secretary Dulles "never even mentioned the possibility of a joint warning to Communist China."

In Indo-China, French planes parachuted tons of ammunition to the garrison at Dien Bien Phu. And the French announced that their forces have sealed off the enemy's main communication route into south and central Laos. The operation was carried out in the past ten days without a fight.

Australian Prime Minister Menzies announced today that the Soviet embassy's third secretary in Canberra has fled the Russians asked for asylum and turned over to the Australians a number of documents naming Australians as participating in a Soviet espionage network. A royal commission has been appointed to investigate.

The case is similar to that of Igor Guzenko who left the Russian embassy in Ottawa in 1945 under similar conditions. Today, the Jenner committee revealed that in its recent questioning of Guzenko in Canada he gave them no new information.

The President today threw an over-hand pitch at Griffith Stadium to open the baseball season officially. And after the game the President left by plane for a golfing vacation at Augusta, Georgia. The Washington Senators beat the Yankees five to three.

The charges against Dr. Oppenheimer fall into two categories. Some are old and have been repeatedly investigated, without affecting his employment by the government. The others are charges that have developed more recently. Some of them challenge Dr. Oppenheimer's answers to the earlier charges. The others deal with the hydrogen bomb, and bear on the question whether his conduct and views delayed its development. Two facts can be stressed. The charges now published are charges only. The public has not seen the evidence on them. The other is that Dr. Oppenheimer was given the opportunity to resign. Had he done so, he would not have been suspended and be undergoing a formal security hearing. It should be pointed out that the decision to press the charges against Dr. Oppenheimer was made last December. At that time the limelight was on former President Truman for having promoted Harry Dexter White when many accusations of communist association had been made against him. It is also to the point to say that the charges about a delay in making the hydrogen bomb were under investigation last year, before Senator McCarthy was heard on this theme. So the suspension of Dr. Oppenheimer and the A.E.C. security hearing are not in any way the consequence of Senator McCarthy's remarks a week ago. Dr. Oppenheimer had admitted repeatedly his association with left wing persons, before the start of the atomic project. His brother and his brother's wife had been communists. Hiw own wife had previously been married to a communist, who fell in the Spanish Civil War, and she had been a member of the party. "I didn't know in those days" he writes, "who was and was not a member of the communist party." He confesses that he was without knowledge or experience of the political world for many years. He did not even hear of the stockmarket crash of 1929 until months after it occurred. His first contact with political realities was colored by the left-wing persons he associated with. He had been virtually engaged to the daughter of a leading professor. She was a communist, though not active in the party. When he married his present wife her attachment to the Spanish Loyalist cause affected his outlook.

In the charges against him the names are given of seven persons who testified that he was a member of the party who had to work without identification as such. "I have no knowledge what these people might have said," he writes. "What I do know is that I never was a member of the party, concealed or open." Two of the seven persons, he says, are strangers to him. He may have met a third, while two others were the most casual acquaintances. Because of the associations he admits, and his financial contributions, Dr. Oppenheimer says: "I might well have appeared at the time as quite close to the Communist party - perhaps even to some people as belonging to it. But I never was a member. I never accepted Communist dogma or theory, in fact it never made sense to me." One charge is that a closed meeting of the Communist parrty actually was held in Dr. Oppenheimer's Berkeley house. He wracked his memory, he says, for anything that might have given rise to this report but could come on nothing. He could not even remember having lent his house to young people on the campus for a meeting. Then he was able to establish that he had left Berkeley nineteen days before the approximate date given for this meeting.

It was charged that Dr. Oppenheimer employed known Communists at Los Alamos. He answered in detail about those named. Two of them, he says, never worked at Los Alamos. If he recommended the others, he says, it was only with the knowledge that they would have to pass the normal security check. It is charged that he said that he knew of several persons employed at Los Alamos who had been Communists. The only one he knew, he says, was his wife, of whose loyalty to the United States at the time there could be no question. As to the hydrogen bomb, Dr. Oppenheimer himself had been one of the pioneers in calling attention to the possibility of making it. Study of it was progressing at the time the Soviet bomb exploded. That event brought up the proposal to concentrate on the hydrogen bomb. Eight members of the advisory committee of the A.E.C. voted against it. The ninth member was absent. "I think I am correct in asserting" says Dr. Oppenheimer, "that the unanimous opposition we expressed was based on conviction, to which technical and other considerations contributed, that because of our over-all situation at that time, such a program might weaken rather than strengthen the position of the United States." "It would have been my duty so to report" he remarks, "had I been alone in my views." As Chairman of the committee he had to explain the position taken on several occasions, once at a meeting of the Joint Congressional Committee. "This," he writes, "is the full story of my quote 'opposition to the hydrogen bomb' unquote. It is a story that ends once and for all, when in January 1950 President Truman announced the decision to proceed with the program. I never urged anyone not to work on the hydrogen bomb project. I never made or caused any distribution of the advisory committee report, except to the commission itself." The closing paragraph of Dr. Oppenheimer's 47 page letter is highly quotable: "In preparing this letter" he writes, "I have reviewed two decades of my life. I have recalled instances where I acted unwisely. What I have hoped for was, not that I could wholly avoid error, but that I might learn from it. What I have learned has, I think, made me more fit to serve my country." His fitness will be judged in due course by the proper authorities.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The newest controversey concerned with our security and involving Dr. Oppenheimer will be resolved only when the truth is established and made known. John Milton once remarked: "Let truth and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worst in a free and open encounter. For as W.R. White concluded: "There is no problem in dealing with error if truth is presented intelligently."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday April 14, 1954

This is the news:

The British government today agreed to keep some of her troops on the European continent as long as the threat of Communist aggression ~~[illegible]~~ (CONTINUES) #

The British also agree to integrate their ground and air forces with those of six European nations when the European defense community comes into being. The British don't want to actually join the European army because they fear this would hamper their role as the leader of the British Commonwealth. In the House of Commons today, Former Prime Minister Atlee asked Foreign Secretary Eden if the United States is going to make a similar committment..to keep American troops in Europe. Eden replied: "I understand a full statement of the United States position may be expected shortly."

The British decision to keep troops in Europe had been one of the conditions the French demanded for ratification of the European army plan. #

And today the French joined the British in approving Secretary of State Dulles plan for consultations on the possibility of a ten-nation collective defense organization in Southeast Asia. Mr. Dulles and French Foreign Minister Bidault agree this would help "assure the peace, security and freedom of this area."

Aneurin Bevan, the left wing British laborite, today resigned from his party's shadow cabinet..the cabinet that might normally take over the government if Labor should return to power. Bevan objects to the approval of the Dulles plan for southeast Asia..he opposes the European army and the re-arming of Germany.

Russia and the Western powers today made new moves to treat Communist China as they want her treated. The three western powers have sent Moscow a note repeating our view that at the forthcoming Geneva conference Red China will be just a participant..not one of the sponsoring Big Powers. The Russian press and Russian diplomatic notes have tended to give the impression that the Chinese would be accepted on an equal footing with the sponsoring powers of the Geneva meeting. So today..as one State Department spokesman put it..we told Moscow the facts "to get the matter cleared."

At the United Nations, Andrie Vishinsky demanded that Communist China..together with Czechoslovakia and India..be represented on a ~~subcommit~~ subcommittee that will meet in secret to discuss a reduction in world armament. Vishinsky said China is one of the great powers.. cannot be overlooked. But Ambassador Lodge said we oppose the Chinese Communists on this committee for the same reason we oppose their entrance into the United nations.

In Washington today, Everett F. Drumright, deputy assistant secretary of state, told the House Foreign Affairs committee, that we must be prepared to run what he called "the most serious risks", to protect Southeast Asia from falling to the communists. He said: "We intend to prevent the Chinese Communists from reaping the full benefits of further aggression." And Major General Stewart told the committee that if the people of Southeast Asia come under Communist control, "we would be faced with a major, and perhaps disastrous shift in military and economic strength from the free to the Communist world.

In Indo-China today, Communist night raiders, dressed in black, blew up steel landing mats at the battered Dien Bien Phu airstrip. It was the second time in five days they've carried out a similar successful operation. This means that the French now, at least for the moment, cannot evacuate their wounded. The French High command reports that the enemy is increasing his pressure on the northwest corner of the fortress. The French today ordered a sort of rationing of news about the battle for Dien Bien Phu. They told correspondents, stories could be sent out only three times a day, a few lines at each time. But the order was withdrawn after protests by correspondents in Hanoi.

In Australia, as a Royal Commission prepared to investigate the case of former Soviet embassy secretary-- Ivan Petrov, his wife told reporters that Petrov did not abandon Communism and seek asylum in Australia. She said this is a lie..charged her husband has been kidnapped. But a Royal Commission is about to investigate the documents Petrov brought with him. Some are understood to link certain Australians to a Communist espionage ring.

In Washington, Gordon Dean, former chairman of the atomic energy commission, said he is going to testify before a special security board on the fitness of Dr. Robert Oppenheimer, the atomic scientist. Oppenheimer has been barred from all secret data by (ORDER) of the President. Today, Defense Secretary Wilson was asked about the Oppenheimer case. He said: "I'm not trying to hurt or smear anybody who has been trying to do a good job for the country. "Frankly"..he added....."I have sympathy for anyone who made a mistake and then reformed. But I think they should be reformed elsewhere than in the armed services." Wilson indicated that Oppenheimer had been squeezed out last July as an adviser to the armed forces.

[redacted]

Dr. Howard Meyerhoff, executive director of the [redacted] Manpower Commission, said today: "There is no more competent person with more in his head on the atomic program...including the H-bomb and the possible industrial use of atomic energy.. [redacted] Dr. Oppenheimer. It seems to me he simply must be in the councils of the government."

Senator McCarthy today asked the Pentagon to let him know how many members of Congress and other government officials have requested "special assignment and treatment" of service men and women since the start of World War Two. The Army has charged that McCarthy and his committee counsel, Roy Cohn, used pressure to try to get favored treatment for Private David Schine.

Democratic Senator Byrd charged today that some housing promoters.. with practically no money at all.. got excessive government-insured loans running into millions of dollars. He says the government's housing program has been marred by extravagance and irresponsibility "if not actual fraud and graft." The Senate Banking Committee today started an investigation of the housing program.

Chairman H. Carl Andersen, Minnesota Republican, who is chairman of an agriculture appropriations subcommittee, charged today that Agriculture Secretary Benson tried to write the agriculture appropriation bill "after a secret White House conclave." He accuses the Secretary and the White House of going behind his back "to abbrogate my chairmanship."

The President today formally accepted the resignation of Deputy Defense Secretary Roger, Kyes..with reluctance. Mr. Eisenhower praised Kyes for "penetrating judgment and tireless energy."

Edward R. Murrow: April 14, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

This is one of those evenings when dispatches from two foreign capitals appear to agree. Howard K. Smith cables from London that when Mr. Dulles left there, people wondered what all the shouting had been about. Authoritative sources in Whitehall say that Mr. Dulles never even mentioned the possibility of a joint warning to Red China. All he sought was for Britain to agree to examine the possibility of some vague form of collective defense in Southeast Asia. British officials say this would be a job of at least six months, and no details whatever were discussed. Mr. Dulles is said to have told the British that he still opposes the sending of American ground troops to Indo-China. The opinion in London is that this was another sally of psychological warfare.

Tonight in Paris an official American source said Mr. Dulles had succeeded in getting broad agreement with France and Britain to create some sort of security system in Southeast Asia, regardless of the outcome of the Geneva Conference. It was explained that this area of the world is the only one where the free nations do not have a united security pact, and this hole must be plugged permanently. Therefore even if Geneva should produce any kind of settlement or cease fire in Indo-China, it would be at best precarious in the absence of a united security system such as Europe has in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This same official American source reports Mr. Dulles as being convinced that Russia and China do not want a general war now. The real danger, in Mr. Dulles's view, arises from the fact that the Communists may miscalculate the weakness or apparent lack of unity of the free nations, and be tempted to undertake more acts of aggression, such as Korea and Indo-China, which could indeed lead to a general war. If the Communist world knows that the free world will resist any aggression with full force, then there is a chance that they will abandon their grandiose plans for expansion. American officials in Paris deny that Mr. Dulles ever intended to threaten an atomic attack on China, or that he advocated any specific measure for action now.

It is contended that American policy and intentions had been misrepresented and misunderstood in Europe, and that is why Mr. Dulles decided to make his trip - in order to clarify the position and reassure our allies personally.

The same official American source in Paris flatly denied that there had been any talk about possible concessions to China at the Geneva Conference. Mr. Dulles is said to have made it clear to the French that we attach the utmost importance to the removal of the stigma of colonialism from the Indo-China war. Our representatives are said to be convinced that the French genuinely intend to grant complete independence to the associated states, and to do it very soon.

There appears to be general agreement that the Communist offensive at Dien Bien Phu was launched, not for military but for political reasons, in order to strengthen the Communists' hand at Geneva.

There remain certain discrepancies between the Anglo-French version of the talks, and the American version. The French and British maintain that all they have agreed to is to examine the possibility of establishing a collective defense in Southeast Asia. American sources give the impression that agreement has already been reached in principle, and that such a system will be created regardless of the outcome of the Geneva Conference. American sources deny discussing any possible concessions to China, whereas the French say they made it clear to Mr. Dulles that they interpret the negotiations at Geneva as being a two-way trade. It seems to be clear that there is a general unity of purpose and objective between the French and Americans, in the broadest possible terms. But there remain very real differences on how to achieve the agreed objective.

The free peoples of the world seemed determined to work toward peace on the basis of military strength. The Communists may interpert this approach in their own way. But there can be little argument with Frank Vanderlip's observation that "nothing is settled until it is settled right. And no matter how unlimited the power man may have, unless it is exercised fairly and justly, his actions will return to plague him."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The British government today agreed to keep some of her troops on the European continent as long as the threat of Communist aggression continues. The British also agree to integrate their ground and air forces with those of six European nations when the European defense community comes into being. The British don't want to actually join the European army because they fear this would hamper their role as the leader of the British Commonwealth. In the House of Commons today, Former Prime Minister Atlee asked Foreign Secretary Eden if the United States is going to make a similar committment to keep American troops in Europe. Eden replied: "I understand a full statement of the United States position may be expected shortly."

The British decision to keep troops in Europe had been one of the conditions the French demanded for ratification of the European army plan. And today the French joined the British in approving Secretary of State Dulles plan for consultations on the possibility of a ten nation collective defense organization in Southeast Asia. Mr. Dulles and French Foreign Minister Bidault agree this would help "assure the peace, security and freedom of this area."

Aneurin Bevan, the left wing British laborite, today resigned from his party's shadow cabinet the cabinet that might normally take over the government if Labor should return to power. Bevan objects to the approval of the Dulles plan for southeast Asia - he opposes the European army and the re-arming of Germany.

Russia and the Western powers today made new moves to treat Communist China as they want her treated. The three western powers have sent Moscow a note repeating our view that at the forthcoming Geneva conference Red China will be just a participant - not one of the sponsoring Big Powers. The Russian press and Russian diplomatic notes have tended to give the impression that the Chinese would be accepted on an equal footing with the sponsoring powers of the Geneva meeting. So today as one State Department spokesman put it, we told Moscow the facts " to get the matter cleared."

At the United Nations, Andrie Vishinsky demanded that Communist China together with Czechoslovakia and India be represented on a subcommittee that will meet in secret to discuss a reduction in world armament. Vishinsky said China is is one of the great powers - cannot be overlooked. But Ambassador Lodge said we oppose the Chinese Communists on this committee for the same reason we oppose their entrance into the United Nations.

In Washington today, Everett F. Drumright, deputy assistant secretary of state, told the House Foreign Affairs committee, that we must be prepared to run what he called "the most serious risks" to protect Southeast Asia from falling to the communists. He said: "We intend to prevent the Chinese Communists from reaping the full benefits of further aggression." And Major General Stewart told the committee that if the people of Southeast Asia come under Communist control "we would be faced with a major, and perhaps disastrous shift in military and economic strength from the free to the Communist world.

In Indo-China today, Communist night raiders, dressed in black, blew up steel landing mats at the battered Dien Bien Phu airstrip. It was the second time in five days they've carried out a similar successful operation. This means that the French now at least for the moment cannot evacuate their wounded. The French High command reports that the enemy is increasing his pressure on the northwest corner of the fortress. The French today ordered a sort of rationing of news about the battle for Dien Bien Phu. They told correspondents stories could be sent out only three times a day, a few lines at each time. But the order was withdrawn after protests by correspondents in Hanoi.

In Australia, as a Royal Commission prepared to investigate the case of former Soviet embassy secretary - Ivan Petrov, his wife told reporters that Petrov did not abandon Communism and seek asylum in Australia. She said this is a lie - charged her husband has been kidnapped. But a Royal Commission is about to investigate the documents Petrov brought with him. Some are understood to link certain Australians to a Communist espionage ring.

In Washington, Gordon Dean, former chairman of the atomic energy commission said he is going to testify before a special security board on the fitness of Dr. Robert Oppenheimer, the atomic scientist. Oppenheimer has been barred from all secret data by order of the President. Today, Defense Secretary Wilson was asked about the Oppenheimer case. He said: "I'm not trying to hurt or smear anybody who has been trying to do a good job for the country." "Frankly," he added, "I have sympathy for anyone who made a mistake and then reformed. But I think they should be reformed elsewhere than in the armed services." Wilson indicated that Oppenheimer had been squeezed out last July as an adviser to the armed forces.

Dr. Howard Meyerhoff, executive director of the scientific manpower commission, said today: "There is no more competent person with more in his head on the atomic program - including the H-bomb and the possible industrial use of atomic energy than Dr. Oppenheimer. It seems to me he simply must be in the councils of the government."

Senator McCarthy today asked the Pentagon to let him know how many members of Congress and other government officials have requested "special assignment and treatment" of service men and women since the start of World War Two. The Army has charged that McCarthy and his committee counsel, Roy Cohn, used pressure to try to get favored treatment for Private David Schine.

Democratic Senator Byrd charged today that some housing promoters with practically no money at all got excessive government-insured loans running into millions of dollars. He says the government's housing program has been marred by extravagance and irresponsibility "if not actual fraud and graft." The Senate Banking Committee today started an investigation of the housing program.

Chairman H. Carl Andersen, Minnesota Republican, who is chairman of an agriculture appropriations subcommittee, charged today that Agriculture Secretary Benson tried to write the agriculture appropriation bill "after a secret White House conclave." He accuses the Secretary and the White House of going behind his back to abbrogate my chairmanship."

The President today formally accepted the resignation of Deputy Defense Secretary Roger Kyes with reluctance. Mr. Eisenhower praised Kyes for "penetrating judgment and tireless energy."

This is one of those evenings when dispatches from two foreign capitals appear to agree. Howard K. Smith cables from London that when Mr. Dulles left there, people wondered what all the shouting had been about. Authoritative sources in Whitehall say that Mr. Dulles never even mentioned the possibility of a joint warning to Red China. All he sought was for Britain to agree to examine the possibility of some vague form of collective defense in Southeast Asia. British officials say this would be a job of at least six months, and no details whatever were discussed. Mr. Dulles is said to have told the British that he still opposes the sending of American ground troops to Indo-China. The opinion in London is that this was another sally of psychological warfare. Tonight in Paris an official American source said Mr. Dulles had succeeded in getting broad agreement with France and Britain to create some sort of security system in Southeast Asia, regardless of the outcome of the Geneva Conference. It was explained that this area of the world is the only one where the free nations do not have a united security pact, and this hole must be plugged permamently. Therefore even if Geneva should produce any kind of settlement or cease fire in Indo-China, it would be at best precarious in the absence of a united security system such as Europe has in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This same official American source reports Mr. Dulles as being convinced that Russia and China do not want a general war now. The real danger, in Mr. Dulles's view, arises from the fact that the Communists may miscalculate the weakness or apparent lack of unity of the free nations, and be tempted to undertake more acts of aggression, such as Korea and Indo-China, which could indeed lead to a general war. If the Communist world knows that the free world will resist any aggression with full force, then there is a chance that they will abandon their grandiose plans for expansion. American officials in Paris deny that Mr. Dulles ever intended to threaten an atomic attack on China, or that he advocated any specific measure for action now.

It is contended that American policy and intentions had been misrepresented and misunderstood in Europe, and that is why Mr. Dulles decided to make his trip - in order to clarify the position and reassure our allies personally. The same official American source in Paris flatly denied that there had been any talk about possible concessions to China at the Geneva Conference. Mr. Dulles is said to have made it clear to the French that we attach the utmost importance to the removal of the stigma of colonialism from the Indo-China war. Our representatives are said to be convinced that the French genuinely intend to grant complete independence to the associated states, and to do it very soon.

There appears to be general agreement that the Communist offensive at Dien Bien Phu was launched, not for military but for political reasons, in order to strengthen the Communists' hand at Geneva.. There remain certain discrepancies between the Anglo-French version of the talks, and the American version. The French and British maintain that all they have agreed to is to examine the possibility of establishing a collective defense in Southeast Asia. American sources give the impression that agreement has already been reached in principle, and that such a system will be created regardless of the outcome of the Geneva Conference. American sources deny discussing any possible concessions to China, whereas the French say they made it clear to Mr. Dulles that they interpret the negotiations at Geneva as being a two-way trade. It seems to be clear that there is a general unity of purpose and objective between the French and Americans, in the broadest possible terms. But there remain very real differences on how to achieve the agreed objective.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The free peoples of the world seemed determined to work toward peace on the basis of military strength. The Communists may interpret this approach in their own way. But there can be little argument with Frank Vanderlip(s observation that "nothing is settled until it is settled right. And no matter how unlimited the power man may have, unless it is exercised fairly and justly, his actions will return to plague him."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday, April 15, 1954

This is the news:

Communist spearheads have gained a foothold in the northern part of the French airfield at Dien Bien Phu. The enemy forces reached the field by tunneling underground, and in a series of sharp attacks. They are now less than a thousand yards from the main center of French resistance. The French have sent tank-led forces into the area.. to try to wipe out the enemy forces. But the French High Command says the Communists appear to be firmly entrenched on the airfield.

Secretary of State Dulles said today, that unity among the ten nations he wants in an alliance to combat Communism is Southeast Asia, "is taking form." Just back from visits to London and Paris, the Secretary said: the loss of this area to the Communists can be prevented "without extending the Indo-China war, if the free nations of the world, having vital interests in the area, are united." Mr. Dulles says he's well-satisfied with his talks in Europe, and the agreement of the British and French to explore the possibility of a collective defense for southeast Asia. He'll fly to Augusta on Monday, to make a personal report to the President.

Senator McCarthy said today that "somebody" should be cited for contempt if it develops that the Army's report on the McCarthy-Army row was made public intentionally. He blames this on (civilian) politicians in the Pentagon. And Roy Cohn, counsel for the McCarthy committee, says the release of the report is "a one-sided smear." It makes 29 charges of improper means used by McCarthy and Cohn to get favored treatment for Private David Schine. Cohn wants an investigation of who (leaked) the report to the press.. a fact which caused Senator Symington to make it all public today. And Cohn indicates he may not co-operate with the committee until it conducts this investigation and assures him there will be no new leaks. The committee had decided to keep secret both the Army statement and one from McCarthy and Cohn. Chairman Mundt says this is still the policy..he hopes there will be no further leaks.

The army report charges, among other things, that Cohn, with the consent of Senator McCarthy, told the army that if it co-operated on Private Schine's case this would have a bearing on the McCarthy investigation of Communists in the army. The report says Francis P. Carr of the McCarthy committee staff promised that such an investigation would be reasonable..if Schine received a special assignment in New York. The Army says Cohn--in the presence of McCarthy--threatened to expose the army "in its worst light", unless Schine received special treatment. The Army also charges that at various times Cohn made threatening and violent statements about future investigations.. that he "exerted his influence" over McCarthy to release a statement that might have been derogatory to the army. The Army report also charges that with help from McCarthy, Cohn managed to get special treatment for Private Schine, during his basic training period at Fort Dix. The grounds for this was the need of Schine to work on committee reports. The Army said Schine did no such work. The report also charges that Cohn and Carr managed to get Private Schine relieved of K.P. duty after Cohn told three army officers he had a long memory and would never forget their names.. because they made things difficult for Schine. In the past, Senator McCarthy has charged that the Army tried to "blackmail" him to get his committee to stop investigating the army.

Senators Jenner and McCarran said today that the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee uncovered "voluminous information" on Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer in 1952. They say this information was turned over to the proper agencies of the government. Senator McCarthy's committee and the House un-American group also say they had material on Oppenheimer who has now been barred from government atomic secrets.

Dr. Edward Y. Condon, former head of the Bureau of Standards, today refused to comment on reports that he has charged OPPENHEIMER with trying to implicate others as security risks. Condon says he knows OPPENHEIMER well, "and has absolute trust in him."

Abraham Chasanow, who has worked for the navy's hydrographic office for 23 years, charged today that he has been fired without explanation after once being cleared by a security hearing board. He questions whether anti-semitism is involved.

Treasury Secretary Humphrey said today that he's confident of the future and that "we are NOT now headed for a depression. He called for quick congressional action on the President's tax bill...because much business expansion is waiting for it to become law.

Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, says France and Italy "must sooner or later face up to their problems realistically and realize that their future prosperity and security lies in unity with western Europe ..including Germany." ~~Admiral Radford says the North Atlantic organization "needs a German contribution and, above all, it needs a France German unity."~~

A House committe today released testimony by General Ridgeway, the army chief of staff, saying that he could not agree with Defense Secretary Wilson's statement that [redacted] withdrawing two American divisions from Korea we would be [redacted] considered as a sign of strength. Ridgeway, explaining that he didn't know the "trend" of Wilson's thinking, said it was hard for him to see "how Korea itself would be any stronger with two divisions less."

In Kansas City today, former policeman Lieutenant Louis Shoulders was convicted of lying about the handling of the 600-thousand dollars in Greenlease kidnap ransom money. Half of it is still missing. Shoulders.. and Elmer Dolan, another policeman.. have been found guilty of lying about the handling of the suitcases they [redacted] recovered with money from Carl Hall, one of the kidnappers..who has since been executed,

In Egypt today, the military government banished from politics for ten years all political leaders who held office during former King Farouk's last ten years on the throne. This means that former premiers and cabinet ministers who governed the country under Farouk may not hold office or lead their political parties.

Edward R. Murrow: April 15, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

French Premier Laniel has decided to call for debate in the French Parliament on the ratification of the European Army Plan, on May 25th. # Our government will probably announce tomorrow the text of our guarantee in support of the European Defense Community. Our undertaking will be very close to the letter and spirit of the British declaration announced this week. We will assure France of our intention to keep troops on the Continent of Europe as long as may be necessary. We will undertake to remain in close support of the European Army as long as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is in force; and we will agree to consult our European Allies before making any important changes in the American military contribution to the common defense of Europe. On the question of the duration of this guarantee we will again explain, as Mr. Dulles did last September, that our government regards the North Atlantic Treaty as being of indefinite duration. The fact that the treaty called for a twenty-year period - that means it still has seventeen years to go - does not mean that it automatically ends at that time. The treaty says that the member nations need not continue beyond that period, but nothing prevents them from leaving it in force, and no new legislation is required to extend it. This is as far as our constitution permits the administration to make a commitment.

This may not satisfy a considerable group of the French public, which fears an American withdrawal from the Continent as soon as German troops are raised and armed. But the French Government knows that this is the most they can get, and they believe it is enough to satisfy parliamentary insistence on American support.

The complications involved in this alliance which we lead is illustrated by Marshal Tito's current visit to Turkey. Greece and Turkey are members of NATO, but Yugoslavia is not and doesn't want to be. This for the time being prevents anything in the nature of an effective Balkan pact. Tito wants to demonstrate that a small nation can follow an independent course without becoming involved in Western military plans. But there is a further complication, and that is the fact that Italy is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; and Tito has considerable outstanding business with Italy, including the question of Trieste.

Greece and Turkey, as members of NATO, cannot tell the Yugoslavs the strategic plan for the defense of the Balkan region. On the other hand, the Yugoslavs cannot tell the Greeks and the Turks their defense plan, because these in turn would be passed on to Italy, and Tito doesn't want to give a potential foe, namely Italy, such valuable information.

Recently a partial solution was found for this curious situation. After each meeting of the three Balkan partners - Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey - they jointly decide what data and military information shall be transmitted to General Gruenther's NATO headquarters. This helps some, but not much, for it is difficult to make plans for Balkan defense without keying it in to the general defense plans of the Western alliance.

There is still another difficulty in the way of an effective Balkan alliance. There is a major difference between Turkey and Yugoslavia. It has to do with the question of recognizing Communist China. The Turks stand by the American policy of no recognition and no deals. But the Yugoslavs still think Mao-Tse-Tung may be another Tito, and therefore it's necessary to do everything possible to woo China away from Russia, by giving China diplomatic recognition, admitting her to the United Nations, and encouraging China to follow an independent policy.

But the cement that may yet create a real Balkan alliance is the same that created the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and that is fear of Russia. The Turks apparently do not fear that Tito may revert to his earlier pro-Moscow policy. Tito's appeal to the Turks is that he has stood up to Turkey's traditional enemy - Russia; and that he sincerely believes in the independence of small nations. The Yugoslavs, on the other hand, count heavily on Turkey's anti-Russian attitude as support for their own hostility towards the Kremlin. Given patience and forebearance, the Balkan pact of Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey may yet turn out to be considerably more than a scrap of paper.

It is not always easy, ~~in international relations,~~ to get nations to pool their efforts toward a common objective. But it's as James Allen once said:"Into your hands are placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present enviroment may be, you will fail, remain or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire; as great as your dominant aspiration."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Communist spearheads have gained a foothold in the northern part of the French airfield at Dien Bien Phu. The enemy forces reached the field by tunneling underground and in a series of sharp attacks. They are now less than a thousand yards from the main center of French resistance. The French have sent tank-led forces into the area to try to wipe out the enemy forces. But the French High Command says the Communists appear to be firmly entrenched on the airfield.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that unity among the ten nations he wants in an alliance to combat Communism in Southeast Asia "is taking form." Just back from visits to London and Paris, the Secretary said: the loss of this area to the Communists can be prevented "without extending the Indo-China war, if the free nations of the world having vital interests in the area, are united." Mr. Dulles says he's well-satisfied with his talks in Europe and the agreement of the British and French to explore the possibility of a collective defense for southeast Asia. He'll fly to Augusta on Monday to make a personal report to the President.

Senator McCarthy said today that "somebody" should be cited for contempt if it develops that the Army's report on the McCarthy-Army row was made public intentionally. He blames this on civilian politicians in the Pnetagon. And Roy Cohn, counsel for the McCarthy committee, says the release of the report is "a one-sided smear." It makes 29 charges of improper means used by McCarthy and Cohn to get favored treatment for Private David Schine. Cohn wants an investigation of who leaked the report to the press - a fact which caused Senator Symington to make it all public today. And Cohn indicates he may not cooperate with the committee until it conducts this investigation and assures him there will be no new leaks. The committee had decided to keep secret both the Army statement and one from McCarthy and Cohn. Chairman Mundt says this is still the policy - he hopes there will be no further leaks. The army report charges, among other things, that Cohn, with the consent of Senator McCarthy, told the army that if it cooperated on Private Schine's case this would have a bearing on the McCarthy investigation of Communists in the army. The report says Francis P. Carr of the McCarthy committee staff, promised that such an investigation would be reasonable if Schine received a special assignment in New York. The Army says Cohn - in the presence of McCarthy - threatened to expose the army "in its worst light" unless Schine received special treatment. The Army also charges that at various times Cohn made threatening and violent statements about future investigations - that he "exerted his influence" over McCarthy to release a statement that might have been derogatory to the army. The Army report also charges that with help from McCarthy, Cohn managed to get special treatment for Private Schine, during his basic training period at Fort Dix. The grounds for this was the need of Schine to work on committee reports. The Army said Schine did no such work. The report also charges that Cohn and Carr managed to get Private Schine relieved of K.P. duty after Cohn told three army officers he had a long memory and would never forget their names - because they made things difficult for Schine. In the past, Senator McCarthy has charged that the Army tried to "blackmail" him to get his committee to stop investigating the army.

Senators Jenner and McCarran said today that the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee uncovered "voluminous information" on Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer in 1952. They say this information was turned over to the proper agencies of the government. Senator McCarthy's committee and the House un-American group also say they had material on Oppenheimer who has now been barred from government atomic secrets.

Dr. Edward Y. Condon, former head of the Bureau of Standards, today refused to comment on reports that he has charged Oppenheimer with trying to implicate others as security risks. Condon says he knows Oppenheimer well, "and has absolute trust in him."

Abraham Chasanow, who has worked for the Navy's hydrographic office for 23 years, charged today that he has been fired without explanation after once being cleared by a security hearing board. He questions whether anti-semitism is involved.

Treasury Secretary Humphrey said today that he's confident of the future and that "we are NOT headed for a depression. He called for quick congressional action on the President's tax bill because much business expansion is waiting for it to become law.

Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, says France and Italy "must sooner or later face up to their problems realistically and realize that their future prosperity and security lies in unity with western Europe including Germany."

A House committee today released testimony by General Ridgeway, the army chief of staff, saying that he could not agree with Defense Secretary Wilson's statement that withdrawing two American divisions from Korea we would be considered as a sign of strength. Ridgeway, explaining that he didn't know the "trend" of Wilson's thinking, said it was hard for him to see "how Korea itself would be any stronger with two divisions less."

In Kansas City today, former police Lieutenant Louis Shoulders was convicted of lying about the handling of the 600-thousand dollars in the Greenlease kidnap ransom money. Half of it is still missing. Shoulders and Elmer Dolan, another policeman have been found guilty of lying about the handling of the suitcases they recovered with money from Carl Hall, one of the kidnappers who has since been executed.

In Egypt today, the military government banished from politics for ten years all political leaders who held office during former King Farouk's last ten years on the throne. This means that former premiers and cabinet ministers who governed the country under Farouk may not hold office or lead their political parties.

French Premier Laniel has decided to call for debate in the French Parliament on the ratification of the European Army Plan, on May 25th. Our government will probably announce tomorrow the text of our guarantee in support of the European Defense Community. Our undertaking will be very close to the letter and spirit of the British declaration announced this week. We will assure France of our intention to keep troops on the Continent of Europe as long as may be necessary. We will undertake to remain in close support of the European Army as long as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is in force; and we will agree to consult our European Allies before making any important changes in the American military contribution to the common defense of Europe. On the question of the duration of this guarantee we will again explain, as Mr. Dulles did last September, that our government regards the North Atlantic Treaty as being of indefinite duration. The fact that the treaty called for a twenty-year period - that means it still has seventeen years to go - does not mean that it automatically ends at that time. The treaty says that the member nations need not continue beyond that period, but nothing prevents them from leaving it in force, and no new legislation is required to extend it. This is as far as our constitution permits the administration to make a commitment. This may not satisfy a considerable group of the French public, which fears an American withdrawal from the Continent as soon as German troops are raised and armed. But the French Government knows that this is the most they can get, and they believe it is enough to satisfy parliamentary insistence on American support. The complications involved in this alliance which we lead is illustrated by Marshal Tito's current visit to Turkey. Greece and Turkey are members of NATO, but Yugoslavia is not and doesn't want to be. This for the time being prevents anything in the nature of an effective Balkan pact. Tito wants to demonstrate that a small nation can follow an independent course without becoming involved in Western military plans. But there is a further complication, and that is the fact that Italy is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; and Tito has considerable outstanding business with Italy, including the question of Trieste.

Greece and Turkey, as members of NATO, cannot tell the Yugoslavs the strategic plan for the defense of the Balkan region. On the other hand, the Yugoslavs cannot tell the Greeks and the Turks their defense plan, because these in turn would be passed on to Italy, and Tito doesn't want to give a potential foe, namely Italy, such valuable information. Recently a partial solution was found for this curious situation. After each meeting of the three Balkan partners - Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey - they jointly decide what data and military information shall be transmitted to General Gruenther's NATO headquarters. This helps some, but not much, for it is difficult to make plans for Balkan defense without keying it in to the general defense plans of the Western alliance. There is still another difficulty in the way of an effective Balkan alliance. There is a major difference between Turkey and Yugoslavia. It has to do with the question of recognizing Communist China. The Turks, stand by the American policy of no recognition and no deals. But the Yugoslavs still think Mao-Tse-Tung may be another Tito, and therefore it's necessary to do everything possible to woo China away from Russia, by giving China diplomatic recognition, admitting her to the United Nations, and encouraging China to follow an independent policy.

But the cement that may yet create a real Balkan alliance is the same that created the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and that is fear of Russia. The Turks apparently do not fear that Tito may revert to his earlier pro-Moscow policy. Tito's appeal to the Turks is that he has stood up to Turkey's traditional enemy - Russia; and that he sincerely believes in the independence of small nations. The Yugoslavs, on the other hand, count heavily on Turkey's anti-Russian atittude as support for their own hostility towards the Kremlin. Given patience and forebearance, the Balkan pact, of Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey may yet turn out to be considerably more than a scrap of paper.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is not always easy, to get nations to pool their efforts toward a common objective. But it's as James Allen once said: "Into your hands are placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present environment may be, you will fail, remain or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire; as great as your dominant aspiration."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday April 16, 1954

This is the news:

A high official of the government said today: if we cannot save Indo-China from the Communists by other means, American forces should be sent in. This official, described by the United Press as one who is "privvy to innermost Administration secrets, says he believes Indo-China can be saved without American troops. But if the French should withdraw..which he does not anticipate..we would have to send our men in. He says we cannot afford to retreat in Asia. And a negotiated truce. (which he believes the French will seek at the Geneva conference). a negotiated truce, would deliver the country to Communism. This government official, who will not permit use of his name, says that in HINDSIGHT it might have been better to have inflicted a substantial defeat on the Chinese Communists in Korea and then take the risks. Because since the Korean truce, the Chinese have helped the Viet Minh in Indo-China.

On the battlfields surrounding Dien Bien Phu today, the French kept the enemy from widening his foothold on the main airstrip...In Paris, the French said they have promoted Colonel Christian de Castries, the commander at Dien Bien Phu, to be a brigadier general. And the top French commander in Indo-China.. General Navarre.. has rejected an appeal by foreign correspondents for a relaxation of barriers to news coverage of the war.

The President today assured the French that American troops will stay in Europe as long as they might be needed to repulse any threat to that area. The President's message, sent to the prime ministers of the six nations who are concerned with the European army project, was designed to aid the French government. All West European governments are pleased with the President's assurance. Mr. Eisenhower says the essential elements of his message have been discussed with leading Republicans and Democrats in Congress. But Republican Chairman Saltonstall and Democratic Senator Russell of the armed services committee say they had not been told of any pledge to keep our troops on the continent indefinitely. State Department sources say the President's meassage today was not a new commitment.. but a reiteration of promises we have made previously.

Housing Chief Cole announced tonight that Deputy Housing Commissioner Walter L. Greene [redacted], is retiring, and Burton C. Bovard, the general counsel of the federal housing administration, has been put "on leave" because he "refused to resign on request." Cole's announcement came shortly after the White House said that all federal agencies.. including the F.B.I. should co-operate fully with congressional committees investigating the housing administration. One housing official estimates that at least 75-thousand tenants are paying excess rent because government insured loans to help build the apartment houses were bigger than necessary.

Senator Mundt said today that nothing short of Senator McCarthy's ill health will prevent the start Thursday of the investigation of the McCarthy-army row.

A high official of the Administration..who does not want his name used.. told newsmen today that he believes Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer to be a loyal citizen who should not be arbitrarily barred from government service because of past association with Communists. This official says the question in the Oppenheimer case is: should the government take THE position that past associations, even if foresworn, should forever after make it impossible for a person to work for the government. He says its up to a special panel to decide whether Oppenheimer is a security risk. The government official says he believes the files indicate that he is a risk..but he personally believes Oppenheimer to be a loyal American. Oppenheimer has been barred from all government atomic secrets until his case is cleared up.

The government today "urgently requested" AF of L and C.I.O. unions to postpone a strike set for midnight at plants that make atomic bomb materials at Oak Ridge and Paducah in Kentucky. The unions Agreed.

And Paul Block, Junior, co-publisher of the Toledo Blade, told the American Society of Newspaper Editors, that secrecy on atomic weapons has thrown civilian defense planning into confusion and hindered the development of a continental defense system. He says this raises the question of whether "the people must not be told much more, much sooner."

In Nebraska today, Governor Crosby named Mrs. Eva Bowring to the Senate to succeed Senator Griswold who died on Monday. Mrs. Bowring, a veteran Republican party worker, operates a 13-thousand acre cattle ranch at Merriman, in western Nebraska. She'll join Senator Margaret Chase Smith as the only women members of the Senate.

Edward R. Murrow: April 16, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

One of the by-products this week of Mr. Dulles's effort to create a South-East Asian version of NATO has been a split in the British Labor Party. This country cannot be indifferent whether or not Aneurin Bevan succeeds in wresting the leadership of that party from Clement Attlee. Mr. Attlee approves the South-East Asian Treaty Organization plan. Since its establishment may be the one way of saving Southeast Asia from Communism, Mr. Attlee's continuance as leader is important. It is all the more important because Britain is due to hold a general election before long. Recent by-election results and polls show growing Labor strength. Who leads the Labor Party - if the Party can be kept united - may lead the nation, and thus become the key associate of the United States.

Even more is at stake than Southeast Asia. Mr. Bevan's friends believe his objective is to take Britain out of the alliance with the United States altogether, and make his country the heart of a neutralist third force standing between the United States and the Soviet bloc. He opposes collective defense not only in the Pacific, he is against strengthening it in Europe. He is one of the outstanding Western opponents of re-arming Western Germany. If there were a strong probability of Mr. Bevan carrying the Labor Party with him in his revolt, the whole structure of Western unity would be shaking.

Mr. Bevan rates as the most magnetic character in British politics since Sir Winston Churchill in his heartier days. He has eloquence, a damaging hitting power in debate, a low boiling point over injustices, and a likeable personality - all attributes of a successful mass leader in a democracy.

But he may lack the knack of choosing the right issue or the right moment for his blow-ups inside the party. He has broken before with the party leadership,over the cost of health insurance and the weight of the defense burden. The break over the defense burden was like the present one, it was emotionally anti-American. But if the present one ends in the same way, Mr. Bevan will be back in the fold, even more popular than before, and still not supreme.

It is too early to say that Mr. Bevan has misjudged the time or the issue again. There is considerable anti-Americanism in Britain. But there is no comparable pro-Communism. Probably a majority of British workers agree with Mr. Bevan that Communist China should join the U.N., and admission should be offered at Geneva in negotiating peace in Indo-China. But almost surely a majority would not go along in rejecting collective security in the Pacific. For the British, including a large part of the Labor Party, regard Britain as a world power. Indeed, the ten-power pact about which Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden talked, puts the British in the forefront of a Pacific security pact. Earlier the State Department had frozen the British out of the so-called ANZUS pact, and it hurt Anglo-American relations. Now that blunder has been repaired, and it cannot work in Mr. Bevan's favor.

Numerically Mr. Bevan's strength in the Labor Party is great only in one section. He is tops with the local party officials. This group always votes overwhelmingly for his candidates when it elects its quota to the party executive. But his following among Labor M.P.'s averages only one in six, and his following in the labor union rank and file is perhaps one in three. However, this is strong support for a single individual, and it has been built up in a time of prosperity without an all-out struggle. So far Mr. Bevan has never risked the all-out struggle, knowing that if he broke the party completely in two he could never be Prime Minister. But if economic conditions should worsen, or the British were to be bogged down in another Korea, and if he should go barnstorming against the old leadership, he could be potential dynamite.

Mr. Bevan is out of the shadow cabinet, but he is still a member of the party executive. That is, he has not broken completely away. But having broken this much, he has greatly cheered the Conservatives. If the Labor Party is truly split, the Conservatives should win the next election. That is why some are predicting that Sir Winston Churchill will maneuver to hold one early this fall, after giving Mr. Eden a trial run as Prime Minister.

But that is only talk for the present. It will remain talk unless the Bevan divorce is absolute, or at any rate a reconciliation is highly unlikely. For if an election were to be called under present circumstances, the Labor party would almost certainly re-unite, at least temporarily. Only if the breach deepens and widens does an election in the fall seem assured.

Then the result would probably be like the last election - depending on their being no change in domestic or world affairs. The Labor Party would have a small majority of the popular vote, the Conservatives a small majority of the seats in the House of Commons. That is the prospect as Howard K. Smith views it. He thinks Bevan's success or failure depends on what happens in Indo-China. He points out that in the past Bevan has chosen domestic issues for his challenges to the party leadership. This time it is a foreign issue. "It is hard" Smith cables from London, "for the British common man to work up a lather about foreign affairs." This characteristic of the British common man may in the end prove to be the safeguard of the Anglo-American alliance.

Sunday is Easter. And for millions of American women this will be as good an excuse as any for them to justify the purchase of a new bonnet. The Englishman, JOSEPH Addison once remarked:"There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress." This is an argument in which we would rather remain neutral. But we do subscribe to Mark Twain's timely advice:"Never run after your own hat if it blows off. Others will be delighted to do it. Why spoil their fun."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 16, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A high official of the government said today: if we cannot save Indo-China from the Communists by other means, American forces should be sent in. This official, described by the United Press as one who is "privvy to innermost Administration Administration secrets, says he believes Indo-China can be saved without American troops. But if the French should withdraw which he does not anticipate, we would have to send our men in. He says we cannot afford to retreat in Asia. And a negotiated truce which he believes the French will seek at the Geneva conference a negotiated truce would deliver the country to Communism. This government official, who will not permit use of his name, says that in hindsight it might have been better to have inflicted a substantial defeat on the Chinese Communists in Korea and then take the risks. Because since the Korean truce, the Chinese have helped the Viet Minh in Indo-China.

On the battlefields surrounding Dien Bien Phu today the French kept the enemy from widening his foothold on the main airstrip. In Paris, the French said they have promoted Colonel Christian de Castries, the commander at Dien Bien Phu, to be a brigadier general. And the top French commander in Indo-China - General Navarre - has rejected an appeal by foreign correspondents for a relaxation of barriers to news coverage of the war.

The President today assured the French that American troops will stay in Europe as long as they might be needed to repulse any threat to that area. The President's message, sent to the prime ministers of the six nations who are concerned with the European army project, was designed to aid the French government. All West European governments are pleased with the President's assurance. Mr. Eisenhower says the essential elements of his message have been discussed with leading Republicans and Democrats in Congress. But Republican Chairman Saltonstall and Democratic Senator Russell of the armed services committee say they had not been told of any pledge to keep our troops on the continent indefinitely. State Department sources say the President's message today was not a new committment but a reiteration of promises we have made previously.

Housing Chief Cole announced tonight that Deputy Housing Commissioner Walter L. Greene is retiring and Burton C. Bovard the general counsel of the federal housing administration, has been put "on leave" because he "refused to resign on request." Cole's announcement came shortly after the White House said that all federal agencies including the FBI should cooperate fully with congressional committees investigating the housing administration. One housing official estimates that at least 75-thousand tenants are paying escess rent because government insured loans to help build the apartment houses were bigger than necessary.

Senator Mundt said today that nothing short of Senator McCarthy's ill health will prevent the start Thursday of the investigation of the McCarthy-Army row.

A high official of the Administration who does not want his name used told newsmen today that he believes Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer to be a loyal citizen who should not be arbitrarily barred from government service because of past association with Communists. This official says the question in the Oppenheimer case is: should the government take the position that past associations, even if foresworn should forever after make it impossible for a person to work for the government. He says its up to a special panel to decide whether Oppenheimer is a security risk. The government official says he believes the files indicate that he is a risk - but he personally believes Oppenheimer to be a loyal American. Oppenheimer has been barred from all government atomic secrets until his case is cleared up.

The government today "urgently requested" AFL and CIO unions to postpone a strike set for midnight at plants that make atomic bomb materials at Oak Ridge and Paducah in Kentucky. The unions agreed.

And Paul Block, Junior, co-publisher of the Toledo Blade, told the American Society of Newspaper Editors, that secrecy on atomic weapons has thrown civilian defense planning into confusion and hindered the development of a continental defense system. He says this raises the question of whether "the people must not be told much more, much sooner."

In Nebraska today, Governor Crosby named Mrs. Eva Bowring to the Senate to succeed Senator Griswold who died on Monday. Mrs. Bowring, a veteran Republican party worker, operates a 13-thousand acre cattle ranch at Merriman, in western Nebraska. She'll join Senator Margaret Chase Smith as the only women members of the Senate.

One of the by-products this week of Mr. Dulles's effort to create a South-East Asian version of NATO has been a split in the British Labor Party. This country cannot be indifferent whether or not Aneurin Bevan succeeds in wresting the leadership of that party from Clement Attlee. Mr. Attlee approves the South-East Asian Treaty Organization plan. Since its establishment may be the one way of saving Southeast Asia from Communism, Mr. Attlee's continuance as leader is important. It is all the more important because Britain is due to hold a general election before long. Recent by-election results and polls show growing Labor strength. Who leads the Labor Party - if the Party can be kept united - may lead the nation, and thus become the key associate of the United States. Even more is at stake than Southeast Asia. Mr. Bevan's friends believe his objective is to take Britain out of the alliance with the United States altogether, and make his country the heart of a neutralist third force standing between the United States and the Soviet bloc. He opposes collective defense not only in the Pacific, he is against strengthening it in Europe. He is one of the outstanding Western opponents of re-arming Western Germany. If there were a strong probability of Mr. Bevan carrying the Labor Party withhim in his revolt, the whole structure of Western unity would be shaking.

Mr. Bevan rates as the most magnetic character in British politics since Sir Winston Churchill in his heartier days. He has eloquence, a damaging hitting power in debate, a low boiling point over injustices, and a likeable personality - all attributes of a successful mass leader in a democracy. But he may lack the knack of choosing the right issue or the right moment for his blow-ups inside the party. He has broken before with the party leadership, over the cost of health insurance and the weight of the defense burden. The break over the defense burden was like the present one, it was emotionally anti-American. But if the present one ends in the same way, Mr. Bevan will be back in the fold, even more popular than before, and still not supreme. It is too early to say that Mr. Bevan has misjudged the time or the issue again. There is considerable anti-Americanism in Britain. But there is no comparable pro-Communism. Probably a majority of British workers agree with Mr. Bevan that Communist China should join the U.N. and admission should be offered at Geneva in negotiating peace in Indo-China. But almost surely a majority would not go alone in rejecting collective security in the Pacific. For the British, including a large part of the Labor Party, regard Britain as a world power. Indeed, the ten-power pact about which Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden talked, puts the British in the forefront of a Pacific security pact. Earlier the State Department had frozen the British out of the so-called Anzus Pact, and it hurt Anglo-American relations. Now that blunder has been repaired, and it cannot work in Mr. Bevan's favor.

Numerically Mr. Bevan's strength in the Labor Party is great only in one section. He is tops with the local party officials. This group always votes overwhelmingly for his candidates when it elects its quota to the party executive. But his following among Labor M.P.'s averages only one in six, and his following in the labor union rank and file is perhaps one in three. However, this is strong support for a single individual, and it has been built up in a time of prosperity without an all-out struggle. So far Mr. Bevan has never risked the all-out struggle, knowing that if he broke the party completely in two he could never be Prime Minister. But if economic conditions should worsen, or the British were to be bogged down in another Korea, and if he should go barnstorming against the old leadership, he could be potential dynamite.

Mr. Bevan is out of the shadow cabinet, but he is still a member of the party executive. That is, he has not broken completely away. But having broken this much, he has greatly cheered the Conservatives. If the Labor Party is truly split, the Conservatives should win the next election. That is why some are predicting that Sir Winston Churchill will maneuver to hold one early this fall, after giving Mr. Eden a trial run as Prime Minister. But that is only talk for the present. It will remain talk unless the Bevan divorce is absolute, or at any rate a reconciliation is highly unlikely. For if an election were to be called under present circumstances, the Labor party would almost certainly re-unite, at least temporarily. Only if the breach deepens and widens does an election in the fall seem assured. Then the result would probably be like the last election - depending on their being no change in domestic or world affairs. The Labor Party would have a small majority of the popular vote, the Conservatives a small majority of the seats in the House of Commons. That is the prospect a s Howard K. Smith views it. He thinks Bevan's success or failure depdnds on what happens in Indo-China. He points out that in the past Bevan has chosen domestic issues for his challenges to the party leadership. This time it is a foreign issue. "It is hard" Smith cables from London, "for the British common man to work up a lather about foreign affairs." This characteristic of the British common man may in the end prove to be the safeguard of the Anglo-American alliance.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Sunday is Easter. And for millions of American women this will be as good an excuse as any for them to justify the purchase of a new bonnet. The Englishman, Joseph Addison once remarked: "There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress." This is an argument in which we would rather remain neutral. But we do subscribe to Mark Twain's timely advice: "Never run after your own hat it it blows off. Others will be delighted to do it. Why spoil their fun."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday April 19, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says it is "unlikely" that American troops will be sent to Indo-China. The Secretary conferred with the President for one hour in Augusta and told reporters that Vice President Nixon's Friday statement...that we might have to send our troops if the French pulled out.. WAS [redacted] Mr. Nixon's "personal opinion on a hypothetical question." Mr. Dulles summed up his conference with the President in a statement we'll hear in a few minutes.

On the Senate floor, Chairman Saltonstall of the Armed Services Committee said he had been assured [redacted] by both the State and Defense departments that there is no change in our policy against sending troops to Indo-China. And Democratic Senator Johnson of Colorado said that at a private party several weeks ago he had heard the Vice President.. as he put it.. "whooping it up for war." Johnson says he against sending our troops to Indo-China "to perpatuate colonialism and the white man's exploitation in Asia."

At Dien Bien Phu today, the French were forced to give up [redacted] second outpost guarding their airfield. They have now lost five of their eight original strongpoints. In Paris, the government says all [redacted]partroopers in Indo-China have been dropped into Dien Bien Phu..and reinforcements are on the way. Our navy says we have completed delivery to the French of a number of planes from one of our carriers. The Moscow radio has renewed the appeal first made five months ago by rebel leader Ho Chi Minh for a negotiated cease fire in Indo-China. And the Soviet army newspaper, Red Star, says "there is every opportunity for a just settlement."

As for the truce in Korea. (also to be discussed at the forthcoming Geneva conference). Korean Ambassador Limb said today: that war cannot be ended until one million Chinese Communists are forced to leave North Korea.

Last week in Australia Vladimir Petrov left his job AS third secretary at the Russian embassy in Sydney, asked for political asylum, and turned over to Australian authorities data on a Soviet spy ring in their country. Today his young wife started home for Russia. But things happened. At Sydney, a crowd of hundreds of persons watched her board a plane and said they heard her shout in Russian "Save me. I do not want to go." Then at Darwin, An Australian official met the plane and explained to Mrs. Petrov that she, too, could seek political asylum. She was permitted to talk with her husband by phone. Then she either decided to stay in Australia permanently, or (we have conflicting reports) at least until she could make up her mind what she wanted to do next. Two Russian diplomatic couriers on the same plane appear to have interfered with Darwin police. A scuffle broke out. The police found that each of the Russians had a 32 calibre revolver in a shoulder holster. A third Russian protested that this was a violation of diplomatic immunity. He was not searched..but he complained on behalf of the two couriers. Then the plane took off for Indonesia..on the way to Moscow.

At the United Nations today, the disarmament commission disregarded threats of a Soviet boycott and voted to establish a subcommittee to consider disarmament proposals. The group voted down a Soviet proposal to have Communist China, India and Czechoslovakia join the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Canada. Andrei Vishinsky had suggested that he might boycott a commission that did not include the three countries he suggested.

And Ambassador Lodge told the annual Associated Press luncheon that we will resist Red China's admittance to the United Nations on "mere promises of good behavior in the future."

The Mudnt committee met today for four hours with Senator McCarthy and other members trying to agree on the rules for the Army-McCarthy investigation. After the meeting, Acting Chairman Mundt told reporters "it now appears very definite" that the hearing will open as scheduled on Thursday. McCarthy said he has not changed "materially" his position that both he and his army accusers be allowed to cross-examine.

Defense Secretary Wilson today informed McCarthy that of the many thousands of letters and calls he and the service secretaries receive from congressmen each year it is "rare" for one to ask special favors for individuals in uniform. The Army has complained that McCarthy and Roy Cohn used "improper means" to try to get special privileges for Private David Schine. Mc Carthy has denied this.

The Senate Banking committee today was told by former housing commissioner Hollyday that he was fired recently, without warning, explanation or a chance to defend himself. And Clyde Powell, the assistant commissioner, refused to testify on the grounds that he might incriminate himself. The President has given the committee permission to examine income tax returns for use in this investigation of Housing Administration scandals.

Corporal Edward S. Dickenson today entered a not guilty plea to charges that he informed on other GI's and collaborated with the Communists while he was a prisoner OF WAR in Korea. The Army says Dickenson caused fellow prisoners to be brutally beaten by their enemy guards.

At Augusta today, after his conference with the President, Secretary of State Dulles, recorded for reporters a statement summing up his recent trip to Europe and the goal of our efforts in Southeast Asia. Here's what he said:

(runs 5;32

~~amgim~~ ending

"Not only of the west..but of the East.")

Sec. of State Dulles -

This is Ed Murrow..I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here's Bob Dixon.

Secretary of States Dulles is leaving for the Geneva Conference with considerable hope and faith ~~in those he will be dealing with.~~ H.L. Mencken once defined faith "as an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable." Whatever the case, James Russell Lowell put it well when he said:"The only faith that wears well in all weathers is that which is woven of conviction and set with the sharp mordant of experience."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says it is "unlikely" that American troops will be sent to Indo-China. The Secretary conferred with the President for one hour in Augusta and told reporters that Vice President Nixon's Friday statement that we might have to send our troops if the French pulled out was Mr. Nixon's "personal opinion on a hypothetical question." Mr. Dulles summed up his conference with the President in a statement we'll hear in a few minutes.

On the Senate floor, Chairman Saltonstall of the Armed Services Committee said he has been assured by both the State and Defense departments that there is no change in our policy against sending troops to Indo-China. And Democratic Senator Johnson of Colorado said that at a private party several weeks ago he had heard the Vice President, as he put it, "whooping it up for war." Johnson says he is against sending our troops to Indo-China "to perpetuate colonialism and the white man's exploitation in Asia."

At Dien Bien Phu today, the French were forced to give up a second outpost guarding their airfield. They have now lost five of their eight original strong-points. In Paris, the government says all paratroopers in Indo-China have been dropped into Dien Bien Phu and reinforcements are on the way. Our Navy says we have completed delivery to the French of a number of planes from one of our carriers. The Moscow radio has renewed the appeal first made five months ago by rebel leader Ho Chi Minh for a negotiated cease fire in Indo-China. And the Soviet army news-paper, Red Star, says "there is every opportunity for a just settlement."

As for the truce in Korea (also to be discussed at the forthcoming Geneva conference) Korean Ambassador Limb said today: that war cannot be ended until one million Chinese Communists are forced to leave North Korea.

Last week in Australia Vladimir Petrov left his job as third secretary at the Russian embassy in Sydney, asked for political asylum, and turned over to Australian authorities data on a Soviet spy ring in their country. Today his young wife started home for Russia. But things happened. At Sydney, a crowd of hundreds of persons watched her board a plane and said they heard her shout in Russian "Save me. I do not want to go." Then at Darwin, an Australian official met the plane and explained to Mrs. Petrov that she, too, could seek political asylum. She was permitted to talk with her husband by phone. Then she either decided to stay in Australia permanently or (we have conflicting reports) at least until she could make up her mind what she wanted to do next. Two Russian diplomatic couriers on the same plane appear to have interfered with Darwin police. A scuffle broke out. The police found that each of the Russians had a 32 calibre revolver in a shoulder holster. A third Russian protested that this was a violation of diplomatic immunity He was not searched but he complained on behalf of the two couriers. Then the plane took off for Indonesia on the way to Moscow.

At the United Nations today, the disarmament commission disregarded threats of a Soviet boycott and voted to establish a subcommittee to consider disarmament proposals. The group voted down a Soviet proposal to have Communist China, India and Czechoslovakia join the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Canada. Andrei Vishinsky had suggested that he might boycott a commission that did not include the three countries he suggested.

And Ambassador Lodge told the annual Associated Press luncheon that we will resist Red China's admittance to the United Nations on "mere promises of good behavior in the future."

The Mundt committee met today for four hours with Senator McCarthy and other members trying to agree on the rules for the Army-McCarthy investigation. After the meeting, Acting Chairman Mundt told reporters "it now appears very definite" that the hearing will open as scheduled on Thursday. McCarthy said he has not changed "materially" his position that both he and his army accusers be allowed to cross-examine.

Defense Secretary Wilson today informed McCarthy that of the many thousands of letters and calls he and the service secretaries receive from congressmen each year it is "rare" for one to ask special favors for individuals in uniform. The Army has complained that McCarthy and Roy Cohn used "improper means" to try to get special privileges for Private David Schine. McCarthy has denied this.

The Senate Banking committee today was told by former housing commissioner Hollyday that hewas fired recently, without warning, explanation or a chance to defend himself. And Clyde Powell, the assistant commissioner, refused to testify on the grounds that he might incriminate himself. The President has given the committee permission to examine income tax returns for use in this investigation of Housing Administration scandals.

Corporal Edward S. Dickenson today entered a not guilty plea to charges that he informed on other GI's and collaborated with the Communists while he was a prisoner of war in Korea. The Army says Dickenson caused fellow prisoners to be brutally beaten by their enemy guards.

At Augusta today, after his conference with the President, Secretary of State Dulles, recorded for reporters a statement summing up his recent trip to Europe and the goal of our efforts in Southeast Asia. Here's what he said:

DULLES: I have reported to President Eisenhower on my recent trip to London and Paris, where I discussed the position in Indo-China. I found in both capitals recognition that the armed Communist threat endangered vital free world interest and makes it appropriate that the free nations most immediately concerned should explore the possibility of establishing a collective defense. This same recognition had already been expressed by other nations of the Southeast Asian area. The Communists in Vietnam, spurred on by Red China, have acted on the assumption that a quick, easy victory at Dien-Bien Phu would open the door to a rapid Communist advance to domination of the entire Southeast Asian area. They concluded they were justified in recklessly squandering the lives of their subjects to conquer this strong point so as to confront the Geneva conference with what could be protrayed as both a military and political victory for communism. The gallent defenders of Dien Bien

Phu have done their part to assure a frustration of the Communist strategy. They have taken a toll such that, from a military standpoint, the attackers already lost more than they could win. From a political standpoint, the defenders of Dien Bien Phy have dramatized the struggle for freedom so that the free world sees more clearly than ever before the issues that are at stake and once again is drawn closer together in unity of purpose. The Communist rulers are learning again that the will of the free is not broken by violence or intimidation. The brutal Soviet conquest of Czechoslovakia did not disintegrate the will of the West. It led to the formation of the North Atlantic Treaty alliance. The violent conquest of the China mainland followed by the Korean aggression did not paralyze the will of the free nations. It led to a series of Pacific mutual security pacts and to the creation under the North Atlantic Treaty of a powerful defensive force-in-being. The violent battles now being waged in Vietnam and the armed aggressions against Laos and Cambodia are not creating any spirit of defeatism. On the contrary, they are rousing the free nations to measures which we hope will be sufficiently timely and vigorous to preserve these vital areas from Communist domination. In this course lies the best hope of achieving at Geneva the restoration of peace with freedom and justice. In addition to discussing with the President the situation in Indo-China, I reported to him with reference to the Korean phase of the forthcoming Geneva conference which opens on April 26th. At Berlin the Soviet Union agreed that "the establishment, by peaceful means of a united and independent Korea would be an important factor in reducing international tension and in restoring peace in other parts of Asia." To achieve that goal is the purpose of establishing by peaceful means a united and independent Korea. I also discussed with President Eisenhower the meeting of the NATO ministerial council to be held in Paris next Friday. Since the military program for NATO has now been established on a stable and durable basis, this particular ministerial meeting will be confined to an exchange of views between the foreign ministers with reference to the world-wide political situation as affecting the NATO members. In preparation for this meeting I reviewed with President Eisenhower the United States estimate of the world situation, and the persistence in varying forms of the menace of Soviet communism which makes it imperative that there be collective measures to meet the menace. The President expressed his great personal satisfaction that NATO, as it completes its fifth year, has already made a large contribution to peace and faces the future with a prospect of growing strength and unity. I leave for Geneva confident that the Allies are closer than ever before to a unity of purpose with respect to world problems, not only of the West, but of the East.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles is leaving for the Geneva Conference with considerable hope and faith. H.L. Mencken once defined faith "as an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable." Whatever the case, James Russell Lowell put it well when he said: "The only faith that wears well in all weathers is that which is woven of conviction and set with the sharp mordant of experience."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, April 20, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles left for the Geneva conference tonight, promising to seek an honorable peace FOR Indo-China and a free, united Korea. Again the Secretary made it clear he would oppose an expected Soviet move to have Communist China recognized as a member of the sponsoring group. And he charged that the Communists have recklessly stepped up their aggression in Indo-China for diplomatic bargaining purposes. Before he left by air for the Monday meeting in Geneva, Mr. Dulles REPORTED to congressional leaders. LATER, Republican Senator Bridges said the situation in Indo-China "looks gloomy, but not hopeless." And both Bridges and Senator Ferguson said there was no indication in the Dulles briefing that the sending of American troops to Indo-China "is in the works."

Today, there was comparatively little action in the battle at Dien Bien Phu as American-supplied planes parachuted tons of ammunition and food to the garrison that has been holding out for 151 days.

In Washington, the Senators who will hear Senator McCarthy and army leaders ATTACK each other today agreed on rules for the investigation which starts on Thursday. All the principals..McCarthy, his aides....Army Secretary Stevens and his top aides..will have the right to cross-examine witnesses against them. Senator McCarthy will not take part in committee deliberations or votes..and will not participate in writing any final report the committee agrees on. He has delegated Republican Senator Dworshak of Idaho to take his seat on the committee for such matters.

McCarthy today submitted his answer to the army's charges that and his committee counsel, Roy Cohn, sought, by "improper means" to win special treatment for Private David Schine. McCarthy says this is not true.. no improper means were used..to accuse Cohn of seeking special treatment for Schine "defies reason." Then the Senator charged that this whole attack is a personal vendetta supervised by H. Struve Hensel, the assistant secretary of defense. McCarthy charges Hensel was trying to shield himself because.. says the Senator..his committee has Hensel under investigation for "misconduct and possibly law violations." McCarthy says Hensel [redacted] had every motivation to try to discredit the committee. He says Hensel, while [redacted] top procurement officer for the Navy, and later assistant secretary of the Navy, DURING THE WAR, made large sums of money from a private ship supply firm. McCarthy says Hensel was a partner and dominant force in the organization which operated with government sanction and government priorities.

Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel calls this charge "a barefaced lie.." he says Mc Carthy has "hit the high mark of [redacted] scandalous malice and the low mark of cowardly irresponsibility." He says Mc Carthy knew he was lying when he made the charge. And Hensel says if Mc Carthy will repeat the charges without senatorial immunity he will sue him.

In his 5-thousand-word [redacted] letter to the investigating committee, Senator Mc Carthy renewed his charge that army officials tried to blckmail him into calling off the investigations of Communism in the army. Mc Carthy says that on seven occassions Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel Adams tried to divert the inquiry to the navy or air force. He says the Army Secretary and the army counsel do not have the right to make charges on behalf of the Department of the army.. they should file these charges in their own name. Mc Carthy says both men tried to protect Those [redacted] responsible for Communist infiltration of the army. And Mc Carthy says the army report that he sought favors for Private Schine "has given greater aid and comfort to the Communists and security risks than any single other obstacle ever designed."

Two Senate committees were told today that almost 12-hundred apartment builders made profits of more than 65-million dollars with the aid of loans from the federal housing administration. T. Coleman Andrews, the internal revenue commissioner, said almost all of these profits came from the difference between amounts borrowed from the government and the amounts spent.

An Army court martial heard five former prisoners of war in North Korea testify that Corporal Edward Dickenson tipped off the enemy to an escape plane and tried to convert them to communism.

The F.B.I. says the number of major crimes jumped six per cent last year for a new record high. New York City, the nation's largest, led the country in the number reported.

In Moscow today, a senior deputy told the opening session of the Soviet parliament that Russia will use atomic energy for the well-being of its people. And the government newspaper Izvestia accused the United States of "intervention in the hostilities in Indo-China."

Edward R. Murrow: April 20, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The agitation has subsided somewhat that followed Vice President Nixon's remarks favoring American troops being sent to Indo-China if the French pull out. It has been stressed that the Vice President spoke hypothetically. He was giving his personal views. He was not sending up a trial balloon. Even so, what he said has not been put into clear perspective. It is significant that someone who listens to the discussions of the National Security Council should have such strong views on keeping Indo-China from falling to the Communists. Obviously no decision has been made to send American troops to Indo-China. But neither has a decision been made not to send troops under any circumstances. And the second statement may prove to be even more important than the first.

The Nixon incident has set off a lot of discussion that is beside the point now. For at this moment the issue is not, and cannot be, whether the United States will intervene in Indo-China. If ultimately it comes down to the bare choice of losing Indo-China to the Communists or saving it, some form of intervention may appear inescapable. But any talk about intervention prior to a fully informed consideration of how to keep Indo-China in the free world is premature and even unrealistic. For one thing, intervention by itself might not save Indo-China. It might be countered by Full Scale Chinese intervention, with unforeseeable consequences. And advocates of intervention are unrealistic if they assume that the problem in Indo-China is primarily military. Actually it is much more political.

As things stand - despite what is happening in Dienbienphu - the French are militarily much stronger than the Communists in Indo-China. Their troops outnumber those of the Vietminh. They have planes and tanks, which the Vietminh lack altogether, and they have a virtual blank check on the United States for supplies. The victory in Indo-China is not to be won by more foreign ground troops or guns, be they French or American, at this stage of the struggle. It is not to be won by the capture of strong points. The Vietminh have no strong points. It is to be won first of all in the realm of convictions.

Only if the people of Indo-China believe that the fight against communists, is the fight for their own freedom, will they turn the present tide of the conflict. At present the Communists are succeeding in Indo-China, largely because they have convinced villagers and peasants, that they are liberators, and that the battle is to break the rule of French colonialism.

This is the situation, despite the promise of independence within the French Union, made by France to Bao Dai. This week the French are expected to broaden this offer still more. Bao Dai is again in Paris, and reports predict he will be offered an independence that reserves to France only a favored economic and cultural status.

But for Bao Dai to receive such assurances in Paris and for the village elders in Vietnam to hear about them and believe them is something else. These village elders have no experience of communist rule. All they know about communists is their zeal for fighting, which is impressive, and their promises, which are magnificent. One of the big tasks in Vietnam, once full independence is assured, is to bring the reality of it home to everyone in Vietnam. Bao Dai may not be the man to do this. But not till it is done will the villagers and peasants who now are the mainstay of the Communists come to understand that they can be truly free if they stay with France and the free world. A great many villagers went over to the Communists because they thought it was the only way to be rid of French colonialism. A great many who haven't actually gone over to the Communists are fence-sitters, waiting to see how things go, so as to be sure to be in right with the winning side. The fence-sitters have to be convinced, and a good many converts to Communism have to be re-converted to democratic independence before the Communists in Indo-China can be defeated. That is so with or without further military intervention.

Observers looking only at Indo-China may be tempted to scold the French for dragging their feet in this matter of Indo-Chinese freedom. They may think that Paris should have seen long ago that it was not able to win a political battle by military means, if backed by only half-way political concessions. Observers may even recognize that France has been so cautious because it felt that the future of the French Union was at stake. The French know full well that North Africa is boiling up with extreme and hostile nationalism. Every concession made in Indo-China will have to be duplicated in Africa. Some observers may say, very well, even liberalized French colonialism is out of date and had better be sacrificed.

But the French can be forgiven if they do not see their problem in these extreme terms. To many of them the choice is not between colonialism and surrender to hostile nationalism. For a liberalized colonialism they would substitute the voluntary association of politically free peoples. But to achieve this takes both time and wisdom. And one of the questions of the hour is whether enough of these elements is available, both in Indo-China and Paris.

As we noted earlier, the extent to which the free peoples of the world will resist the threat of communism, depends largely on how much they believe in freedom and independence. Sometimes this is a slow process. Eric Johnston once remarked:"The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue. The ideas that make up a man's philosophy of life are somewhere way down below."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles left for the Geneva conference tonight promising to seek an honorable peace for Indo-China and a free, united Korea. Again the Secretary made it clear he would oppose an expected Soviet move to have Communist China recognized as a member of the sponsoring group. And he charged that the Communists have recklessly stepped up their aggression in Indo-China for diplomatic bargaining purposes. Before he left by air for the Monday meeting in Geneva, Mr. Dulles reported to congressional leaders. Later Republican Senator Bridges said the situation in Indo-China "looks gloomy but not hopeless." And both Bridges and Senator Ferguson said there was no indication in the Dulles briefing that the sending of American troops to Indo-China "is in the works."

Today, there was comparatively little action in the battle at Dien Bien Phu as American-supplied planes parachuted tons of ammunition and food to the garrison that has been holding out for 151 days.

In Washington the Senators who will hear Senator McCarthy and army leaders attack each other today agreed on rules for the investigation which starts on Thursday. All the principals, McCarthy, his aides, Army Secretary Stevens and his top aides will have the right to cross-examine witnesses against them. Senator McCarthy will not take part in committee deliberations or votes and will not participate in writing any final report the committee agrees on. He has delegated Republican Senator Dworshak of Idaho to take his seat on the committee for such matters. McCarthy today submitted his answer to the army's charges that he and his committee counsel, Roy Cohn, sought, by "improper means" to win special treatment for Private David Schine. McCarthy says this is not true - no improper means were used - to accuse Cohn of seeking special treatment for Schine "defies reason." Then the Senator charged that this whole attack is a personal vendetta supervised by H. Struve Hensel, the assistant secretary of defense. McCarthy charges Hensel was trying to shield himself because, says the Senator his committee has Hensel under investigation for "misconduct and possibly law violations." McCarthy says Hensel had every motivation to try to discredit the committee. He says Hensel, while top procurement officer for the Navy, and later assistant secretary of the Navy, during the war, made large sums of money from a private ship supply firm. McCarthy says Hensel was a partner and dominant force in the organization which operated with government sanction and government priorities. Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel calls this charge "a barefaced lie" - he says McCarthy has "hit the high mark of scandalous malice and the low mark of cowardly irresponsibility." He says McCarthy knew he was lying when he made the charge. And Hensel says if McCarthy will repeat the charges without senatorial immunity he will sue him.

In his 5-thousand word letter to the investigating committee, Senator McCarthy renewed his charge that army officials tried to blackmail him into calling off the investigations of Communism in the army. McCarthy says that on seven occasions Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel Adams tried to divert the inquiry to the navy or air force. He says the Army Secretary and the army counsel do not have the right to make charges on behalf of the Department of the Army - they should file these charges in their own name. McCarthy says both men tried to protect those responsible for Communist infiltration of the army. And McCarthy says the army report that he sought favors for Private Schine "has given greater aid and comfort to the Communists and security risks than any single other obstacle ever designed."

Two Senate committees were told today that almost 12-hundred apartment builders made profits of more than 65-million dollars with the aid of loans from the federal housing administration. T. Coleman Andrews, the internal revenue commissioner said almost all of these profits came from the difference between amounts borrowed from the government and the amounts spent.

An Army court martial heard five former prisoners of war in North Korea testify that Corporal Edward Dickenson tipped off the enemy to an escape plane and tried to convert them to communism.

The F.B.I. says the number of major crimes jumped six percent last year for a new record high. New York City, the nation's largest, led the country in the number reported.

In Moscow today, a senior deputy told the opening session of the Soviet parliament that Russia will use atomic energy for the well-being of its people. And the government newspaper Izvestia accused the United States of "intervention in the hostilities in Indo-China."

The agitation has subsided somewhat that followed Vice President Nixon's remarks favoring American troops being sent to Indo-China if the French pull out. It has been stressed that the Vice President spoke hypothetically. He was giving his personal views. He was not sending up a trial balloon. Even so, what he said has not been put into clear perspective. It is significant that someone who listens to the discussions of the National Security Council should have such strong views on keeping Indo-China from falling to the Communists. Obviously no decision has been made to send American troops to Indo-China. But neither has a decision been made not to send troops under any circumstances. And the second statement may prove to be even more important than the first.

The Nixon incident has set off a lot of discussion that is beside the point now. For at this moment the issue is not, and cannot be, whether the United States will intervene in Indo-China. If ultimately it comes down to the bare choice of losing Indo-China to the Communists or saving it, some form of intervention may appear inescapable. But any talk about intervention priorto a fully informed consideration of how to keep Indo-China in the free world is premature and even unrealistic. For one thing, intervention by itself might not save Indo-China. It might be countered by full scale Chinese intervention with unforeseeable consequences. And advocates of intervention are unrealistic if they assume that the problem in Indo-China is primarily military. Actually it is much more political. As things stand - despite what is happening in Dien Bien Phu - the French are militarily much stronger than the Communists in Indo-China. Their troops outnumber those of the Vietminh. They have planes and tanks which the Vietminh lack altogether, and they have a virtual blank check on the United States for supplies. The victory in Indo-China is not to be won by more foreign ground troops or guns, be they French or American, at this stage of the struggle. It is not to be won by the capture of strong points. The Vietminh have no strong points. It is to be won first of all in the realm of convictions. Only if the people of Indo-China believe that the fight against communists is the fight for their own freedom will they turn the present tide of the conflict. At present the Communists are succeeding in Indo-China largely because they have convinced villagers and peasants that they are liberators, and that the battle is to break the rule of French colonialism. This is the situation despite the promise of independence within the French Union made by France to Bao Dai. This week the French are expected to broaden this offer still more. Bao Dai is again in Paris, and reports predict he will be offered an independence that reserves to France only a favored economic and cultural status. But for Bao Dai to receive such assurances in Paris and for the village elders in Vietnam to hear about them and believe them is something else. These village elders have no experience of communist rule. All they know about communists is their zeal for fighting, which is impressive, and their promises, which are magnificent. One of the big tasks in Vietnam, once full independence is assured, is to bring the reality of it home to everyone in Vietnam. Bao Dai may not be the man to do this. But not till it is done will the villagers and peasants who now are the mainstay of the Communists come to understand that they can be truly free if they stay with France and the free world. A great many villagers went over to the Communists because they thought it was the only way to be rid of French colonialism. A great many who haven't actually gone over to the Communists are fence-sitters, waiting to see how things go, so as to be sure to be in right with the winning side. The Fence-sitters have to be convinced, and a good many converts to Communism have to be re-converted to democratic independence before the Communists in Indo-China can be defeated. That is so with or without further military intervention. Observers looking only at Indo-China may be tempted to scold the French for dragging their feet in this matter of Indo-Chinese freedom. They may think that Paris should have seen long ago that it was not able to win a political battle by military means, if backed by only half-way political concessions. Observers may even recognize that France has been so cautious because it felt that the future of the French Union was at stake. The French know full well that North Africa is boiling up with extreme and hostile nationalism. Every concession made in Indo-China will have to be duplicated in Africa. Some observers may say, very well, even liberalized French colonialism is out of date and had better be sacrificed. But the French can be forgiven if they do not see their problem in these extreme terms. To many of them the coice is not between cooonialism and surrender to hostile nationalism. For a liberalized colonialism they would substitute the voluntary association of politicall: free peoples. But to achieve this takes both time and wisdom. And one of the questions of the hour is whether enough of these elements is available, both in Indo-China and Paris.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As we noted earlier, the extent to which the free peoples of the world will resist the threat of communism, depends largely on how much they believe in freedom and independence. Sometimes this is a slow process. Eric Johnston once remarked: "The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue. The ideas that make up a man's philosophy of life are somewhere way down below."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, April 21, 1954

This is the news:

The United States air force is ferrying French paratroopers from France and French North Africa to Indo-China. These men will be carried some 85-hundred miles in our C-124 Globemasters. They will be landed in non-(COMBAT) areas in Indo-China and later parachuted to reinforce the hard-pressed garrison at Dien Bien Phu. Defense Secretary Wilson says this American help to the French is "in line with present United States policy and in conformity with our existing military assistance program." It was undertaken at the request of the French government.

Brigadier General de Castries, the top commander at Dien Bien Phu, has been asking for more reinforcements. And today he appealed to the French and Vietnamese residents of Hanoi to send powdered milk and fruit juices to his wounded men. For almost a month now it has been impossible to evacuate any of these soldiers from the surrounded garrison...because the French airstrip is not useable.

The French say there was little fighting last night. But dispatches from Hanoi say the enemy now has squeezed the defenders into a (SHRINKING) circle one and a quarter miles across. And the rebels continue digging closer and closer to the French barbed wire. New rains forced French bombers and fighters to call off today's attacks. And these same rains gave the enemy a new opportunity to tighten their circle around Dien Bien Phu.

The Chinese Communist radio today attacked American policy in Indo-China, and said "we certainly will not take it lying down" if "armed aggression is directed against us." The Communists also referred to themselves as one of the "Big Five".. declared themselves to be a nation with "soaring international prestige and position." In reference to the Geneva conference, the United States holds that China is not one of the Big Five.. is not to be considered a sponsor of the meeting, that opens Monday.

The Russian Communist party newspaper charged today that Vice President Nixon's recent speech "came out openly for the expansion of war" in Indo-China.

And Mr. Nixon, in Chicago today, said: "the purpose of our policy is, that American boys will not have to fight in Indo-China, or anywhere else." He added: "A policy of strength is the one best calculated to carry out that purpose."

Defense Secretary Wilson says that the President has asked retired General Van Fleet to go to Korea and Formosa to survey our military assistance program.

And in his semi-annual report on the Defense department, Wilson said "the mounting retaliatory capability of our air units gives full warning to any aggressor, of the possible consequences of rash actions on his part." The secretary said our strategy is aimed at handling little aggressions as well as big ones.. we want to deter a major war, and local aggression, and at the same time, maintain the social and economic foundations of the nation.

At his newsconference today, Secretary Wilson said assistant Defense Secretary H. Struve Hensel is a competent honest man. Hensel has been charged, by Senator McCarthy, with helping to organize a ship supply firm while Hensel was a navy procurement officer in World War Two.

Wilson said of the Army-McCarthy hearings...which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes.. that the whole argument "has done no good" to military morale...has complicated his problem of getting men to take top Defense department jobs. He said such men are reluctant to come to Washington "if they are going to get worked over unfairly."

And on the eve of the Washington hearings...a recorded summary of which will be broadcast over many of these stations at 8;30 p.m. eastern time tomorrow. ~~Secretary~~ Senator McCarthy spoke in Texas. He charged that "devilishly clever men" have figured out a plan to change the rules of his committee, "under the guise of fair play." Mc Carthy says the objective is to make it impossible for the committee to operate effectively. He named no names. But he said "some good men" are being used, with assurances that they will be paid off by receiving praise, from what he called "all the left-wing elements of news, radio and television."

In Washington today, Chairman Capehart of the Senate Banking Committee accused R.G. Hughes, president of the National Association of Home Builders, of charging that the committee hearing on the Federal Houseing scandal is "being conducted in a circus atmosphere." Capehart said this makes him wonder if the Home Builders group "is trying to crucify" the Administration. Hughes apologized for the charge AND pledged his association's support in cleaning up abuses.

~~Revenue Commissioner Coleman said today that some federal judges are making tax law violations socially acceptable by imposing light sentences on offenders.~~

Richard Clendenen, an investigator for a Senate subcommittee, said today that the increase in adolescent crime is linked to the sale of "objectionable" ten-cent crime and horror books. He said the profit motive seems to be the dominant reason for the publication of such books.

At the court martial of Corporal Dickensen, another former prisoner of war, Sregeant John Q. Davis of Niagra Falls, charged that Dickensen pushed a sick American P.O.W. down stairs after the man asked Dickensen for food.

And Agriculture Secretary Benson says if the government must continue to buy tremendous stocks of farm commodities it might someday wind up in the grocery business...if Congress insists on keeping price supports high.

Edward R. Murrow: April 21, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Tomorrow morning at 10.30 hearings begin in Washington on the prolonged argument between Senator McCarthy and members of his staff, and Army Secretary Stevens and members of his staff. Senator Mundt, who will be in the chair, has said that if everybody sticks to the stories that have been told in the past, somebody will be laying himself open to charges of perjury.

Today a new element was added to this case. The Committee named Assistant Secretary of Defense H. Struve Hensel as a "principal" in the hearings. This was done because Senator McCarthy yesterday charged that Hensel had master-minded the Army report attacking the Senator - had tried to discredit the Committee in order to head off an investigation of what McCarthy called "Hensel's own misconduct, and possible law violations." Hensel called these charges "barefaced lies"; dared the Senator to repeat them without senatorial immunity, and promised him that if he did he would have a law suit from which the Senator could not run. ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ The Senator has declined to repeat the statement. Defense Secretary Wilson today called Hensel "a competent, honest man", said he wouldn't be in his present job if he weren't. Wilson also said that Hensel had not master-minded the Army report accusing McCarthy and his assistants of putting improper pressure on the Army, to obtain preferential treatment for private David Schine. So the Committee has now asked Mr. Hensel, as it did McCarthy, and Secretary of the Army Stevens, to file a statement of his position.

So the Committee now has three main charges to explore: the one made by Senator McCarthy against Assistant Secretary of Defense Hensel, and the two original charges which touched off this investigation. It might be useful to summarize those charges briefly. The Army charged that McCarthy and his assistants "by innuendo and inference" indicated that if the Army met their demands about Schine, this would have a great deal to do with how tough the Committee would be, in investigating the Army - that Roy Cohn, chief counsel of the McCarthy Committee "threatened to cause the discharge of Secretary Stevens", and that the Committee would "wreck the Army". The Army further charged Private Schine was allowed to leave Fort Dix ostensibly on Committee business, when in fact he did no work for the Committee.

McCarthy's reply to the Army, filed yesterday, charged that Army Secretary Stevens had used threats, in an effort to halt the investigation of the Army - that Pentagon politicians had sought to prevent the exposure of Communist infiltration of the Army. Senator McCarthy also stated that Stevens and the Army's chief counsel had repeatedly urged the Committee to quit investigating the Army, and turn its attention to the Air Force, Navy and Defense Department.

The ground rules laid down for the conduct of this investigation are unusual, since both the principals and their attorneys will be permitted to cross-examine. However, the ground rules appear to be fair, inasmuch as none of the participants has objected.

Senator McCarthy has made some effort to describe this as a row between his Committee's counsel Cohn and the Army's counsel Adams. # Basically it is a question of the veracity, the truthfulness of McCarthy and Stevens. Stevens has the support of the President and Defense Secretary Wilson. # There will, in addition to this, be the question of whether McCarthy can make his charges against Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel stand up. Presumably all witnesses, including Stevens and McCarthy, will be under oath. Able and alert lawyers on both sides will be watching for the possibility of perjury. The entire proceedings will be televised, and fully reported. In effect the entire country will be sitting as a "committee of the whole," trying to determine who is lying, McCarthy or Stevens, Cohn or Adams, McCarthy or Hensel.

In spite of the ground rules, apparently designed to limit the amount of time devoted to examining a single witness, the ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ possibilities for cross-questioning and confusion are almost limitless.

Senator Mundt said today that the Committee will "try to find out the truth and make it available to the public." Ray H. Jenkins, special counsel for the Committee, said: "The facts will be presented fully, fairly and fearlessly." If those things happen, the public will have been well served, although at considerable cost in national unity and international prestige as the leader of the free world. It ~~ought to be permissible to hope that~~ the principals on both sides would ~~remember that the rest of the world,~~ friend and foe ~~alike, will~~ be watching this ~~performance, but such hope~~ would be ~~futile~~.

Tomorrow, the much discussed...and delayed investigation gets under way. It represents essentially a search for the facts...and the truth. Oliver Wendell Holmes once remarked quite appropriately: "You needn't fear to handle the truth roughly; she is no invalid." For as Sir John Herschel concluded:"The grand character of truth is its capability of coming unchanged out of every possible form of fair discussion."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United States air force is ferrying French paratroopers from France and French North Africa to Indo-China. These men will be carried some 85-hundred miles in our C-124 Globemasters. They will be landed in non-combat areas in Indo-China and later parachuted to reinforce the hard-pressed garrison at Dien Bien Phu. Defense Secretary Wilson says this American help to the French is "in line with present United States policy and in conformity with our existing military assistance program." It was undertaken at the request of the French government.

Brigadier General de Castries, the top commander at Dien Bien Phu, has been asking for more reinforcements. And today he appealed to the French and Vietnamese residents of Hanoi to send powdered milk and fruit juices to his wounded men. Foralmost a month now it has been impossible to evacuate any of these soldiers from the surrounded garrison because the French airstrip is not useable.

The French say there was little fighting last night. But dispatches from Hanoi say the enemy now has squeezed the defenders into a shrinking circle one and a quarter miles across. And the rebels continue digging closer and closer to the French barbed wire. New rains forced French bombers and fighters to call off today's attacks. And these same rains gave the enemy a new opportunity to tighten their circle around Dien Bien Phu.

The Chinese Communist radio today attacked American policy in Indo-China and said "we certainly will not take it lying down" if "armed aggression is directed against us." The Communists also referred to themselves as one of the "Big Five" declared themselves to be a nation with "soaring international prestige and position. In reference to the Geneva conference, the United States holds that China is not one of the Big Five - is not to be considered a sponsor of the meeting that opens Monday.

The Russian Communist party newspaper charged today that Vice President

Nixon's recent speech "came out openly for the expansion of war" in Indo-China.

And Mr. Nixon, in Chicago today, said: "the purpose of our policy is that American boys will not have to fight in Indo-China or anywhere else." He added: "A policy of strength is the one best calculated to carry out that purpose."

Defense Secretary Wilson says that the President has asked retired General Van Fleet to go to Korea and Formosa to survey our military assistance program.

And in his semi-annual report on the Defense Department, Wilson said "the mounting retaliatory capability of our air units gives full warning to any aggressor of the possible consequences of rash actions on his part." The secretary said our strategy is aimed at handling little aggressions as well as big ones - we want to deter a major war and local aggression and at the same time maintain the social and economic foundations of the nation.

At his news conference today, Secretary Wilson said assistant Defense Secretary H. Struve Hensel is a competent honest man. Hensel has been charged, by Senator McCarthy, with helping to organize a ship supply firm while Hensel was a navy procurement officer in World War Two.

Wilson said of the Army-McCarthy hearings which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes that the whole argument "has done no good" to military morale has complicated his problem of getting men to take top Defense Department jobs. He said such men are reluctant to come to Washington "if they are going to get worked over unfairly."

And on the eve of the Washington hearings a recorded summary of which will be broadcast over many of these stations at 8:30 p.m. eastern time tomorrow Senator McCarthy spoke in Texas. He charged that "devilishly clever men" have figured out a plan to change the rules of his committee "under the guise of fair play." McCarthy says the objective is to make it impossible for the committee to operate effectively. He named no names. But he said "some good men" are being used with assurances that they will be paid off by receiving praise from what he called "all the left-wing elements of news, radio and television."

In Washington today, Chairman Capehart of the Senate Banking Committee accused R.G. Hughes, president of the National Association of Home Builders, of charging that the committee hearing on the Federal Housing scandal is "being conducted in a circus atmosphere." Capehart said this makes him wonder if the Home Builders group "is trying to crucify" the Administration. Hughes apologized for the charge and pledged his association's support in cleaning up abuses.

Richard Clendenen, an investigator for a Senate subcommittee, said today that the increase in adolescent crime is linked to the sale of "objectionable" ten-cent crime and horror books. He said the profit motive seems to be the dominant reason for the publication of such books.

At the court martial of Corporal Dickensen, another former prisoner of war, Sergeant John Q.DAvis of Niagara Falls, charged that Dickensen pushed a sick American P.O.W. down some stairs after the man asked Dickensen for food.

And Agriculture Secretary Benson says if the government must continue to buy tremendous stocks of farm commodities it might someday wind up in the grocery business if Congress insists on keeping price supports high.

Tomorrow morning at 10:30 hearings begin in Washington on the prolonged argument between Senator McCarthy and members of his staff, and Army Secretary Stevens and members of his staff. Senator Mundt, who will be in the chair, has said that if everybody sticks to the stories that have been told in the past, somebody will be laying himself open to charges of perjury. Today a new element was added to this case. The Committee named Assistant Secretary of Defense H. Struve Hensel as a "principal" in the hearings. This was done because Senator McCarthy yesterday charged that Hensel had master-minded the Army report attacking the Senator - had tried to discredit the Committee in order to head off an investigation of what McCarthy called "Hensel's own misconduct, and possible law violations." Hensel called these charges "barefaced lies"; dared the Senator to repeat them without senatorial immunity, and promised him that if he did he would have a law suit from which the Senator could not run. The Senator has declined to repeat the statement. Defense Secretary Wilson today called Hensel "a competent, honest man", said he wouldn't be in his present job if he weren't. Wilson also said that Hensel had not masterminded the Army report accusing McCarthy and his assistants of putting improper pressure on the Army to obtain preferential treatment for private David Schine. So the Committee has now asked Mr. Hensel, as it did McCarthy and Secretary of the Army Stevens, to file a statement of his position. So the Committee now has three main charges to explore: the one made by Senator McCarthy against Assistant Secretary of Defense Hensel, and the two original charges which touched off this investigation. It might be useful to summarize those charges briefly. The Army charged that McCarthy and his assistants "by innuendo and inference" indicated that if the Army met their demands about Schine, this would have a great deal to do with how tough the Committee would be in investigating the Army - that Roy Cohn, chief counsel of the McCarthy Committee "threatened to cause the discharge of Secretary Stevens", and that the Committee would "wreck the Army." The Army further charged Private Schine was allowed to leave Fort Dix ostensibly on committee business, when in fact he did no work for the Committee. McCarthy's reply to the Army, filed yesterday, charged that Army Secretary Stevens had used threats in an effort to halt the investigation of the Army - that Pentagon politicians had sought to prevent the exposure of Communist infiltration of the Army. Senator McCarthy also stated that Stevens and the Army's chief counsel had repeatedly urged the Committee to quit investigating the Army, and turn its attention to the Air Force, Navy and Defense Department. The ground rules laid down for the conduct of this investigation are unusual, since both the principals and their attorneys will be permitted to cross-examine. However, the ground rules appear to be fair, inasmuch as none of the participants has objected. Senator McCarthy has made some effort to describe this as a row between his Committee's counsel Cohn and the Army's counsel Adams. Basically, it is a question of the veracity, the truthfulness of McCarthy and Stevens. Stevens has the support of the President and Defense Secretary Wilson. There will, in addition to this, be the question of whether McCarthy can make his charges against Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel stand up. Presumably all witnesses, including Stevens and McCarthy, will be under oath. Able and alert lawyers on both sides will be watching for the possibility of perjury. The entire proceedings will be televised, and fully reported. In effect the entire country will be sitting as a "committee of the whole," trying to determine who is lying, McCarthy or Stevens, Cohn or Adams, McCarthy or Hensel. In spite of the ground rules, apparently designed to limit the amount of time devoted to examining a single witness, the possibilities for cross-questioning and confusion are almost limitless. Senator Mundt said today that the Committee will "try to find out the truth and make it available to the public." Ray H. Jenkins, special counsel for the committee, said: "The facts will be presented fully, fairly and fearlessly." If those things happen, the public will have been well served, although at considerable cost in national unity and international prestige as the leader of the free world.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tomorrow, the much discussed and delayed investigation gets under way. It represents essentially a search for the facts and the truth. Oliver Wendell Holmes once remarked quite appropriately: "You needn't fear to handle the truth roughly; she is no invalid." For as Sir John Herschel concluded: "The grand character of truth is its capability of coming unchanged out of every possible form of fair discussion."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday April 22, 1954

This is the news:

Army Secretary Stevens charged today that Senator Mc Carthy and his aides had waged "a persistent and tireless campaign" to get special treatment for Private David Schine. I'll try to review the testimony at the opening day of the McCarthy-Army dispute in a few minutes.

In Indo-China, the enemy continues to inch closer to the French lines at Dien Bien Phu. The Russian press says our airlifting French parachutists from France to Indo-China is "a new act of American intervention in the Viet Nam war." And Indian Prime Minister Nehru's decision..to prevent passage of these planes over India...came in for much comment in our Senate.

Republican Senator Ferguson says this gives "aid and comfort to the Communist world." Republican Leader Knowland says Nehru's action is like that of a property owner who objects to firemen running a (HOSE) across his property to reach the burning house of a neighbor. Knowland said the American people and the congress are "sorely disappointed" by the decision. And Republican Senator Bridges says he's "amazed and shocked" at Nehru's decision.

In Paris today the western Big Three decided to send a note to Moscow making it clear again that the Geneva conference was called by the Big Four ...and not the big five..not Communist China.

In West Germany today American officials revealed that a captain in the Soviet secret police has given himself up to us and asked for political asylum. This captain..Nikolai Khoklov.. was sent to West Germany from Moscow to commit a political assassination..to murder a German anti-Communist leader. Khokolov and two accomplices are now in protective custody. They have surrendered their special weapons.. electrically-fired guns and poison pellets--and are giving our authorities a great deal of information on how the Soviet secret police operates... what's happened to it since the purge of Beria..who its leading agents are in the Soviet satellite countries. The captain says former Soviet Ambassador to Washington Panyushkin is now "a big shot" in the secret police. The captain says his wife..who is still in Moscow with their son, and her sister..urged him not to commit murder and turn himself over to western authorities. Captain Khoklov has appealed to the free world to save her from reprrisals or death.

In Yugoslavia today, Marshal Tito hinted that eventually Yugoslavia may join the projected European Defense Community. He would like it to be more than a military organization.

The President is in New York tonight to address the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. (He will be heard over many of these stations at 10 EASTERN TIME TONITE) The A.N.P.A. today elected as its new president Richard W. Slocum, general manager of the Philadelphia Bulletin.

Earlier in the day the President told the Daughters of the American Revolution, in Washington, that we will win the cold war and prevent a hot war "through indestructable spiritual unity. And F.B.I. Director Hoover told the D.A.R. convention that those whom he described as "pseudo-liberals" can do more damage to the country than the outright Communists.

Assistant Defense Secretary Hannah says the Pentagon may soon ask Congress to change the draft law. It will suggest that men from 18 to 26..instead of being drafted for two years service..would take only six months of active duty and thereafter attend regular drills and active training in reserve units. And men who complete two years or more of active service would be required to attend regular National Guard training for almost eight years.

The government reports that the cost of living went down again in March..the second month its dropped. Its now at the lowest point since last July.

Senator Capehart said today that the files of the housing administration show the case of a builder who made a half million dollar profit on a one thousand dollar investment. He mentioned no names.

~~And here in New York, the city [illegible] tape salute to the famed 45th Division that came home from Korea last Saturday.~~

Army Sergeant Lyle Jacobson testified today that loyal Americans in a Korean prison camp know Corporal Edward Dickensen was "a rat who squealed" on his buddies. And while in prison he told Dickensen "he would be taken care of" when they both got home.

And here in New York, one thousand men of the famed 45th Division received the city's traditional ticker tape welcome. The division returned from Korea on Saturday.

Edward R. Murrow: April 22, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

This morning Senator Mundt, in opening the hearings on the dispute between Secretary of the Army Stevens and Senator McCarthy and their associates, said: "The reputations, the actions and perhaps the integrity of responsible public officials are under challenge"- the Committee would follow the evidence wherever it leads. The charges and implications by both sides were of "such a grave and serious nature as to have caused concern on the part of the American people." Senator Mundt said that everyone was on the spot - himself, the Committee members, Committee Counsel Jenkins, the principals in the case, and indeed the entire American public.

Senator McCarthy objected at the outset to what he called "the attempt to make this a contest between me and the Army". He contended that a few civilian Pentagon politicians are naming themselves the Department of the Army.

The first witness was Major General Miles Reber. He spent ten years as liaison officer between the Army and Congress. He said that in those ten years he had never known "greater pressure" than had been applied by McCarthy and Cohn - particularly Cohn - in their efforts to secure an immediate commission for David Schine. He referred to repeated telephone conversations with Mr. Cohn, detailed the steps he took with high-ranking officers in the Army and other armed services, exploring the possibilities of a commission for Schine. General Reber SAID HE WAS TOLD that Schine lacked the necessary qualifications.

During the cross-examination Senator McCarthy said that General Reber's brother, Sam, then acting High Commissioner in Germany, had made vicious attacks on Cohn and Schine while the two investigators were in Europe. McCarthy suggested that Sam Reber had been fired or allowed to resign from the State Department because he was a bad security risk. Committee Counsel Jenkins objected to the form of the question, McCarthy withdrew it, and General Reber said his brother retired, as he was entitled to by law, when he reached the age of FIFTY. He knew nothing about any security case involving him.

Acting Secretary of State General Bedell Smith testified that Roy Cohn telephoned him, said Schine was about to be drafted, and that he and McCarthy thought Schine should have a commission. Smith telephoned General Hull, the Vice Chief of Staff, who told him Schine would get the same treatment as any other American citizen.. Cohn & Smith discussed a commission in the Central Intelligence Agency for Schine. Smith told him to get in touch with Allan Dulles, the head of the agency. Cohn said the C.I.A.

is "too juicy a subject for future investigations." It wouldn't be right to place Schine there, and then investigate the Agency. General Smith said he did not regard Cohn's intervention in this matter as being improper or an attempt to apply pressure.

Army Secretary Robert Stevens read a prepared statement, which repeated many of his earlier charges; said he and his staff had been subjected to "persistent and tireless efforts" by McCarthy and his aides, to get special treatment for Schine. These efforts did not cease after Schine had been inducted. Stevens spoke of more than 65 phone calls and 19 meetings on the subject. Stevens called the Schine case "an example of the wrongful seeking of privilege - of the perversion of power." Stevens denied that he had at any time urged McCarthy, to go after the Navy or Air Force in his investigation. He denied, too, that Schine had been used as "blackmail" to halt an investigation of the Army's handling of Communists. Senator McCarthy broke in to say that he hadn't been blackmailed, but there was an attempt - a very unsuccessful attempt - at blackmail.

Repeated reference was made during the day to the situation at Fort Monmouth. Secretary Stevens said: "I still have no evidence of current espionage at Fort Monmouth." Stevens told of taking a group, including McCarthy and Cohn, to Fort Monmouth. When they came to a secret Radar laboratory, Stevens admitted those who had been elected to public office, and excluded Cohn. Stevens testified that his executive officer told him that Cohn declared: "This means war. Don't they think I am cleared for classified information? I have access to F.B.I. files when I want them. They did this on purpose just to embarrass me. We will really investigate the Army now." Stevens testified that Cohn's outburst was repeated later when there was some mention of the possibility of Schine being assigned to overseas duty.

According to Stevens, the counsellor for the Army, Mr. Adams, quoted Cohn as saying he would "wreck the Army," and Stevens would be "through" as Secretary.

Secretary Stevens and the other witnesses were under oath, having been told to submit only those charges they were capable of proving.

Today's hearing consisted primarily of the presentation of the Army's case. Secretary Stevens will be cross-examined when he returns to the stand at 10.30 tomorrow morning. Today's hearing was orderly, though marked ~~with~~ by some sharp clashes on questions of procedure and evidence between Senator McCarthy and Democratic members of the committee.

On the essential points in the original charges and counter-charges, neither side appeared to give any ground. The Army's case has not yet been completed, and Senator McCarthy has not yet started to present his side of the affair. On the basis of today's performance, the estimate that these hearings might be finished in two weeks may not stand up. The Committee's unanimously agreed rules of procedure make it altogether possible that this hearing may be a very lengthy affair.

It would seem on the basis of the first day's hearing in Washington that the investigation could develop into quite a long and involved affair. William Penn, in a letter to his wife, once offered some pretty appropriate advice when he said:"Be humble and gentle in your conversation; and of few words, I charge you; but always pertinent when you speak." For as Dickens concluded:"A word in earnest is better than a speech."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Army Secretary Stevens charged today that Senator McCarthy and his aides had waged "a persistent and tireless campaign" to get special treatment for Private David Schine. I'll try to review the testimony at the opening day of the McCarthy-Army dispute in a few minutes.

In Indo-China, the enemy continues to inch closer to the French lines at Dien Bien Phu. The Russian press says our airlifting French parachutists from France to Indo-China is "a new act of American intervention in the Viet Nam war." And Indian Prime Minister Nehru's decision to prevent passage of these planes over India - came in for much comment in our Senate.

Republican Senator Ferguson says this gives "aid and comfort to the Communist world." Republican Leader Knowland says Nehru's action is like that of a property owner who objects to firemen running a hose across his property to reach the burning house of a neighbor. Knowland said the American people and the Congress are "sorely disappointed" by the decision. And Republican Senator Bridges says he's "amazed and shocked" at Nehru's decision.

In Paris today the western Big Three decided to send a note to Moscow making it clear again that the Geneva conference was called by the Big Four and not the big five - not Communist China.

In West Germany today American officials revealed that a captain in the Soviet secret police has given himself up to us and asked for political asylum. This captain, Nikolai Khoklov, was sent to West Germany from Moscow to commit a political assassination - to murder a German anti-Communist leader. Khokolov and two accomplices are now in protective custody. They have surrendered their special weapons - electrically-fired guns and poison pellets - and are giving our authorities a great deal of information on how the Soviet secret police operates - what's happened to it since the purge of Beria - who its leading agents are in the Soviet satellite countries. The captain says former Soviet Ambassador to Washington Panyushkin is now "a big shot" in the secret police. The captain says his wife who is still in Moscow with their son, and her sister urged him not to commit murder and turn himself over to western authorities. Captain Khoklov has appealed to the free world to save her from reprisals or death.

In Yugoslavia today, Marshal Tito hinted that eventually Yugoslavia may join the projected European Defense Community. He would like it to be more than a military organization.

The President is in New York tonight to address the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. He will be heard over many of these stations at 10:00 Eastern Time tonight. The A.N.P.A. today elected as its new president, Richard W. Slocum, general manager of the Philadelphia Bulletin.

Earlier in the day the President told the Daughters of the American Revolution, In Washington, that we will win the cold war and prevent a hot war "through indestructable spiritual unity. And FBI Director Hoover told the DAR convention that those whom he described as "pseudo-liberals" can do more damage to the country than the outright Communists.

Assistant Defense Secretary Hannah says the Pentagon may soon ask Congress to change the draft law. It will suggest that men from 18 to 26 instead of being drafted for two years service would take only six months of active duty and thereafter attend regular drills and active training in reserve units. And men who complete two years or more of active service would be required to attend regular National Guard training for almost eight years.

The government reports that the cost of living went down again in March - the second month it's dropped. It's now at the lowest point since last July.

Senator Capehart said today that the files of the housing administration show the case of a builder who made a half million dollar profit on a one thousand dollar investment. He mentioned no names.

Army Sergeant Lyle Jacobson testified today that loyal Americans in a Korean prison camp know Corporal Edward Dickensen was "a rat who squealed" on his buddies. And while in prison he told Dickensen "he would be taken care of" when they both got home.

And here in New York, one thousand men of the famed 45th Division received the city's traditional ticker tape welcome. The division returned from Korea on Saturday.

This morning Senator Mundt, in opening the hearings on the dispute between Secretary of the Army Stevens and Senator McCarthy and their associates, said: "The reputations, the actions and perhaps the integrity of responsible public officials are under challenge" - the Committee would follow the evidence wherever it leads. The charges and implications by both sides were of "such a grave and serious nature as to have caused concern on the part of the American people." Senator Mundt said that everyone was on the spot - himself, the Committee members, Committee Counsel Jenkins, the principals in the case, and indeed the entire American public. Senator McCarthy objected at the outset to what he called "the attempt to make this a contest between me and the Army." He contended that a few civilian Pentagon politicians are naming themselves the Department of the Army.

The first witness was Major General Miles Reber. He spent ten years as liaison officer between the Army and Congress. He said that in those ten years he had never known "greater pressure" than had been applied by McCarthy and Cohn - particularly Cohn - in their efforts to secure an immediate commission for David Schine. He referred to repeated telephone conversations with Mr. Cohn, detailed the steps he took with high-ranking officers in the Army and other armed services exploring the possibilities of a commission for Schine. General Reber said he was told that Schine lacked the necessary qualifications. During the cross-examination Senator McCarthy said that General Reber's brother, Sam, then acting High Commissioner in Germany, had made vicious attacks on Cohn and Schine while the two investigators were in Europe. McCarthy suggested that Sam Reber had been fired or allowed to resign from the State Department because he was a bad security risk. Committee Counsel Jenkins objected to the form of the question, McCarthy withdrew it, and General Reber said his brother retired, as he was entitled to by law, when he reached the age of fifty. He knew nothing about any security case involving him. Acting Secretary of State General Bedell Smith testified that Roy Cohn telephoned him, said Schine was about to be drafted, and that he and McCarthy thought Schine should have a commission. Smith telephoned General Hull, the Vice Chief of Staff, who told him Schine would get the same treatment as any other American citizen. Cohn and Smith discussed a commission in the Central Intelligence Agency for Schine. Smith told him to get in touch with Allan Dulles, the head of the agency. Cohn said the CIA is "too juicy a subject for future investigations." It wouldn't be right to place Schine there and then investigate the Agency. General Smith said he did not regard Cohn's intervention in this matter as being improper or an attempt to apply pressure. Army Secretary Robert Stevens read a prepared statement which repeated many of his earlier charges; said he and his staff had been subjected to "persistent and tireless efforts" by McCarthy and his aides to get special treatment for Schine. These efforts did not cease after Schine had been inducted. Stevens spoke of more than 65 phone calls and 19 meetings on the subject. Stevens called the Schine case "an example of the wrongful seeking of privilege - of the perversion of power." Stevens denied that he had at any time urged McCarthy to go after the Navy or Air Force in his investigation. He denied, too, that Schine had been used as "blackmail" to halt an investigation of the Army's handling of Communists. Senator McCarthy broke in to say that he hadn't been blackmailed, but there was an attempt - a very unsuccessful attempt - at blackmail. Repeated reference was made during the day to the situation at Fort Monmouth. Secretary Stevens said: "I still have no evidence of current espionage at Fort Monmouth." Stevens told of taking a group, including McCarthy and Cohn, to Fort Monmouth. When they came to a secret Radar laboratory, Stevens admitted those who had been elected to public office, and excluded Cohn. Stevens testified that his executive officer told him that Cohn declared: "This means war. Don't they think I am cleared for classified information? I have access to FBI files when I want them. They did this on purpose just to embarrass me. We will really investigate the Army now." Stevens testified that Cohn's outburst was repeated later when there was some mention of the possibility of Schine being assigned to overseas duty.

According to Stevens, the counsellor for the Army, Mr. Adams, quoted Cohn as saying he would "wreck the Army," and Stevens would be "through" as Secretary.

Secretary Stevens and the other witnesses were under oath, having been told to submit only those charges they were capable of proving. Today's hearing consisted primarily of the presentation of the Army's case. Secretary Stevens will be cross-examined when he returns to the stand at 10:30 tomorrow morning. Today's hearing was orderly, though marked by some sharp clashes on questions of procedure and evidence between Senator McCarthy and Democratic members of the committee.

On the essential points in the original charges and counter-charges, neither side appeared to give any ground. The Army's case has not yet been completed, and Senator McCarthy has not yet started to present his side of the affair. On the basis of today's performance, the estimate that these hearings might be finished in two weeks may not stand up. The Committee's unanimously agreed rules of procedure make it altogether possible that this hearing may be a very lengthy affair.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem on the basis of the first day's hearing in Washington that the investigation could develop into quite a long and involved affair. William Penn, in a letter to his wife, once offered some pretty appropriate advice when he said: "Be humble and gentle in your conversation; and of few words, I charge you; but always pertinent when you speak." For as Dickens concluded: "A word in earnest is better than a speech."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday April 23, 1954

This is the news:

The Mundt committee today voted unanimously to supbena all the records of all telephone calls involving the principals in the McCarthy-army dispute. The decision came after an army employe testified that he had from 50 to 100 transcripts of phone conversations made to and from Secretary Stevens office. I should like to review today's testimony in a fewminutes.

The President visited the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln in Hodgenville, Kentucky, today. And without mentioning the name of anyone alive today he said: "You can find no instance where Abraham Lincoln stood up in public and excoriated another American. You can find no instance where he is reported to have slapped or pounded a table and struck the pose of a pseudo-dictator or an arbitrary individual."

And then in an informal speech at Transylvania College at Lexington, Kentucky, the President said that the battle for Dien Bien Phu in Indo-China "is an agony of conflict..a testing ground between dictatorship and freedom." Mr. Eisenhower said this war has become a "a test of whether people can live as they (CHOOSE) or be dominated as additional pawns in the machinations of power-hungry groups in the Kremlin and China."

At Dien Bien Phu, the Communists seized another French outpost and moved to within 600 to 700 yards of the nerve center of the surrounded French garrison. The first American plane transporting French parachutists has now arrived in Indo-China from Paris. (IT WAS) forced to detour some 18-hundred miles because India refused permission to pass over her country. And Cambodia today informed the United Nations that it may seek action against Vietminh troops accused of "foreign aggression."

The Russians today broke off diplomatic relations with Australia. Moscow sent a note saying Australia is harboring a "criminal" and his wife. This was a reference to Soviet Diplomat and spy Vladimir Petrov, former third secretary of the embassy in Canberra, who has asked Australia for political asylum. He has also turned over papers on the Soviet spy system to Australian officials. Moscow has recalled its ambassador and asked (AUSTRALIA) to recall its charge d'affaires from Moscow.

The western Big Three, meeting in Paris, today rejected Soviet demands that Communist China be treated as an equal at the Geneva conference. Secretary of States Dulles is reported to have informed the British and the French that we would walk out of the conference if the Chinese Communists are treated as an "inviting" power..or permitted to take over a rotating chairmansip.

Also in Paris..the foreign ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization said today, they have found no evidence of any change in the ultimate aims of the Soviet Union. They say Russia's military strength, and that of her satellites, has continued to increase. And again they agree on the need for western "efforts, vigilance and unity."

In Berlin today, American acting high commissioner Dowling, sent the Russians a letter, accusing them of pursuing deliberately outrageous and uncivilized conduct. This was a reference to Moscow sending agents to western Germany to assassinate a Russian emigre leader.

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said in Chicago today, it might be good cold war strategy, to encourage oppressed peoples to reveolt. He said:"Why can't we be the salesman fo human revolt, which demonstratively has produced freedom for the individual man, and has brought standards of life heretofore unknown in the world?" He said:"When people suffer from oppression and privation, and finally reach a point of desperation in their need for improving their circumstances, they inevitably come to one conclusion: revolution."

The United States today granted a 100-million dollars loan to the six-nation European coal and steel pool. This is the first time in history that our government has extended financial credit to a European community organization.. as distinguished from a separate nation.

At the United Nations today, the subcommittee on disarmament agreed to hold its first secret meeting to discuss arms in London around the Middle of May.

In Washington, Warren Olney, assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division, said that the Federal Housing Administration... by "taking the attitude that they were just giving the stuff away"... has made it impossible to prosecute big-time apartment house profiteers. The President today ordered the F.B.I. to search the country for home-repair and improvement salesman who "bilked a great many thousands of homeowners"..under government loan insurance programs.

A former prisoner of war... Edward M. Gaither of Philadelphia. charged today that after he told Corporal Edward Dickensen of his plans to escape from a Communist prisoner of war camp in Korea he was brutally beaten by Chinese Communists and put before a mock firing squad on two ~~DAYS~~ OCCASIONS.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars said today it's ten thousand posts throughout the country are circulating petitions demanding that Congress make membership in the Communist party a criminal offense.

Swing April 23

The man who monitors telephone conversations of Secretary of the Army Stevens was the ~~center~~ (central figure) of a prolonged and spirited hassle in the hearing before the Permanent Investigations committee this afternoon. He is John Lucas and he has been monitoring telephone conversations for his army chiefs since 1949. Mr. Lucas turned out to be a scrupulously careful witness, so careful that for a time he put the committee into confusion. For when he was questioned about the accuracy of a transcript he wrote of a key conversation between Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy he quite frankly admitted that he hadn't got the whole conversation word for word. He tried to do that always but it wasn't always possible. Sometimes persons spoke too fast, sometimes he was disturbed while listening. He noted down in such cases that there had been an ommission. Such a notation was in his records of this conversation.

¶ This admission threatened to keep the transcript from being used as evidence, for Counsel Jenkins at once gave his opinion that an incomplete and admittedly inaccurate transcript could not be entered. ~~And as this telephone conversation is one of the high points in the controversy between Mr. Stevens and Senator McCarthy it looked as though the Stevens case had suffered a setback.~~

But the fact was soon developed that Mr. Lucas usually got everything right in his notes, and on this occasion there had been only a single omission. It might have been of five words, Mr. Lucas said, but it was not more than fifteen words, in a transcript of five hundred words.

The prolonged discussion that followed was over the admissability of a record of a monitored conversation. Legally it can be used in evidence if a Congressional Committee orders it produced, or if both parties to the conversation agree. Would Senator McCarthy agree? He was asked. He said that he would, but he raised many ifs and ands. He wanted to see all the transcriptions of all the talks held about this case. When Mr. Welch, counsel engaged by the Army, offered to produce them all, Mr. McCarthy said all must go into the record - so as not to leave it to Stevens to choose which ones should be entered as evidence.

Ultimately the committee voted to subpoena all the notes, memoranda and transcriptions of all the telephone talks bearing on this case, taking them in their chronological order. Thereupon Senator McCarthy for himself, Mr. Cohn and Mr. Carr consented to their use. With this in the bag Mr. Jenkins was just ordering Mr. Lucas to read the XXXXXXX transcript of the Stevens-McCarthy conversation when Senator McCarthy raised another of his numerous points of order. The motion had said "chronological order" and this particular telephone conversation had not been the first. So the committee adjourned, instructing that all records be submitted in their chronological order as soon as possible.

A pre-view of what is in the contested transcript was given by Mr. Stevens, who had been allowed to testify about the converstaion from his own recollection. Senator McCarthy said this about Cohn, according to Mr. Stevens: "Roy thinks David (that is, David Shine) ought to be a general, operating from a penthouse on top of the Waldorf Astoria."

And the Senator did not want Shine re-assigned to his committee. He suggested that Shine might be given a few weekends to take care of his girl friends. What the Senator said, Mr. Stevens testified, added up to the impression that Shine's importance to the committee was not great.

This statement provoked another McCarthy interruption. He wanted to deny that he had in any way belittled Shine's value. Counsel Jenkins tried to silence the Senator for speaking out of turn. But the Senator successfully resisted silencing and explained that if he waited for his turn to cross-examine several days might pass and the real situation would be misunderstood all that time.

When the first mention was made of the transcript of the monitored telephone conversation, Senator McCarthy angrily denounced the monitoring of a private talk as "one of the most indecent things I ever heard of." Counsel Jenkins tried to quell him, Senator Mundt pounded his gavel, but as on the earlier occasions Senator McCarthy said what he had to say, and once more called monitoring improper and indecent. But he raised and carried a point of order. He wanted to know if the transcript was a verbatim record, and whether it contained the entire conversation. He wanted to interrogate the man who made it. It was this demand that led to the appearance of Mr. Lucas.

Secretary Stevens told of a conversation with Mr. Schine before his induction. Schine congratulated him on "doing a good job" in his fight against communism and said "he should go a long way." And he went on to say that it would be more logical if he, Schine, were made special assistant to Mr. Stevens in this fight than to be inducted into the Army. Mr. Stevens says he assured Schine he should face up to induction and to be sure that service in the Army would prove one of the best experiences in his life.

The Committee will meet again at 10.30 Monday morning.

The hearings have been adjourned until Monday. And there is at least the prospect of a quiet weekend, free of charges and countercharges... a weekend in which we can all relax. Alexander Wolcott once remarked that "the English have an extraordinary ability for flying into a great calm." We could do worse than follow this suggestion. But as Walter Bagehot observed:"The inability to stay quiet is one of the most conspicuous failings of mankind."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 23, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Mundt committee today voted unanimously to subpoena all the records, of all telephone calls, involving the principals in the McCarthy-Army dispute. The decision came after an army employe testified that he had from 50 to 100 transcripts of phone conversations made to and from Secretary Stevens office. I should like to review today's testimony in a few minutes.

The President visited the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln in Hodgenville, Kentucky, today. And without mentioning the name of anyone alive today, he said: "You can find no instance where Abraham Lincoln stood up in public and excoriated another American. You can find no instance where he is reported to have slapped or pounded a table, and struck the pose of a pseudo-dictator, or an arbitrary individual."

And then in an informal speech at Transylvania College at Lexington, Kentucky, the President said that the battle for Dien Bien Phu in Indo-China "is an agony of conflict..a testing ground between dictatorship and freedom." Mr. Eisenhower said this war has become a "test of whether people can live as they choose, or be dominated as additional pawns in the machinations of power-hungry groups in the Kremlin and China."

At Dien Bien Phu, the Communists seized another French outpost and moved to within 600 to 700 yards of the nerve center of the surrounded French garrison. The first American plane transporting French parachutists has now arrived in Indo-China from Paris. It was forced to detour some 18-hundred miles because India refused permission to pass over her country. And Cambodia today informed the United Nations, that it may seek action against Vietminh troops accused of "foreign aggression."

The Russians today broke off diplomatic relations with Australia. Moscow sent a note saying Australia is harboring a "criminal" and his wife.

This was a reference to Soviet Diplomat and spy Vladimir Petrov, former third secretary of the embassy in Canberra, who has asked Australia for political asylum. He has also turned over papers on the Soviet spy system to Australian officials. Moscow has recalled its ambassador and asked Australia to recall its charge d'affaires from Moscow.

The Western Big Three, meeting in Paris, today rejected Soviet demands that Communist China be treated as an equal at the Geneva Conference. Secretary of State Dulles is reported to have informed the British and the French that we would walk out of the conference if the Chinese Communists are treated as an "inviting" power..or permitted to take over a rotating chairmanship.

Also in Paris..the foreign ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization said today they have found no evidence of any change in the ultimate aims of the Soviet Union. They say Russia's military strength, and that of her satellites, has continued to increase. And again they agree on the need for western "efforts, vigilance and unity."

In Berlin today, American acting high commissioner Dowling sent the Russians a letter accusing them of pursuing deliberately outrageous and uncivilized conduct. This was a reference to Moscow sending agents to western Germany to assassinate a Russian emigree leader.

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said in Chicago today, it might be good cold war strategy to encourage oppressed peoples to revolt. He said: "Why can't we be the salesman for human revolt, which demonstratively has produced freedom for the individual man and has brought standards of life heretofore unknown in the world?" He said: "When people suffer from oppression and privation and finally reach a point of desperation in their need for improving their circumstances, they inevitably come to one conclusion: revolution."

The United States today granted a 100-million dollar loan to the six-nation European coal and steel pool. This is the first time in history that our government has extended financial credit to a European community organization.

.as distinguished from a separate nation.

At the United Nations today, the subcommittee on disarmament agreed to hold its first secret meeting to discuss arms in London around the Middle of May.

In Washington, Warren Oleny, assistant Attorney General in charge of the criminal division, said that the Federal Housing Administration...by "taking the attitude that they were just fiving the stuff away"...has made it impossible to prosecute big-time apartment house profiteers. The President today ordered the F.B.I. to search the country for home-repair and improvement salesman, who "bilked a great many thousands of homeowners"...under government loan insurance programs.

A former prisoner of war...Edward M. Gaither of Philadelphia charged today that after he told Corporal Edward Dickensen of his plans to escape from a Communist prisoner of war camp in Korea he was brutally beaten by Chinese Communists and put before a mock firing squad on two occasions.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars said today its ten thousand posts throughout the country are circulating petitions demanding that Congress make membership in the Communist party a criminal offense.

The man who monitors telephone conversations of Secretary of the Army Stevens was the central figure of a prolonged and spirited hassle in the hearing before the Permanent Investigations Committee this afternoon. He is John Lucas and he has been monitoring telephone conversations for his army chiefs since 1949. Mr. Lucas turned out to be a scrupulously careful witness, so careful that for a time he put the committee into confusion. For when he was questioned about the accuracy of a transcript he wrote of a key conversation between Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy he quite frankly admitted that he hadn't got the whole conversation word for word. He tried to do that always but it wasn't always possible. Sometimes persons spoke too fast, sometimes he was disturbed while listening. He noted down in such cases that there had been an ommission. Such a notation was in his records of this conversation.

This admission threatened to keep the transcript from being used as evidence, for Counsel Jenkins at once gave his opinion that an incomplete and admittedly inaccurate transcript could not be entered. But the fact was soon developed that Mr. Lucas usually got everything right in his notes, and on this occasion there had been only a single ommission. It might have been of five words, Mr. Lucas said,but it was not more than fifteen words, in a transcript of three to five hundred words.

The prolonged discussion that followed was over the admissability of a record of a monitored conversation. Legally it can be used in evidence if a Congressional Committee orders it produced, or if both parties to the conversation agree. Would Senator McCarthy agree? He was asked. He said that he would, but he raised many ifs and ands. He wanted to see all the transcriptions of all the talks held about this case. When Mr. Welch, Counsel engaged by the Army, offerred to produce them all, Mr. McCarthy said all must go into the record - so as not to leave it to Stevens to choose which ones should be entered as evidence.

Ultimately the committee voted to subpoena all the notes, memoranda and transcriptions of all the telephone talks bearing on this case, taking them in their chronological order. Thereupon Senator McCarthy for himself, Mr. Cohn and Mr. Carr consented to their use. With this in the bag, Mr. Jenkins was just ordering Mr. Lucas to read the transcript of the Stevens-McCarthy conversation when Senator McCarthy raised another of his numerous points of order. The motion had said "chronological order" and this particular telephone conversation had not been the first. So the committee adjourned, instructing that all records be submitted in their chronological order as soon as possible.

A preview of what is in the contested transcript was given by Mr. Stevens, who had been allowed to testify about the conversation from his own recollection. Senator McCarthy said this about Cohn according to Mr. Stevens: "Roy thinks David (that is, David Shine) ought to be a general, operating from a penthouse on top of the Waldorf Astoria." And the Senator did not want Shine reassigned to his committee,he suggested that Shine might be given a few weekends to take care of his girl firneds. What the Senator said, Mr. Stevens testified, added up to the impression that Shine's importance to the committee was not great.

This statement provoked another McCarthy interruption. He wanted to deny that he had in any way belittled Shine's value. Counsel Jenkins tried to silence the Senator for speaking out of turn. But the Senator successfully resisted silencing and explained that if he waited for his turn to cross-examine several days might pass and the real situation would be misunderstood all that time.

When the first mention was made of the transcript of the monitored telephone conversation, Senator McCarthy angrily denounced the monitoring of a private talk as "one of the most indecent things I ever heard of." Counsel Jenkins tried to quell him, Senator Mundt pounded his gavel, but as on the earlier occasions, Senator McCarthy said what he had to say, and once more called monitoring improper and indecent. But he raised and carried a point of order. He wanted to know if the transcript was a verbatim record, and whether it contained the entire conversation. He wanted to interrogate the man who made it. It was this demand that led to the appearance of Mr. Lucas.

Secretary Stevens told of a conversation with Mr. Shine, before his induction. Schine congratulated him on "doing a good job" in his fight against communism and said "he should go a long way." And he went on to say that it would be more logical if he, Schine, were made special assistant to Mr. Stevens in this fight, than to be inducted into the Army. Mr. Stevens says he assured Schine he should face up to induction and to be sure that service in the Army would prove one of the best experiences in his life.

The Committee will meet again at 10:30 Monday morning.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The hearings have been adjourned until Monday, And there is at least the prospect of a quiet weekend, a weekend in which we can all relax. Alexander Wolcott once remarked that "the English have an extraordinary ability for flying into a great calm." We could do worse than follow this suggestion. But as Walter Bagehot observed: "The inability to stay quiet is one of the most conspicuous failings of mankind."

Good night and Good luck!

Monday April 26, 1954

This is the news:

The President said today that the outcome of the war in Indo-China will "have the greatest significance for the United States." He told the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington that this "is a time of great decisions in world affairs." He called Indo-China "the cork in the bottle"... said its loss would affect the fate of hundreds of millions in surrounding areas of Southeast Asia. And the President said he hopes that the foreign ministers who started meeting at Geneva today will see the futility of depending on war or the threat of war as a means of settling international disputes.

Defense Secretary Wilson spoke to the same meeting and he said: the next few months are obviously critical ones in world affairs. What happens in Europe and Asia may force another look at our military plans, policies and spending.

Democratic Senator Ed Johnson of Colorado says WHAT he calls "the present crusade to send troops to Indo-China" would mean a minimum of 500-thousand American casualties and a very minimum of 100-billion dollars in borrowed money. He says this WOULD be "the most foolhardy venture in all American history."

Authoritative French sources say the President has turned down a French request for American planes and pilots for action in Indo-China. The British cabinet is reported to have ruled out a suggestion that British troops be sent there. The United Press reports from Geneva that Mr. Eisenhower had considered asking Congress for direct military intervention but dropped that when the British refused to go along. Admiral Radford, the chairman of our joint chiefs of staff, flew from Paris to London today to confer with Prime Minister Churchill. Then he's flying back to report to the National Security Council in Washington.

In Moscow today, Soviet Premier Malenkov told the [redacted] Soviet Parliament that the United States is "provoking the extension of the war in Indo-China." Malenkov said that if "aggressive circles" use atomic weapons to test the might of the Soviet Union "there can be no doubt that the aggressors would be crushed by the same weapon."

At Dien Bien Phu (the battle for which I'd like to review in a few minutes.) [redacted] Corsair fighter bombers.. supplied by the United States..went into action today for the first time. These French-piloted planes carried out the heaviest attack of the 7-year-war. They struck at enemy troops surrounding Dien Bien Phu. And transports again dropped fresh paratroopers into the garrison. A High command spokesman says "Obviously the Vietminh are well prepared to attack at any time they think the moment is just right." And it was revealed today that Burma.. as well as India.. barred American troop transports from passing over its territory. These planes ferried French parachutists to Indo-China from France.

At Geneva...French Foreign Minister Bidault issued an appeal for a temporary truce in the battle for Dien Bien Phu..to permit the evacuation of "hundreds and hundreds" of wounded French troops. He accused the enemy of violating the rules of war. He said it was inconceivable that there be no action from this conference..in Geneva the birthplace of the Red Cross.. toward a "humanitarian truce."

Indo-China was a prime source of conversation in Geneva today but the foreign ministers decided to place Korea first on their agenda. They also agreed to let Prince Wan of Thailand be the chairman for today's opening meeting. Tomorrow the chairman will be Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov..then British Foreign Secretary Eden.. and then Prince Wan will again start the order of chairmanship. Today's organizational meeting took a short time and found British, American and Russian spokesmen in agreement that "it was a good start." But American reporters have been informed that the western powers at this meeting, are not enjoying the same degree of unity with which they participated in the Berlin conference.

In Washington today, Army Secretary Stevens said the charge that he tried to divert the McCarthy committee from an investigation of the army to one of the air force or navy is "an unequivocal lie." Stevens also denied: that he ever held Private David Schine "as a hostage" in an effort to block the committee's investigation. denied that he went to New York last November to make peace with Senator Mc Carthy because he was afraid of him. The Secretary did say that he tried to get the committee to suspend its investigation at Fort Monmouth.. and let the army handle it. Stevens explained that in his view Senator McCarthy's publicity tactics had spread misinformation and unnecessary excitement. He said:"it was not fair to the army and it was not fair to the American people." He conceded that McCarthy did "speed up" the suspension of some persons suspected of being security risks. But he insisted it was not fair of the Senator to create the impression that there was a lot of current espionage at Fort Monmouth when..said Stevens..such was not the case. Secretary Stevens said again that Committee Counsel Roy Cohen used his office to "seek a perversion of army rules" to get special treatment for Private Schine. But, under questioning by Cohn and Mc Carthy and some committee members, the Secretary could not be as positive about Committee staff director Frank Carr. Stevens said Carr's attitude was (LARGELY) "passive".. he could not recall today any particular statement Carr had made in seeking favors for Schine. Senator Mc Carthy told Stevens:"You see, Bob, you are asking that (Carr) be discharged and you can't tell us what he said." During questioning, Democratic Senator McClelland said the implication is that Secretary Stevens could have "bought off" the McCarthy committee by giving a commission to David Schine. Senator Mc Carthy called this "a completely improper and unfair suggestion" that he could be "bought off." The Secretary will be subjected to more cross-examination tomorrow.

Republican Senate Leader Knowland said today that these hearings have not delayed action on the President's legislative program.

The House appropriations committee today approved a cut of a little over one billion dollars in the President's military program for the new fiscal year. It approved 28 point 6 billions... more than 5 and a half billions less than the current fiscal year appropriation.

The governors of five western states today asked the President to make available immediately 15-million dollars to combat dust and wind problemsin "dust bowl" states. The governors of Colorado..Oklahoma.. New Mexico...Texas and Kansas..discussed their problems with the President and Secretary of Agriculture Benson for three and a half hours.

Richard L. Bowditch, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, today called for a stronger school system. He said "nothing must hamper its freedom of inquiry and discussion."

Edward R. Murrow: April 26, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Today in Paris, diplomats were already discussing who would be held responsible for the fall of Dienbienphu. Anonymous but unimpeachable French sources say that it was the French who took the initiative in asking for further American intervention in Indo-China. These sources claim, that the latest request was made when French General Ely was in Washington a month ago, at which time he asked for additional air power. A high French military official told our Paris correspondent today: "What we reproach against you Americans is that you are always late in coming to our aid. It was so in the first World War, and in the second, and now it is true again."

The loss of Dienbienphu, if it occurs, will not mean the loss of Indo-China; but it will add further strain to the Western Alliance; it will damage the French will to resist; and it will create continuing controversy as to who was responsible for it.

The exhausted defenders of Dienbienphu are outnumbered four to one. The defenders have lost the commanding heights, and it is to be doubted that they can continue much longer to take the punishment that Decastrie's troops have been suffering since March 13th. It is now a place where the defenders dare not get their heads above ground. The enemy sappers are within seven hundred yards of the center of the fortress. The drop zone for parachutists and supplies has now narrowed to the point where one-third of the supplies are falling inside the enemy lines. But the French continue to try to put paratroopers in. Psychologically this must be the toughest jump in the history of airborne warfare. These men are jumping into a trap. The French High Command deliberately chose to make a stand at Dienbienphu. They obviously misjudged the enemy's capability, particularly with artillery and mortars. The High Command announced it welcomed the enemy attack, seeking at last to come to grips with an elusive enemy. The French were surprised by the ferocity of the enemy attack, and his enormous fire power, and the trap the French thought they had set snapped back and pinned down Decastries and his gallant men.

David Schoenbrun cables me from Hanoi tonight that no relief column has been sent to the aid of Decastries. Plans for such an operation have been drawn by officers who are pleading for action at any cost, even at the cost of giving up territory elsewhere, but the plans have not been approved. Large numbers of French and Vietnam troops are still tied down in a listless and relatively unimportant mop-up of the central coastal sector. Another French Union force is operating in Laos, perhaps as near as 35 miles from Dienbienphu. The plans for a relief column have been drawn, but according to Schoenbrun the decision has not been made. Lower echelon planners and operational commanders are urging action, but a kind of high level paralysis - which may well have its origins in Washington and Paris - appears to have set in.

Schoenbrun cables that American Air Force bombers are available within range of Dienbienphu, with sufficient striking power to blast the Communist artillery off the heights surrounding Decastries' shrinking perimeter. But this would mean direct American intervention in the war during the opening days of the Geneva Conference, with consequences no one can foresee.

This is a bitter little battle at Dienbienphu. Its loss need not mean the loss of Indo-China, though it could. [redacted]

It may be only a small footnote in history compared to Verdun or Stalingrad. The grime and glory of this gallant action are obscured by censorship and communications difficulties. What cannot be obscured is the fact that the great powers, having recognized and announced their concern and vital interest in the area, have not so far been able to agree as to what should be done about it.

It would seem that the time is fast approaching for some major decisions on the part of the Western powers with regard to Indo-China. George McDonald once remarked:"No man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is often more than a man can bear." Goethe put it this way: "Indecision brings its own delays. What you can do, or think you can, begin it. Boldness has genius, power and magic in it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 26, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM DST

This is the news:

The President said today that the outcome of the war in Indo-China will "have the greatest significance for the United States." He told the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington that this "is a time of great decisions in world affairs." He called Indo-China "the cork in the bottle"..and said its loss would affect the fate of hundreds of millions in surrounding areas of South-east Asia. And the President said he hopes that the foreign ministers who started meeting at Geneva today will see the futility of depending on war or the threat of war as a means of settling international disputes.

Defense Secretary Wilson spoke to the same meeting and he said: the next few months are obviously critical ones in world affairs. What happens in Europe and Asia may force another look at our military plans, policies, and spending.

Democratic Senator Ed Johnson of Colorado says what he calls "the present crusade to send troops to Indo-China" would mean a minimum of 500-thousand American casualties and a very minimum of 100-billion dollars in borrowed money. He says this would be "the most foolhardy venture in all American history."

Authoritative French sources say the President has turned down a French request for American planes and pilots for action in Indo-China. The British cabinet is reported to have ruled out a suggestion that British troops be sent there. The United Press reports from Geneva that Mr. Eisenhower had considered asking Congress for direct military intervention, but dropped that when the British refused to go along. Admiral Radford, the chairman of our joint chiefs of staff, flew from Paris to London today to confer with Prime Minister Churchill. Then he's flying back to report to the National Security Council in Washington.

In Moscow today, Soviet Premier Malenkov told the Soviet Parliament that the United States is "provoking the extension of the war in Indo-China." Malenkov said that if "aggressive circles" use atomic weapons to test the might of the Soviet Union "there can be no doubt that the aggressors would be crushed by the same weapon."

At Dienbienphu..the battle for which I'd like to review in a few minutes.. Corsair fighter bombers..supplied by the United States..went into action today for the first time. These French-piloted planes carried out the heaviest attack of the 7-year war. They struck at enemy troops surrounding Dienbienphu and transports again dropped fresh paratroopers into the garrison. A High command spokesman says "obviously the Vietminh are well prepared to attack at any time they think the moment is just right." And it was revealed today that Burma.. as well as India..barred American troop transports from passing over its territory. These planes ferried French parachutists to Indo-China from France.

At Geneva...French Foreign Minister Bidault issued an appeal for a temporary truce in the battle for Dienbienphu..to permit the evacuation of "hundreds and hundreds" of wounded French troops. He accused the enemy of violating the rules of war. He said it was inconceivable that there be no action from this conference..in Geneva the birthplace of the Red Cross..toward a "humanitarian truce."

Indo-China was a prime source of conversation in Geneva today, but the foreign ministers decided to place first on their agenda. They also agreed to let Prince Wan of Thailand be the chairman for today's opening meeting. Tomorrow the chairman will be Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov..then British Foreign Secretary Eden..and then Prince Wan will again start the order of Chairmanship. Todays organization meeting took a short time and found British, American and Russian spokesmen in agreement that "it was a good start." But American reporters have been informed that the western powers at this meeting, are not enjoying the same degree of unity with which they participated in the Berlin conference.

In Washington today, Army Secretary Stevens said the charge that he tried to divert the McCarthy committee from an investigation of the army to one of the air force or navy is "an unequivocal lie." Stevens also denied: that he ever held Private David Schine "as a hostage" in an effort to block the committee's investigation..denied that he went to New York last November to make peace with Senator McCarthy because he was afraid of him. The Secretary did say that he tried to get the committee to suspend its investigation at Fort Monmouth.. and let the army handle it. Stevens explained that in his view Senator McCarthy's publicity tactics had spread misinformation and unnecessary excitement. He said: "it was not fair to the army and it was not fair to the American people." He conceded that McCarthy did "speed up" the suspension of some persons suspected of being security risks. But he insisted it was not fair of the Senator to create the impression that there was a lot of current espionage at Fort Monmouth when said Stevens..such was not the case. Secretary Stevens said again that Committee Counsel Roy Cohn used his office to "seek a perversion of army rules" to get special treatment for Private Schine. But, under questioning by Cohn and McCarthy and some committee members, the Secretary could not be as positive about Committee staff director Frank Carr. Stevens said Carr's attitude was largely "passive"..he could not recall today any particular statement Carr had made in seeking favors for Schine. Senator McCarthy told Stevens: "You see, Bob, you are asking that (Carr) be discharged and you can't tell us what he said." During questioning, Democratic Senator McClelland said the implication is that Secretary Stevens could have "bought off" the McCarthy committee by giving a commission to David Schine. Senator McCarthy called this "a completely improper and unfair suggestion" that he could be "bought off." The Secretary will be subjected to more cross-examination tomorrow.

Republican Senate Leader Knowland said today that these hearings have not delayed action on the President's legislative program.

The House appropriations committee today approved a cut of a little over one billion dollars in the President's military program for the new fiscal year. It approved 28 point 6 billions..more than 5 and a half billions less than the current fiscal year appropriation.

The governors of five western states today asked the President to make available immediately 15-million dollars to combat dust and wind problems in "dust bowl" states. The governors of Colorado, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Texas, and Kansas discussed their problems with the President and Secretary of Agriculture Benson for three and a half hours.

Richard L. Bowditch, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, today called for a stronger school system. He said "nothing must hamper its freedom of inquiry and discussion."

Today in Paris diplomats were already discussing who would be held responsible for the fall of Dienbienphu. Anonymous but unimpeachable French sources say that it was the French who took the initiative in asking for further American intervention in Indo-China. These sources claim that the latest request was m ade when French General Ely was in Washington a month ago, at which time he asked for additional air power. A high French military official told our Paris correspondent today: "What we reproach against you Americans is that you are alwyas late in coming to our aid. It was so in the first World War, and in the second, and now it is true again."

The loss of Dienbienphu, if it occurs, will not mean the loss of Indo-China; but it will add further strain to the Western Alliance; it will damage the French will to resist; and it will create continuing controversy as to who was responsible for it.

The exhausted defenders of Dienbienphu are outnumbered four to one. The defenders have lost the commanding heights, and it is to be doubted that they can continue much longer to take the punishment that DeCastrie's troops have been suffering since March 13th. It is now a place where the defenders dare not get their heads above ground. The enemy sappers are within seven hundred yards of the center of the fortress. The drop zone for parachutists and supplies has now narrowed to the point where one-third of the supplies are falling inside the enemy lines. But the French continue to try to put paratroopers in. Psychologically this must be the toughest jump in the history of airborne warfare. These men are jumping into a trap. The French High Command deliberately chose to make a stand at Dienbienphu. They obviously misjudged the enemy's capability, particularly with artillery and mortars. The High Command announced it welcomed the enemy attack, seeking at last to come to grips with an elusive enemy. The French were surprised by the ferocity of the enemy attack, and his enormous fire power, and the trap the French thought they had set snapped back and pinned down Decastrie's and his gallant men.

David Schoenbrun cables me from Hanoi tonight that no relief column has been sent to the aid of Decastries. Plans for such an operation have been drawn by officers who are pleading for action at any cost, even at the cost of giving up territory elsewhere, but the plans have not been approved. Large numbers of French and Vietnam troops are still tied down in a listless and relatively unimportant mop-up of the central coastal sector. Another French Union force is operating in Laos, perhaps as near as 35 miles from Dienbienphu. The plans for a relief column have been drawn, but according to Schoenbrun the decision has not been made. Lower echelon planners and operational commanders are urging action, but a kind of high level paralysis - which may well have its origins in Washington and Paris - appears to have set in.

Schoenbrun cables that American Air Force bombers are available within range of Dienbienphu, with sufficient striking power to blast the Communist artillery off the heights surrounding Decastries' shrinking perimeter. But this would mean direct American intervention in the war during the opening days of the Geneva Conference, with consequences no one can foresee.

This is a bitter little battle at Dienbienphu. Its loss need not mean the loss of Indo-China, though it could. It may be only a small footnote in history compared to Verdun or Stalingrad. The grime and glory of this gallant action are obscured by censorship and communications difficulties. What cannot be obscured is the fact that the great powers, having recognized and announced their concern and vital interest in the area, have not so far been able to agree as to what should be done about it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that the time is fast approaching for some major decisions on the part of the Western powers with regard to Indo-China. George McDonald once remarked: "No man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is often more than a man can bear." Goethe put it this way: "Indecision brings its own delays. What you can do, or think you can, begin it. Boldness has genius, power and magic in it."

Good night and Good luck!

Tuesday, April 27, 1954

This is the news:

Prime Minister Churchill said today that Great Britain will not commit any military forces to Indo-China in advance of the results of the Geneva conference. He told the House of Commons his government has entered no new political or military committments. British sources at Geneva say the British are supporting a French effort to arrange for a cease-fire in Indo-China as a first step toward solving the war problem. The United States is said to favor this..if no permanent and costly concessions are made. Today at Geneva, French [redacted] Foreign Minister Bidault met with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. A Communist China source says his delegation [redacted] regards itself on e qual footing with the Big Four Powers. North and South Korea presented their views on how to unify their country; with the Communist proposal reflecting an election plan we have turned down in the past.

French sources in Paris say France and Viet Nam have reached an agreement to declare full independence for the Viet Nam state.

Despite rain and heavy enemy fire another hundred French paratroppers were dropped over Dien Bien Phu. And the usually reliable trade paper, American Aviation Daily, reports that "a large scale military airlift to Indo-China is being arranged in this country. It would involve more than a hundred civilian pilots, the trade paper says.

In Washington today Army Secretary Stevens told Senator Mc Carthy that he was "absolutely incorrect" in suggesting that Stevens started the Army-McCarthy row in an effort to get the McCarthy committee to end its investigation of the army. The major portion of today's testimony concerned a photograph introduced yesterday. That picture showed two persons..Secretary Stevens and Private David Schine..alone. It was introduced during questioning on whether or not Stevens had asked to have his picture taken with Schine. Today, Army Counsel Welch charged that this picture had been "shamefully doctored". He called it a trick..said it was a portion of a larger group picture that included others...(a colonel and the arm of a fourth person) Welch introduced the larger picture. Secretary Stevens says the cropped picture "shows somebody has taken it upon himself to edit the information coming before this committee." Senator Mc Carthy said he could see no doctoring (except that a Colonel Bradley was not shown in the picture introduced yesterday) He charged Counsel Welch was not speaking the truth when he charged it had been doctored. Then Committee Counsel Jenkins explained: that he arranged to get the picture at a conference with Roy Cohn and two other members of the McCarthy staff..that Cohn never told him anything about it having been "altered, changed, edited or otherwise." Jenkins said he accepted it at face value..and was under the impression that the original showed Stevens and Schine alone. Then Roy Cohn took the stand..for the first time at these hearings. He said: he did arrange for Jenkins to get the picture. But he had not inspected it in advance. (did not know it had been changed.) And Cohn said it doesn't matter "one iota", if it showed only Stevens and Schine, or them and others. Because, Cohn charged, Stevens had twice asked to have his picture taken with Schine..and the picture in question was made at a time, when Stevens says he was being subjected to improper pressure on behalf of Private Schine. Stevens yesterday denied he had ever asked to be photographed with Schine. The committee has decided to call as witnesses, everyone connected with the picture in question.

Today, Secretary Stevens said he had searched his memory and his conscience overnight, and failed to recall anything said to him by Frank Carr, the McCarthy committee chief of staff, in favor of Private Schine. Stevens (acknowledged) that as far as his personal experience with Carr is concerned, "at this point", he would have to vote to acquit Carr of all charges. But he said, other army witnesses will have more to say on Carr's participation in the alleged effort to get special favors for Schine.

At one point Senator McCarthy told Stevens:"You're not giving us the facts, Bob." The Secretary replied:"I positively deny anything I said here was not the facts, as far as I know." ~~At another point the Senator told the Secretary:"Let's be a little more honest now." Stevens demanded: "What do you mean, be a little more honest?" The senator ignored the question.~~

The Marine Corps announced today that no displinary action will be taken against Colonel Frank B. Schwable, who made a false germ warfare confession to the Communists in Korea. But Navy Secretary Anderson says Schwable's usefullness to the Marines has "been seriously IMPAIRED" General Shepherd, the Marine commandant, said Schwable, "however unwilling" had damaged his country by making the confession.

At the court martial of former Korean prisoner, Corporal Dickenson, a star witness for the prosecution.. Coporal Thomas Carrick of Virginia.. testified he was so confused he WANTS to have all his testimony stricken from the record.

Senator Byrd demanded today that immediate criminal action be taken against certain apartment builders he accuses of making profits of 100-million dollars or more on government-backed loans. And he wants immediate action against Clyde L. Powell, the suspended assistant Federal Housing Administration commissioner in charge of apartment building.

Housing Administrator Cole said today the Number One housing scandal is the nation's slums.

And the Senate today rejected a farm bloc attempt to extend rigid high price supports for another year and approved the Administration's wool subsidy bill. The price support decision will come up again later when the Senate votes on Secretary of Agriculture Bensons' plan for flexible and lower supports.

Edward R. Murrow: April 27, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Just before the Geneva conference got under way, certain events occurred that need to be understood, if the conference itself is to be understood. Last week the French Government formally asked the United States and Great Britain, for military assistance in Indo-China. Both governments declined. Having declined, both ceased to be in a position to dissuade France, at Geneva, from seeking a compromise peace. / This does not mean that the United States would have to approve of any compromise the French might make. But the State Department must approve any compromise, that does not conflict with American interests.

Judging from informed but unofficial reports, the Eisenhower Administration was ready to offer military aid in Indo-China at this time, if it could become part of collective action. This would have been air and naval aid, not ground troops. Had the British agreed to collaborate, President Eisenhower would have asked Congress to authorize this limited American participation. / The framework of collective action then could have been extended.

The British Cabinet held an emergency meeting, and decided not to resort to action of this kind, at the start of the Geneva conference. Washington apparently believed such action would induce the Communists to be conciliatory.

London apparently believed it would not. In both capitals, freedom of maneuver is limited by strong public opinion. In the United States there is the reluctance to get involved in another Korea. In Britain there is the dislike of doing anything the Communists could construe as provocative, and there is the hesitance to follow the United States in a bold course whose consequences cannot be foreseen.

It may be inaccurate to say that history repeats itself. But it comes close to it sometimes, and it now has done so in these events concerning Indo-China. Control of Indo-China is essential to the establishment of a great Asian empire. That is true today. It also was true in 1940.

The French Republic had fallen, and the Petain government came into office on June 16, 1940. Three days later the Japanese made the first of their demands on the French in Indo-China, which were to develop into demands for the passage of troops. The Petain government could not reinforce the French contingents in Indo-China. General Catroux, then in command at Saigon, asked Washington and London if they would stand by him if he fought the Japanese. Both capitals said no. London had its hands full; Washington was still obsessed by the hope of remaining neutral. Admiral Decoux, who succeeded Catroux, stalled the Japanese as they kept pressing for a foothold. In August he received an ultimatum demanding passage of troops. Again Washington was asked if it would help if the French fought. Again Washington said it would not, and having said so it admitted it could not reproach the French if they granted Japan military facilities.

In September Admiral Decoux allowed the Japanese the use of the port of Haiphong, but on the same day the Japanese army invaded northern Indo-China, the first overt Japanese attack against a Western power. No doubt they were testing what the reaction would be. There was no reaction. Local French forces made a bitter but futile stand, and Indo-China was lost. Therewith the creation of the great Asian empire - the Japanese Co-prosperity sphere - was assured. It took nearly five years of the costliest war in our history to dismantle that empire.

Today's circumstances are, of course, utterly different, but the issues involved are not. The Communists, in place of the Japanese, are the empire builders. Once more the weakened French have asked Washington and London for military aid, and once more both capitals have said no.

The analogy need not be carried further. Measures still may be possible to avert the establishment of the new Asian empire. Washington is reported to have asked immediate talks looking to the formation of a ten-nation security pact in the Pacific, and eastern counterpart of NATO. To this the British also have said no, for the time being, and are reported to have joined the French in a bid for a truce. But if Geneva does not produce acceptable terms, Britain is expected to join the Pacific pact talks.

That leaves the over-riding question at Geneva, what kind of peace the Communists will concede. It is a grave question. But still more grave may be the question, what would happen if for a second time in history Indo-China were to be turned over to Ruthless men aspiring to build an Asian empire.

Cicero once said:"History is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the teacher of life." But ~~all this not withstanding~~, the German Philosopher Hegel was inclined to conclude: "What experience and history teach is this: that peoples and governments never have learned anything from history."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Prime Minister Churchill said today that Great Britain will not commit any military forces to Indo-China in advance of the results of the Geneva conference. He told the House of Commons his government has entered no new political or military committments. British sources at Geneva say the British are supporting a French effort to arrange for a cease-fire in Indo-China as a first step toward solving the war problem. The United States is said to favor this if no permanent and costly concessions are made. Today at Geneva, French Foreign Minister Bidault met with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. A Communist China source says his delegation regards itself one equal footing with the Big Four Powers. North and South Korea presented their views on how to unify their country; with the Communist proposal reflecting an election plan we have turned down in the past.

French sources in Paris say France and Viet Nam have reached an agreement to declare full independence for the Viet Nam state.

Despite rain and heavy enemy fire another hundred French paratroopers were dropped over Dien Bien Phu. And the usually reliable trade paper, American Aviation Daily, reports that "a large scale military airlift to Indo-China is being arranged in this country. It would involve more than a hundred civilian pilots, the trade paper says.

In Washington today Army Secretary Stevens told Senator McCarthy that he was "absolutely incorrect" in suggesting that Stevens started the Army-McCarthy row in an effort to get the McCarthy committee to end its investigation of the army. The major portion of today's testimony concerned a photograph introduced yesterday. That picture showed two persons - Secretary Stevens and Private David Schine alone. It was introduced during questioning on whether or not Stevens had asked to have his picture taken with Schine. Today Army Counsel Welch charged that this picture had been "shamefully doctored." He called it a trick - said it was a portion of a larger group picture that included others - a colonel and the arm of a fourth person. Welch introduced the larger picture. Stevens says the cropped picture "shows somebody has taken it upon himself to edit the information coming before this committee." Senator McCarthy said he could see no doctoring except that a Colonel Bradley was not shown in the picture introduced yesterday. He charged Counsel Welch was not speaking the truth when he charged it had been doctored. Then Committee Counsel Jenkins explained: that he arranged to get the picture at a conference with Roy Cohn and two other members of the McCarthy staff - that Cohn never told him anything about it having been "altered, changed, edited or otherwise." Jenkins said he accepted it at face value and was under the impressi that the original showed Stevens and Schine alone. Then Roy Cohn took the stand for the first time at these hearings. He said: he did arrange for Jenkins to get the picture. But he had not inspected it in advance - did not know it had been changed. And Cohn said it doesn't matter "one iota" if it showed only Stevens and Schine or them and others. Because, Cohn charged, Stevens had twice asked to have his picture taken with Schine and the picture in question was made at a time when Stevens says he was being subjected to improper pressure on behalf of Private Schine. Stevens yesterday denied he had ever asked to be photographed with Schine. The committee has decided to call as witnesses everyone connected with the picture in question.

Today, Secretary Stevens said he had searched his memory and his conscience overnight and failed to recall anything said to him by Frank Carr, the McCarthy committee chief of staff, in favor of Private Schine. Stevens acknowledged that as far as his personal experience with Carr is concerned "at this point" he would have to vote to acquit Carr of all charges. But he said other army witnesses will have more to say on Carr's participation in the alleged effort to get special favors for Schine. At one point Senator McCarthy told Stevens: "You're not giving us the facts, Bob." The Secretary replied: "I positively deny anything I said here was not the facts, as far as I know."

The Marine Corps announced today that no disciplinary action will be taken against Colonel Frank B. Schwable who made a false germ warfare confession to the Communists in Korea. But Navy Secretary Anderson says Schwable's usefulness to the Marine's has "been seriously impaired". General Shepherd, the Marine commandant, said Schwable, "however unwilling" had damaged his country by making the confession.

At the court martial of former Korean prisoner, Corporal Dickenson, a star witness for the prosecution, Corporal Thomas Carrick of Virginia testified he was so confused he wants to have all his testimony stricken from the record.

Senator Byrd demanded today that immediate criminal action be taken against certain apartment builders he accuses of making profits of 100-million dollars or more on government-backed loans. And he wants immediate action against Clyde L. Powell, the suspended assistant Federal Housing Administration commissioner in charge of apartment building.

Housing Administrator Cole said today the Number One housing scandal is the nation's slums.

And the Senate today rejected a farm bloc attempt to extend rigid high price supports for another year and approved the Administration's wool subsidy bill. The price support decision will come up again later when the Senate votes on Secretary of Agriculture Bensons' plan for flexible and lower supports.

Just before the Geneva conference got under way certain events occured that need to be understood if the conference itself is to be understood. Last week the French Government formally asked the United States and Great Britain for military assistance in Indo-China. Both governments declined. Having declined, both ceased to be in a position to dissuade France at Geneva from seeking a compromise peace. This does not mean that the United States would have to approve of any compromise the French might make. But the State Department must approve any compromise that does not conflict with American interests.

Judging from informed but unofficial reports, the Eisenhower Administration was ready to offer military aid to Indo-China at this time, if it could become part of collective action. This would have been air and naval aid, not ground troops. Had the British agreed to collaborate, President Eisenhower would have asked Congress to authorize this limited American participation. The framework of collective action then could have been extended.

The British Cabinet held an emergency meeting and decided not to resort to action of this kind at the start of the Geneva conference. Washington apparently believed such action would induce the Communists to be conciliatory. London apparently believed it would not. In both capitals, freedom of maneuver is limited by strong public opinion. In the United States there is the reluctance to get involved in another Korea. In Britain there is the dislike of doing anything the Communists could construe as provocative, and there is the hesitance to follow the United States in a bold course whose consequences cannot be foreseen. It may be inaccurate to say that history repeats itself. But it comes close to it sometimes, and it now has done so in these events concerning Indo-China. Control of Indo-China is essential to the establishment of a great Asian empire. That is true today. It also was true in 1940.

The French Republic has fallen, and the Petain government came into office on June 16, 1940. Three days later the Japanese made the first of their demands on the French in Indo-China, which were to develop into demands for the passage of troops. The Petain government could not reinforce the French contingents in Indo-China. General Catroux, then in command at Saigon, asked Washington and London if they would stand by him if he fought the Japanese. Both capitals said no. London had its hands full; Washington was still obsessed by the hope of remaining neutral. Admiral Decoux, who succeeded Catroux, stalled the Japanese as they kept pressing for a foothold. In August he received an ultimatum demanding passage of troops. Again Washington was asked if it would help if the French fought. Again Washington said it would not, and having said so it admitted it could not reproach the French if they granted Japan military facilities. In September Admiral Decoux allowed the Japanese the use of the port of Haiphong, but on the same day the Japanese army invaded northern Indo-China, the first overt Japanese attack against a Western power. No doubt they were testing what the reaction would be. There was no reaction. Local French forces made a bitter but futile stand, and Indo-China was lost. Therewith the creation of the great Asian empire - the Japanese Co-prosperity sphere - was assured. It took nearly five years of the costliest war in our history to dismantle that empire. Today's circumstances are, of course, utterly different, but the issues involved are not. The Communists, in place of the Japanese, are the empire builders. Once more the weakened French have asked Washington and London for military aid, and once more both capitals have said no. The analogy need not be carried further. Measures still may be possible to avert the establishment of the new Asian empire. Washington is reported to have asked immediate talks looking to the formation of a ten-nation security pact in the Pacific, and eastern counterpart of NATO. To this the British also have said no, for the time being, and are reported to have joined the French in a bid for a truce. But if Geneva does not produce acceptable terms, Britain is expected to join the Pacific pact talks. That leaves the over-riding question at Geneva what kind of peace the Communists will concede. It is a grave question. But still more grave may be the question, what would happen if for a second time in history Indo-China were to be turned over to ruthless men aspiring to build an Asian empire.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Cicero once said "History is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the teacher of life." The German Philosopher Hegal was inclined to conclude: "What experience and history teach is this: that peoples and governments never have learned anything from history."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, April 28, 1954

This is the news:

Communist China today demanded that all foreign troops be withdrawn from Asia. Chou en Lai, China's premier and foreign minister, told the Geneva conference all foreign military bases in Asia should be abolished. He wants a halt to "the remilitarization of Japan." He wants an Asiatic mutual security pact..restricted to only Asiatic nations. He charges that the western allies in Korea still hold 48-thousand prisoners of war and he wants this to be settled at Geneva. And Chou en Lai says we have turned Formosa into a "base for subversion" against Communist China. The foreign minister also announced his support of North Korea's plan for unifying Korea.

But Secretary of State Dulles told the conference this plan would merely destroy the present South Korean government and replace it with a Communist puppet regime. As for withdrawing our troops from Korea, Mr. Dulles said--in effect--we did that once. And we don't want history to repeat itself. In a few moments we'll have a direct report from Geneva on other developments there today.

France and Viet Nam today signed a declaration agreeing to give the former Indo-China colony full independence..within the French union.

And French and Viet Nam troops--fighting inside surrounded Dien Bien Phu--today made some small attacks against the enemy forces. The French say a three thousand man French striking force has re-occupied a town 35 miles southwest of the surrounded fortress. That's in the rear of the enemy troops. But the French caution against thinking of this as a relief column for Dien Bien Phu.

Vice President Nixon said in Washington today that the major aim of the Administration is to avoid "if we can" sending troops "to fight in Indo-China or anywhere else in the world." Mr. Nixon said our foreign policy has warned Russia and Red China that if they march into Indo-China "they run the risk that we would retaliate directly against them." The Vice President said that this policy has "reduced almost to a minimum" the chance of "a major overt aggression."

Admiral Radford, the chairman of the Joint chiefs of staff, returned to Washington to give the President an hour-long report on his recent trip to Paris and London to discuss Indo-China.

And informed diplomatic officials today informed Washington reporters that the Russians have a spearhead of 22 divisions..most of them armored... standing by in Germany. These officials say that within 30 days of the start of a Soviet attack in Europe, the Soviets and their satellites could muster 400 divisions. The Soviet bloc is now said to have more than six million men under arms... about four and a half million in ground armies. And the Russians are reported to be converting their 20-thousand planes of all types into jets..as rapidly as possible.

At the army-McCarthy hearings, Army Secretary Stevens today denied that he ever threatened repirsals against the general commanding Fort Monmouth because the general...Kirke Lawton...complimented Senator McCarthy and his committee. Stevens said he knew that Major General Lawton co-operated with McCarthy because the secretary ordered him to do so. And he acknowledged that he did once consider transfering Lawton. He said he was "agitated" at the time over a speech Lawton had made to his staff officers. In that speech he is alleged to have said that soldiers from certain unidentified colleges and universities appeared to have pro-Communist tendencies. Stevens said today he had questioned Lawton's judgement as a result of this statement. The committee will go further into the matter tomorrow.

During today's hearings, Committee Counsel Jenkins asked Secratary Stevens if he knew that Private David Schine..while assigned to Fort Dix...

had hired another soldier to clean his rifle...failed to clean his quarters.. told an officer that he, Schine, was in the army to modernize and streamline it. Stevens said he had heard some of these things..not all. And Senator McCarthy, who objected to the questions, said this was a smear of Schine, his former committee consultant. Mc Carthy said it was unfair.. because Schine was not on hand to reply. Democratic members of the Committee suggested that McCarthy has made charges without having the accused on hand to answer them. The committee decided to ask the army to permit Schine to attend future hearings..with an attorney. Secretary Stevens on the witness chair for a fifth day was accused by McCarthy of "flagrant dishonesty". He said, with some anger, that he resents any such insinuation. At another point, Senator McCarthy said high army officers in the committee room should not "dignify" Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel by sitting beside him. Hensel, one of the principals in the case, demanded an apology. Chairman Mundt said he has no power to force anyone to apologize. And among other developments: Secretary Stevens said that the McCarthy reports on his Fort Monmouth investigation "contained no significant item or derogatory information" not known to the army...Chairman Mundt lectured McCarthy for what he called speech-making by McCarthy under the guise of a point of order..and McCarthy charged that it was ridiculous for high-ranking army officers to attend the committee hearings "about a private who was successfully promoted until he reached the very top ..as a private"... a reference to David Schine.

In the House today, New York Representative Coudert, a Republican, called for a ban on the use of American troops in Indo-China without congressional consent. But Representative Wigglesworth, Massachusetts Republican, said this would be "most inadvisable, most unwise in view of the situation that confronts us."

The President today named a West Point classmate..retired Lieutenant General Swing.. to be commissioner of immigration and naturalization.

Some senators told reporters today that James. B. Conant, our high commissioner in Germany, had told them that if the European army plans falls thorugh..there would be no current way to re-arm western Germany. And the west German defense ministry says 140-thousand Germans who have volunteered for service in the proposed German army, will be registered for such service..beginning tomorrow.

In Egypt, twelve army officers and 40 civilians have been arrested and charged with conspiring with Communists to promote May Day riots. Nine of the 12 arrested officers had recently opposed the Premier..Lieut General Nasser.

In Geneva today, while the official conference talked about Korea, there was much behind the scenes discussion concerning Indo-China. We asked Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, to record for you a summary of these activities. Here it is:

(This is HKS recording now back to Ed Murrow)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in amoment etc.

Progress at the Geneva conference is slow. And so far, a[redacted]t, not particularly encouraging. More than a quarter century ago, Will Rogers remarked: "Diplomacy was invented by a man named Webster to use up all the words in his dictionary that didn't mean anything. A diplomat tells you what he don't believe himself and the man that he is telling it to don't believe it any more than he does. But at least it's always equal."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, April 28, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Geneva today, while the official conference talked about Korea, there was much behind-the-scenes discussion concerning Indochina. We asked Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, to record a summary of these activities. Here it is:

SMITH: The Geneva conference today spent its second day lending its ears to speeches about Korea but devoting its heart and mind solely to Indochina. American Secretary of State Dulles and Red Chinese Foreign Minister Chou En-lai restated their views on Korea, as others have done before them; but not even these, the two leading antagonists in the Far East, were able to steal real attention from the informal sideline talks about Indochina going on privately every day between Bidault of France and Molotov of Russia. Bidault, talking for the Western nations, and Molotov, representing the Communist-run countries, are trying to agree on which further nations to invite to the Indochina phase of this conference. Their talks were supposed to be confidential, but today Molotov broke confidence - and that has been the outstanding event of the conference so far.

What happened was, Molotov's press spokesman called a special news conference this afternoon. At it he told reporters that Bidault had in the course of his meeting with Molotov today expressed a desire to arrange a short truce at Dienbienphu so that the wounded could be evacuated. Molotov, the spokesman said, expressed his interest and then suggested such a truce might be arranged if the two nations directly involved, France and the Vietminh Communist rebels, would meet here in Geneva and talk it over. This, all the Western delegations here brand as pure blackmail. Molotov has spoken over Bidault's head to the people and politicians back home in France, who are very despondent at present. The Russian has held out a vague possibility of hope for the wounded at Dienbienphu on two conditions. First, Bidault must in effect recognize the Vietminh Communist rebel government by negotiating with it exclusively here at Geneva; second, he must in effect abandon the pro-French Indochinese Vietnam Government by agreeing to exclude it from such talks, tho its troops are in Dienbienphu also. In addition, accepting Molotov's proposal would strain what unity of policy remains between France and her chief allies, who would likewise be excluded from the talks. Having agreed to negotiate this way over Dienbienphu, France would have no argument against going on and negotiating a cease-fire in Indochina on the same terms, throwing over the pro-French Vietnamese and in isolation from her Allies.

This evening the French issued a curt (hurt?) little statement about it, but the French delegation cannot afford to turn down the offer out-of-hand without risking a cabinet crisis at home. So the statement issued here said France would give Molotov an answer after due consultation. This incident illustrates pretty clearly the unique nature of this conference in Geneva. It's the first big conference since the war in which the West can fairly be said to be on its knees and within which the Communist nations clearly hold the whiphand. It is also the first big conference in which the United States has not been able to give the lead to the other Western nations but is being swept along rather helplessly by her Allies. For example, the U.S. delegation here would prefer not to go into cease-fire negotiations in Indochina on terms that we are sure will be beneficial to the Communists, but France's need for a truce is so desperate that we are being overruled by her. The American delegation would like also to undertake more active intervention in Indochina to aid the French, but on that Britain overrules America. As Churchill said yesterday, Britain insists on trying to get a truce here first.

Mr. Molotov has had to wait a long time, but he has at last found one conference where is is on top.

This is Howard K. Smith recording in Geneva. And now back to Ed Murrow.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Communist China today demanded that all foreign troops be withdrawn from Asia. Chou en Lai, China's premier and foreign minister, told the Geneva conference all foreign military bases in Asia should be abolished. He wants a halt to "the remilitarization of Japan." He wants an Asiatic mutual security pact restricted to only Asiatic nationa. He charges that the western allies in Korea still hold 48-thousand prisoners of war and he wants this to be settled at Geneva. And Chou en Lai says we have turned Formosa into a "base for subversion" against Communist China. The foreign minister also announced his support of North Korea's plan for unifying Korea.

But Secretary of State Dulles told the conference this plan would merely destroy the present South Korean government and replace it with a Communist puppet regime. As for withdrawing our troops from Korea, Mr. Dulles said, in effect, we did that once. And we don't want history to repeat itself. In a few moments we'll have a direct report from Geneva on other developments there today.

France and Viet Nam today signed a declaration agreeing to give the former Indo-China colony full independence within the French union.

And French and Viet Nam troops fighting inside surrounded Dien Bien Phu today made some small attacks against the enemy forces. The French say a three thousand man French striking forece has re-occupied a town 35 miles southwest of the surrounded fortress. That's in the rear of the enemy troops. But the French caution against thinking of this as a relief column for Dien Bien Phu.

Vice President Nixon said in Washington today that the major aim of the Administration is to avoid "if we can" sending troops to fight in Indo-China or anywhere else in the world. Mr. Nixon said our foreign policy has warned Russia and Red China that if they march into Indo-China "they run the risk that we would retaliate directly against them." The Vice President said that this policy has "reduced almost to a minumum" the chance of a major overt aggression."

Admiral Radford, the chairman of the Joint chiefs of staff, returned to Washington to give the President an hour-long report on his recent trip to Paris and London to discuss Indo-China.

And informed diplomatic officials today informed Washington reporters that the Russians have a spearhead of 22 divisions, most of them armored, standing by in Germany. These officials say that within 30 days of the start of a Soviet attack in Europe, the Soviets and their satellites could muster 400 divisions. The Soviet bloc is now said to have more than six million men under arms - about four and a half million in ground armies. And the Russians are reported to be converting their 20-thousand planes of all types into jets as rapidly as possible.

At the army-McCarthy hearings, Army Secretary Stevens today denied that he ever threatened reprisals against the general commanding Fort Monmouth because the general, Kirke Lawton, complimented Senator McCarthy and his committee. Stevens said he knew that Major General Lawton cooperated with McCarthy because the secretary ordered him to do so. And he acknowledged that he did once consider transferring Lawton. He said he was "agitated" at the time over a speech Lawton had made to his staff officers. In that speech he is alleged to have said that soldiers from certain unidentified colleges and universities appeared to have pro-Communist tendencies. Stevens said today he had questioned Lawton's judgement as a result of this statement. The committee will go further into the matter tomorrow.

During today's hearings, Committee Counsel Jenkins asked Secretary Stevens if he knew that Private David Schine while assigned to Fort Dix, had hired another soldier to clean his rifle - failed to clean his quarters - told an officer that he, Schine, was in the army to modernize and streamline it. Stevens said he had heard some of these things - not all. And Senator McCarthy, who objected to the questions, said this was a smear of Schine, his former committee consultant. McCarthy said it was unfair - because Schine was not on hand to reply. Democratic members of the Committee suggested that McCarthy has made charges without having the accused on hand to answer them. The committee decided to ask the army to permit Schine to attend future hearings with an attorney. Secretary Stevens on the witness chair for a fifth day was accused by McCarthy of "flagrant dishonesty." He said, with some anger, that he resents any such insinuation. At another point, Senator McCarthy said high army officers in the committee room should not "dignify" Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel by sitting beside him. Hensel, one of the principals in the case, demanded an apology. Chairman Mundt said he has no power to force anyone to apologize, and among other developments: Secretary Stevens said that the McCarthy reports on his Fort Monmouth investigation "contained no significant item or derogatory information" not known to the army. Chairman Mundt lectured McCarthy for what he called speech-making by McCarthy under the guise of a point order and McCarthy charged that it was ridiculous for high-ranking army officers to attend the committee hearings "about a private who was successfully promoted until he reached the very top as a private" a reference to David Schine.

In the House today, New York Representative Coudert, a Republican, called for a ban on the use of American troops in Indo- hina, without congressional consent. But Representative Wiggleworth, Massachusetts Republican, said this would be "most inadvisable, most unwise in view of the situation that confronts us."

The President today named a West Point classmate - retired Lieutenant General Swing to be commissioner of immigration and naturalization.

Some senators told reporters today that James B. Conant, our high commissioner in Germany, had told them that if the European army plan falls through there would be no current way to re-arm western Germany. And the west German defense ministry says 140-thousand Germans who have volunteered for service in the proposed German army, will be registered for such service beginning tomorrow.

In Egypt, twelve army officers and 40 civilians have been arrested and charged with conspiring with Communists to promote May Day riots. Nine of the 12 arrested officers had recently opposed the Premier Lieutenant General Nasser.

In Geneva today, while the official conference talked about Korea, there was much behind-the-scenes discussion concerning Indochina. We asked Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, to record a summary of these activities. Here it is:

SMITH: The Geneva conference today spent its second day lending its ears to speeches about Korea but devoting its heart and mind solely to IndoChina. American Secretary of State Dulles and Red Chinese Foreign Minister Chou En-Lai restated their views on Korea, as others have done before them; but not even these, the two leading antagonists in the Far East, were able to steal real attention from the informal sideline talks about IndoChina going on privately every day between Bidault of France and Molotov of Russia. Bidault, talking for the Western nations, and Molotiv, representing the Communist-run countries, are trying to agree on which further nations to invite to the Indochina phase of this conference. Their talks were supposed to be confidential, but today Molotov broke confidence - and that has been the outstanding event of the conference so far. What happened was, Molotov's press spokesman called a special news conference this afternoon. At it he told reporters that Bidault had in the course of his meeting with Molotov today expressed a desire to arrange a short truce at Dienbien phu so that the wounded could be evacuated. Molotov, the spokesman said, expressed his interest and then suggested such a truce might be arranged if the two nations directly involved, France and the Vietminh Communist rebels, would meet here in Geneva and talk it over. This, all the Western delegations here brand as pure blackmail. Molovov has spoken over Bidault's head to the people and politicians back home in France, who are very despondent at present. The Russians have held out a vague possibility of hope for the wounded at Dienbienphu on two conditions: First, Bidault must in effect recognize the Vietminh Communist rebel government by negotiating with it exclusively here at Geneva; Second, he must in effect abandon the pro-French Indochinese Vietnam Government by agreeing to exlude it from such talks, though its troops are in Dienbienphu also. In addition, accepting Molotov's proposal would strain what unity of policy remains between France and her chief allies, who would likewise be excluded from the talks. Having agreed to negotiate this way over Dien Bien Phu, France would have no argument against going on and negotiating a cease-fire in Indochina on the same terms, throwing over the pro-French Vietnamese and in isolation from her Allies. This evening the French issued a curt little statement about it, but the French delegation cannot afford to turn down the offer out-of-hand without risking a cabinet crisis at home. So the statement issued here said France would give Molotov an answer after due consultation. This incident illustrates pretty clearly the ubique nature of this conference in Geneva. It's the first big conference since the war in which the West can fairly be said to be on its knees and within which the Communist nations clearly hold the whiphand. It is also the first big conference in which the United States has not been able to give the lead to the other Western nations but is being swept along rather helplessly by her Allies. For example, the U.S. delegation here would prefer not to go into cease-fire negotiations in Indochina on terms that we are sure will be beneficial to the Communists, but France's need for a truce is so desperate that we are being overruled by her. The American delegation would like also to undertake more active intervention in Indochina to aid the French, but on that Britain overrules America. As Churchill said yesterday, Britain insists on trying to get a truce here first. Mr. Molotov has had to wait a long time, but he has at last found one conference where he is on top. This is Howard K. Smith recording in Geneva. And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Progress at the Geneva conference is slow. And so far, not particularly encouraging. More than a quarter century ago, Will Rogers remarked: "Diplomacy was invented by a man names Webster to use up all the words in his dictionary that didn't mean anything. A diplomat tells you what he don't believe himself and the man that he is telling it to, don't believe it any more than he does. But at least it's always equal." - Good Night and Good Luck!

page 2 analysis

(1)

Thursday, April 29, 1954

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings, which began a week ago today, produced the first testimony from Private G. David Shine - the central figure in the controversey. Shine was called to the stand in connection with a picture, submitted to the Senate Sub-Committee earlier this week. At that time Senator McCarthy presented a photograph of Shine and Army Secretary Stevens posing together. The Army contended the picture had been "cropped" - that Air Force Colonel Bradley, and possibly someone else, were also in the original photograph.

Shine testified today that the three men were in the picture he handed over to McCarthy's staff member, George Anastos last Thursday. He had a copy in his New York office, brought it to Washington, at the request of the Committee, and at the time it left his possession, it had not been altered. Under ~~question~~ questioning by Committee Counsel Jenkins, Shine acknowledged, that he had attended McCarthy staff meetings in Washington, in the course of the past week. He said he wasn't sure whether Anastos was at one particular meeting in question, but was quite certain he wasn't. Shine did say however, that at this particular meeting he brought with him a photograph ~~showing~~ posed by McCarthy, General Lawton, the Commander at Fort Monmouth and others. What connection this picture has in the overall inquiry was not made known when the meeting adjourned. But there seemed to be some question at the end of the day whether the original McCarthy picture of Shine and Stevens and the Army's blowup of a picture of Shine, Stevens and Colonel Bradley came from the same negative.

In the course of the questioning of Shine, he told the committee that he had his picture taken with Stevens at the Army Secretary's request. Shine, who at the outset said he did not want counsel said he would reconsider this decision before he testifies again tomorrow. While Shine was on the stand, Senator McCarthy heatedly said that Counsel Jenkins was "badgering this Private." For his part, Shine said he had been subjected to "many pressures and orders quite unusual for a private."

At the morning session, Secretary Stevens, evidencing his first real signs of fatigue, was confronted with a statement given the committee by General Lawton, the Fort Monmouth Commander. In that statement Lawton said that Stevens' aide, John Adams had phoned early last November urging LAWTON to "dismiss certain security cases at the Army's radar research center at Monmouth. Committee Counsel Jenkins said this was a memo of vital importance to McCarthy's charges that Stevens tried to stop his investigations. Stevens said it was "entirely possible" that Lawton had been asked to withdraw some suspensions. But if this was the case it was because Stevens was afraid that people might be suspended without sufficient evidence. Stevens said he had no recollection that Adams was ever told to call Lawton about this problem.

At his news conference, President Eisenhower said he had never been consulted about the Shine case by Defense Secretary Wilson. He made reference to "this private" and said he had never heard about it. The President did say, however, that he hoped this hearing would come to a quick end and that it would not delay his legislative program.

Mr. Eisenhower also said at his news conference, that the United States will not go to war in Indo-China without a formal declaration by Congress. But he strongly opposed the amendment, sponsored by Republican Representative Coudert, which would have restricted the right of the President to send troops abroad, without congressional consent. Such an artifical restriction, he said, could not fail to damage the flexibility of action that is required. Tonight the House defeated the Coudert amendment, by a standing vote of 214 to 37.

Mr. Eisenhower said that a practical, stop-gap settlement, may be possible in Indo-China, even if a completely trustworthy peace with the Communists cannot be achieved at this time.

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov told the Geneva conference today, that the United States is pursuing an aggressive policy against Communist China, and cited as "aggressive acts" the rearming of Japan, and the establishment of military bases on Formosa and other Pacific islands. Molotov renewed the Russian argument, that China should have been invited to the conference as a big power, and supported the North Korean proposal for unifying Korea. Under that plan, the governments of North and South Korea would be combined, and all foreign troops evacuated. The general debate on Korea will close Saturday.

Reports from Paris say that Bao Dai, the Vietnamese chief of state, no longer objects to representation by the Communist Vietminh... when the Geneva conference takes up the Indo-China problem next week. This appears to increase the prospect of a truce at Dienbienphu for the evacuation of wounded.

The fighting at Dienbienphu was brought almost to a standstill today by heavy rain.

[redacted]

India and Red China today signed a trade and cultural agreement, to run for eight years.

The Reuters news agency says tonight that Great Britain has asked her Asian Commonwealth partners---India, Pakistan and Ceylon---if they would consider associating themselves in an arrangement to safeguard a peace settlement in Indo-China. We are given no details.

In Washington today, Corporal Edward Dickenson declined to testify in his own defense, and then rested his case. Dickenson is being tried by a courtmartial on charges of collaborating with the Communists while a prisoner of war in Korea.

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he still believes the over-riding issue in the November elections will be whether the Republican Administration has put through its legislative program. [redacted]

The House Armed Services Committee today trimmed 110-million dollars from a half-billion-dollar construction program requested by the Air Force.

[redacted]

And the House late today unanimously passed a 28-billion-dollar appropriations bill for the armed services, after two days of debate. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Edward R. Murrow: April 29, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Reports from Geneva indicate that the Chinese Communists have made more than a mere figurative entry into world diplomatic councils. Chinese Foreign Minister, Chou-en-Lai, considers himself qualified to discuss Korea, Indo-China and Asia in general. Alexander Kendrick cables me from ~~Vienna~~ Geneva tonight that the entire Communist bloc at Geneva appears still to be dedicated to the task of causing a rift among the Western Powers, but at the same time they are striving to get as much recognition and prestige for Communist China and the Vietminh as possible. Molotov is maneuvering to get the rebel leader in Indo-China, Ho-Chi-Minh, into these talks at Geneva. Today's acceptance by Bao Dai of the necessity for a meeting with Ho-Chi-Minh's representatives opens the way for the conference to get to work on the central question of restoring peace in Indo-China. It is obviously unpalatable for the French and the Vietnamese to deal with the Communist rebels in Indo-China, but they have apparently agreed to do so.

Kendrick says the Communist representatives in Geneva have seized upon the essentially Western device of the news conference to serve their end. It used to be one of the most difficult things in the world for a reporter to see a Russian at one of these conferences. The Chinese are supposed to be inscrutable and inaccessible, especially when they are Communist Chinese heard only over the Peking Radio. Kendrick cables from Geneva: "There's nothing inscrutable or inaccessible about these boys - you can't get away from them. They hold news conferences at the drop of a rumor, and are always the first to announce they'll be available at the end of the conference sessions." The Communist news conferences are heavily loaded with propaganda - largely devoted to denouncing other delegations - and questions are frowned upon.

The Communists at Geneva have what the Western Powers want - the possibility of a political settlement in Korea, and the possibility of a military settlement in Indo-China. There is no reason to think as of now that either possibility will become a reality. But the Communists are using those possibilities as leverage in an effort to pry the Western Alliance apart.

#

Occasionally a foreign correspondent sits down behind his typewriter in a hotel room in a foreign land, and beats out a piece that is a distillation of innumerable interviews, conversations and eye-witness observations. It is a sort of summation of the climate of opinion in which he works. Such a cable is at hand from my colleague Dave Schoenbrun. It was filed from Saigon. He says: "This capital of Vietnam - a city of

Bikini beauties and pockmarked beggars, is choking in a miasma of frustration, doubt and confusion as soggy and brain-numbing as the oppressive heat rising from the steaming streets and fetid rice paddies. There is a sense of guilt and frustration here that consumes men with an inner fire worse than the suffocating heat outside, for it is now clear that there is very little hope left for the men of Dienbienphu unless they are able to help themselves. The two chances of relief - a rescue column or the employment of American heavy bombers - are now fading away. This leaves only one bitter prospect, that General Decastries' men, fighting in that little Verdun of Vietnam, attempt a break-out. Can his men, weary and battered, outnumbered four to one, break the ring that surrounds them? Can they concentrate sufficient fire power and mobility to break out? Can they help themselves, since the outside world either cannot or will not come to their rescue?" Schoenbrun continues: "That's the guilt-filled question gnawing at men here in Indo-China tonight, while off in another world, on the banks of a beautiful lake, other men wine and dine and talk of peace. There are some who think Decastries might make it. There are some ten thousand men inside the Communist trap; at least five thousand of them are probably combat-worthy. With proper co-ordination of tactical air they might get through to an emergency landing strip from which some of the survivors might be lifted." Schoenbrun concludes: "It's only a tiny flicker of hope for five thousand brave men, but none for the thousands of wounded or unfit who would have to be left behind."

Often in times of tension...particularly in times of war...men ~~through force of circumstance~~ endure conditions they might not otherwise surmount. This, as Dave Schoenbrun points out, is the situation in Indo-China. William Channing once said:"Every human being has a work to carry on within, duties to perform, influences to exert, which no conscience but his own can teach." And, as Browning concluded:"Duty done is the soul's fireside."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings which began a week ago today produced the first testimony from Private G. David Schine - the central figure in the controversey. Schine was called to the stand in connection with a picture submitted to the Senate sub-committee earlier this week. At that time Senator McCarthy presented a photograph of Schine and Army Secretary Stevens posing together. The Army contended the picture had been "cropped" - that Air Force Colonel Bradley and possibly someone else were also in the original photograph.

Schine testified today that the three men were in the picture he handed over to McCarthy's staff member George Anastos last Thursday. He had a copy in his New York office, brought it to Washington at the request of the Committee, and at the time it left his possession it had not been altered. Under questioning by Committee Counsel Jenkins, Schine acknowledged that he had attended McCarthy staff meetings in Washington in the course of the past week. He said he wasn't sure whether Anastos was at one particular meeting in question, but was quite certain he wasn't. Schine did say however that at this particular meeting he brought with him a photograph posed by McCarthy, General Lawton, the Commander at Fort Monmouth and others. What connection this picture has in the overall inquiry was not made known when the meeting adjourned. But there seemed to be some question at the end of the day whether the original McCarthy picture of Schine and Stevens and the Army's blowup of a picture of Schine, Stevens and Colonel Bradley came from the same negative.

In the course of the questioning of Schine, he told the committee that he had his picture taken with Stevens at the Army Secretary's request. Schine, who at the outset said he did not want counsel said he would reconsider this decision before he testifies again tomorrow. While Schine was on the stand, Senator McCarthy heatedly said that Counsel Jenkins was "badgering this Private." For his part, Schine said, he had been subjected to "many pressures and orders quite unusual for a private." At the morning session, Secretary Stevens, evidencing his first real signs of fatigue, was confronted with a statement given the committee by General Lawton, the Fort Monmouth Commander. In that statement Lawton said that Steven's aide, John Adams had phoned early last November urging Lawton to "dismiss certain security cases at the Army's radar research center at Monmouth. Committee Counsel Jenkins said this was a memo of vital importance to McCarthy's charges that Stevens tried to stop his investigations. Stevens said it was "entirely possible" that Lawton had been asked to withdraw some suspensions. But if this was the case it was because Stevens was afraid that people might be suspended without sufficient evidence. Stevens said he had no recollection that Adams was ever told to call Lawton about this problem.

At his news conference, President Eisenhower said he had never been consulted about the Schine case by Defense Secretary Wilson. He made reference to "this private" and said he had never heard about it. The President did say, however, that he hoped this hearing would come to a quick end and that it would not delay his legislative program.

Mr. Eisenhower said also at this news conference that the United States will not go to war in Indo-China without a formal declaration by Congress. But he strongly opposed the amendment sponsored by Republican Representative Coudert, which would have restricted the right of the President to send troops abroad without congressional consent. Such an artificial restriction, he said, could not fail to damage the flexibility of action that is required. Tonight the House defeated the Coudert amendment by a standing vote of 214 to 37. Mr. Eisenhower said that a practical, stop-gap settlement may be possible in Indo-China, even if a completely trustworthy peace with the Communists cannot be achieved at this time.

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov told the Geneva conference today that the United States is pursuing an aggressive policy against Communist China, and cited as "aggressive acts" the rearming of Japan and the establishment of military bases on Formosa and other Pacific islands. Molotov renewed the Russian argument that China should have been invited to the conference as a big power, and supported the North Korean proposal for unifying Korea. Under that plan, the governments of North and South Korea would be combined, and all foreign troops evacuated. The general debate on Korea will close Saturday.

Reports from Paris say that Bao Dai, the Vietnamese chief of state, no longer objects to representation by the Communist Vietminh when the Geneva conference takes up the Indo-China problem next week. This appears to increase the prospect of a truce at Dienbienphu for the evacuation of the wounded. The fighting at Dienbienphu was brought almost to a standstill today by heavy rain.

India and Red China today signed a trade and cultrual agreement to run for eight years.

The Reuters news agency says tonight that Great Britain has asked her Asian Commonwealth partners, India, Pakistan and Ceylon, if they would consider associating themselves in an arrangement to safeguard a peace settlement in Indo-China. We are given no details.

In Washington today, Corporal Edward Dickenson declined to testify in his own defense, and then rested his case. Dickenson is being tried by a courtmartial on charges of collaborating with the Communists while a prisoner of war in Korea.

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he still believes the over-riding issue in the November elections will be whether the Republican Administration has put through its legislative program.

The House Armed Services Committee today trimmed 110-million dollars from a half-billion-dollar construction program requested by the Air Force.

And the House late today unanimously passed a 28-billion-dollar appropriations bill for the armed services, after two days of debate. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Reports from Geneva indicate that the Chinese Communists have made more than a mere figurative entry into world diplomatic counsils. Chinese Foreign Minister, Chou-en-Lai, considers himself qualified to discuss Korea, Indo-China and Asia in general. Alexander Kendrick cables me from Geneva tonight that the entire Communist bloc at Geneva appears still to be dedicated to the task of causing a rigt among the Western Powers, but at the same time they are striving to get as much recognition and prestige for Communist China and the Vietminh as possible. Molotov is maneuvering to get the rebel leader in Indo-China, Ho-Chi-Minh, into these talks at Geneva. Today's acceptance by Bao Dai of the necessity for a meeting with Ho-Chi-Minh's representatives opens the way for the conference to get to work on the central question of restoring peace in Indo-China. It is obviously unpalatable for the French and the Vietnamese to deal with the Communist rebels in Indo-China, but they have apparently agreed to do so.

Kendrick says the Communist representatives in Geneva have seized upon the essentially Western device of the news conference to serve their end. It used to be one of the most difficult things in the world for a reporter to see a Russian at one of these conferences. The Chinese are supposed to be inscrutable and inaccessible, especially when they are Communist Chinese heard only over the Peking Radio. Kendrick cables from Geneva: "There's nothing inscrutable or inaccessible about these boys - you can't get away from them. They hold news conferences at the drop of a rumor, and are always the first to announce they'll be available at the end of the conference sessions." The Communist news conferences are heavily loaded with propaganda - largely devoted to denouncing other delegations - and questions are frowned upon. The Communists at Geneva have what the Western Powers want - the possibility of a political settlement in Korea, and the possibility of a military settlement in Indo-China. There is no reason to think as of now that either possibility will become a reality. But the Communists are using those possibilities as leverage in an effort to pry the Western Alliance apart.

Occasionally a foreign correspondent sits down behind his typewriter in a hotel room in a foreign land, and beats out a piece that is a distillation of innumerable interviews, conversations and eye-witness observations. It is a sort of summation of the climate of opinion in which he works. Such a cable is at hand from my colleague Dave Schoenbrun. It was filed from Saigon. He says: "This capital of Vietnam - a city of Bikini beauties and pockmarked beggars, is choking in a miasma of frustration, doubt and confusion as soggy and brain-numbing as the oppressive heat rising from the steaming streets and fetid rice paddies. There is a sense of guilt and frustration here that consumes men with an inner fire worse than the suffocating heat outside, for it is now clear that there is very little hope left for the men of Dien Bien Phu unless they are able to help themselves. The two chances of relief - a rescue column or the employment of American heavy bombers - are now fading away. This leaves only one bitter prospect, that General Decastries' men, fighting in that little Verdun of Vietnam, attempt a break-out. Can his men, weary and battered, outnumbered four to one, break the ring that surrounds them? Can they concentrate sufficient fire power and mobility to break out? Can they help themselves, since the outside world either cannot or will not, come to their rescue?" Schoenbrun continues: "That's the guilt-filled question gnawing at men here in Indo-China tonight, while off in another world, on the banks of a beautiful lake, other men wine and dine and talk of peace. There are some who think Decastries might make it. There are some ten thousand men inside the Communist trap; at least five thousand of them are probably combat-worthy. With proper coordination of tactical air they might get through to an emergency landing strip from which some of the survivors might be lifted." Schoenbrun concludes: "It's only a tiny flicker of hope for five thousand brave men, but none for the thousands of wounded or unfit who would have to be left behind."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Often in times of tension particularly in times of war, men endure conditions they might not otherwise surmount. This, as Dave Schoenbrun points out, is the situation in Indo-China. William Channing once said: "Every human being has a work to carry on within, duties to perform, influences to exert which no conscience but his own can teach." And, as Browning concluded: "Duty done is the soul's fireside."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, April 30, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings have recessed for the weekend. Before they did a McCarthy aide - James Juliana - said he was responsible for eliminating a third person from the controversial picture of Private Shine and Army Secretary Stevens. Juliana said there was no intent to "deceive or trick." And then Stevens, called back to the stand, acknowledged that when he was thinking of replacing Fort Monmouth Commander General Lawton, he did try to find out what Senator McCarthy's reaction would be. These were the highlights of the testimony.

But there were other significant developments during the day. The White House, through Press Secretary Hagerty, said there was no truth to reports that the President or anyone associated with him, is trying to bring the hearings to a quick end. (Mr. Eisenhower said yesterday he hoped this would be the case.) ~~One source for these rumors may have been Mr. Stevens luncheon today with the President and Defense Department officials. But this was said to have been in connection with a ceremony honoring the retiring Deputy Secretary, Roger Kyes.~~

Also, Senator Mc Carthy made known that he will make "every effort" to resume his place and voting rights on the investigating subcommittee

unless as he put it "the ground rules are followed" and the army's "stalling tactics" are stopped. He referred particularly to his efforts to bring Secretary Stevens back to the stand. When Stevens appeared, the Senator said he was satisfied.

McCarthy FURTHER said he was not only "willing but anxious" to testify himself. (Army counsel Welch had suggested that McCarthy be called after Stevens.) But the Committee has decided that the next witness is to be Stevens' aide, John Adams.

As for the hearing itself, James Juliana - an investigator for the McCarthy Committee - said that he was given a photograph by Private Shine showing Shine, Stevens and a third person - Colonel Bradley. He said he enlarged this picture and a "cropped" version showing Shine and Stevens alone. He said he delivered the "cropped" version to the Committee because he understood McCarthy's counsel Roy Cohn and/or Committee Counsel Jenkins to have requested just that photograph. Juliana said he acted "without any malicious intention."

When Secretary Stevens returned to testify, he said he told his aide John Adams last November to "inform" McCarthy that he - Stevens - was thinking of relieving General Lawton at Fort Monmouth. And that he wanted to know what "McCarthy's reaction would be." Stevens said he was disturbed by remarks Lawton had made, about political tendencies of students at a certain university. He denied that he threatened "reprisals" against Lawton because he had "cooperated with the Mc Carthy Committee. Stevens said he sought McCarthy's reaction, because of his desire to "cooperate with the Senator. He reported that the word that came back to him was "the Senator would not be pleased if General Lawton was relieved."

In one other sidelight to the day's hearing, McCarthy said that he originally planned to suggest Senator Butler of Maryland, to take his place on the Committee, instead of Senator Dworshak. Butler wasn't well at the time. But, added McCarthy,"I wish he had been."

The Geneva conference today wound up its first week, with no sessions scheduled until Monday. Today's session lasted only 40 minutes. Two brief speeches by the [redacted] representatives of Turkey and Thailand, supporting the Western position with regard to Korea, took up the entire time.

Secretary of State Dulles is leaving Geneva on Monday. And Under-secretary of State, Walter Bedell Smith, will take Dulles' place.

In Indo-China, the French today sent up all available planes in a massive air strike against the Communist bases ringing Dienbienphu.

Prime Minister Churchill told a Conservative Party gathering today that ties should be established with Russia, which would convince the Soviets the British people wish them peace and prosperity. Churchill said he longed to see the Russians "play a proud and important part in the guidance of the human race."

Great Britain today lifted its restrictions on rubber shipments to Russia, effective Monday.

A strong earthquake hit Central Greece today, killing at least 150 persons. Twenty-five thousand persons are reported homeless. The Athens Observatory says the earthquake was of "catastrophic intensity". V[redacted]

In Washington today, the leaders of three big labor unions agreed to cooperate to solve their mutual political and economic problems. The informal agreement was reached by John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, Dave McDonald, head of the CIO United Steelworkers, and Dave Beck, head of the AFL Teamsters Union. Lewis announced they would work for a program of Federal spending to combat unemployment.

In a Washington court today, union leader Ben Gold was sentenced to one to three years in prison for denying, falsely, that he belonged to the Communist Party.

Federal Housing Administrator Albert Cole today announced the suspension of two housing officials in Philadelphia. Cole said they failed to reply, under oath, to a questionnaire concerning "the acceptance of gratuities" from persons with whom they did business. The two officials were identified as: John P. McGrath, chief appraiser for the housing administration in Philadelphia, and Wilmer Russell, an FHA inspector.

→

Showers are predicted for the Kentucky Derby tomorrow, but a Churchill Downs official predicts the track will be fast. CBS [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: April 30, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

A number of developments about Asian countries in the news seem to be disconnected, but if they are seen together they throw considerable light on what is at stake in Geneva and in world capitals at this time. One is the new non-aggression pact between India and Communist China in which, among other things, India acknowledges the supremacy of Red China in this vast territory on her border. Another is the refusal of Prime Minister Nehru, at the Colombo conference of Asian prime ministers, to link communism with colonialism, as a danger to the democracies of Asia. Another is the completion of the agreement between France and Vietnam by which Vietnam has won unlimited sovereignty and full equality with France, in the French Union. Another is the growing recognition that the free states of Indo-China have to be supported by the other Asian democracies if Southeast Asia is to be effectively secure against Communist conquest.

The non-aggression pact between India and Red China over Tibet dramatically revealed and registered one of India's deepest concerns. Returning visitors from India have reported for some time that the Indian government, for all its publicly cultivated friendship with Red China, has quietly spent more effort on safeguarding the Tibetan frontier region than on any military project save only the fighting in Kashmir. India was invaded in the last war by the Japanese conquerors through Burma. It can be invaded by the Communists through Tibet.

When Mr. Nehru utters lofty sentiments about peace and the advisability of recognizing Red China, he is not being just a political philosopher. He is promoting India's national interests. He desperately wants to stay on good terms with the expanding regime, now established on his border. It is the regime that can hurt India more easily, and more seriously than any other. When Mr. Nehru refused passage over India of American planes carrying reinforcements to the French in Indo-China, he was winning favor from Peiping. When in Colombo yesterday, he vigorously opposed a resolution linking communism with colonialism, as the great dangers to democracy in Asia, he was again winning good will from the Chinese communists. That is not the same as saying that Mr. Nehru is pro-communist. He has fought communism inside India with drastic, even ruthless, measures. But communism at the Himalayan frontier is something else. The Communists are building motor roads in Tibet, and while an invasion of India through that primitive country would meet great difficulties, Mr. Nehru seems to have yielded to the persuasion of believing, that the safest course for India, is not to link arms with the other democracies, but to play good neighbor to Red China for as long as it works. India needs a long spell of tranquility, if it is going to lift itself up economically by its bootstraps. And that is one reason Mr. Nehru is so intent on warding off the very possibility of war spreading in Asia. Any scheme that associates the Asian democracies with the security of the states of Indo-China, should include the pledge of collective action, in other words, the possibility of war.

That statement points up the big issue in regard to Indo-China at this time. A personal appeal has just been made by Foreign Secretary Eden of Great Britain, to the Commonwealth governments of India, Ceylon and Pakistan to associate themselves with any plan at Geneva to end the Indo-Chinese conflict. He was not explicit as to when, and how, this support was to be given, but he did say there might be the need for a guarantee. And that is the heart of the problem. If Vietnam is to live to enjoy the full freedom, which it now has been granted, a guarantee of more than the United States, Britain and France would be desirable, and perhaps essential. Secretary Dulles has proposed a 10-nation security pact including the three Western powers, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and the three Indo-Chinese states. ~~XXXX~~ Mr. Eden now is trying to broaden the range of the guarantee to bring in the three Asian members of the British Commonwealth.

At Colombo yesterday, Indonesia joined India in opposing a resolution naming communism as a danger to Asian democracy. This is ascribed to the re-appearance of communism in Indonesia as a rising domestic force. So Mr. Nehru's concern over his neighbor in Tibet may combine with this resurgent communist movement in Indonesia to hinder the building of an organization extensive enough to make Southeast Asia secure simply by a show of collective determination.

Once again, the Kentucky Derby is with us. And while we are not in the habit of making predictions, we can find no reason not to agree with Emerson: "Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." There's a line from the Old Testament that would also seem appropriate tonight: "Hast thou given the horse strength ? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder ?" If not, it's probably too late now!

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings have recessed for the weekend. Before they did a McCarthy aide - James Juliana - said he was responsible for eliminating a third person from the controversial picture of Private Schine and Army Secretary Stevens. Juliana said there was no intent to "deceive or trick." And then Stevens, called back to the stand, acknowledged that when he was thinking of replacing Fort Monmouth Commander General Lawton, he did try to find out what Senator McCarthy's reaction would be. These were the highlights of the testimony.

But there were other significant developments during the day. The White House, through Press Secretary Hagerty, said there was no truth to reports that the President or anyone associated with him, is trying to bring the hearings to a quick end. Mr. Eisenhower said yesterday he hoped this would be the case.

Also, Senator McCarthy made known that he will make "every effort" to resume his place and voting rights on the investigating subcommittee unless as he put it "the ground rules are followed" and the army's "stalling tactics" are stopped. He referred particularly to his efforts to bring Secretary Stevens back to the stand. When Stevens appeared, the Senator said he was satisfied.

McCarthy further said he was not only "willing but anxious" to testify himself. Army Counsel Welch had suggested that McCarthy be called after Stevens. But the Committee has decided that the next witness is to be Stevens' aide, John Adams.

As for the hearing itself, James Juliana - an investigator for the McCarthy Committee - said that he was given a photograph by Private Schine showing Schine, Stevens and a third person - Colonel Bradley. He said he enlarged this picture and a "cropped" version showing Schine and Stevens alone. He said he delivered the "cropped" version showing Schine and Stevens alone. He said he delivered the "cropped" version to the Committee because he understood McCarthy's counsel Roy Cohn and/or Committee Counsel Jenkins to have requested just that photograph.

Juliana said he acted "without any malicious intention." When Secretary Stevens returned to testify, he said he told his aide, John Adams, last November to "inform" McCarthy that he - Stevens - was thinking of relieving General Lawton at Fort Monmouth. And that he wanted to know what "McCarthy's reaction would be." Stevens said he was disturbed by remarks Lawton had made about political tendencies of students at a certain university. He denied that he threatened "reprisals" against Lawton because he had "cooperated with the McCarthy committee. Stevens said he sought McCarthy's reaction because of his desire to "cooperate with the Senator. He reported that the word that came back to him was "the Senator would not be pleased if General Lawton was relieved."

In one other sidelight to the day's hearing, McCarthy said that he originally planned to suggest Senator Butler of Maryland to take his place on the Committee, instead of Senator Dworshak. Butler wasn't well at the time. But, added McCarthy, "I wish he had been."

The Geneva conference today wound up its first week, with no sessions scheduled until Monday. Today's session lasted only 40 minutes. Two brief speeches by the representatives of Turkey and Thailand, supporting the Western position with regard to Korea, took up the entire time.

Secretary os State Dulles is leaving Geneva on Monday. And Under-secretary of State, Walter Bedell Smith, will take Dulles' place.

In Indo-China, the French today sent up all available planes in a massive air strike against the Communist bases ringing Dienbienphu.

Prime Minister Churchill told a Conservative Party gathering today that ties should be established with Russia, which would convince the Soviets the British people wish them peace and prosperity. Churchill said he longed to see the Russians "play a proud and important part in the guidance of the human race."

Great Britain today lifted its restrictions on rubber shipments to Russia, effective Monday.

A strong earthquake hit Central Greece today, killing at least 150 persons.

Twenty-five thousand persons are reported homeless. The Athens Observatory says the earthquake was of "catastrophic intensity."

In Washington today, the leaders of three big labor unions agreed to cooperate to solve their mutual political and economic problems. The informal agreement was reached by John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, Dave McDonald, head of the CIO United Steelworkers, and Dave Beck, head of the AFL Teamsters Union. Lewis announced they would work for a program of Federal spending to combat unemployment.

In a Washington court today, union leader Ben Gold was sentenced to one to three years in prison for denying, flasely, that he belonged to the Communist Party.

Federal Housing Administrator Albert Cole today announced the suspension of two housing officials in Philadelphia. Cole said they failed to reply, under oath, to a questionnaire concerning "the acceptance of gratuities" from persons with whom they did business. The two officials were identified as: John P. McGrath, chief appraiser for the housing administration in Philadelphia, and Wilmer Russell, an FHA inspector.

Showers are predicted for the Kentucky Derby tomorrow, but a Churchill Downs official predicts the track will be fast.

A Number of developments about Asian countries in the news seem to be disconnected, but if they are seen together they throw considerable light on what is at stake in Geneva and in world capitals at this time. One is the new non-aggression pact between India and Communist China in which, among other things, India acknowledge the supremacy of Red China in this vast territory on her border. Another is the refusal of Prime Minister Nehru, at the Colombo conference of Asian prime ministers, to link communism with colonialism, as a danger to the democracies of Asia. Another is the completion of the agreement between France and Vietnam by which Vietnam has won unlimited sovereignty and full equality with France, in the French Union. Another is the growing recognition that the free states of Indo-China have to be supported by the other Asian democracies if Southeast Asia is to be effectively secure against Communist conquest.

The non-aggression pact between India and Red China over Tibet dramatically revealed and registered one of India's deepest concerns. Returning visitors from India have reported for some time that the Indian government, for all its publicly cultivated friendship with Red China, has quietly spent more effort on safeguarding the Tibetan frontier region than on any military project save only the fighting in Kashmir. India was invaded in the last war by the Japanese conquerors through Burma. It can be invaded by the Communists through Tibet. When Mr. Nehru utters lofty sentiments about peace and the advisability of recognizing Red China, he is not being just a political philosopher. He is promoting India's national interests. He desperately wants to stay on good terms with the expanding regime now established on his border. It is the regime that can hurt India more easily and more seriously than any other. When Mr. Nehru refused passage over India of American planes carrying reinforcements to the French in Indo-China, he was winning favor from Peiping. When in Colombo yesterday he vigorously opposed a resolution linking communims with colonialims, as the great dangers to democracy in Aisa, he was again winning good will from the Chinese communists. That is not the same as saying that Mr. Nehru is pro-communist. He has fought communism inside India with drastic, even ruthless, measures. But communism at the Himalayan frontier is something else. The Communists are building motor roads in Tibet, and while an invasion of India through that primitive country would meet great difficulties, Mr. Nehru seems to have yielded to the persuasion of believing that the safest course for India is not to link arms with the other democracies, but to play good neighbor to Red China for as long as it works. India needs a long spell of tranquility if it is going to life itself up economically by its bootstraps. And that is one reason Mr. Nehru is so intent on warding off the very possibility of war spreading in Asia. Any scheme that associates the Asian democracies with the security of the states of Indo-China should include the pledge of collective action, in other words, the possibility of war. That statement points up the big issue in regard to Indo-China at this time. A personal appeal has just been made by Foreign Secretary Eden of Great Britain to the Commonwealth governments of India, Ceylon and Pakistan to associate themselves with any plan at Geneva to end the Indo-Chinese conflict. He was not explicit as to when and how this support was to be given, but He did say there might be the need for a guarantee. And that is the heart of the problem. If Vietnam is to live to enjoy the full freedom which it now has been granted, a guarantee of more than the United States, Britain and France would be desirable and perhaps essential. Secretary Dulles has proposed a 10-nation security pact including the three Western powers, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and the three Indo-Chinese states. Mr. Eden now is trying to broaden the range of the guarantee to bring in the three Asian members of the British Commonwealth.

At Colombo yesterday, Indonesia joined India in opposing a resolution naming communism as a danger to Asian democracy. This is ascribed to the re-appearance of communism in Indonesia as a rising domestic force. So Mr. Nehru's concern over his neighbor in Tibet may combine with this resurgent communist movement in Indonesia to hinder the building of an organization extensive enough to make Southeast Asia secure simply by a show of collective determination.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Once again the Kentucky Derby is with us. And while we are not in the habit of making predictions, we can find no reason not to agree with Emerson: "Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." There's a line from the Old Testament that would also seem appropriate tonight: "Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" If not, it's probably too late now!

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, May 3 1954

This is the news:

The Communists have started to broadcast "surrender or die" warnings, to the [redacted] garrison at Dien Bien Phu. The French High Command quickly announced that it intends to (parachute) [redacted] more reinforcements into the garrison at night. And the Communists have started a new move...rushing more troops up to their front, in long columns of trucks at night. The enemy reinforcements were noted traveling with headlights ON ~~gleaming~~, after the rebel high command called off an attack, that had won three French strongpoints, and part of a fourth. There is no indication what inspired this enemy decision... unless it was the need to regroup, after heavy losses.

The possibility of an open discussion, on ending the Indo-China war, appears nearer at Geneva. The French there say, the Russians have agreed to invite the rebel Vietminh to send representatives there...the Chinese Communists will counter-sign the invitation. And the Russians make it clear it will be accepted. The western powers will invite representatives of the three independent states in Indo-China: [redacted] Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. It's possible that this meeting will start in a few days.

But the chances of reaching any final agreement on Korea now, seem remote. Today, Communist China's Premier, Chou en Lai, accused the United States of "forcibly detaining" 48-thousand North Korean and Chinese war prisoners in Korea. This was a reference to the 27-thousand men set free by the South Koreans and the 21-thousand released by the Neutral Repatriation Commission. Chou en Lai in his speech accused the South Koreans of "slanderous ravings" at the wishes of United States "masters." He wants a seven-nation commission to decide the fate of the 48-thousand prisoners.

[redacted]

An American spokesman says of this plan: "it is not worth considering."

And the South Korean foreign minister TOLD the Geneva conference THAT the United States is the main obstacle in front of the Communists on their way to the conquest of all Asia.

Secretary of State Dulles left for home today...leaving UNDER-SECRETARY of State Bedell Smith to carry on.

In Washington, at the McCarthy- Army hearing Senator McCarthy charged that last October the army wanted him to call off his investigation of alleged subversives at Fort Monmouth. He offered an army press release..that was never given to the press..to make the point. But Army Counsel John G. Adams, taking the stand for the first time, said this press release showed that the Army intended to have the McCarthy hearings continued. In another area of today's testimony, Army Secretary Stevens said his aides had called on various [redacted] committee members to try to get their aid in blocking McCarthy's effort to subpena members of the Pentagon's Loyalty Review Board. Stevens said presidential directives forbid calling such board members. But Senator McCarthy said it was necessary to try to find out just who approved the reinstatement of a number of Fort Monmouth workers who had been suspended on [redacted] security grounds.

McCarthy said he had repeatedly tried to find out who was [redacted] responsible for the promotion and honorable discharge of Major Irving Peress. [redacted] Stevens said he has not yet had a report on this from the Inspector General of the army.

At one point McCarthy charged that some officials are "covering up" Communists or those who shield them. Stevens replied: "I'm not covering up anybody at anytime."

The Senate investigators held a special meeting today to try to [redacted] to find a way to speed up the hearings. And Senator Dirksen of Illinois says "serious consideration" is being given to a plan suggested by Army [redacted] Counsel Welch. He wants further testimony limited to Secretary Stevens and [redacted] Senator McCarthy. [redacted]

[redacted]

Senate Republican Leader Knowland and House Speaker Martin said after a White House conference today that Congress "will have an excellent batting average" on approving the President's program.. by adjournment time.

[redacted]

Bernard Baruch, author of one of our first plans for atomic control by international inspection, said today that the President's atomic proposal will not solve the basic problem of security. Baruch told a City College of New York audience that Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for a world atomic pool might expand the peaceful uses of atomic energy. But, he said: "The dangers of atomic attack would not be lessened. The atomic arms race would not slacken." Baruch says that if there is to be peace, Russia and the United States must reach a general disarmament agreement on all weapons.

Pulitzer Prize judges today selected Charles A. Lindbergh's Book, "The Spirit of St. Louis" for its biography award. The drama award went to "Teahouse of the August Moon." The judges selected for the history prize, Bruce Catton's "A Stillness at Appomatox." Two newspapers were honored: Newsday, published at Garden City, New York...and the Vicksburgh Sunday Post-Herald. Indiviual reporters honored included: Richard Wilson of the Cowles newspapers...Jim Lucas of Scripps-Howard.. and Don Murray of the Boston Herald. Herbert L. Block of the Washington Post and Times-Herald, received the cartoon award. There was no award for fiction.

Edward R. Murrow: May 3, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary of State Dulles left Geneva today and flew to Milan, where he had a brief talk with Italian Premier Mario Scelba. The communique issued after this meeting, as usual, tells nothing of what was talked about.

It would not be fair to say that Mr. Dulles left Geneva as a defeated diplomat. He was defeated before the meetings began. He made his bid for collective action to save Indo-China; our European allies wouldn't go along; so the threat of united action collapsed. # There is no prospect of a political solution in Korea - Mr. Dulles could not negotiate from a position of strength on the other subject that concerns the conference, namely Indo-China, so he is coming home, leaving General Bedell Smith, the Under-Secretary of State, in charge of the American Delegation. # Before leaving Geneva Mr. Dulles said he had told the other participants, earlier, that he would only be able to remain during the first days of the conference. He hoped the Communists would not insist on rejecting the United Nations' supervision of Korean elections, and the principle of proportionate representation. They have already done so. # Referring to Indo-China Mr. Dulles said: "This is an area where the principle of collective security should be applied, as it has been applied successfully in other areas of the world, notably Western Europe." And he added: "I shall continue to seek to promote that result. I believe that peace in Indo-China will be more readily obtained if it can be fitted into a framework of collective security."

Mr. Dulles tried, before the conference in Geneva, to face the Communists with the threat and promise of collective action, to prevent the domination of Indo-China by the expansive forces of communism, and he failed. Our European allies wanted to exhaust all possibilities at Geneva, before agreeing with us that collective action is the only way of saving Indo-China.

At Geneva the Western Powers and the Communists have agreed that nine parties should sit down and argue about a solution in Indo-China. They are France, Britain, the United States, Russia, Communist China, the three associated Indo-Chinese states of Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and the Communist Vietminh rebels. So far the conference does not have before it any concrete proposals for stopping the war in Indo-China. Both the French and the Communists appear to be agreed that partition of Indo-China, such as occurred in Korea, would not be acceptable. The Communists are believed to favor some sort of coalition government to run the entire country; but the French and the Vietnam are bound to oppose this on the grounds that the Communists will eventually seize control of the whole country, as they did in Czechoslovakia.

In this case American policy was frustrated, not at Geneva but before the conference began. We are now in the position of holding a watching brief at Geneva, while our Allies try to hammer out some compromise with the Communists. The Communist powers, China and Russia, may be said to be playing both ends against the middle, and in the middle is France. The stakes are not merely a compromise truce or peace in Indo-China; they involve also the very keystone of our grand purpose in Western Europe, namely the creation of a European Army. There exists not only the possibility of a revival of isolationism in this country, there is also the possibility that we may be isolated.

The stature of Mr. Dulles in Europe, in the Foreign Offices and amongst reporters, is very considerable. It was generally agreed that he handled himself at the Berlin Conference with ~~very considerable~~ great skill. There he had, in terms of power, the support of the British and French. At Geneva he had only the power that attaches to the military, economic and diplomatic strength of this country. We were not prepared to go it alone in terms of direct, singlehanded military intervention, in order to save Indo-China from coming under Communist domination. Now we must wait and watch to see what sort of deal, if any, our European Allies can work out with the forces of Communism. There can be no doubt that the Western Alliance has been shaken. Likewise there can be no doubt that Mr. Dulles will be subjected to conflicting advice when he gets home. But it is the nature of all alliances of free peoples that they should be fragile and shakeable. # If Dienbienphu falls it will not mean the loss of Indo-China. If our allies are disappointed or disillusioned with the results, or lack of them, achieved at Geneva, the possibility of collective action may again become a reality. Our failure to achieve that action now does not preclude the possibility of it happening in the future.

The problems of international diplomacy are many. To resolve them requires both time and patience. And what Samuel Smiles once said seems worth repeating tonight:"We learn wisdom from failure much more than from success. We often discover what will do by finding out what will not do. And probably he who never made a mistake never made a discovery."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 3, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists have started to broadcast "surrender or die" warnings to the garrison at Dien Bien Phu. The French High Command quickly announced that it intends to parachute more reinforcements into the garrison at night. And the Communists have started a new move rushing more troops up to their front in long columns of trucks at night. The enemy reinforcements were noted traveling with headlights on after the rebel high command called off an attack that had won three French strongpoints and part of a fourth. There is no indication what inspired this enemy decision unless it was the need to regroup after heavy losses.

The possibility of an open discussion on ending the Indo-China war appears nearer at Geneva. The French there say the Russians have agreed to invite the rebel Vietminh to send representatives there - the Chinese Communists will countersign the invitation. And the Russians make it clear it will be accepted. The western powers will invite representatives of the three independent states in Indo-China: Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. It's possible that this meeting will start in a few days.

But the chances of reaching any final agreement on Korea now seem remote. Today, Communist China's Premier, Chou en Lai, accused the United States of "forcibly detaining" 48-thousand North Korean and Chinese war prisoners in Korea. This was a reference to the 27-thousand men set free by the South Koreans and the 21-thousand released by the neutral repatriation commission. Chou en Lai in his speech accused the South Koreans of "slanderous ravings" at the wishes of United States "masters." He wants a seven-nation commission to decide the fate of the 48-thousand prisoners. An American spokesman says of this plan: "It is not worth considering." And the South Korean foreign minister told the Geneva Conference that the United States is the main obstacle in front of the Communists on their way to the conquest of all Asia.

Secretary of State Dulles left for home today leaving under-secretary of State Bedell Smith to carry on.

In Washington, at the McCarthy-Army hearing Senator McCarthy charged that last October the army wanted him to call off his investigation of alleged subversives at Fort Monmouth. He offered an army press release that was never given to the press to make the point. But Army Counsel John G. Adams, taking the stand for the first time, said this press release showed that the Army intended to have the McCarthy hearings continued. In another area of today's testimony, Army Secretary Stevens said his aides had called on various committee members to try to get their aid in blocking McCarthy's effort to subpoena members of the Pentagon's Loyalty Review Board. Stevens said presidential directives forbid calling such board members. But Senator McCarthy said it was necessary to try to find out just who approved the reinstatement of a number of Fort Monmouth workers who had been suspended on security grounds. McCarthy said he had repeatedly tried to find out who was responsible for the promotion and honorable discharge of Major Irving Peress. Stevens said he has not yet had a report on this from the Inspector General of the Army. At one point McCarthy charged that some officials are "covering up" Communists or those who shield them. Stevens replied: "I'm not covering up anybody at anytime."

The Senate investigators held a special meeting today to try to find a way to speed up the hearings. And Senator Dirksen of Illinois says "serious consideration" is being given to a plan suggested by Army Counsel Welch. He wants further testimony limited to Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland and House Speaker Martin said after a White House conference today that Congress "will have an excellent batting average" on approving the President's program by adjournment time.

Bernard Baruch, author of one of our first plans for atomic control by international inspection, said today that the President's atomic proposal will not solve the basic problem of security. Baruch told a City College of New York audience that Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for a world atomic pool might expand the peaceful uses of atomic energy. But, he said: "The dangers of atomic attack would not be lessened. The atomic arms race would not slacken." Baruch says that if there is to be peace Russia and the United States must reach a general disarmament agreement on all weapons.

Pulitzer Prize judges today selected Charles A. Lindbergh's book, "The Spirit of St. Louis" for its biography award. The drama award went to "Teahouse of the August Moon." The judges selected for the history prize, Bruce Catton's "A Stillness at Appomatox." Two newspapers were honored: Newsday, published at Garden City, New York and the Vickesburgh Sunday Post-Herald. Individual reporters honored included: Richard Wilson of the Cowles newspapers, Jim Lucas of Scripps-Howard and Don Murray of the Boston Herald. Herbert L. Block of the Washington Post and Times-Herald received the cartoon award. There was no award for fiction.

Secretary of State Dulles left Geneva today and flew to Milan, where he had a brief talk with Italian Premier Mario Scelba. The communique issued after t is meeting, as usual, tells nothing of what was talked about. It would not be fair to say that Mr. Dulles left Geneva as a defeated diplomat. He was defeated before the meetings began. He made his bid for collective action to save Indo-China; our European allies wouldn't go along; so the threat of united action collapsed. There is no prospect of a political solution in Korea - Mr. Dulles could not negotiate from a position of strength on the other subject that concerns the conference, namely Indo-China, os he is coming home, leaving General Bedell Smith, the Under-Secretary of State, in charge of the American Delegation. Before leaving Geneva Mr. Dulles said he had told the other participants, earlier, that he would only be able to remain during the first days of the conference. He hoped the Communists would not insist on rejecting the United Nations' supervision of Korean elections, and the principle of proportionate repreaentation. They have already done so. Referring to Indo-China Mr. Dulles said: "This is an area where the principle of collective security should be applied as it has been applied successfully in other areas of the world, notably Western Europe." And he added: "I shall continue to seek to promote that result. I believe that peace in Indo-China will be more readily obtained if it can be fitted into a framework of collective security." Mr. Dulles tried, before the conference in Geneva, to face the Communists with the threat and promise of collective action, to prevent the domination of Indo-China by the expansive forces of communism, and he failed. Our European allies wanted to exhaust all possibilities at Geneva, before agreeing with us that collective action is the only way of saving Indo-China. At Geneva the Western Powers and the Communists have agreed that nine parties should sit down and argue about a solution in Indo-China. They are France, Britain, the United States, Russia, Communist China, the three associated Indo-Chinese states of Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and the Communist Vietminh rebels. So far the conference does not have before it any concrete proposals for stopping the war in Indo-China. Both the French and the Communists appear to be agreed that partition of Indo-China, such as occurred in Korea, would not be acceptable. The Communists are believed to favor some sort of coalition government to run the entire country; but the French and the Vietnam are bound to oppose this on the grounds that the Communists will eventually seize control of the whole country, as they did in Czechoslovakia.

In this case American policy was frustrated, not at Geneva but before the conference began. We are now in the position of holding a watching brief at Geneva, while our Allies try to hammer out some compromise with the Communists. The Communist powers, China and Russia, may be said to be playing both ends against the middle, and in the middle is France. The stakes are not merely a compromise truce or peace in Indo-China; they involve also the very keystone of our grand purpose in Western Europe, namely the creation of a European Army. There exists not only the possibility of a revival of isolationism in this country, there is also the possibility that we may be isolated. The stature of Mr. Dulles in Europe, in the Foreign Offices and amongst reporters, is very considerable. It was generally agreed that he handled himself at the Berlin Conference with great skill. There he had, in terms of power, the support of the British and French. At Geneva he had only the power that attaches to the military, economic and diplomatic strength of this country. We were not prepared to go it alone in terms of direct, singlehanded military intervention, in order to save Indo-China from coming under Communist domination. Now we must wait and watch to see what sort of deal, if any, our European Allies can work out with the forces of Communism. There can be no doubt that the Wester Alliance has been shaken. Likewise there can be no doubt that Mr. Dulles will be subjected to conflicting advice when he gets home. But it is the nature of all alliances of free peoples that they should be fragile and shakeable. If Dienbienph falls it will not mean the loss of Indo-China. If our allies are disappointed or disillusioned with the results, or lack of them, achieved at Geneva, the possibility of collective action may again become a reality. Our failure to achieve that action now does not preclude the possibility of it happening in the future.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problems of international diplomacy are many. To resolve them requires both time and patience. And what Samuel Smiles once said seems worth repeating tonight: "We learn wisdom from failure much more than from success. We often discover what will do by finding out what will not do. And probably he who never made a mistake never made a discovery."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, May 4, 1954

This is the news:

The Communists have captured another French strongpoint at Dien Bien Phu. The battle ended after more than 12 hours of bitter fighting, much of it hand-to-hand. The French then counter-attacked, in an effort to recapture the western point. But they could make no headway AND the attack was called off. The French have lost four strongpoints, and part of a fifth, since Saturday night. Tonight, from somewhere off the coast of North Indo-China, my colleague David Schoenbrun cables that tomorrow morning navy dive bombers from the former American carrier Belleau Wood will take off to aid the ground troops at Dien Bien Phu. The carrier now flies the French flag. We turned the ship over to them last September.

In Washington today, Republican Senator Flanders called on the President and then told reporters: Mr. Eisenhower does not favor any American military operations in Indo-China unless we have "the support of the people of that region." Flanders says the President plans further diplomatic moves.

Defense Secretary Wilson says we can do nothing more to help in Indo-China without direct intervention in the war. He told reporters:

"I don't know of anything more we can do." Wilson acknowledged, indirectly, that the French have asked us for military aid. And in Paris today, French Premier Laniel told his National Assembly: his government had discussed possible "outside" military aid for Indo-China. But the GOVERNMENT was careful to take no action that would risk provoking a general war in Asia.

Pentagon officials say we have turned down a French suggestion that our B-29 bombers might be of great help at Dien Bien Phu.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland says that if the President decides to send our armed forces into Indo-China he will support Mr. Eisenhower. Knowland says that "apparently" the British and the French are "prepared to negotiate a Far Eastern Munich" at Geneva.

The Geneva conference had adjourned until Friday but today Canadian External Minister Pearson said..with the approval of the British... that a failure to settle the Indo-China war now might force the west into collective action against Communist aggression in southeast Asia. And the British press is demanding a statement of the facts from its government on the policy dispute with Washington. I'd like to discuss this in a few minutes.

At the McCarthy-Army hearing in Washington, Senator McCarthy today [redacted] introduced a letter he said was sent by F.B.I. Chief Hoover to the army intelligence chief.. a year before Secretary Stevens took office. McCarthy said the letter marked "personal and confidential", warned the army of the danger of certain security risks at the Fort Monmouth radar laboratories. Mc Carthy said he did not get the letter from the F.B.I. Army Counsel Welch wanted to know where the letter did come from.. he said it was not from the army files..he said it was improper for McCarthy to have it. The army promised to search tonight to see if it has the original letter. Earlier, the committee was unable to agree on any method for hurrying up the hearings. McCarthy charged that Army counsel Welch had "welshed" on an agreement to hear only McCarthy after Secretary Stevens is through on the witness stand. Welch said this is false.

An army court today found Corporal Edward S. Dickenson guilty of collaborating with the enemy in Korea and informing on fellow prisoners. He was sentenced to dishonorable discharge and ten years at hard labor. The case will be appealed.

And the air force today cleared 69 of its men of wrong-doing while prisoners in Korea. But 14 others were ordered to show why they should mmm be allowed to remain in the service.

The governor general of Canada, Vincent Massey, told a joint session of Congress today that the foreign policies of our two countries have the same fundamental aims altgough we may not always agree on details. Mr. Massey said Canada and the United States are partners..and allies in the "defense of things we value."

The United Nations Security Council today voted down Russian and Arab objections and called for a general debate on the border disputes between Jordan and Isreal.

And the United States Court of Appeals in Washington decided to prevent Attorney General Brownell (.at least temporarily)..from taking steps toward listing the National Lawyers Guild as subversive. Mr. Brownell has called the guild the legal mouthpiece of the Communist party. The court wants a hearing on this to be held up until legal issues can be settled in a district court.

Edward R. Murrow: May 4, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

One of the by-products of the lack of Western unity at Geneva is the unpleasant debate, about whose fault it has been. Just now the British are resenting an accusation made in this country, that they are to blame for the failure to produce a pledge of collective action in Indo-China, and so left Secretary Dulles out on a limb at Geneva. The British contend that we are blaming them for refusing to do something we couldn't do ourselves. They refer to the opposition of congressmen to military intervention in Indo-China.

Perhaps the British misunderstand the situation. It is true that President Eisenhower, on being asked by the French for immediate military aid, would not seek Congressional authorization for single-handed action. But he would have asked authorization for joint action, had the British been ready to go along. And Congress most probably would have granted the authority.

But we should understand that the British refused for two reasons. One was that British military authorities thought the proposed air action would be too late to defeat the Communists at Dienbienphu. The other was that the British, though favoring collective security in principle, had decided to do nothing positive about it, until negotiations at Geneva had been given a chance. There is room for disagreement between the two countries about these policies, but little ground for rancor.

Actually if one wants to blame somebody, the French should not have asked formally, for something they should have known could not be granted. They put both the United States and Britain on the spot, in a way that wasted what bargaining power they had at Geneva. And they started off the present unpleasant debate. But it does not do to blame the French either. They had their reasons for asking the help. If their Allies couldn't give them the aid, they couldn't object to armistice terms they might not like.

It is all too clear that the time to have established Western unity was long before Geneva. It had been achieved at Berlin, then lost in the French delay to ratify the E.D.C. treaty. And we can only guess what the difference would have been had the French long ago granted the complete independence finally conceded to Vietnam. But for the French it can be said that the Laniel cabinet felt too shaky to risk a vote on the E.D.C. treaty, and if Laniel had fallen, he probably would have been succeeded by someone opposed to the European Army. And as to the reluctance to give Vietnam independence, one can ask what country has been punctual in setting its subject peoples free, excepting the United States in the Philippines?

And for the French, there is some extenuation in that what they did in Indo-China would have to apply to North Africa, where conditions still were not thought ripe for a grant of immediate independence.

When it comes to handing out blame, some surely must be put down to extremist statements in this country. Some of these have frightened our Allies; others have tied Secretary Dulles's hands at the negotiating table. This is a time when the Western Allies have to be measuring their weakness, rather than their strength, and that is a disagreeable duty. But the alliance does not grow stronger if its members keep pointing accusing fingers at each other.

A good example of a cool head at this moment is the editor of the Manchester Guardian. This newspaper has consistently criticized American policy, sometimes a little carpingly. But now it is seeing things in perspective. It knows many people in Britain distrust and disapprove of America. "They are thinking" it writes, "of McCarthy's witch hunts, of hydrogen bombs being blown off in the Pacific, of arrogant statements from Senators who think that everyone should do what America wants, and perhaps of swaggering American soldiers in our midst. But three things stand out in the United States' attitude to world affairs since the war", it continues,

"They have done more than any other country to guarantee peace in the world; they remain the foremost country whose ideal it is to promote the general welfare, and to secure the blessings of liberty; and they have done more than any other country in the world to help others, and secure their health, prosperity and welfare."

The need for co-operation with Britain should not have to be stressed to realists at any time, but it is peculiarly important now when the two countries must work together to save as much as possible from the Geneva conference. It is on the British that Secretary Dulles must depend for a guarantee of any truce in Indo-China. What he specifically wants is a pledge of joint military action to resist aggression, if the Vietminh forces violate an armistice. British co-operation then would be broadened to include Australia, New Zealand, Thailand, the Philippines, and the free states of Indo-China. The British for their part already are asking their commonwealth partners, India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Burma to join in such a pledge. True, this program foresees a partition of Indo-China, and that would be a distinct setback for Western policy. But it still may prove possible to put most of the democratic countries of Asia and the Pacific into a security system, that would stem any further communist advance in Southeast Asia. And such an endeavor surely makes this a poor time for Allies to be scolding each other.

Who's to blame for the failure so far to secure united action in Indo-China is a matter of dispute. It's probably true, as Quintillian said, that "rarely is anyone sufficiently critical of himself." But as S.G. Champion remarked: "If you use the heart with which you reprove others to reprove yourself, there will be fewer faults; if you use the heart with which you forgive yourself to forgive others, there will be perfect friendship."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists have captured another French strongpoint at Dien Bien Phu. The battle ended after more than 12 hours of bitter fighting, much of it hand-to-hand. The French then counter-attacked, in an effort to recapture the western point. But they could make no headway and the attack was called off. The French have lost four strongpoints, and part of a fifth, since Saturday night. Tonight, from somewhere off the coast of North Indo-China, my colleague David Schoenbrun cables that tomorrow morning navy dive bombers from the former American carrier Belleau Wood will take off to aid the ground troops at Dien Bien Phu. The carrier now flies the French flag. We turned the ship over to them last September.

In Washington today, Republican Senator Flanders called on the President and then told reporters: Mr. Eisenhower does not favor any American military operations in Indo-China unless we have "the support of the people of that region." Flanders says the President plans further diplomatic moves.

Defense Secretary Wilson says we can do nothing more to help in Indo-China without direct intervention in the war. He told reporters: "I don't know of anything more we can do." Wilson acknowledged, indirectly, that the French have asked us for military aid. And in Paris today, French Premier Laniel told his National Assembly: his government had discussed possible "outside" military aid for Indo-China. But the government was careful to take no action that would risk provoking a general war in Asia.

Pentagon officials say we have turned down a French suggestion that our B-29 bombers might be of great help at Dien Bien Phu.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland says that if the President decides to send our armed forces into Indo-China he will support Mr. Eisenhower. Knowland says that "apparently" the British and the French are "prepared to negotiate a Far Eastern Munich" at Geneva.

The Geneva conference had adjourned until Friday but today Canadian External Minister Pearson said with the approval of the British that a failure to settle the Indo-China war now might force the west into collective action against Communist aggression in southeast Asia. And the British press is demanding a statement of the facts from its government on the policy dispute with Washington. I'd like to discuss this in a few minutes.

At the McCarthy-army hearing in Washington, Senator McCarthy today introduced a letter he said was sent by FBI Chief Hoover to the army intelligence chief - a year before Secretary Stevens took office. McCarthy said the letter marked "personal and confidential ", warned the army of the danger of certain security risks at the Fort Monmouth radar laboratories. McCarthy said he did not get the letter from the FBI. Army Counsel Welch wanted to know where the letter did come from - he said it was not from the army files - he said it was improper for McCarthy to have it. The army promised to search tonight to see if it has the original letter. Earlier, the committee was unable to agree on any method for hurrying up the hearings. McCarthy charged that Army counsel Welch had "welshed" on an agreement to hear only McCarthy after Secretary Stevens is through on the witness stand. Welch said this is false.

An army court today found Corporal Edward S. Dickenson guilty of collaborating with the enemy in Korea and informing on fellow prisoners. He was sentenced to dishonorable discharge and ten years at hard labor. The case will be appealed.

And the air force today cleared 69 of its men of wrong-doing while prisoners in Korea. But 14 others were ordered to show why they should be allowed to remain in the service.

The governor general of Canada, Vincent Massey, told a joint session of Congress today that the foreign policies of our two countries have the same fundamental aims although we may not always agree on details. Mr. Massey said Canada and the United States are partners and allies in the "defense of things we value."

The United Nations Security Council today voted down Russian and Arab objections and called for a general debate on the border disputes between Jordan and Israel.

And the United States Court of Appeals in Washington decided to prevent Attorney General Brownell at least temporarily from taking steps toward listing the National Lawyers Guild as subversive. Mr. Brownell has called the guild the legal mouthpiece of the Communist party. The court wants a hearing on this to be held up until legal issues can be settled in a district court.

One of the by-products of the lack of Western unity at Geneva is the unpleasant debate, about whose fault it has been. Just now the British are resenting an accusation made in this country, that they are to blame for the failure to produce a pledge of collective action in Indo-China, and so left Secretary Dulles out on a limb at Geneva. The British contend that we are blaming them for refusing to do something we couldn't do ourselves. They refer to the opposition of congressmen to military intervention in Indo-China. Perhaps the British misunderstand the situation. It is true that President Eisenhower, on being asked by the French for immediate military aid, would not seek Congressional authorization for single-handed action. But he would have asked authorization for joint action, had the British been ready to go along. And Congress most probably would have granted the authority.

But we should understand that the British refused for two reasons. One was that British military authorities thought the proposed air action would be too late to defeat the Communists at Dienbienphu. The other was that the British, though favoring collective security in principle, had decided to do nothing positive about it, until negotiations at Geneva had been given a chance. There is room for disagreement between the two countries about these policies, but little ground for rancor. Actually if one wants to blame somebody, the French should not have asked formally, for something they should have known could not be granted. They put both the United States and Britian on the spot, in a way that wasted what bargaining power they had at Geneva. And they started off the present unpleasant debate. But it does not do to blame the French either. They had their reasons for asking the help. If their Allies couldn't give them the aid, they couldn't object to armistice terms they might not like. It is all too clear that the time to have established Western ubity was long before Geneva. It had been achieved at Berlin, then lost in the French delay to ratify the E.D.C. treaty. And we can only guess what the difference would have been had the French long ago granted the complete independence finally conceded to Vietnam. But for the French it can be said that the Laniel cabinet felt too shaky to risk a vote on the E.D.C. treaty, and if Laniel had fallen, he probably would have been succeeded by someone opposed to the European Army. And as to the reluctance to give Vietnam independence, one can ask what country has been punctual in setting its subject peoples free, excepting the United States in the Philippines? And for the French, there is some extenuation in that what they did in Indo-China would have to apply to North Africa, where conditions still were not thoughy ripe for a grant of immediate independence.

When it comes to handing out blame, some surely must be put down to stremist statements in this country. Some of these have frightened our Allies; others have tied Secretary Dulles's hands at the negotiating table. This is a time when the Western Allies have to be measuring their weakness, rather than their strength, and that is a disagreeable duty. But the alliance does not grow stronger if its members keep pointing accusing fingers at each other. A good example of a cool head at this moment is the editor of the Manchester Guardian. This newspaper has consistently criticized American policy, sometimes a little carpingly. But now it is seeing things in perspective. It knows many people in Britain distrust and disapprove of America. "They are thinking" it writes, "of McCarthy's witch hunts, of hydrogen bombs being blown off in the Pacific, of arrogant statements from Senators who think that everyone should do what America wants, and perhaps of swaggering American soldiers in our midst. But three things stand out in the United States' attitude to world affairs since the war", it continues, "They have done more than any other country to guarantee peace in the world; they remain the foremost country whose ideal it is to promote the general welfare, and to secure the blessings of liberty; and they have done more than any other country in the world to help others, and secure their health, propsperity and welfare." The need for cooperation with Britain should not have to be stressed to realists at any time, but it is peculiarly important now when the two countries must work together to save as much as possible from the Geneva conference. It is on the British that Secretary Dulles must depend for a guarantee of any truce in Indo-China. What he specifically wants is a pledge of joint military action to resist aggression, if the Vietminh forces violate an armistice. British cooperation then would be broadened to include Australia, New Zealand, Thailand, the Philippines, and the free states of Indo-China. The British for their part already are asking their commonwealth partners, India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Burma to join in such a pledge. True, this program foresees a partition of Indo-China, and that would be a distinct setback for Western policy. But it still may prove possible to put most of the democratic countries of Asia and the Pacific into a security system, that would stem any further communist advance in Southeast Asia. And such an endeavor surely makes this a poor time for Allies to be scolding each other.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Who's to blame for the failure so far to secure united action on Indo-China is a matter of dispute. It's probably true, as Quintillian said, that "rarely is anyone sufficiently critical of himself." But as S.G. Champion remarked: "If you use the heart with which you reprove others to reprove yourself, there will be fewer faults; if you use the heart with which you forgive yourself to forgive other, there will be perfect friendship."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday May 5, 1954

This is the news:

The French have parachuted more men. (less than a hundred). into Dien Bien Phu.

The Communist radio says enemy troops are now within 400 yards of the French positions. But the French say, its 600 yards. And despite tropical rains, the French have dropped more supplies to their garrison. In a few minutes we'll hear a report on this battle from David Schoenbrun in Hanoi.

In France today, American air force [redacted] Globemaster's took off with some 450 French army and air force technicians..who are being flown to the Indo-China battle. This is the second in a series of airlifts we have provided for the French.

In Washington, the President has appealed to the free nations to form a collective security system now..to guard Southeast Asia against Communist aggression. The President says there's a "general sense of urgency" about this. And "it could have an important bearing upon what happens at Geneva during the Indo-China phase of the conference."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked by reporters whether he thinks we suffered a diplomatic defeat at Geneva. He said: no one can count a battle lost while it's still going on. And the President announced his unqualified support for Secretary of State Dulles who last night returned to Washington from Geneva.

The President called Mr. Dulles the greatest secretary of state in his [redacted] memory. And Mr. Dulles himself, asked whether we had suffered a defeat at Geneva, told reporters: "I don't understand what happened there that is alleged to have constituted a defeat."

The British today agreed to join allied talks to consider military action in Indo-China if the Geneva negotiations fail[redacted]. A meeting is expected to take place in Washington within the next three weeks. And a French spokesman says that the Geneva conference will discuss Indo-China either Friday or Saturday.

At his newsconference today, the President said that the Army-McCarthy hearings are a blow to our international prestige and self-respect. He said he hopes the nation will derive an advantage from the hearings comparable to the losses of presitige and self-respect we have [redacted] (SUFFERED.) Mr. Eisenhower said he knows nothing that has caused him to lose confidence in Secretary of the Army Stevens as far as administering army business is concerned. He made it clear he would like a quick conclusion of the hearing, with effective [redacted] (ANSWERS) on the main issues of the dispute and participation by the principals.

Today the Mundt committee devoted almost all of its time to a document introduced yesterday by Senator McCarthy who described it as a letter from F.B.I. Chief Hoover to the army. McCarthy said it was one of a number of warnings that there was the danger of espionage at the signal corps laboratories at Fort Monmouth. Army Counsel Welch called this document "a perfect phoney.. a carbon copy of precisely nothing." Then a member of the committee staff, Robert A. Collier, said he had discussed the document with J. Edgar Hoover. The F.B.I. head did not want its contents made known unless Attorney General Brownell approved. Hoover told Collier that this document was not a carbon copy or a copy of any communication prepared by the F.B.I. But Hoover also revealed that it was, in effect, a summary..much of it in the same language as contained in a 15-page F.B.I. report to the army. The army said it could not find a copy of the letter in its files. Later Senator McCarthy was sworn in as a witness for the first time in these hearings. He said that up until last night he had been under the impression that his letter was a copy of a letter from J. Edgar Hoover that could be found in the army's files. He discovered last night that it was a summary of an original F.B.I. report. Mc Carthy said he received the document about a year ago. It was given to him by a young army intelligence officer. Mc Carthy said this officer was disturbed because he felt the army was not taking action on repeated F.B.I' warnings about alleged subversion at Fort Monmouth. McCarthy refused to tell the committee the name of the officer who gave him the letter. He said he gets such information ,on Communist infiltration, from many people inside the government. And he told the committee:"There is no way on earth that any committee or any force can get me to violate the confidence of these people." The Senator's position was upheld by Chairman Mundt and Counsel Jenkins. McCarthy also charged..with Army Secretary Stevens on the stand again.. that the F.B.I. sent 12 different warnings to the army "complaining about what would appear to be espionage". Stevens said shortly after he took office he asked the F.B.I. to conduct an investigation at Fort Monmouth.

After the hearing Chairman Mundt announced that both sides have agreed to turn over to the committee tomorrow morning all transcripts of monitored telephone calls. The committee counsel will decide which are to be admitted in evidence.

At his news conference today: the President said recent reports on the nation's economy have been favorable: but he warned against over-optimism. And he said he would guarantee that the cases of all men in the armed services.. charged with collaborating with the Communists in Korea..will be judged on the basis of justice tempered with mercy.

The Democrats are holding a "national conference " in Washington. And today the party's executive committee supported National Chairman Mitchell's decision not to help James Roosevelt and Representative Condon in their California election campaigns. Mitchell said he is very optimistic about the Democratic CHANCES in the November election because--he said... "the people who left us in 1952 are coming back in increasing numbers." Democratic Senator Murray of Montana charged that "the real architects of gloom and doom" are Secretary of Agriculture Benson, Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Burgess and Treasury Secretary Humphrey.

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said here in New York today that the American people should be told more of the secrets that have been learned about Russia's growing military strength. Admiral Carney said that while military security is a serious problem, he thinks the national safety also rests on an informed, intelligent public.

My colleague David Schoenbrun, who normally works in Paris, is now in Indo-China covering the war there. And tonight he recorded for us a report on the situation at Dien Bien Phu.

(runs 4;20*

end cue: should not be written off while they are still alive and fighting)

This is Ed Murrow..I'll be back in a moment. But first ..

My colleague David Schoenbrun spoke of the determination of the men holding out at Dien Bein Phu...~~this~~ despite tremendous pressures from both the enemy and the elements. While the Roman historian Tacitus was right when he said "in valor there is hope"...Plutarch ~~perhaps~~ came closer to reality when he concluded:"If all the world were just, there would be no need of valour."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 5, 1954
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... My colleague, David Schoenbrun, who normally works in Paris, is now in Indo-China covering the war there and tonight he recorded for us a report on the situation at Dienbienphu.

SCHOENBRUN: Here is the situation in the battle of Dienbienphu as given to this reporter today by a High Command source here in Hanoi, a source in the top echelong. He said - give or take, a day or two either way, the fate of Dienbienphu will be decided in thenext ten days and here's why. Torrential monsoon rains will be falling by the fifteenth of May, churning up the roads in the tiny country into an impassable bog of mud. This, plus French aviation, will effectively choke off the supply route of General Giap, the supply route from China. The Communist General might still use his army of coolies to carry rice and medicine and even small arms, although at best that's a slow and torturous operation in the monsoon season,but General Giap cannot expect after the fifteenth of May any convoys of Molotov trucks, carrying 105-MM shells and 120 mortar shells. The rains, of course, are also disadvantageous for our side. It hampers the parachuting over Dienbienphu,but don't forget, said the High Command source, that even at the height of the monsoons it doesn't rain twenty-four hours aday and there will be periods when our planes can make sorties and make drops whereas trucks are bogged down in the mud for months beginning May 15.

There's another important factor at Dienbienphu - disease. Disease is a great menace to the Communists more than to our side. The menace comes from the dread brush typhus. Brush typhus is a disease that could decimate the Communist troops. It gets its name from the fact that jungle ticks living in the underbrush germinate in the rainy season. Communists troops, who are surrounding General de Castries at Dienbienphu, are right in the middle of the underbrush in that plague-ridden, typhus-thick country. General de Castries' men, in the open clearing of the fortified camp, are free from this plague area, thus, if General Giap is going to make a last supreme effort to take Dienbienphu, and the High Command here still thinks that he may try it, he cannot delay much more than ten days from now.

This also corresponds with the diplomatic timetable for it is believed here that the critical moment of the Indo-Chinese question at Geneva will come about the fifteenth of May. If the Chinese at Geneva are going to try to make any kind of a deal, they must do so while General Giap is on the verge of capturing Dienbienphu. That's when they can drive their hardest bargain. If the rains come before Dienbienphu falls, then the Chinese will lose their biggest bargaining chip. At the same time, if the Communists here take Dienbienphu before a negotiation they also lose their bargaining value. They lose it this way. They lose it the same way as a kidnapper who kills his hostage loses the chance of getting ransom. Now, the big question -- can Dienbienphu hold out against an all-out assault if one comes before the big rains? That is still anybody's guess. The situation here is still described officially as .... quote "serious." (unquote) On Saturday night last it was called "grave," but these brave men are still holding out in that Verdun of Viet Nam and they should not be written off while they're still alive, fighting.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow .....

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French have parachuted more men, less than a hundred, into Dien Bien Phu. The Communist radio says enemy troops are now within 400 yards of the French positions. But the French say its 600 yards. And despite tropical rains the French have dropped more supplies to their garrison. In a few minutes we'll hear a report on this battle from David Schoenbrun in Hanoi.

In France today, American air force Globemaster's took off with some 450 French army and air force technicians who are being flown to the Indo-China battle. This is the second in a series of airlifts we have provided for the French.

In Washington, the President has appealed to the free nations to form a collective security system now to guard Southeast Asia against Communist aggression. The President says there's a "general sense of urgency" about this. And "it could have an important bearing upon what happens at Geneva during the Indo-China phase of the conference."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked by reporters whether he thinks we suffered a diplomatic defeat at Geneva. He said: "No one can count a battle lost while it's still going on. And the President announced his unqualified support for Secretary of State Dulles who last night returned to Washington from Geneva. The President called Mr. Dulles the greatest secretary of state in his memory. And Mr. Dulles himself, asked whether we had suffered a defeat at Geneva, told reporters: "I don't understand what happened there that is alleged to have constituted a defeat."

The British today agreed to join allied talks to consider military action in Indo-China if the Geneva negotiations fail. A meeting is expected to take place in Washington within the next three weeks. And a French spokesman says that the Geneva conference will discuss Indo-China either Friday or Saturday.

At his news conference today, the President said that the Army-McCarthy hearings are a blow to our international prestige and self-respect. He said he hopes the nation will derive an advantage from the hearings comparable to the losses of prestige and self-respect we have suffered. Mr. Eisenhower said he knows nothing that has caused him to lose confidence in Secretary of the Army Stevens as far as administering army business is concerned. He made it clear he would like a quick conclusion of the hearing, with effective answers on the main issues of the dispute and participation by the principals.

Today the Mundt committee devoted almost all of its time to a document introduced yesterday by Senator McCarthy who described it as a letter from F.B.I. Chief Hoover to the army. McCarthy said it was one of a number of warnings that there was the danger of espionage at the signal corps laboratories at Fort Monmouth. Army Counsel Welch called this document "a perfect phoney - a carbon copy of precisely nothing." Then a member of the committee staff, Robert A. Collier, said he had discussed the document with J. Edgar Hoover. The F.B.I. head did not want its contents made known unless Attorney General Brownell approved. Hoover told Collier that this document was not a carbon copy or a copy of any communication prepared by the F.B.I. But Hoover also revealed that it was, in effect, a summary - much of it in the same language as contained in a 15-page F.B.I. report to the army. The army said it could not find a copy of the letter in its files. Later Senator McCarthy was sworn in as a witness for the first time in these hearings. He said that up until last night had had been under the impression that his letter was a copy of a letter from J. Edgar Hoover that could be found in the army's files. He discovered last night that it was a summary of an original F.B.I. report. McCarthy said he received the document about a year ago. It was given to him by a houng army intelligence officer. McCarthy said this officer was disturbed because he felt the army was not taking action on repeated F.B.I. warnings about alleged subversion at Fort Monmouth. McCarthy refused to tell the committee the name of the officer who gave him the letter. He said he gets such information on Communist infiltration from many people inside the government. And he told the committee: "There is no way on earth that any committee or any force can get me to violate the confidencconfidence of these people." The Senator's position was upheld by Chairman Mundt and Counsel Jenkins. McCarthy also charged with Army Secretary Stevens on the stand again that the F.B.I. sent 12 different warnings to the army "complaining about what would appear to be espionage." Stevens said shortly after he took office he asked the F.B.I. to conduct an investigation at Fort Monmouth. After the hearing Chairman Mundt announced that both sides have agreed to turn over to the committee tomorrow morning all transcripts of monitored telephone calls. The committee counsel will decide which are to be admitted in evidence.

At his news conference today the President said recent reports on the nation's economy have been favorable: but he warned against over-optimism. And he said he would guarantee that the cases of all men in the armed services charged with collaborating with the Communists in Korea will be judged on the basis of justice tempered with mercy.

The Democrats are holding a "national conference" in Washington. And today the party's executive committee supported National Chairman Mitchell's decision not to help James Roosevelt and Representative Condon in their California election campaigns. Mitchell said he is very optimistic about the Democratic chances the November election because, he said, "the people who left us in 1952 are coming back in increasing numbers." Democratic Senator Murray of Montana charged that "the real architects of gloom and doom" are Secretary of Agriculture Benson, Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Burgess and Treasury Secretary Humphrey.

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said here in New York today that the American people should be told more of the secrets that have been learned about Russia's growing military strength. Admiral Carney said that while military security is a serious problem, he thinks the national safety also rests on an informed intelligent public.

My colleague David Schoenbrun, who normally works in Paris, is now in Indo-China covering the war there. And tonight he recorded for us a report on the situation at Dien Bien Phu:

SCHOENBRUN: Here is the situation in the battle of Dienbienphu as given to this reporter today by a High Command source here in Hanoi, a source in the top echelong. He said - give or take, a day or two either way, the fate of Dienbienphu will be decided in the next ten days and here's why. Torrential monsoon rains will be falling by the fifteenth of May, churning up the roads in the tiny country into an impassable bog of mud. This, plus French aviation, will effectively choke off the supply route of General Giap, the supply route from China. The Communist General might still use his army of coolies to carry rice and medicine and even small arms, although at best that's a slow and torturous operation in the monsoon season, but General Giap cannot expect after the fifteenth of May any convoys of Molotov trucks, carrying 105-MM shells and 120 mortar shells. The rains, of course, are also disadvantageous for our side. It hampers the parachuting over Dienbienphu, but don't forget, said the High Command source, that even at the height of the monsoons it doesn't rain twenty-four hours a day and there will be periods when our planes can make sorties and make drops whereas trucks are bogged down in the mud for months beginning May 15. There's another important factor at Dienbienphu - disease. Diseas is a great menace to the Communists more t an to our side. The menace comes from the dread brush typhus. Brush typhus is a disease that could decimate the Communist troops. It gets its name from the fact that jungle ticks living in the underbrush germinate in the rainy season. Communist troops, who are surrounding General de Castries at Dienbienphu, are right in the middle of the underbrush in that plague-ridden, typhus-thick country. General de Castries' men, in the open clearing of the fortified camp, are free from this plague area, thus, if General Giap is going to make a last supreme effort to take Dienbienphu, and the High Command here still thinks that he may try it, he cannot delay much more than ten days from now. This also corresponds with the diplomatic timetable for it is believed here that the critical moment of the Indo-Chinese question at Geneva will come about the fifteenth of May. If the Chinese at Geneva are going to try to make any kind of a deal, they must do so while General Giap is on the verge of capturing Dienbienphu. That's when they can drive their hardest bargain. If the rains come before Dienbienphu falls, then the Chinese will lose their biggest bargaining chip. At the same time, if the Communists here take Dienbienphu before a negotiation they also lose their bargaining value. They lose it this way. They lose it the same way as a kidnapper who kills his hostage loses the chance of getting ransom. Now, the big question - can Dienbienphu hold out against an all-out assault if one comes before the big rains? That is still anybody's guess. The situation here is still described officially as quote "serious." unquote . On Saturday night last it was called "grave," but these brave men are still holding out in that Verdun of Viet Nam and they should not be written off while they're still alive, fighting.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: My colleague David Schoenbrun spoke of the determination of the men holding out at Dien Bien Phu - despite tremendous pressures from both the enemy and the elements. While the Roman historian Tacitus was right when he said "in valor there is hope." Plutarch came closer to reality when he concluded: "If all the world were just, there would be no need of valour."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday May 6, 1954

This is the news:

General DeCastries, in Dien Bien Phu, today called on the French high command for "parachute drops and bombardment missions, at any cost." With his garrison now encirlced for its 168th day, De Castries called on the French to "take risks." They did.. and threw most of their 450-planes into bombing attacks, and a big airlift. A spokesman for the high command says the enemy "everywhere is within GRENADE-throwing distance" of the French fort.

And the wounded will remain with the garrison. At Geneva today the Communists rejected a French request for a mercy-truce, to permit the evacuation of their wounded. The enemy is said to feel that this should wait, until formal peace negotiations start.

In Paris, the National Assembly gave Premier Laniel a vote of confidence.. AUTHORIZING his government to continue to negotiate at Geneva.

The State Department says, Secretary of State Dulles will make a report to our people by radio tomorrow night.. at 9;30 eastern time. IT WILL BE HEARD OVER MANY OF THESE STATIONS

At the Army-McCarthy hearing a letter was read from Attorney General Brownell holding that the letter with secret F.B.I. data that Senator McCarthy introduced yesterday should not be made public. McCarthy then demanded that Brownell be called before the committee. I'll try to review today's developments in a few minutes.

A special three-man security board that has been studying the case of Dr, J. Robert Oppenheimer recessed today for ten days "to review the record of its proceedings." The board says it has been holding hearings for four weeks on Oppenheimer.. who is credited with leading the development of our first atomic bomb. The President recently ordered that a "blank wall" be placed between Oppenheimer and our top secrets.

The House today joined the Senate in approving the controversial St. Lawrence seaway bill. The President had requested this action, as have all presidents since Warren Harding. The bill calls for the Treaaury to put up 105-million dollars to help finance, with Canada, a 27-foot deep navigation channel through the St. Lawrence river..with canals and locks. Mr. Eisenhower said the seaway will "contribute materially to the economic well-being and security of both the United States and Canada." The project will take from seven to ten years.

And the President today signed a record highway bill. It calls for the government to help the states to the extent of 966-million dollars in two years. This program starts in July of 1955.

A House committee investigating what it calls the army's coddling of big name athletes was told today that Featherweight Boxing Champion Sandy Saddler fought professionally while he was on an emergency leave because of his wife's illness. Saddler received a 30-day leave for this while on duty in Europe.

Senator Hickenlooper, a memeber of the Congressional atomic ernegy committee, said today that the thermo-nuclear reaction of the H-bomb may be converted to electrical power. He hints that our scientists are working on this now.

The Agriculture Department has offered to sell its stock of 360-million pounds of surplus butter for export (TO FRIENDLY NATIONS) at world market prices. That would be from 42 to 47 cents a pound wholesale. In the past the Department has asked sixty and a half cents a pound.

Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa told a Democratic meeting in Washington that the nation has suffered "an astounding and unprecedented reversal" at Geneva on the question of Indo-China. He blames this on what he calls a split Republican administration..without a foreign policy. (Secretary of State Dulles yeterday denied that we had suffered any defeat at Geneva.)

The mayors of 16 major cities, meeting in Washington, today called on Congress for decisive action on a federal housing program. They said they are deeply concerned over the fate of the federal housing program now before Congress.. and urged that the "reported scandals" in federal housing agencies should not result in the death of new legislation.

The C.I.O. Steelworkers said today that the union will demand higher wages..a guaranteed annual wage.. and improved insurance and pension plans from the basic steel industry.

In Oxford, England, Roger Bannister became the first man to run one mile in less than four minutes. Bannister did it in; three minutes fifty-nine and four-tenths seconds. That broke the record of four minutes one and four tenths seconds set by Sweden's Gunder Haegg in 1945.

Edward R. Murrow: May 6, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The hearings on the Army-McCarthy dispute have come to resemble an endurance contest. The principal participants are beginning to show increasing signs of fatigue and irritability. In the course of today's hearing Senator McCarthy attacked Attorney General Brownell, Democratic Senators Symington and Jackson, unnamed persons in the Pentagon, former President Truman and, by implication, President Eisenhower, and the whole government security program.

Today the Committee decided to send all past and future testimony to the Justice Department, with a view to letting the Attorney General determine, at some future date, whether perjury has been committed. Senator Jackson wanted the Attorney General to find out, whether the person who gave Senator McCarthy the alleged letter from J. Edgar Hoover, had broken the law. Senator Symington said someone in the government was guilty of violating his oath. He accused McCarthy of false statements and trying to mislead the public; called the letter "a fraudulent document." McCarthy replied that Symington and Jackson had been trying to block his efforts to dig communists out of government.

A letter was read from Attorney General Brownell regarding the letter, previously introduced by Senator McCarthy, and alleged by him to have been written by J. Edgar Hoover. Mr. Brownell's opinion was that the letter produced by McCarthy had made unauthorized use of secret F.B.I. material, and should not be made public. The publication of the original memorandum upon which apparently the letter was based would be contrary to the public interest, and harmful to matters now under consideration. It was stated that the letter had never been written by Mr. Hoover, and that the notations, "derogatory" or "not derogatory" following a list of names had not been made by Mr. Hoover, or on his behalf. Senator McCarthy demanded that Attorney General Brownell be called before the Committee in a closed session, in order that his decision against publishing the letter might be questioned. Acting Chairman Mundt said he was in no position to over-rule the Attorney General, but agreed that the Committee could discuss asking Brownell to appear.

Senator McCarthy said he would not be bound by Truman's White House security directives, which have been continued by the Eisenhower Administration. He charged that there has been "gross neglect by the Executive Department in hunting out communists." He said that Congress and its committees should not be afraid to over-rule someone in the Executive Department. He recalled that Mr. Brownell had set a precedent by releasing certain portions of the F.B.I. file on the late Harry Dexter White.

Senator McCarthy, again displaying the disputed letter, said nothing was going to prevent him from making its contents available to the American people. He said: "I have no duty to keep it secret, and I don't intend to." He did not say how or when he proposes to make public this letter, which did not come from the F.B.I., and which the Senator will not tell how he got.

Today Committee Counsel Ray Jenkins, at a news conference, - ignoring his own rule and that of the Committee that he and his staff must not discuss the hearings with reporters - defended his ruling of yesterday that Senator McCarthy need not tell where he got the letter. He said it would be against public policy, against the national security and interest, against statutory law, fair play and common sense to hold that the source of such information had to be divulged. When asked what statutory law was involved in the case of this letter, Mr. Jenkins said many states have laws protecting informants, but he didn't know about federal law. Mr. Jenkins declined to answer a question whether Senator McCarthy was required by law to report an officer who gave him unauthorized information.

While Secretary Stevens was on the stand, he stated that he was authorized by J. Edgar Hoover to say that Hoover had frequently commented

"in the highest terms" on the co-operation between the F.B.I. and Army Intelligence. # Roy Cohn charged that Army Counsel Adams had offered to drop the charges against McCarthy and his aides if McCarthy would drop his investigation of communists in the Army. Stevens said he had never heard of that, and if Adams had said it he was not authorized to do so.

At various times during the day McCarthy charged that Stevens testimony of Monday appeared on the face of it to be perjury. Roy Cohn charged that some members of the Army Loyalty Review Board have records of communist front activity, and consistently voted to clear communists. McCarthy claimed that Stevens and Adams are deliberately trying to prolong the hearings, to prevent further investigation of alleged communist infiltration of the Army. Stevens said that was positively not true, and the Army's counsel, Mr. Welch, contended that McCarthy's filibuster by cross-examination was really responsible for prolonging the hearings.

A mysterious Mr. X was the subject of considerable controversy. It was established that he had been a member of the Army's Loyalty Review Board, had sat on one case after Secretary Stevens took office, had been interrogated in secret session by the McCarthy Committee, had been suspended - subsequently restored to the right to handle top secret information - and was not now a member of the Army Loyalty Review Board.

A new terminal date was suggested for these hearings today. Counsel Jenkins employed the word "Doomsday" in this connection.

It would seem that as the Army-McCarthy hearing moves on, tempers are growing shorter and tensions are growing stronger. Charles Simmons once remarked: "To bear injuries or annoying and vexatious events patiently, prayerfully and with self-control is more than taking a city." But at the same time, it's also true as Joshua Liebman noted that "If we say apathetically "one notion is as good as another," we are not being ~~int~~ tolerant, but merely lazy."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General DeCastries in Dienbienphu today called on the French high command for "parachute drops and bombardment missions at any cost." With his garrison now encircled for its 168th day DeCastries called on the French to "take risks." They did, and threw most of their 450-planes into bombing attacks and a big airlift. A spokesman for the high command says the enemy "everywhere is within grenade-throwing distance" of the French fort.

And the wounded will remain with the garrison. At Geneva today the Communists rejected a French request for a mercy-truce to permit the evacuation of their wounded. The enemy is said to feel that this should wait until formal peace negotiations start.

In Paris, the National Assembly gave Premier Laniel a vote of confidence - authorizing his government to continue to negotiate at Geneva.

The State Department says Secretary of State Dulles will make a report to our people by radio tomorrow night at 9:30 p.m. eastern time. It will be heard over many of these stations.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing a letter was read from Attorney General Brownell holding that the letter with secret F.B.I. data that Senator McCarthy introduced yesterday should not be made public. McCarthy then demanded that Brownell be called before the committee. I'll try to review today's developments in a few minutes.

A special three-man security board that has been studying the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer recessed today for ten days "to review the record of its proceedings." The board says it has been holding hearings for four weeks on Oppenheimer who is credited with leading the development of our first atomic bomb. The President recently ordered that a "blank wall" be placed between Oppenheimer and our top secrets

The House today joined the Senate in approving the controversial St. Lawrence Seaway bill. The President had requested this action as have all presidents since

Warren Harding. The bill calls for the Treasury to put up 105-million dollars to help finance, with Canada, a 27-foot deep navigation channel through the St. Lawrence river with canals and locks. Mr. Eisenhower said the seaway will "contribute materially to the economic well-being and security of both the United States and Canada." The project will take from seven to ten years.

And the President today signed a record highway bill. It calls for the government to help the states to the extent of 966-million dollars in two years. This program starts in July of 1955.

A House committee investigating what it calls the army's coddling of big name athletes was told today that Featherweight Boxing Champion Sandy Saddler fought professionally while he was on an emergency leave because of his wife's illness. Saddler received a 30-day leave for this while on duty in Europe.

Senator Hickenlooper, a member of the Congressional atomic energy committee, said today that the thermo-nuclear reaction of the H-bomb may be converted to electrical power. He hints that our scientists are working on this now.

The Agriculture Department has offered to sell its stock of 360-million pounds of surplus butter for export to friendly nations at world market prices. That would be from 42 to 47 cents a pound wholesale. In the past the Department has asked sixty and a half cents a pound.

Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa told a Democratic meeting in Washington that the nation has suffered "an astounding and unprecedented reversal" at Geneva on the question of Indo-China. He blames this on what he calls a split Republican administration without a foreign policy. Secretary of State Dulles yesterday denied that we had suffered any defeat at Geneva.

The mayors of 16 major cities, meeting in Washington, today called on Congress for decisive action on a federal housing program. They said they are deeply concerned over the fate of the federal housing program now before Congress and urged that the "reported scandals" in federal housing agencies should not result in the death of new legislation.

The C.I.O. Steelworkers said today that the union will demand higher wages - a guaranteed annual wage - and improved insurance and pension plans from the basic steel industry.

In Oxford, England, Roger Bannister became the first man to run one mile in less than four minutes. Bannister did it in three minutes fifty-nine and four-tenths seconds. That broke the record of four minutes one and four tenths seconds set by Sweden's Gunder Haegg in 1945.

The hearings on the Army-McCarthy dispute have come to resemble an endurance contest. The principal participants are beginning to show increasing signs of fatigue and irritability. In the course of today's hearing Senator McCarthy attacked Attorney General Brownell, Democratic Senators Symington and Jackson, unnamed persons in the Pentagon, former President Truman and, by implication, President Eisenhower, and the whole government security program.

Today the Committee decided to send all past and future testimony to the Justice Department, with a view to letting the Attorney General determine, at some future date, whether perjury has been committed. Senator Jackson wanted the Attorney General to find out whether the person who gave Senator McCarthy the alleged letter from J. Edgar Hoover had broken the law. Senator Symington said someone in the government was guilty o violating his oath. He accused McCarthy of false statements and trying to mislead the public; called the letter "a fraudulent document." McCarthy replied that Symington and Jackson had been trying to block his efforts to dig Communists out of government.

A letter was read from Attorney General Brownell regarding the letter previously introduced by Senator McCarthy, and alleged by him to have been written by J. Edgar Hoover. Mr. Brownell's opinion was that the letter produced by McCarthy had made unauthorized use of secret F.B.I. material, and should not be made public. The publication of the original memorandum upon which apparently the letter was based would be contrary to the public interest, and harmful to matters now under consideration. It was stated that the letter had never been written by Mr. Hoover, and that the notations, "derogatory" or "not derogatory" following a list of names had not been made by Mr. Hoover, or on his behalf. Senator McCarthy demanded that Attorney General Brownell be called before the Committee in a closed session, in order that his decision against publishing the letter might be questioned. Acting Chairman Mundt said he was in no position to over-rule the Attorney General, but agreed that the Committee could discuss asking Brownell to appear. Senator McCarthy said he would not be bound by Truman's White House security directives, which have been continued by the Eisenhower Administration. He charged that there has been "gross neglect by the Executive Department in hunting out communists." He said that Congress and its committees should not be afraid to over-rule someone in the Executive Department. He recalled that Mr. Brownell had set a precedent by releasing certain portions of the F.B.I. file on the late Harry Dexter White. Senator McCarthy, again displaying the disputed letter, said nothing was going to prevent him from making its contents available to the American people. He said: "I have no duty to keep it secret, and I don't intend to." He did not say how or when he proposes to make public this letter, which did not come from the F.B.I., and which the Senator will not tell how he got. Today Committee Counsel Ray Jenkins, at a news conference - ignoring his own rule and that of the Committee that he and his staff must not discuss the hearings with reporters - defended his ruling of yesterday that Senator McCarthy need not tell where he got the letter. He said it would be against public policy, against the national security and interest, against statutory law, fair play and common sense to hold that the source of such information had to be divulged. When asked what statutory law was involved in the case of this letter, Mr. Jenkins said many states have laws protecting informants, but he didn't know about federal law. Mr. Jenkins declined to answer a question whether Senator McCarthy was required by law to report an officer who gave him unauthorized information. While Secretary Stevens was on the stand, he stated that he was authorized by J. Edgar Hoover to say that Hoover had frequently commented "in the highest terms" on the cooperation between the F.B.I. and Army Intelligence. Roy Cohn charged that Army Counsel Adams had offered to drop the charges against McCarthy and his aides if McCarthy wouldd drop his investigation of Communists in the Army. Stevens said he had never heard of that, and if Adams had said it he was not authorized to do so. At various times during the day McCarthy charged that Stevens testimony of Monday appeared on the face of it to be perjury. Roy Cohn charged that some members of the Army Loyalty Reveiw Board have records of communist front activity, and consistently voted to clear communists. McCarthy claimed that Stevens and Adams are deliberately trying to prolong the hearings, to prevent further investigation of alleged communist infiltration of the Army. Stevens said that was positively not true, and the Army's counsel, Mr. Welch, contended that McCarthy's "filibuster by cross-examination was really responsible for prolonging the hearings."

A mysterious Mr. X was the subject of considerable controversey. It was established that he had been a member of the Army's Loyalty Review Board, had sat on one case after Secretary Stevens took office, had been interrogated in secret session by the McCarthy Committee, had been suspended - subsequently restored to the right to handle top secret information - and was not now a member of the Army Loyalty Reveiw Board. A new terminal date was suggested for these hearings today. Counsel Jenkins employed the word "Doomsday" in this connection.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that as the Army-McCarthy hearing moves on, tempers are growing shorter and tensions are growing stronger. Charles Simmons once remarked: "To bear injuries or annoying and vexatious events patiently, prayerfully and with self-control is more than taking a city." But at the same time, it's also true as Joshua Liebman noted that "If we say apathetically 'one notion is as good as another', we are not being tolerant, but merely lazy."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday May 7, 1954

This is the news:

French Premier Laniel announced today that "Dien Bien Phu has been submerged after 20 hours of uninterrupted combat." The French Union garrison of an estimated 12 to 15-thousand Frenchmen, Legionnaires, Vietnames and North Africans apprently was over-run by a Communist force at least six times as large. IN PARIS -- As all but the Communist deputies in the National Assembly rose to their feet, Premier Laniel said: "Our reaction will be the reaction of the virility of a great nation. France will recall to its allies that during seven years it has never quit defending alone a great region of Asia."

President Eisenhower quickly sent the French a message saying: "France has suffered temporary defeats in the past but always triumphed in the end to continue as one of the world's leaders in all things that tend to bring greater richness to the lives of men." Mr. Eisenhower said the entire free world is "inspired by the heroism and stamina displayed by the gallant garrison." He said these forces will stand forever "as a symbol of the free world's determination to resist dictatorial aggression."

And in the Senate..on this ninth anniversary of Victory in Europe in World War Two.. Republican Senator Bridges said:"It is time for our allies and so-called allies to stand up and be counted and stop quibbling." House Speaker Martin said:"Unless the nations who believe in freedom unite quickly in support of the Dulles security plan, all Asia is threatened with Communist domination."

Secrerary Dulles will report to the nation tonight at 9;30 eastern time. He will be heard over many of these stations.

At Geneva, where the conference is expected to start to consider Indo-China tomorrow, western delegates are quite certain that the enemy's victory at Dien Bien Phu was timed to coincide with the start of diplomatic discussions.

In Washington today, the Mundt committee agreed to ask Attorney General Brownell if any part of a letter introduced by Senator McCarthy can be made public. Brownell had previously informed the committee that the letter should not be made public. Today's committee decision meant a postponemnt of action on McCarthy's demand that Brownell be called to testify before the committee. Today, Army Secretary Stevens testifying for a 12th day, said Senator McCarthy's aides made "threats of an exceedingly serious nature", in an effort to win special favors for Private Schine, a former committee consultant. Stevens said he had the distinct impression from both the Senator and his aides, that the more the army did for Schine the less it would be "hammered" by committee investigations. At one point in today's hearing Senator McCarthy said: "95 per cent of what has gone on here is not your fault. I would like to know, who has been shoving you into this deal." Secretary Stevens replied: "Nobody is shoving me." And Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois suggested that much of the heated language attributed to Roy Cohen in the Schine case, might have been "ribbing or banter." Secretary Stevens said: "They were serious matters so far as I was concerned."

The Senate today voted to send back to its labor committee A [redacted] bill to revise the Taft-Hartley law. That in effect kills it for this year. The vote was 50 to 42.. with [redacted] 46 Democrats [redacted] voting to send the bill back to committee. [redacted] They were joined by three Republicans.. Langer and Young of North Dakota.. and Malone of Nevada, and Independent Senator Morse of Oregon. [redacted]

Labor Secretary Mitchell says the bill was shelved because it contained proposals that had not been recommended by the President. He says he hopes new bills will be drafted reflecting the President's views.

Democrats in the Senate complained that the final bill failed to get to the heart of what they called [redacted] "anti-labor inequities" in the present law. They ALSO [redacted] complained they were not given a chance to have their proposed changes considered by the committee. Chairman Smith said "nobody was shut off in offering amendments in committee."

The government reported today that unemployment dropped by 260-thousand in April..the first drop in the number of unemployed since last October. And employment increased by nearly a half million in April.

A House committee was told today that Sugar Ray Robinson, former middleweight boxing champaion, jumped ship when he was scheduled to go overseas with a soldier's boxing group in world war two. An army spokesman said that as a result Robinson was charged with desertion..for a time. But he reported in at a veterans hopsital and was later given (AN HONORABLE) discharge.

In Chicago, a new organization called "For America" was formed today to combat "super-internationalism and Communism." The founders, meeting with Colonel McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, are: Clarence E. Manion, recent head of a government commission; Burton Wheeler, former senator from Montana; John T. Flynn, author; Howard Buffet, former Nebraska congressman, and Hamilton Fish, former New York Congressman. The group will enter the fall elections to support congressmen and senators who share its convictions.

It has been more than a month now since the government released the film of a Hydrogen bomb explosion. And since that time there have been various suggestions in and out of Washington, as to just what we should do about civil defense.. as a result of the existence of this bomb. Tonight, I have asked federal civil defense administrator, Val Peterson, ..in Washington.. to sum up for us the civil defense problem. Governor Peterson, exactly what is the problem?"

(runs 5 minutes ending:

"..the very atomic Pearl Harbor which our military and diplomatic policies are designed to prevent."

That was Val Peterson, the civil defense administrator, talking from Washington.

It is probably true that most of us are complacent about the prospects of this country being attacked. But if this is so, it is a dangerous complacency. Robert Burton once remarked that "happy is the city which in time of peace thinks of war." This, admittedly requires a readjustment in our thinking. But as Aesop pointed out:"Against danger it pays to be prepared."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 7, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... It has been rather more than a month now since the Government released the film of a hydrogen bomb explosion, and since that time there have been various suggestions, in and out of Washington, as to just what we should do about civil defense as a result of the existence of the hydrogen bomb. Tonite I have asked Federal Civil Defense Administrator Val Peterson in Washington to sum up for us the civil defense problem.

Governor Peterson, exactly what is the problem?

PETERSON: Thank you, Ed!

I certainly believe that the time has come to talk some sense about the H-bomb. There is no question that gross exaggeration and speculation on the Pacific H-bomb tests have added significantly to public concern and confusion on this whole problem. Let's go back a bit and bring ourselves up-to-date on the H-bomb and its significance. First of all, in terms of civil defense planning the H-bomb is not new. Russia exploded her first hydrogen device last summer. Last December, President Eisenhower talked in the new language of atomic warfare to the people of the world in his historic U.N. address. The President spoke of atomic bombs twenty-five times as powerful as thosedropped on Hiroshima and of hydrogen weapons in the range of millions of tons of TNT equivalent. The pictures of Operation Ivy, which we have all seen a great deal of in the last month, were what the President had described verbally fonr months earlier. We certainly didn't panic then. There is no reason for panic now.

The second thing we must remember about the hydrogen bomb is this: the H-bomb will flatten a lot more real estate and kill a lot more people than its little brother, the A-bomb. Let's make no mistake about that. This means that the hydrogen bomb creates a bigger problem for us, but not a different kind of problem. Any talk you hear about the H-bomb eliminating the need for civil defense is sheer nonsense on the face of it. We haven't wiped out our traffic laws and our police forces simply because we have more cars on the road, or because there are more accidents now than there were five or ten years ago. As the problem of atomic warfare gets bigger, which it obviously has with the H-bomb, you don't quit and walk away from it if you want to survive. The problem of the H-bomb in the hands of the enemy is one that the American people can lick if we keep our heads, plan realistically and quite playing atomic ostrich.

What your civil defense authorities have taught you about community organization and family preparedness over the past three years is still good. It still makes sense, H-bomb or no H-bomb. It will still save lives, not only in enemy attack but in the floods, tornadoes and other natural disasters which strike all over the country each year. Does this mean that we are simply standing still in our defenses against the H-bomb? Certainly not! President Eisenhower told his news conference the other day that a defense is not something static. It must constantly be revised in the light of new weapons and new threats against our security. That is precisely what is being done today in civil defense thruout America. In June of last year, even before the Russian H-bomb announcement, I began publicly urging that our states and cities start planning for mass evacuation of our target cities. When Admiral Strauss, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, told the President's press conference in March that one modern H-bomb could (and I quote) "put a city out of commission but not level it," he meant just what he said. He meant that a modern H-bomb could substantially destroy any of our target cities.

This week I told the mayors of America's largest target cities that, while an analysis of the effects data for the Pacific test has not been completed, Federal Civil Defense is aware that these recent tests do not -- and I repeat: do not -- pose a problem of a totally new order or magnitude. Mass evacuation does not junk the rest of civil defense planning. It adds a new defense to civil defense ...(correction by speaker) dimension to civil defense; it adds a new mobility to a program that must be mobile, that can never be static because of the constant revisions necessary in the light of new weapons and new threats.

For a successful mass evacuation program at least three things must be present. First, adequate warning time. We must have at least two and, eventually, up to four to six hours of advance warning of attack. Secondly, we must have an adequate civil defense organization in each state ... city and state to meet the complex problems posed by evacuation, such as mass care and mass feeding. And, thirdly, we must have a well-informed, prepared public that has been trained in a series of evacuation tests. If this country is attacked with weapons of mass destruction there will be many hundreds of thousands of casualties. Our success will be the degree to which these casualties are reduced by the application of Plan Mass Evacuation and other vital civil defense measures.

One last thought: If we do not have adequate civil defense in all its categories in this age of atomic ~~xxxxx~~ peril, we are inviting the very disaster, the very atomic Pearl Harbor which our military and diplomatic policies are designed to prevent.

MURROW: That was Val Peterson, the Civil Defense Administrator, talking from Washington. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

French Premier Laniel announced today that "Dien Bien Phu has been submerged after 20 hours of uninterrupted combat." The French Union garrison of an estimated 12 to 15-thousand Frenchmen, Legionnaires, Vietnames and North Africans apparently was over-run by a Communist force at least six times as large in Paris. As all but the Communist deputies in the National Assembly rose to their feet, Premier Laniel said: "Our reaction will be the reaction of the virility of a great nation. France will recall to its allies that during seven years it has never quit defending alone a great region of Asia."

President Eisenhower quickly sent the French a message saying: "France has suffered temporary defeats in the past but always triumphed in the end to continue as one of the world's leaders in all things that tend to bring greater richness to the lives of men." Mr. Eisenhower said the entire free world is "inspired by the heroism and stamina displayed by the gallant garrison." He said these forces will stand forever "as a symbol of the free world's determination to resist dictatorial aggression."

And in the Senate on this ninth anniversary of Victory in Europe in World War Two Republican Senator Bridges said: "It is time for our allies and so-called allies to stand up and be counted and stop quibbling." House Speaker Martin said: "Unless the nations who believe in freedom unite quickly in support of the Dulles security plan, all Asia is threatened with Communist domination."

Secretary Dulles will report to the nation tonight at 9:30 eastern time. He will be heard over many of these stations.

At Geneva, where the conference is expected to start to consider Indo-China tomorrow, western delegates are quite certain that the enemy's victory at Dien Bien Phu was timed to coincide with the start of diplomatic discussions.

In Washington today, the Mundt committee agreed to ask Attorney General

Brownell if any part of a letter introduced by Senator McCarthy can be made public. Brownell had previously informed the committee that the letter should not be made public. Today's committee decision meant a postponement of action on McCarthy's demand that Brownell be called to testify before the committee. Today, Army Secretary Stevens testifying for a 12th day said Senator McCarthy's aides made "threats of an exceedingly serious nature" in an effort to win special favors for Private Schine, a former committee consultant. Stevens said he had the distinct impression from both the Senator and his aides that the more the army did for Schine the less it would be "hammered" by committee investigations. At one point in today's hearing Senator McCarthy said: "95 percent of what has gone on here is not your fault. I would like to know who has been shoving you into this deal." Secretary Stevens replied: "Nobody is shoving me." And Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois suggested that much of the heated language attributed to Roy Cohn in the Schine case might have been "ribbing or banter." Secretary Stevens said: "They were serious matters so far as I was concerned."

The Senate today voted to send back to its labor committee a bill to revise the Taft-Hartley law. That in effect kills it for this year. The vote was 50 to 42, with 46 Democrats voting to send the bill back to committee. They were joined by three Republicans, Langer and Young of North Dakota and Malone of Nevada, and Indpendent Senator Morse of Oregon. Labor Secretary Mitchell says the bill was shelved because it contained proposals that had not been recommended by the President. He says he hopes new bills will be drafted reflecting the President's views. Democrats in the Senate complained that the final bill failed to get to the heart of what they called "anti-labor inequities" in the present law. They also complained they were not given a chance to have their proposed changes considered by the committee. Chairman Smith said "nobody was shut off in offering amendments in committee."

The government reported today that unemployment dropped by 260-thousand in April - the first drop in the number of unemployed since last October. And employment increased by nearly a half million in April.

A House committee was told today that Sugar Ray Robinson, former middleweight boxing champion, jumped ship when he was scheduled to go overseas with a soldier's boxing group in world war two. An army spokesman said that as a result Robinson was charged with desertion for a time. But he reported in at a veterans hospital and was later given an honorable discharge.

In Chicago, a new organization called "For America" was formed today to combat "super-internationalism and Communism." The founders, meeting with Colonel McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, are: Clarence E. Manion, recent head of a government commission; Burton Wheeler, former senator from Montana; John T. Flynn, author; Howard Buffet, former Nebraska congressman and Hamilton Fish, former New York Congressman. The group will enter the fall elections to support congressmen and senators who share its convictions.

It has been more than a month now since the government released the film of a Hydrogen bomb explosion. And since that time there have been various suggestions in and out of Washington as to just what we should do about civil defense, as a result of the existence of this bomb. Tonight, I have asked federal civil defense administrator, Val Peterson, in Washington to sum up for us the civil defense problem. Governor Peterson, exactly what is the problem?

PETERSON: Thank you, Ed!

I certainly believe that the time has come to talk some sense about the H-bomb. There is no question that groww exaggeration and speculation on the Pacific H-bomb tests have added significantly to public concern and confusion on this whole problem. Let's go back a bit and bring ourselves up-to-date on the H-bomb and its significance. First of all, in terms of civil defense planning the H-bomb is not new. Russia exploded her first hydrogen device last summer. Last December, President Eisenhower talked in the new language of atomic warfare to the people of the world in his historic U.N. address. The President spoke of atomic bombs twenty-five times as powerful as those dropped on Hiroshima and of hydrogen weapons in the range of millions of tons of TNT equivalent. The pictures of Operation Ivy, which we have all seen a great deal of in the last month, were what the President had described verbally four months earlier. We certainly didn't panic then. There is no reason for panic now. The second thing we must remember about the hydrogen bomb is this: the H-bomb will flatten a lot more real estate and kill a lot more people than its little brother, the A-bomb. Let's make no mistake about that. This means that the hydrogen bomb creates a bigger problem for us, but not a different kind of problem. Any talk you hear about the H-bomb eliminating the need for civil defense is sheer nonsense on the fact of it. We haven't wiped out our traffic laws and our police forces simply because we have more cars on the road, or because there are more accidents now than there were five or ten years ago. As the problem of atomic warfare gets bigger, which it obviously has with the H-bomb, you don't quit and walk away from it if you want to survive. The problem of the H-bomb in the hands of the enemy is one that the American people can lick if we keep our heads, plan realistically and quit playing atomic ostrich.

What your civil defense authorities have taught you about community organization and family preparedness over the past three years is still good. It still makes sense, H-bomb or no H-bomb. It will still save lives, not only in enemy attack but in the floods, tornadoes and other natural disasters which strike all over the country year. Does this mean that we are simply standing still in our defenses against the H-bomb? Certainly not! President Eisenhower told his news conference the other day that defense is not something static. It must constantly be revised in the light of new weapons and new threats against our security. That is precisely what is being done today in civil defense throughout America. In June of last year, even before the Russian H-bomb announcement, I began publicly urging that our states and cities start planning for mass evacuation of our target cities. When Admiral Strauss, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, told the President's press conference in March that one modern H-bomb could (and I quote) "put a city out of commission but not level it," he meant just what he said. He meant that a modern H-bomb could substantially destroy any of our target cities.

This week I told the mayors of America's largest target cities that, while an analysis of the effects data for the Pacific test has not been completed, Federal Civil Defense is aware that these recent tests do not - and I repeat: do not - pose a problem of a totally new order or magnitude. Mass evacuation does not junk the rest of civil defense planning. It adds a new diminsion to civil defense; it adds a new mobility to a program that must be mobile, that can never be static because of the constant revisions necessary in the light of new weapons and new threats. For a successful mass evacuation program at least three things must be present. First, adequate warning time. We must have at least two and eventually up to four to six hours of advance warning of attack. Secondly, we must have an adequate civil defense organization in each state - city and state to meet the complex problems posed by evacuation, such as mass care and mass feeding. And, thirdly, we must have a well-informed, prepared public that has been trained in a series of evacuation tests. If this country is attacked with weapons of mass destruction there will be many hundreds of thousands of casualties. Our success will be the degree to which these casualties are reduced by the application of Plan Mass Evacuation and other vital civil defense measures. One last thought: If we do not have adequate civil defense in all its categories in this age of atomic peril, we are inviting the very disaster, the very atomic Pearl Harbor which our military and diplomatic policies are designed to prevent.

MURROW: That was Val Peterson, the Civil Defense Administrator, talking from Washington. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is probably true that most of us are complacent about the prospects of this country being attacked. But if this is so, it is a dangerous complacenty. Robert Burton once remarked that "happy is the city which in time of peace thinks of war." This, admittedly requires a readjustment in our thinking. But as Aesop pointed out: "Against danger it pays to be prepared."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday May 10, 1954

This is the news:

The Communists have rejected a French armistice plan for Indo-China. Instead they have offered their own plan, which an American spokesman says would mean "undonditional surrender" in Indo-China. (I'd like to discuss these developments in a few minutes.)

The Vietminh radio announced today, that General DeCastries, the commander of the fallen fortress at Dien Bien Phu, is now their prisoner. And French and Laotian batallaions, today defeated several batallions of enemy troops, 50 miles from Dien Bien Phu. The French say the enemy left twelve dead on the battlefield.

British Minister of State Lloyd, told the House of Commons today, that the British are now conducting exploratory talks with Washington, on southeast Asia defenses.

And in Washington Secretary of State Dulles conferred with ambassadors from Australia, Thailand and the Phillippines. They discussed his plan for a united front in the Far East.

The President met TWICE with his top defense chiefs at the White House. And ~~the~~ White House ~~[illegible]~~ (Secretary) Hagerty says he knows of no plan for the President to ask Congress either for increased defense funds or steps to put universal military training into effect.

In the Senate, Democrat Kefauver of Tennessee charged that American leadership is now at the lowest point "since the day the United States entered World War Two." He said: "We have moved to a crisis in matters of foreign policy. New determinations need to be made of our role." // Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey paid "the highest possible tribute to the President and Secretary of State Dulles.

And former President Truman, speaking to the National Press Club in Washington, charged that the bipartisan foreign policy is being abandoned or neglected. He asked: "Is it too much to ask that we have at least something in its place..something that could be recognized as a clear-cut Administration foreign policy." Mr. Truman then said that co-operation between the major parties is not made easy when one party ..as he put it.."officially brands the other as a betrayer in their very field." The former President called on Mr. Eisenhower to take vigorous action instead of using (pious) phrases against those whom he called "poliitical assasins." ...and a Republican "lunatic fringe." Mr. Truman said: "It isn't enough to deprecate these attacks with (pious) phrases. It takes vigorous action to stamp them out."In an obvious reference to charges by Senator McCarthy, that the recent (DEMOCRATIC) administrations have been "twenty years of treason"..Mr. Truman said:"Traitor and treason are words that you can't use in friendship, even when you smile."

At the army-McCarthy hearings today an effort was made..without success..to agree on new rules, to shorten the hearings. Tomorrow, the committee will decide whether to adopt a proposal, by Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois. Dirksen wants the committee to dismiss Army Secretary Stevens from the witness stand. Then Mc Carthy would be heard. Then Committee Couhsel Jenkins will interview other witnesses in secret. By June 10th he would report to the committee, on people he thinks should be questioned. And the committee would decide whether to hold future television hearings. In the meantime..Senator McCarthy could resume his investigations, on matters that do not pertain to the current McCarthy-Army argument.

The Army objects to this. Secretary Stevens says: he thinks every witness who has a place in the hearings, should testify. He is willing to continue as long as necessary "to get all the facts on the table."

And Democratic Senator McCllellan, with the approval of Democrats

Symington and Jackson, told the committee: someone has made reckless, and irresponsible charges. Either Stevens has tried blackmail, intimidation and coercion against Senator McCarthy and his aides. Or McCarthy aides have threatened to wreck the army and declare war on the army if Private Schine did not get favored treatment. McClellan says:"The issue is the integrity of an important part of the executive department and a subcommitte of the Senate." He says these are vital issues..they cannot be disregarded. And Chairman Mundt says unless "we can have a meeting of minds, there are long hearings before us." At today's hearings: Secretary Stevens was ordered to give the committee the names of army officials responsible for giving an honorable discharge to Major Peress whom McCarthy calls a fifth amendment communist. Stevens charged that McCarthy has created a very unfair impression by frequent references to communist infiltration of the army. Stevens said:"Its a great army. Its not full of Communists. We don't coddle them." Mc Carthy charged that General Lawton, commander at Fort Monmouth, is willing to testify again that without the McCarthy investigation it would not have been possible to suspend 35 employes at Fort Monmouth. And Committee Counsel Jenkins said that Senator McCarthy appeared to be complaining that the army acted both too slow and too fast in dealing with the Fort Monmouth cases. McCarthy said this was ridiculous.

Attorney General Brownell today asked Congress to permit the government to kill-off any Communist-dominated labor union or business firm that is "in a position to affect adversely the defense of security of the United States." He also asked for repeal of the non-Communist affidavit provision of the Taft-Hartley law. He wants a new law to bar subversives from strategic factories that are engaged chiefly in civilian production. A spokesman says this plan would give unions a bigger incentive to get rid of Communist officers than under the Taft-Hartley law.

The Senate Internal Subcommittee says it will start hearing tomorrow from Nokolai Khokhlov.. the one-time assassin for the Soviet secret police. He arrived in this country from Great Britain "under protective custody" within the past few days.

Republican congressmen who met with the President today said they have agreed to "abandon at least temporarily" any plan to revise the Taft-Hartley law at this session of Congress.

And in Pittsburgh.. the nation's 12th largest city went without its mass transportation system today. Some 27-hundred bus and trolley operators went on strike Sunday morning.

Edward R. Murrow: May 10, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The Communists at Geneva have now produced their own armistice plan for Indo-China; having rejected the French proposals, today they produced their own. They demand recognition of the Vietminh regime, likewise recognition for the Communist regimes of Laos and Cambodia. They demand the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Indo-China; they demand so-called free elections, but without international supervision - in other words, elections such as they have previously proposed for Germany and Korea, (which proposals have been rejected by the Western Powers.)

The Communists further propose that there be a pledge of no reprisals against anyone found guilty of collaborating with the Communists. They propose an exchange of prisoners of war, and an armistice which would include a ban on the import of troops and arms into Indo-China. The French have rejected these proposals, saying they would merely set the stage for the Communists to swallow all of Indo-China. An American spokesman at Geneva says the Communist proposals would mean "unconditional surrender in Indo-China."

The East and West are just about as far apart as they could possibly be. The only agreement reached was on the evacuation of wounded from Dien Bien Phu.

Our Under Secretary of State, General Bedell Smith, said it is extremely difficult to believe that the Communists have come to this conference with any intention of negotiating a just and durable peace."

Howard Smith cables me from Geneva tonight that what the Western Powers regard as the weakest point in the Communist proposals - that is the exclusion of international supervision of an armistice and elections - may in fact turn out to be its greatest attraction to the Asian people when it is re-christened "national self-determination". He reports that there is considerable belief in Geneva that the Communists in Indo-China, under their terms, would win a majority in Indo-China after a vigorous election campaign.

Smith, who has covered practically all of the big post-war conferences, concludes that the Western Alliance in Geneva continues in a sorry state."

David Schoenbrun, in a cable from Saigon, indicates that the state of affairs in Indo-China is "very grave". He says that the Commander-in-Chief of the Vietnam Army has told him that a new class of draftees has been called to the colors today. National mobilization, without restriction, on all levels is being pushed. While trying to create modern divisions, the Vietnam Army is also trying to develop provincial and regional units of a military and para-military nature, similar to those developed by the Communists, for fighting in every village and community. The Vietnam Commander said these local units would be "like you Americans called Minute Men in your American revolution". General Hinh said he needs trained non-coms, to build his raw recruits into a real army. He also wants top-notch military advisers, to serve alongside his own officers at every echelon. And he pointed out that the XXXX Communists had a Chinese officer, directing most of their units.

Schoenbrun cables that the political and military situation in Indo-China, the confusion and hesitation, and fear of the masses of people, make it most difficult for men like General Hinh to carry out his program. And he adds: "Unless there is a show of strength and determination by the West, the people won't rally to General Hinh's call, and young men - as is already happening - will take to the hills, or go over to the enemy, rather than be drafted. As long as the Geneva talks last, little can be accomplished, for the masses of people are waiting and watching, unwilling to commit themselves, until they see how the wind is blowing, particularly the wind from Washington."

So it would seem that the division and disunity amongst the Western Powers in Geneva is producing disunity, fear, and something approaching political and military paralysis in Indo-China.

Developments of the past few days ab~~road~~ would seem to suggest that the free nations of the world are again undergoing a period of doubt and apprehension - n~~otably among themselves.~~ Harry Emerson Fosdick once said:"It is cynicism and fear that freeze life; it is faith that thaws it out and sets it free." Perhaps events are proving that Thackeray was right when he observed:""Tis not the dying for a faith that's so hard; tis living up to it that is difficult."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 10, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists have rejected a French armistice plan for Indo-China. Instead they have offered their own plan which an American spokesman says would mean "unconditional surrender" in Indo-China. I'd like to discuss these developments in a few minutes.

The Vietminh radio announced today that General DeCastries, the commander of the fallen fortress at Dien Bien Phu, is now their prisoner. And French and Laotian batallions today defeated several batallions of enemy troops 50 miles from Dien Bien Phu. The French say the enemy left twelve dead on the battlefield.

British Minister of State Lloyd told the House of Commons today that the British are now conducting exploratory talks with Washington on southeast Asia defenses.

And in Washington Secretary of State Dulles conferred with ambassadors from Australia, Thailand and the Phillippines. They discussed his plan for a united front in the Far East.

The President met twice with his top defense chiefs at the White House. And White House Secretary Hagerty says he knows of no plan for the President to ask Congress either for increased defense funds or steps to put universal military training into effect.

In the Senate, Democrat Kefauver of Tennessee charged that American leadership is now at the lowest point "since the day the United States entered World War Two." He said: "We have moved to a crisis in matters of foreign policy. New determinations need to be made of our role." Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey paid "the highest possible tribute to the President and Secretary of State Dulles.

And former President Truman, speaking to the National Press Club in Washington, charged that the bipartisan foreign policy is being abandoned or neglected. He asked: "Is it too much to ask that we have at least something in its place - something that could be recognized as a clear-cut Administration foreignforeign policy." Mr. Truman then said that cooperation between the major parties is not made easy when one party as he put it, "officially brands the other as a betrayer in their very field." The former President called on Mr. Eisenhower to take vigorous action instead of using pious phrases against those whom he called "political assassins," and a Republican lunatic fringe. Mr. Truman said: "It isn't enough to deprecate these attacks with pious phrases. It takes vigorous action to stamp them out." In an obvious reference to charges by Senator McCarthy that the recent Democratic administrations have been "twenty years of treason" Mr. Truman said: "Traitor and treason are words that you can't use in friendship, even when you smile."

At the Army-McCarthy hearings today an effort was made without success, to agree on new rules to shorten the hearings. Tomorrow, the committee will decide whether to adop t a proposal by Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois. Dirksen wants the committee to dismiss Army Secretary Stevens from the witness stand. Then McCarthy would be heard. Then Committee Counsel Jenkins will into view other witnesses in secret. By June 10th he would report to the committee on people he thinks should be questioned. And the committee would decide whether to hold future television hearings. In the meantime Senator McCarthy could resume his investigations on matters that do not pertain to the current McCarthy-Army argument. The Army objects to this. Secretary Stevens says: he thinks every witness who has a place in the hearings should testify. He is willing to continue as long as necessary "to get all the facts on the table."

And Democratic Senator McClellan, with the approval of Democrats Symington and Jackson, told the committee: someone has made reckless, and irresponsible charges. Either Stevens has tried blackmail, intimidation and coercion against Senator McCarthy and his aides. Or McCarthy aides have threatened to wreck the army and declare war on the army if Private Schine did not get favored treatment. McClellan says: "The issue is the integrity of an important part of

of the executive department and a subcommittee of the Senate." He says these are vital issues - they cannot be disregarded. And Chairman Mundt says unless "we can have a meeting of minds, there are long hearings before us." At today's hearings: Secretary Stevens was ordered to give the committee the names of army officials responsible for giving an honorable discharge to Major Peress whom McCarthy calls a fifth amendment communist. Stevens charged that McCarthy has created a very unfair impression by frequent references to communist infiltration of the army. Stevens said: "Its a great army. Its not full of Communists. We don't coddle them." McCarthy charged that General Lawton, commander at Fort Monmouth, is willing to testify aga that without the McCarthy investigation it would not have been possible to suspend 35 employees at Fort Monmouth. And Committee Counsel Jenkins said that Senator McCarthy appeared to be complaining that the army acted both too slow and too fast in dealing with the Fort Monmouth cases. McCarthy said this was ridiculous.

Attorney General Brownell today asked Congress to permit the government to kill-off any Communist-dominated labor union or business firm that is "in a position to affect adversely the defense or security of the United States." He also asked for repeal of the non-Communist affidavit provision of the Taft-Hartley law. He wants a new law to bar subversives from strategic factories that are engaged chiefly in civilian production. A spokesman says this plan would give unions a bigger incentive to get rid of communist officers than under the Taft-Hartley law.

The Senate Internal Subcommittee says it will start hearing tomorrow from Nikolia Khokhlov - the onetime assassin for the Soviet secret police. He arrived in this country from Great Britain "under protective custody" within the past few days.

Republican congressmen who met with the President today said they have agreed to "abandon at least temproarily" any plan to revise the Taft-Hartley law at this session of Congress.

And in Pittsburgh, the nation's 12th largest city went without its mass transportation system today. Some 27-hundred bus and trolley operators went on strike Sunday morning.

The Communists at Geneva have now produced their own armistice plan for Indo-China; having rejected the French proposals, today they produced their own. They demand recognition of the Vietminh regime, likewise recognition for the Communist regimes of Laos and Cambodia. They demand the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Indo-China; they demand so-called free elections, but without international supervision - in other words, elections such as they have previously proposed for Germany and Korea, which proposals have been rejected by the Western Powers..

The Communists further propose that there be a pledge of no reprisals against anyone found guilty of collaborating with the Communists. They propose an exchange of prisoners of war, and an armistice which would include a ban on the import of troops and arms into Indo-China. The French have rejected these proposals, saying they would merely set the stage for the Communists to swallow all of Indo-China. An American spokesman at Geneva says the Communist proposals would mean "unconditional surrender in Indo-China." The East and West are just about as far apart as they could possibly be. The only agreement reached was on the evacuation of wounded from Dien Bien Phu. Our Under Secretary of State, General Bedell Smith, said it is extremely difficult to believe that the Communists have come to this conference with any intention of "negotiating a just and durable peace." Howard Smith cables me from Geneva tonight that what the Western Powers regard as the weakest point in the Communist proposals - that is the exclusion of international supervision of an armistice and elections - may in fact turn out to be its greatest attraction to the Asian people when it is re-christened "national self-determination." He reports that there is considerable belief in Geneva that the Communists in Indo-China, under their terms, would win a majority in Indo-China after a vigorous election campaign.

Smith, who has covered practically all of the big post-war conferences, concludes that the Western Alliance in Geneva "continues in a sorry state."

David Schoenbrun, in a cable from Saigon, indicates that the state of affairs in Indo-China is "very grave." He says that the Commander-in-Chief of the Vietnam Army has told him that a new class of draftees has been called to the colors today. National mobilization, without restriction, on all levels is being pushed. While trying to create modern divisions, the Vietnam Army is also trying to develop provincial and regional units of a military or para-military nature, similar to those developed by the Communists, for fighting in every village and community. The Vietnam Commander said these local units would be "like you American called Minute Men in your American revolution." General Hinh said he needs trained non-coms to build his raw recruits into a real army. He also wants top-notch military advisers to serve alongside his own officers at every echelon. And he pointed out that the Communists had a Chinese officer directing most of their units. Schoenbrun cables that the political and military situation in Indo-China, the confusion and hesitation and fear of the masses of people, make it most difficult for men like General Hinh to carry out his program. And he adds: "Unless there is a show of strength and determination by the West, the people won't rally to General Hinh's call, and young men - as is already happening - will take to the hills, or go over to the enemy rather than be drafted. As long as the Geneva talks last, little can be accomplished, for the masses of people are waiting and watching, unwilling to commit themselves until they see how the wind is blowing, particularly the wind from Washington." So it would seem that the division and disunity amongst the Western Powers in Geneva is producing disunity, fear, and something approaching political and military paralysis in Indo-China.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But First a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Developments of the past few days would seem to suggest that the free nations of the world are again undergoing a period of doubt and apprehension. Harry Emerson Fosdick once said: "It is cynicism and fear that freeze life; it is faith that thaws it out and sets it free." Perhaps events are proving that Thackeray was right when he observed: "Tis not the dying for a faith that's so hard; tis living up to it that is difficult."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday May 11, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today, that we are now seeking a Southeast Asian alliance, with countries that would prepare to fight if challenged. The Secretary told reporters he doesn't know if Great Britain and our other Pacific allies will (AGREE). But he wants the alliance to authorize the member countries to put down any attack by Communist forces. We will never give up in despair. And even if all Indo-China should fall, Mr. Dulles believes it would still be possible, for an anti-Communist coalition, to hold the rest of southeast Asia. Our policy is, that we would try to save essential parts of Indo-China, even if some parts of the country are lost.. because of conditions beyond our control. Secretary Dulles says the fall of Dien Bien Phu has weakened France's will to continue the seven year war. And he denies that we suffered any diplomatic defeat at Geneva. Because--he says-- he never believed there was a good chance of winning a Communist agreement there, on either the Korean or Indo-China problems.

On the battlefields today, the French acknowledged that an enemy battalion has captured a French outpost only seven miles from Hanoi.

And the enemy commander, General Giap announced tonight over the Vietminh radio that he had "decided to authorize" the French to remove their seriously wounded from captured Dien Bien Phu. He told the French to send clearly marked helicopters to Dien Bien Phu..to arrange the evacuation of approximately 13-hundred wounded.

In Geneva, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov charged that the proposed security pact for the allies of Southeastern Asia is what he called "a military bloc against the peoples" who live there. He said this would be "in contradiction with peace." And there were no signs of any possible settlement of the Korean question. I'd like to discuss this in a few minutes.

In Washington today the Mundt committee investigating the Army-McCarthy dispute has decided to continue its hearings under the present rules. Tomorrow the committee will vote on whether to add night sessions to its morning and afternoon meetings. Today's decision to go along as is came on a motion by Republican Senator Dirksen. He proposed that after Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy are heard the committee should recess..take testimony in secret..make full transcripts available to the press and let the McCarthy committee go ahead with its normal work, EXCEPT FOR MILITARY INSTALLATIONS. The other Republican members of the committee.. Senators Potter and Dworshak agreed with Dirksen. The fourth Republican..Chairman Mundt. WANTED TO hear from the Democrats and the army. Secretary Stevens made his VIEWS known by telephone. He was excused earlier after it was revealed that he's suffering from a virus infection and has received penicillin shots. His counsel, Joseph Welch, phoned him at home and then told the committee: Mr. Stevens feels he should not be stuck on the stand for 14 days while the other side gets off much more lightly. Stevens feels the Dirksen proposal would not have resulted in fairness. Democratic Senator McClelland, said it would be "a flagrant travesty on american standards of justice AND equity to close the doors on part of the inquiry. Democratic Senators Symington and Jackson agreed. That left the vote evenly divided..three to three. Then Republican Chairman Mundt voted with the Democrats..and the army side.. because he had said he would not vote to shorten the hearings if either side thought a curtailment would be unfair or unjust. At this point, Senator McCarthy charged that he had been misled..he had approved the Dirksen formula... but only because he received the impression during the noon recess that Army Counsel Welch would accept it. McCarthy charged again that Welch had "welshed".. he thought it looked like bad faith.. wanted him on the stand to explain.. said he had been given erroneous information. Counsel Welch said he had spent the noon hour resting on an office couch and had made no agreements and no suggestions during the recess. Mc Carthy then charged that the army side wanted to delay the hearings with what he called "a filibuster and procrastination." The other Republicans, in their arguments. called the hearings..among other things.. unwholesome...a miserable [redacted] (BUSINESS), a public brawl.. and television competition for the Milton Berle show. But today's committee vote means that..as of now.. the committee will continue as it has been going..with all six principals..on both sides..to testify and be cross-examined in public.

The White House said today it knows of no administration investigation to determine how to keep government employes from giving secret information to Senator McCarthy..without the proper permission. A Reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty if the Administration is concerned about "numerous people delivering classified information they are not to deliver." Hagerty said:"I am not going to answer that."

Supposed

And Republican Senator Hendrickson, who has decided not to run for re-election from New Jersey, told his colleagues today that as a result of the Senate hearing on the McCarthy-Army row:"I think the public good might far better be served if the Senate could find itself a (COMFORTABLE) hole into which we all could crawl." He said that public confidence in the Senate's investigation procedure "has sunk to an abysmal low."

The Senate today approved a constitutional amendment which would freeze the number of (SUPREME COURT) justices at nine. (The vote was 58 to 19) The amendment would require all federal judges to retire at 75. The Senate knocked out a provision which would have prevented any members of the Supreme Court from leaving to run for president. The proposed amendment now goes to the House. If approved there,,, by a two-thirds vote...it will need approval by 36 states within seven years.

C.I.O. President Reuther charged today that there is the equivalent of five million workers unemployed..if one countsmen laid off and doing part-time work. He said the Administration is doing nothing about this. And he said the best remedy would be to "make about three dozen reactionary politicians unemployed" next November.

Edward R. Murrow: May 11, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

French Premier Laniel has decided to try for a vote of confidence in the French National Assembly. This afternoon one hundred Communist Deputies - one-sixth of the total number - sat silent while the other nine parties attacked each other and the government in an almost unprecedented display of bitterness and disunity. The subject was Indo-China. There was no need for the Communists to use their special brand of political poison to worsen an atmosphere which is already charged with deep and bitter emotions over Dien Bien Phu, and the whole Indo-China situation. An idea of the bitterness of the attack can be gained from the fact that it was a member of Defense Minister Rene Pleven's own party who made the most passionate speech attacking the government.

Mr. Laniel's decision to risk the continuation of his government on a confidence vote could mean the dissolution of the French Government; and it appears to observers in Paris that if things continue to go badly at the Geneva Conference, the government's chances of survival are not good. There is, in fact, no majority in sight other than the one that is presently tolerating Premier Laniel. If the government falls, the crisis might well last longer than the one of last June, when the French were without a government for five weeks. If this should happen, the Geneva Conference would be paralyzed, while the French military situation in Indo-China continues to deteriorate.

Alex Kendrick cables me from Geneva that the Korean phase of that conference is now to all intents and purposes ended, with no results. The Communists will not accept United Nations supervision of elections. The West will not accept any plan that does not include such supervision. So it seems that in Korea the situation that has prevailed since Pan Mun Jom will continue for an indefinite period.

Yesterday's Communist proposals for an armistice in Indo-China cannot be ignored by the French Government, no matter how distasteful and, in fact, ruinous they may be. They must still be formally regarded as a basis for negotiation, although obviously there is no more basis for Indo-China negotiations than there is for further Korean negotiations. The trouble in Indo-China is substantially the same as that in connection with Korea - the Communist refusal to admit any international supervision; their insistence that the settlement and the elections should be between two groups of Indo-Chinese, without any French or other participation. Kendrick cables that today's comments by Secretary of State Dulles on the subject of Indo-China - when reported in Geneva - did not add to the gaiety of nations at today's proceedings. Although Mr. Dulles specifically disavowed that Indo-China is being written off, that was the impression generally prevailing in Geneva tonight. The feeling is that what this country is really going to do is to stop Communist aggression after Indo-China. Kendrick reports that Mr. Dulles's statement isn't being taken too seriously in Geneva, or at best it is regarded as another example of American "big talk".

Frequently at international conferences the climate of opinion can be summed up in stories and anecdotes told by newsmen. Kendrick cables that when the American delegation at Geneva cancelled its customary morning briefing for American correspondents, the reason given was the inability to find a room in which the news conference could be held. When this explanation was offered, one correspondent remarked: "They're looking for a room with a viewpoint."

It seems to be clear that what is dividing the Western Allies is not a question of objectives, but rather one of timing and grand strategy, both political and military. But whatever the reason, the grand and indispensable alliance between the United States, Britain and France, is undergoing its most severe strain since it was first formed.

In at least one respect, history does repeat itself -- man's endless search for a solution to war and a durable peace. Dorothy Thompson once remarked:" Peace has to be created in order to be maintained. It is the product of Faith, Strength, Energy, Will, Sympathy, Justice, Imagination, and the triumph of principle. Peace will never be achieved by passivity and quietism."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that we are now seeking a Southeast Asian alliance with countries that would prepare to fight if challenged. The Secretary told reporters he doesn't know if Great Britain and our other Pacific allies will agree. But he wants the alliance to authorize the member countries to put down any attack by Communist forces. We will never give up in despair. And even if all Indo-China should fall, Mr. Dulles believes it would still be possible for an anti-Communist coalition to hold the rest of southeast Asia. Our policy is that we would try to save essential parts of Indo-China even if some parts of the country are lost because of conditions beyond our control. Secretary Dulles says the fall of Dien Bien Phu has weakened France's will to continue the seven year war. And he denies that we suffered any diplomatic defeat at Geneva. Because, he says, he nevwr believed there was a good chance of winning a Communist agreement there on either the Korean or Indo-China problems.

On the battlefields today, the French acknowledged that an enemy battalion has captured a French outpost only seven miles from Hanoi. And the enemy commander, General Giap announced tonight over the Victminh radio that he had "decided to authorize" the French to remove their seriously wounded from captured Dien Bien Phu. He told the French to send clearly marked helicopters to Dien Bien Phu to arrange the evacuation of approximately 13-hundred wounded.

In Geneva, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov charged that the proposed security pact for the allies of Southeastern Asia is what he called "a military bloc against the peoples" who live there. He said this would be "in contradiction with peace." And there were no signs of any possible settlement of the Korean question. I'd like to discuss this in a few minutes.

In Washington today the Mundt committee investigating the Army-McCarthy dispute has decided to continue its hearings under the present rules. Tomorrow the committee will vote on whether to add night sessions to its morning and afternoon meetings. Today's decision to go along as is came on a motion by Republican Senator Dirksen. He proposed that after Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy are heard the committee should recess, take testimony in secret, make full transcripts available to the press and let the McCarthy committee go ahead with its normal work. Except for military installations the other Republican members of the committee, Senators Potter and Dworshak agreed with Dirksen. The fourth Republican, Chairman Mundt wanted to hear from the Democrats and the army. Secretary Stevens made his views known by telephone. He was excused earlier after it was revealed that he's suffering from a virus infection and has received penicillin shots. His counsel, Joseph Welch, phoned him at home and then told the committee: Mr. Stevens feels he should not be stuck on the stand for 14 days while the other side gets off much more lightly. Stevens feels the Dirksen proposal would not have resulted in fairness. Democratic Senator McClelland, said it would be "a flagrant travesty on American standards of justice and equity to close the doors on part of the inquiry. Democratic Senators Symington and Jackson agreed. That left the vote evenly divided - three to three. Then Republican Chairman Mundt voted with the Democrats and the army side because he had said he would not vote to shorten the hearings if either side thought a curtailment would be unfair or unjust. At this point, Senator McCarthy charged that he had been misled - he had approved the Dirksen formula but only because he received the impression during the noon recess that Army Counsel Welch would accept it. McCarthy charged again that Welch had "welshed" - he thought it looked like bad faith - wanted him on the stand to explain - said he had been given erroneous information. Counsel Welch said he had spent the noon hour resting on an office couch and had made no agreements and no suggestions during the recess. McCarthy then charged that the army side wanted to delay the hearings with what he called "a filibuster and procrastination." The other Republicans, in their arguments called the hearings, among other things, unwholesome, a miserable business, a public brawl, and television competition for the Milton Berle show. But today's committee vote means that, as of now, the committee will continue as it has been going with all six principals, on both sides, to testify and be cross-examined in public.

The White House said today it known of no administration investigation to determine how to keep government employees from giving secret information on Senator McCarthy without the proper permission. A reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty if the Administration is concerned about "numerous people delivering classified information they are not supposed to deliver." Hagerty said: "I am not going to answer that."

And Republican Senator Hendrickson, who has decided not to run for re-election from New Jersey, told his colleagues today that as a result of the Senate hearing on the McCarthy-Army row: "I think the public good might far better be served if the Senate could find itself a comfortable hole into which we all could crawl." He said that public confidence in the Senate's investigation procedure "has sunk to an abysmal low."

The Senate today approved a constitutional amendment which would freeze the number of Supreme Court justices at nine. The vote was 58 to 19. The amendment would require all federal judges to retire at 75. The Senate knocked out a provision which would have prevented any members of the Supreme Court from leaving to run for President. The proposed amendment now goes to the House. If approved there, by a two-thirds vote - it will need approval by 36 states within seven years.

C.I.O. President Reuther charged today that there is the equivalent of five million workers unemployed if one counts men laid off and doing part-time work. He said the Administration is doing nothing about this. And he said the best remedy would be to "make about three dozen reactionary politidans unemployed" next November.

French Premier Laniel has decided to try for a vote of confidence in the French National Assembly. This afternoon one hundred Communist Deputies - one-sixth of the total number - sat silent while the other nine parties attacked each other and the government in an almost unprecedented display of bitterness and disunity. The subject was Indo-China. There was no need for the Communists to use their special brand of political poison to worsen an atmosphere which is already charged with deep and bitter emotions over Dien Bien Phu, and the whole Indo-China situation. An idea of the bitterness of the attack can be gained from the fact that it was a member of Defense Minister Rene Pleven's own party who made the most passionate speech attacking the government. Mr. Laniel's decision to risk the continuation of his government on a confidence vote could mean the dissolution of the French Government; and it appears to observers in Paris that if things continue to go badly at the Geneva Conference, the government's chances of survival are not good. There is, in fact, no majority in sight other than the one that is presently tolerating Premier Laniel. If the government falls, the crisis might well last longer than the one of last June, when the French were without a government for five weeks. If this should happen, the Geneva Conference would be paralyzed, while the French military situation in Indo-China continues to deteriorate.

Alex Kendrick cables me from Geneva that the Korean phase of that conference is now to all intents and purposes ended, with no results. The Communists will not accept United Nations supervision of elections. The West will not accept any plan that does not include such supervision. So it seems that in Korea the situation that has prevailed since Pan Mun Jom will continue for an indefinite period. Yesterday's Communist proposals for an armistice in Indo-China cannot be ignored by the French Government, no matter how distasteful and, in fact, ruinous they may be. They must still be formally regarded as a basis for negotiation, although obviously there is no more basis for Indo-China negotiations than there is for further Korean negotiations. The trouble in Indo-China is substantially the same as that in connection with Korea - the Communist refusal to admit any international supervision; their insistence that the settlement and the elections should be between two groups of Indo-Chinese, without any French or other participation. Kendrick cables that today's comments by Secretary of State Dulles on the subject of Indo-China - when reported in Geneva - did not add to the gaiety of nations at today's proceedings. Although Mr. Dulles specifically disavowed that Indo-China is being written off, that was the impression generally prevailing in Geneva tonight. The feeling is that what this country is really going to do is to stop Communist aggression after Indo-China. Kendrick reports that Mr. Dulles's statement isn't being taken too seriously in Geneva, or at best it is regarded as another example of American "big talk."

Frequently at international conferences the climate of opinion canbe summed up in stories and anecdotes told by newwmen. Kendrick cables that when the American delegation at Geneva cancelled its customary morning briefing for American correspondents, the reason given was the inability to find a room in which the news conference could be held. When this explanation was offered, one correspondent remarked: "They're looking for a room with a viewpoint." It seems to be clear that what is dividing the Western Allies is not a question of objectives, but rather one of timing and grand strategy, both political and military. But whatever the reason, the grand and indispensable alliance between the United States, Britain and France, is undergoing its most severe strain since it was first formed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In at least one respect, history does repeat itself - man's endless search for a solution to war and a durable peace. Dorothy Thompson once remarked: "Peace has to be created in order to be maintained. It is the product of Faith, Strength, Energy, Will, Sympathy, Justice, Imagination, and the triumph of principle. Peace will never be achieved by passivity and quietism."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, May 12, 1954

This is the news:

Government agencies tonight made public secret intelligence information that Russia is supplying military advisers to the Communist rebel forces in Indo-China. It has been known that the Chinese Communists sent experts on artillery, transportation, engineering and staff officers to help the rebels in Indo-China. Tonight's news of Soviet military advisers in the field was the first such report. We're told this report is based on "hard intelligence facts." The report says, among other things, that both Red China and Russia are providing military equipment for the war.

The President said today that the free world should not write-off Indo-China to the communists. As reports from France told of the French feeling that Secretary of State Dulles yesterday "wrote-off" Indo-China, the President told reporters: there must be no defeatism in dealing with this conflict. And he also said he and Mr. Dulles have both approved all important foreign policy announcements ~~things~~ each has made.

Mr. Dulles spent two hours with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and later Chairman Wiley told reporters: "Within the next couple of weeks there may be more developments on the world stage that would be decisive in some direction and make the question of aid or non-aid very important."

In Indo-China itself, (FRENCH PLANES) [redacted] again attacked enemy troops in the Red River Delta. A French officer describes this as "the route to all of southeast Asia." Tomorrow, the French deputies will vote on whether a debate on Indo-China should be postponed until after the Geneva conference. If Premier Laniel is defeated his government would fall.

And at Geneva today, the Vietnam spokesman demanded peace for his country providing THERE [redacted] is no partition..as in Korea. And Communist China's foreign minister, Chou en Lai, attacked the United States..said we are seeking to take France's place in Indo-China.

At the White House today the President was asked about recent Democratic charges that they have not been consulted enough in foreign policy matters. The President said that in three months the state department conducted 91 bi-partisan conferences. One [redacted] reporter brought up the McCarthy-Army hearings..particularly the matter of the letter McCarthy first said [redacted] was one written by F.B.I. Chief Hoover [redacted] ..the letter McCarthy later acknowledged was given to him by an army intelligence officer. The President said: it is reprehensible for any officer or civilian to give away secret information involving national security. The President called such action insubordination and said he wouldn't condone any such thing for one minute.

At today's Army-McCarthy hearing.(which I'd like to review in a few minutes).Army Counsel John G. Adams reported that it was Presidential Aide Sherman Adams who first suggested that a report be drawn up on JOHN Adams charge that Roy Cohn consistently tried to get special privileges for Private David Schine. And the Mundt committee released a heretofore secret transcript of a meeting at which Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois suggested that Roy Cohen be fired.. and the Defense Department be advised politely to fire John G. Adams. Dirksen suggested this would avoid a "public ventilation" of the dispute between McCarthy and the army. When.. in this secret meeting.. Democratic Senator McClellan proposed that a hearing be held in public all but one member approved. Senator Mundt..who was to become chairman of the committee..voted "present" and suggested that another committee do the investigating.

Vice President Nixon..in an APPARENT slap at Senator McCarthy.. tonight praised committee (CHAIRMEN) "who go after facts rather than headlines." The statement was issued in praise of Democratic Senator Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina who died at a desk in his office. #

Senator Hoey who was 76 was a former governor of North Carolina.. and the second senator from that state to die within a year. The other was Democratic Senator Willis Smith who died of a heart attack last June.

The Nixon statement praised Senator Hoey as a chairman of an investigating GROUP whose "procedures were a model of fairness and which all committee chairman might well follow. "He said the committee -- which Senator Hoey headed until SEN. McCarthy took over with the Republican control of the Senate -- made a record of solid accomplishment "that has not been surpassed by any committee."

Before the Senate adjourned out of respect to CLYDE Hoey, Chairman Ferguson of an appropriations subcommittee said the Administration has no plan "at present" to ask for an increase in its military budget. But Democratic Senator Maybank of South Carolina, a committee member, said that Assistant Defense Secretary Hannah has said the Administration will "probably" seek more money because of developments in the Far East. Maybank PREDICTS the Pentagon will ask for more money "as soon as they can."

In London today, Soviet Ambassador Malik rejected Great Britain's charge that two Red air force majors tried to spy on Britain's military secrets. But Malik agreed to withdraw the two Soviet assistant air attaches from the embassy in London.

Edward R. Murrow: May 12, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The Army's Counsel, John G. Adams, spent the entire day in the witness chair before Senator Mundt's committee today. He told a coherent and chronological story of the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy. Adams revealed, for the first time, that on last January 21st he began to prepare a written record of the Army's difficulties with Senator McCarthy's office on the subject of David Schine. Adams said he did so at the suggestion of one of President Eisenhower's chief assistants, Sherman Adams.

According to John Adams, there was a meeting with Attorney General Brownell, Sherman Adams and others, to discuss McCarthy's demand that the Army produce members of its Loyalty Security Screening Board for questioning by Senator McCarthy. It was then that Sherman Adams suggested that a record be built of the Army's relations with the McCarthy committee.

This evening Sherman Adams, at the White House, declined to comment on John Adams testimony. Senator McCarthy, who appeared to be reading a newspaper during much of Mr. Adams' testimony, said after the hearing recessed: "Many statements that Adams made are completely and proveably untrue."

In addition to testifying that President Eisenhower's aide suggested that the record of the dispute be reduced to writing, Mr. Adams testified, under oath, that Roy Cohn subjected him to more pressure and abuse over the case of Schine than he had received from all Congressional sources during the past five years - that the pressure was linked with threats to continue and expand the investigation into alleged communists in the Army. According to Adams, McCarthy told him last October that Schine was not of much use to the Committee; that he, McCarthy, hoped Schine would be drafted; but that he didn't want Roy Cohn to know his attitude about Schine. Adams further testified that Mr. Cohn was extremely upset, pacing up and down and in effect wringing his hands, when he was refused admission to a secret Radar laboratory at Fort Monmouth. He quoted Cohn as saying: "This is war, we'll really investigate this place now." Adams further stated that during the following month Cohn telephoned him an average of once a day, at his home and at his office, and became more and more difficult to handle. According to Adams, Cohn flew into violent rages, spouting obscenity and abuse, demanding that Schine be posted in the New York area, and not be shipped out for duty overseas. According to Adams, Cohn threatened to wreck the Army, and said Stevens would be through as Secretary of the Army if Schine should be shipped out.

According to Adams, Cohn employed language of abuse first at him and then at Senator McCarthy. Cohn's grievance against McCarthy, according to Adams, was that the Senator wasn't backing him up in the Schine case.

According to Adams' testimony today, Cohn applied most of the pressure on behalf of Schine, but he detailed instances where the Senator had initiated or supported requests that Schine be given special consideration and treatment.

Again according to Adams, he complained to McCarthy about the pressure being applied by Cohn, and when Cohn heard of this, he said: "I'll teach you to go over my head." Adams said he told Cohn that he should not attempt to interfere with the normal workings of Selective Service; that it was not in the national interest to do so in behalf of anyone; whereupon Cohn exploded and said he would "give the Army a little national interest if that's what they wanted."

Adams testified that he had several telephone conversations with George Sokolsky, the newspaper columnist. He said Sokolsky said that if Adams would arrange to get Schine into a special Army school Sokolsky would move in and see if he couldn't soften McCarthy's pressure on the Army." On another occasion Adams quoted Sokolsky as saying that if Schine were assigned to this special school he would move in and stop this investigation of the Army. Adams repeated these conversations to Secretary Stevens, who ordered that Schine must complete his basic training. Adams quoted Sokolsky again as saying: "The Army is being very foolish. It is asking for a two-year fight, and you will be in it that long." And again he quoted Sokolsky as saying if Schine were assigned to the C.I.D. school, he could "straighten out the situation."

Mr. Sokolsky could not be reached for comment. # After today's hearing Senator McCarthy said that Mr. Adams, at the request of Secretary Stevens, had asked ~~XXXXXX~~ Sokolsky to try to get McCarthy to call off his investigation of the Army.

The hearings will resume at 10 o'clock Eastern Daylight time - tomorrow morning.

The President, at his news conference today, spoke of leadership. And went on to define it in these words: "Leadership, he said, is the art of getting somebody else to do something you want done because he wants to do it." This reminds me of a bit of facetious advice William Graham Sumner once gave:" If you ever live in a country run by a committee, be on the committee."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Government agencies tonight made public secret intelligence information that Russia is supplying military advisers to the Communist rebel forces in Indo-China. It has been known that the Chinese Communists sent experts on artillery, transportation, engineering and staff officers to help the rebels in Indo-China. Tonight's news of Soviet military advisers in the field was the first such report. We're told this report is based on "hard intelligence facts." The report says, among other things, that both Red China and Russia are providing military equipment for the war.

The President said today that the free world should not write off Indo-China to the communists. As reports from France told of the French feeling that Secretary of State Dulles yesterday "wrote-off" Indo-China, the President told reporters: there must be no defeatism in dealing with this conflict. And he also said he and Mr. Dulles have bothapproved all important foreign policy announcements each has made.

Mr. Dulles spent two hours with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and later Chairman Wiley told reporters: "Within the next couple of weeks there may be more developments on the world stage that would be decisive in some direction and make the question of aid or non-aid very important."

In Indo-China itself, French planes again attacked enemy troops in the Red River Delta. A French officer describes this as "the route to all of southeast Asia.' Tomorrow, the French deputies will vote on whether a debate on Indo-China should be postponed until after the Geneva conference. If Premier Laniel is defeated his government would fall.

And at Geneva today, the Vietnam spokesman demanded peace for his country providing there is no partition as in Korea. And Communist China's foreign minister, Chou en Lai, attacked the United States said we are seeking to take France's place in Indo-China.

At the White House today the President was asked about recent Democratic charges that they have not been consulted enough in foreign policy matters. The President said that in three months the statedepartment conducted 91 bi-partisan conferences. One reporter brought up the McCarthy-Army hearings particularly the matter of the letter McCarthy first said was one written by F.B.I. Chief Hoover - the letter McCarthy later acknowledged was given to him by an army intelligence officer. The President said: it is reprehensible for any officer or civilian to give away secret information involving national security. The President called such action insubordination and said he wouldn't condone any such thing for one minute.

At today's Army-McCarthy hearing, which I'd like to review in a few minutes, Army Counsel John G. Adams reported that it was Presidential Aide Sherman Adams who first suggested that a report be drawn up on John Adams charge that Roy Cohn consistently tried to get special privileges for Private David Schine. And the Mundt committee released a heretofore secret transcript of a meeting at which Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois suggested that Roy Cohn be fired and the Defense Department be advised politely to fire John G. Adams. Dirksen suggested this would avoid a "public ventilation" of the dispute between McCarthy and the army. When, in this secret meeting, Democratic Senator McClellan proposed that a hearing be held in public all but one member approved. Senator Mundt who was to become chairman of the committee voted "present" and suggested that another committee do the investigating.

Vice President Nixon in an apparent slap at Senator McCarthy tonight praised committee chairmen "who go after facts rather than headlines." The statement was issued in praise of Democratic Senator Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina who died at a desk in his office. Senator Hoey who was 76, was a former governor of North Carolina and the second senator from that state to die within a year. The other was Democratic Senator Willis Smith who died of a heart attack last June.

The Nixon statement praised Senator Hoey as a chairman of an investigating group whose "procedures were a model of fiarness and which all committee chairman might well follow." He said the committee, which Senator Hoey headed until Senator McCarthy took over with the Republican control of the Senate made a record of solid accomplishment "that has not been surpassed by any committee."

Before the Senate adjourned out of respect to Clyde Hoey, Chairman Ferguson of an appropriations subcommittee said the Administration has no plan "at present" to ask for an increase in its military budget. But Democratic Senator Maybank of South Carolina, a committee member, said that Assistant Defense Secretary Hannah has said the Administration will "probably" seek more money because of developments in the Far East. Maybank predicts the Pentagon will ask for more money "as soon as they can."

In London today, Soviet Ambassador Malik rejected Great Britain's charge that two Red air force majors tried to spy on Britain's military secrets, but Malik agreed to withdraw the two Soviet assistant air attaches from the embassy in London.

The Army's Counsel, John G. Adams, spent the entire day in the witness chair before Senator Mundt's committee today. He told a coherent and chronological story of the dispute between the Army and Senator McCarthy. Adams revealed, for the for the first time, that on last January 21st he began to prepare a written record of the Army's difficulties with Senator McCarthy's office on the subject of David Schine. Adams said he did so at the suggestion of one of President Eisenhower's chief assistants, Sherman Adams. According to John Adams, there was a meeting with Attorney General Brownell, Sherman Adams and others, to discuss McCarthy's demand that the Army produce members of its Loyalty Security Screening Board for questioning by Senator McCarthy. It was then that Sherman Adams suggested that a record be built of the Army's relations with the McCarthy committee. This evening Sherman Adams, at the White House, declined to comment on John Adams testimony. Senator McCarthy, who appeared to be reading a newspaper during much of Mr. Adams' testimony, said after the hearing recessed: "Many statements that Adams made are completely and proveably untrue." In addition to testifying that President Eisenhower's aide suggest that the record of the dispute be reduced to writing, Mr. Adams testified, under oath, that Roy Cohn subjected him to more pressure and abuse over the case of Schine than he had received from all Congressional sources during the past five years - that the pressure was linked with threats to continue and expand the investigation into alleged communists in the Army. According to Adams, McCarthy told him last October that Schine was not of much use to the Committee; that he, McCarthy, hoped Schine would be drafted; but that he didn't want Roy Cohn to know his attitude about Schine. Adams further testified that Mr. Cohn was extremely upset, pacing up and down and in effect wringing his hands when he was refused admission to a secret Radar laboratory at Fort Monmouth. He quoted Cohn as saying: "This is war, we'll really investigate t is place now." Adams further stated that during the following month Cohn telephoned him an average of once a day, at his home and at his office, and became more and more difficult to handle. According to Adams, Cohn flew into violent rages, spouting obscenity and abuse, demanding that Schine be posted in the New York area, and not be shipped out for duty overseas. According to Adams, Cohn threatened to wreck the Army, and said Stevens would be through as Secretary of the Army if Schine should be shipped out. According to Adams, Cohn employed language of abuse first at him and then at Senator McCarthy, Cohn's grievance against McCarthy, according to Adams, was that the Senator wasn't backing him up in the Schine case.

According to Adams' testimony today, Cohn applied most of the pressure on behalf of Schine, but he detailed instances where the Senator had initiated or supported requests that Schine be given special consideration and treatment.

Again according to Adams, he complained to McCarthy about the pressure being applied by Cohn, and when Cohn heard of this, he said: "I'll teach you to go over my head." Adams said he told Cohn that he should not attempt to interfere with the normal workings of Selective Service; that it was not in the national interest to do so in behalf of anyone; whereupon Cohn exploded and said he would "give the Army a little national interest if that's what they wanted." Adams testified that he had several telephone conversations with George Sokolsky, the newspaper columnist. He said Sokolsky said that if Adams would arrange to get Schine into a special Army school, Sokolsky would "move in and see if he couldn't soften McCarthy's pressure on the Army." On another occasion Adams quoted Sokolsky as saying that if Schine were assigned to this special school he would move in and stop this investigation of the army. Adams repeated these conversations to Secretary Stevens, who ordered that Schine must complete his basic training. Adams quoted Sokolsky again as saying: "The Army is being very foolish. It is asking for a two-year fight, and you will be in it that long." And again he quoted Sokolsky as saying if Schine were assigned to the C.I.D. school, he could "straighten out the situation." Mr. Sokolsky could not be reached for comment. After today's hearing Senator McCarthy said that Mr. Adams, at the request of Secretary Stevens, had asked Sokolsky to try to get McCarthy to call off his investigation of the Army. The hearings will resume at 10:00 Eastern Daylight time tomorrow morning.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President, at his news conference today, spoke of leadership. And went on to define it in these words: "Leadership, he said, is the art of getting somebody else to do something you want done because he wants to do it." This reminds me of a bit of facetious advice William Graham Sumner once gave: "If you ever live in a country run by a committee, be on the committee."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday, May 13, 1954

This is the news:

French Premier Laniel tonight won a vote of confidence [redacted] by two votes... 289 to 287. This permits the French to maintain the western front..with the United States and Great Britain..at Geneva. The French National Assembly voted after Premier Laniel explained that the LOST battle of Dien Bien Phu [redacted] .helped delay the enemy's attack on the vital Red River Delta and on Laos. Tonight, in Indo-China, the French report that their troops suffered "serious losses" in stopping a Vietminh attack 30 miles south of Hanoi. Enemy losses are described as "extremely heavy." And at Dien Bien Phu today, a French negotiating mission spent four hours with the victorious enemy discussing [redacted] how to evacuate an estimated 13-hundred wounded ~~French forces~~ troops. The French say all these men will be taken out soon by helicopters and transport planes.

In Geneva today, British Foreign Secretary Eden proposed that the conference [redacted] determine whether there is any use in continuing attempts to reach an agreement on peace for Korea. [redacted]

[redacted]

In Korea, the Swiss and Swedish members of the Neutral nations commission accused Communist Czech[redacted] and Polish members of blocking "the satisfactory policing" of North Korea. The U.N. Command recently accused the enemy of violating the armistice by bringing more men and equipment into Korea..not as replacements but in addition to present forces.

And in Washington the State Department revealed that we have asked the Russians to turn over to us any American prisoners of war, captured in Korea, who may now be in the Soviet Union. The Russians say they are holding no such persons.

In Both the House and Senate today, Republicans and democrats argued over whether there is any bipartisan co-operation on foreign policy..[redacted]. Democratic Senator Lehman of New York said the administration can prove its sincerity by calling in for [redacted] consultations former Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

At the army-McCarthy hearing, Army Counsel John G. Adams

UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION

denied that he ever tried to stop the McCarthy investigation at Fort Monmouth. [redacted]

He denied that he ever tried to buy-off the committee by offering tips on homosexuality or subversion in the [redacted] navy or air force. Adams denied that the army gave special treatment to Private Schine to curry favor with the McCarthy committee. And he denied that he ever tried to wrangle a 25-thousand dollar-a-year law partnership through Roy Cohn. He said this was mentioned only "for amusement." John Adams acknowledged that he [redacted] accepted a fight TICKET and theater tickets from Cohn. He said he later paid him back. And he acknolwdeged that he once asked General Lawton, commandant at Fort Monmouth, to withdraw [redacted] SECURITY risk charges against nine persons. Adams explained that Pentagon screening officials did [redacted] NOT think there was enough evidence against these individuals. He said Lawton refused to withdraw the charges..wanted Secretary Stevens to take responsibility. Adams also said that when Private Schine went to Fort Dix Secretary Stevens notified the commanding officer that "something special was coming." Adams said he never knew of anything like this happening in the case of any other draftee. [redacted]

[redacted]

Attorney General Brownell said today that the Justice Department will look into every legal question raised by the testimony at this hearing.

And former President Truman..in Atlantic City..said he thinks the hearing is..as he put it.."the most disgraceful thing that ever happened to the Senate." Mr. Truman told the C.I.O. Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America that the nation's economy is sick with a Republican ailment which he described as "creeping McKinleyism." He said it is time to do something about the "economic recession" which, he said, has been too big..lasted too long..and inflicted too many cruel hardships on too many people.

President Eisenhower today signed the St. Lawrence Seaway Bill.. authorizing this country to join Canada in digging a new waterway from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes. [redacted]

Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana and Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada today introduced a resolution to sever diplomatic [redacted] relations with Soviet Russia and all other Communist countries.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio, chairman of the Commerce Committee, called for federal regulation of radio and television networks. He said some LOCAL stations are having difficulties negotiating [redacted] affiliations with the various networks.

Mrs. Edward R. Gray, representing the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, [redacted] told a Senate committee that "dog kennels, chicken-houses and abandoned laundries" are being used for schoolhouses. She asked for emergency federal help for school construction.

And the Russians accused a British major..now in London..of spying on Soviet military secrets. They won't let him return to his post in Moscow. Six days ago the British [redacted] gave two Soviet air attaches ten days to leave LONDON [redacted]. They were accused of trying to spy [redacted].

Edward R. Murrow: May 13, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

One aspect, or by-product of the Geneva Conference has received very little attention: It is the consistent propaganda technique employed by the Communist representatives. Communists all over the world are addicted to the re-writing of history. They are attempting to do that at Geneva. Every speech, whether it is made by Molotov, Chou-en-Lai or Nam Il, opens with a long historical analysis going back decades and sometimes centuries; (and the history is generally inaccurate.) The Western representatives become impatient at these thirty and forty-page speeches, while waiting for the final page in which the Communists say what they have to say on the case in point. But it is worth remembering that the Communists at Geneva speak with a purpose; they are fully aware that for hundreds of millions of Asian people they are presenting the only Asiatic history they will ever know. The version of Asian history presented at Geneva - to the boredom, disgust and dismay of the Western representatives, is not aimed at those representatives at all. This is no effort to persuade the West. It is a calculated effort to persuade those in Asia, who get their news and their version of history exclusively from the Communist radio and newspapers.

The focal point and, as Alex Kendrick puts it in a cable from Geneva tonight, the vocal point of all these preliminary Communist discourses in Geneva, has been American policy in the Far East. The falsification and distortion of the American role during the past half-century in Asia were so patent, so obvious, that when they were uttered by Molotov, Chou-en-Lai and Nam Il, the Western representatives looked at each other with horrified amusement, and then decided not to dignify these misrepresentations by refuting them. However, for those Asians who hear or read these speeches, and who have no other source of information - the net result must be to distort the past and jeopardize the future of American policy in Asia.

The Communists are planting an idea, the idea being that the miseries of millions in Asia are the direct result of American policy.

~~Alex Kendrick cables me from Geneva tonight that~~ At this Geneva conference the American news briefings are attended mainly by American correspondents. The British and French correspondents go to their own briefings. But the Russian and Chinese briefings are attended by hundreds of persons from India, Burma, Japan, Indonesia, Pakistan, Ceylon, Egypt - in fact the whole Middle and Far East. When these people hear Communist attacks on colonialism, or against what is always referred to as "American imperialism", they are obviously more impressed than Westerners would be. A certain amount of the Communist line is bound to come through in ~~their~~ some of their dispatches.

These speeches that are so boring to the Western diplomats aren't aimed at them at all. They are aimed rather at those who live in hunger and discontent, all the way from Jordan to Japan.

Yesterday's speech by the Chinese Foreign Minister, Chou-en-Lai, was an example of the technique. He said that in 1945 the peoples of Laos and Cambodia had formed their governments of resistance. He made it appear that these two groups, which he tried to get invited to Geneva, had been formed in 1945. Actually nobody had heard of them until a few months ago, and they were obviously created after the Berlin Conference for trading purposes at the Geneva Conference. Nevertheless, it is now a part of the Communist history of Asia that there were rival regimes in Laos and Cambodia nine years ago. Chou-en-Lai went on to say that the French Colonialists, unwilling to reconcile themselves to the loss of Indochina, "again invaded" that country and thus started the civil war. In point of fact the French were there all the time. This, too, now becomes part of the Communist version of history in Asia. So does the contention that we, as a powerful nation, are interested primarily in replacing France as the colonial and exploiting power in Indochina. This is part of the same pattern of Communist history that contends the South Koreans invaded North Korea, and that we employed germ warfare there. Many of us are disposed to laugh at these Communist tactics, which are frequently so awkward and ridiculous; but we do not yet understand what a tremendous impression they must make on Asiatic minds, which are for the first time being made aware of world politics by Communist indoctrination.

The Communist world spends many, many times what we do on overseas information and propaganda. They are planting ideas in fertile soil - ideas that cannot be destroyed, either by bombast or bombs. This is a competition for the control of men's minds, and for their allegiance. And the results of that competition will, more than anything else, determine the future course of events in all of Asia. If we are to win it, we must work at it and be willing to pay for it.

are determined -

There are those who ~~tend~~ to discount the effectiveness of propaganda in the contest for men's minds. But the Frenchman Du-nwa once pointed out rather significantly that "the sentimental echo of ideas, either good or bad, unfortunately influences man more than do the ideas themselves." And as Percy Bridgeman concluded: "There ~~is no adequate~~ defense against the impact of a new idea except stupidity."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

French Premier Laniel tonight won a vote of confidence by two votes, 289 to 287. This permits the French to maintain the western front with the United States and Great Britain at Geneva. The French National Assembly voted after Premier Laniel explained that the lost battle of Dien Bien Phu helped delay the enemy's attack on thevital Red River Delta and on Laos. Tonight, in Indo-China, the French report that their troops suffered "serious losses" in stopping a Vietminh attack 30 miles south of Hanoi. Enemy losses are described as "extremely heavy." And at Dien Bien Phu today, a French negotiating mission spent four hours with the victoriou enemy discussing how to evacuate an estimated 13-hundred wounded troops. The French say all these men will be taken out soon by helicopters and transport planes.

In Geneva today, British Foreign Secretary Eden proposed that the conference determine whether there is any use in continuing attempts to reach an agreement on peace for Korea.

In Korea, the Swiss and Swedish members of the Neutral nations commission accused Communist Czech and Polish members of blocking "the satisfactory policing" of North Korea. The U.N. Command recently accused the enemy of violating the armistice by bringing more men and equipment into Korea - not as replacements but but in addition to present forces.

And in Washington the State Department revealed that we have asked the Russians to turn over to us any American prisoners of war, captured in Korea, who may now be in the Soviet Union. The Russians say they are holding no such persons.

In Both the House and Senate today, Republicans and democrats argued over whether there is any bipartisan cooperation on foreign policy. Democratic Senator Lehman of New York said the administration can prove its sincerity by calling in for consultations former Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing, Army Counsel John G. Adams denied under cross-examination that he ever tried to stop the McCarthy investigation at Fort Monmouth. He denied that he ever tried to buy-off the committee by offering tips on homosexuality or subversion in the navy or air force. Adams denied that the army gave special treatment to Private Schine to curry favor with the McCarthy committee. And he denied that he ever tried to wrangle a 25-thousand dollar a year law partnership through Roy Cohn. He said this was mentioned only "for amusement." John Adams acknowledged that he accepted a fight ticket and theater tickets from Cohn. He said he later paid him back. And he acknowledged that he once asked General Lawton, commandant at Fort Monmouth, to withdraw security risk charges against nine persons. Adams explained that Pentagon screening officials did not think there was enough evidence against these individuals. He said Lawton refused to withdraw the charges - wanted Secretary Stevens to take responsibility. Adams also said that when Private Schine went to Fort Dix, Secretary Stevens notified the commanding officer that "something special was coming." Adams said he never knew of anything like this happening in the case of any other draftee.

Attorney General Brownell said today that the Justice Department will look into every legal question raised by the testimony at this hearing.

And former President Truman in Atlantic City said he thinks the hearing is as he put it, "the most disgraceful thing that ever happened to the Senate." Mr. Truman told the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America that the nation's economy is sick with a Republican ailment which he described as "creeping McKinleyism. He said it is time to do something about the "economic recession" which, he said, has been too big, lasted too long, and inflicted too many cruel hardships on too many people.

President Eisenhower today signed the St. Lawrence Seaway Bill authorizing this country to join Canada in digging a new waterway from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes.

Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana and Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada today introduced a resolution to sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia and all other Communist countries.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio, chairman of the Commerce Committee, called for federal regulation of radio and television networks. He said some local stations are having difficulties negotiating affiliations with the various networks.

Mrs. Edward R. Gray, representing the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, told a Senate committee that "dog kennels, chicken-houses and abandoned laundries" are being used for schoolhouses. She asked for emergency federal help for school construction.

And the Russians accused a British major, now in London, of spying on Soviet military secrets. They won't let him return to his post in Moscow. Six days ago the British gave two Soviet air attaches ten days to leave London. They were accused of trying to spy.

One aspect, or by-product of the Geneva Conference has received very little attention: It is the consistent propaganda technique employed by the Communist representatives. Communists all over the world are addicted to the re-writing of history. They are attempting to do that at Geneva. Every speech, whether it is made by Molotov, Chou-en-Lai or Nam Il, opens with a long historical analysis going back decades and sometimes centuries; and the history is generally inaccurate. The Western representatives become impatient at these thirty and forty-page speeches, while waiting for the final page in which the Communists say what they have to say on the case in point. But it is worth remembering that the Communists at Geneva speak with a purpose; they are fully aware that for hundreds of millions of Asian people they are presenting the only Asiatic history they will ever know. The version of Asian history presented at Geneva - to the boredom, disgust and dismay of the Western representatives, is not aimed at those representatives at all. This is no effort to persuade the West. It is a calculated effort to persuade those in Asia, who get their news and their version of history exclusively from the Communist radio and newspapers. The focal point and, as Alex Kendrick puts it in a cable from Geneva tonight, the focal point of all these preliminary Communist discourses in Geneva, has been American policy in the Far East. The falsification and distortion of the American role during the past half-century in Asia were so patent, so obvious, that when they were uttered by Molotov, Chou-en-Lai and Nam Il, the Western representatives looked at each other with horrified amusement, and then decided not to dignify these misrepresentations by refuting them. However, for those Asians who hear or read these speeches, and who have no other source of information - the net result must be to distort the past and jeopardize the future of American policy in Asia. The Communists are planting an idea, the idea being that the miseries of millions in Asia are the direct result of American policy.

At this Geneva conference, the American news briefings are attended mainly by American correspondents. The British and French correspondents go to their own briefings. But the Russian and Chinese briefings are attended by hundreds of persons from India, Burma, Japan, Indonesia, Pakistan, Ceylon, Egypt - in fact the whole Middle and Far East. When these people hear Communist attacks on colonialism, or against what is always referred to as "American imperialism", they are obviously more impressed than Westerners would be. A certain amount of the Communist line is bound to come through in some of their dispatches. These speeches that are so boring to the Western diplomats aren't aimed at them at all. They are aimed rather at those who live in hunger and discontent, all the way from Jordan to Japan. Yesterday's speech by the Chinese Foreign Minister, Chou-en-Lai, was an example of the technique. He said that in 1945 the peoples of Laos and Cambodia had formed their governments of resistance. He made it appear that these two groups, which he tried to get invited to Geneva, had been formed in 1945. Actually nobody had heard of them until a few months ago, and they were obviously created after the Berlin Conference for trading purposes at the Geneva Conference. Nevertheless, it is now a part of the Communist history of Asia that there were rival regimes in Laos and Cambodia nine years ago. Chou-en-lai went on to say that the French Colonialists, unwilling to reconcile themselves to the loss of Indochina, "again invaded" that country and thus started the civil war. In point of fact the French were there all the time. This, too, now becomes part of the Communist version of history in Asia. So does the contention that we, as a powerful nation, are interested primarily in replacing France as the colonial and exploiting power in IndoChina. This is part of the same pattern of Communist history that contends the South Koreans invaded North Korea, and that we employed germ warfare there. Many of us are disposed to laugh at these Communist tactics, which are frequently so ackward and ridiculous; but we do not yet understand what a tremendous impression they must make on Asiatic minds, which are for the first time being made aware of world politics by Communist indoctrination. The Communist world spends many, many times what we do on overseas information and propaganda. They are planting ideas in fertile soil - ideas that cannot be destroyed, either by bombast or bombs. This is a competition for the control of men's minds, and for their allegiance. And the results of that competitio will, more than anything else, determine the future course of events in all of Asia. If we are to win it, we must work at it and be willing to pay for it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are those who are determined to discount the effectiveness of propagan in the contest for men's minds. But the Frenchman Dunoir once pointed out rather significantly that "the sentimental echo of ideas, either good or bad, unfortunately influences man more than do the ideas themselves."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, May 14, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

Army Counselor John Adams said today he is under orders from the "executive department" not to discuss any further details of a high-level conference held last January in Attorney General (Brownell's) office. The meeting, first mentioned at the hearings on Monday, was attended by Henry Cabot Lodge and the President's Assistant Sherman Adams - among others. (It has already been established that at this meeting Sherman Adams first suggested that the Army keep a written record of its difficulties with Senator Mc Carthy and his staff.)

Democratic members of the committee investigating the Army-McCarthy dispute indicated that first of all they want to know who gave the order prohibiting Adams from discussing that meeting. And Senator McClellan said further that not only is the committee entitled to know what went on there, but he will press for those who attended to testify -- unless some law prevents this. The question will be brought up again on Monday.

THE WHITE HOUSE HAS "NO COMMENT."

In another development today, the three Republican members of the Committee - Senators Dirksen, Mundt and Potter all testified under oath that they were approached last January by Army representatives seeking to stop proposed McCarthy Committee subponeas for Army Loyalty Board members. (This was two months before the Army issued its critical report of Senator McCarthy and his aides.) Senators Dirksen and Mundt said they had been advised at that time of the "pressures" Roy Cohn was exerting on behalf of Private David Shine. Both said they ~~advised~~ TOLD McCarthy that if the allegations were true Cohn should be dropped as chief counsel for the committee. McCarthy, in cross-examination, established that he told both men he regarded the army's tactics as "blackmail" and an effort to get him to stop his investigation of communists in the army.

The Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Leonard Hall, said he would like to see the hearings come to a quick end. He thinks they're taking attention away from the President's legislative program.

The French made known tonight that the first of their "mercy" planes has landed at Dien Bien Phu to begin the airlift of wounded from Indo-China. So far, the plane - a helicopter - has not returned to base. But this is attributed more to poor flying weather than earlier speculation that the Vietminh may be delaying [redacted] evacuation for "political reasons." Some thirty miles south of Hanoi, the French acknowledge that they have suffered "serious losses" in beating back an enemy attack.

There are now reasonably reliable reports that representatives of this country and France will meet soon in Paris to discuss closer cooperation in localizing the Indo-China war.

At Geneva today, Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov made what is regarded as an "important concession" when he agreed that any settlement in Indo-China would only be effective if it were supervised by a neutral nations commission. (The French had been asking for the same thing.)

At an Armed Forces Day Dinner in Washington, Deputy Secretary of Defense Anderson said that the [redacted] pattern of modern aggression is "conquest on the installment plan." Since this is the case, he said it is of "transcedent importance that we and our allies work collectively to stop Communist gains in any area of the world."

[redacted]

My colleague, David Schoenbrun has just returned to Paris after nearly a month in Indo China. Much of what he had to say he couldn't say from there. But he's safely home now and this is what he has to report...

Dave Schoenbrun ~~spoke of~~ Recorded the need for courage, hope and faith... particularly among men in battle. A French Huguenot soldier La-New once said:"Bravery founded on hope of recompense, experience of success, or rage or ignorance of danger, is common bravery. True bravery proposes a just end, measures the dangers, and meets the result, with calmness and unyielding decision."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 14, 1954
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has just returned to Paris after nearly a month in Indo-China. Much of what he had to say he couldn't say from there, but he's safely home now and this is what he has to report.

SCHOENBRUN: There isn't a soldier, diplomat, or politician in Indo-China who doesn't believe fervently that that country can still be saved, yet every one of them will tell you frankly it is all but lost. That's what they told me in these past four weeks, in Saigon, capital of the south; in the rich ricefields of Cochin China; in Tourane, the aero-naval base on the central coast, up north at the port of Haiphong where American civil air pilots, - cat-men, they call them, flew their futile missions to Dienbienphu; in Hanoi itself, heart of the rich delta country, I heard Frenchmen, Americans, and Viet Namese torn by frustration and anger, saying they want to fight, that they can win, and charge bitterly that they are being deserted. Only yesterday morning I moved through the steaming streets of Saigon out to the airport at Tongsanuit (?) and there I saw the Commander-in-Chief of the Viet Namese Army, 38-year-old General Nguyen Van Hinh, a much-decorated veteran bomber pilot of thelast war. He was there to see off his wife, whom he was sending to France to appeal for help, for nurses and equipment and for courage to continue fighting. General Hinh said to me: "Give us arms, give us officers to help train my men, but, above all we need proof of confidence and determination that you're not going to quit." The situation is grave, the General said, and time is very short to prevent disaster.

At that same airport was another Viet Namese official to take my plane, the Minister of Public Works, with his wife and his young son going to France for a conference. That leaves only one major Minister of the Viet Namese Government left in Indo-China. The Premier is here in France, the Vice Premier, the Foreign Minister, the Minister for Economic Affairs, all here in France or in Geneva. More than that, the Viet Namese Chief-of-State is here, too, Emperor Bao Dai, the Empress and their two sons. Every major leader of Indo-China is here in Europe and some of them with their families. Now, maybe they have excellent reasons for being here. Geneva is certainly vitally important, but people back there are asking -- do you have to take your children to an international conference or to a plush villa on the French Riviera? I've heard that question too often these past few days in Saigon and in Hanoi. Three days ago I sat in a restaurant in Hanoi with five Nationalist leaders, three of them men who used to be on Ho Chi Minh's side and who came over to our side when they saw what the Communists were doing to their country and now they are bitter about our side. What has happened to America? ... they asked me... Why have you deserted us? For them, President Eisenhower's statement that America would accept a modus vivendi with the Communists was the death knell for Indo-China and Mr. Dulles' statement was interpreted up there in Hanoi as the surrender of all north Tonkin. Now, these statements were made to me in the presence of the American Vice Consul in Hanoi, Mr. Sam Brown, and later that night I sat with Brown at his house and we listened to the pounding of artillery on the outskirts of town as he told me how Nationalist leaders keep asking him every day ... why has America backed down, why have you deserted us?

Two days ago, General "Iron Mike" O'Daniel pounded his fist on a table and said to me: "I tell you, Schoenbrun, we can win this war. We can have ten good Viet Nam divisions in six months and with what the Franch already have, why, these people can stop the Communists and drive them back." America's charge d'affaires in Saigon, a brilliant, veteran diplomat, Robert McClintock, nodded agreement with "Iron Mike." A room full of the top French political officers there later that night at a farewell dinner told me the same thing. I heard no defeatism from any of the responsible people in Indo-China, but I did hear and see an almost desperate crisis for all of these people, including "Iron Mike," who's the most optimistic, admitted bluntly that the situation is grave. Estimates run from the rosiest guess of two months to the gloomiest prediction of twoweeks for all Indo-China to be lost if immediate steps are not taken.

Here are the cold facts for the gloom and then I'll give you their recommended action. First, the military situation. The delta is teetering on the brink of disaster. The Communists have at least one hundred thousand armed men inside the delta; hold 90% of the villages. General Rene Cogny has a secret map which shows Communist positions in red. He calls it his "smallpox map" for it's covered all over with red blotches. Inside Hanoi itself there are some five hundred to seven hundred and fifty suicide troops ready at a signal to attack key installations. One week ago I rode into a fire fight in the streets of Hanoi only two blocks from my hotel. Last night the enemy attacked in force, only thirty miles south of the city, and then there are those five divisions that took Dienbienphu, flushed with victory now so that, tired and mauled as they are, they might still be thrown against the delta, rain or no rain, and they're only a four-day march away at most. In the south, in Saigon, there are almost two battalions of Communists infiltrated into the heart of the capital disguised as fishermen or beggars or bicycle taxi boys. Another three battalions are across the Mekong River on the Cambodian frontier menacing the road that links Saigon with Pnompenh. That's the military situation. The Commanding General of Indo-China, Henri Navarre, himself told me it is grave. Politically, it's almost worse. There's no government, there's no Chief-of-State, there's a population and the great majority pro-Viet Minh. They have no independence treaty, no democratic assembly. They are gangsters in charge of the security police in Saigon. They're bandits and extortionists running brothels, gambling casinos, and opium dens right in the heart of the city and there are no allies. France is divided and weak. Britain refuses action and America is talking big and doing nothing. Which side would you join if you were a Viet Namese peasant? What are we offering these people as an answer to Communism? No intervention, no reenforcements, no democracy, no government, and no protection. That is why Indo-China is all but lost and yet I saw and heard from good and brave men there, who have not given up, - send the Emperor back, they say, and make him lead his people. Let America back up its promise not to let Indo-China fall. Give us hope and give us arms and remember this -- there isn't much time left.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Army Counselor John Adams said today he is under orders from the "executive department" not to discuss any further details of a high-level conference held last January in Attorney General Brownell's office. The meeting, first mentioned at the hearings on Monday, was attended by Henry Cabot Lodge and the President's Assistant Sherman Adams - among others. It has already been established that at this meeting Sherman Adams first suggested that the Army keep a written record of its difficulties with Senator McCarthy and his staff.

Democratic members of the committee investigating the Army-McCarthy dispute indicated that first of all they want to know who gave the order prohibiting Adams from discussing that meeting. And Senator McClellan said further that not only is the committee entitled to know what went on there, but he will press for those who attended to testify - unless some law prevents this. The question will be brought up again on Monday. The White House has "no comment."

In another development today, the three Republican members of the Committee - Senators Dirksen, Mundt and Potter all testified under oath that they were approached last January by Army representatives seeking to stop proposed McCarthy Committee subpoenas for Army Loyalty Board members. This was two months before the Army issued its critical report of Senator McCarthy and his aides. Senators Dirksen and Mundt said they had been advised at that time of the "pressures" Roy Cohn was exerting on behalf of Private David Schine. Both said they told McCarthy that if the allegations were true Cohn should be dropped as chief counsel for the committee. McCarthy, in criss-examination, established that he told both men he regarded the army's tactics as "blackmail" and an effort to get him to stop his investigation of communists in the army.

The Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Leonard Hall, said he would like to see the hearings come to a quick end. He thinks they're taking attention away from the President's legislative program.

Tongsanuit and there I saw the Commander-in-Chief of the Viet Namese Army, 38-year-old General Nguyen Van Hinh, a much-decorated veteran bomber pilot of the last war. He was there to see off his wife, whom he was sending to France to appeal for help, for nurses and equipment and for courage to continue fighting. General Hinh said to me: "Give us arms, give us officers to help train my men, but , above all we need proof of confidence and determination that you're not going to quit." The situation is grave, the General said, and time is very short to prevent disaster. At that same airport was another Viet Namese official to take my plane, the Minister of Public Works, with his wife and his young son going to France for a conference. That leaves only one major Minister of the Viet Namese Government left in Indo-China. The Premier is here in France, the Vice Premier, the Foreign Minister, the Minister for Economic Affairs, all here in France or in Geneva. More than that, the Viet Namese Chief-of-State is here, too, Emperior Bao Dai, the Empress and their two sons. Every major leader of Indo-China is here in Europe and some of them with their families. Now, maybe they have excellent reasons for being here. Geneva is certainly vitally important, but people back there are asking - do you have to take your children to an international conference or to a plush villa on the French Riviera? I've heard that question too often these past few days in Saigon and in Hanoi. Three days ago I sat in a restaurant in Hanoi with five Nationalist leaders, three of them who used to be on Ho Chi Minh's side and who came over to our side when they saw what the Communists were doing to their country and now they are bitter about our side. What has happened to America? they asked me, Why have you deserted us? For them, President Eisenhower's statement that America would accept a modus vivendi with the Communists was the death knell for Indo-China and Mr. Dulles' statement was interpreted up there in Hanoi as the surrender of all north Tonkin. Now, these statements were made to me in the presence of the American Vice Consul in Hanoi, Mr. Sam Brown, and later that night I sat with Brown at his house and we listened to the pounding of artillery on the outskirts of town as he told me how Nationalist leaders keep asking him every day, why has America backed down, why have you deserted us?

The French made known tonight that the first of their "mercy" planes has landed at Dien Bien Phu to begin the airlift of wounded from Indo-China. So far, the plane - a helicopter - has not returned to base. But this is attributed more to poor flying weather than earlier speculation that the Vietminh may be delaying evacuation for "political reasons." Some thirty miles south of Hanoi, the French acknowledge that they have suffered "serious losses" in beating back an enemy attack.

There are now reasonably reliable reports that representatives of this country and France will meet soon in Paris to discuss closer cooperation in localizing the Indo-China war.

At Geneva today, Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov made what is regarded as an "important concession" when he agreed that any settlement in Indo-China would only be effective if it were supervised by a neutral nations commission. (The French had been asking for the same thing.)

At an Armed Forces day Dinner in Washington, Deputy Secretary of Defense Anderson said that the pattern of modern aggression is "conquest on the installment plan." Since this is the case, he said it is of "transcedent importance that we and our allies work collectively to stop Communist gains in any area of the world."

My colleague, David Schoenbrun has just returned to Paris after nearly a month in Indo-China. Much of what he had to say he couldn't say from there. But he's safely home now and this is what he has to report:

SCHOENBRUN: There isn't a soldier, diplomat, or politician in Indo-China who doesn't believe fervently that that country can still be saved, yet every one of them will tell you frankly it is all but lost. That's what they told me in these past four weeks, in Saigon, capital of the south; in the rich ricefields of Cochin China; in Tourane, the aero-naval base on the central coast, up north at the port of Haiphong where American civil air pilots - catmen, they call them, flew their futile missions to Dienbienphu; in Hanoi itself, heart of the rich delta country, I heard Frenchmen, Americans, and Viet Namese torn by frustration and anger, saying they want to fight, that they can win, and charge bitterly that they are being deserted. Only yesterday morning I moved through the steaming stree s of Saigon out to the airport at

Two days ago, General "Iron Mike" O'Daniel pounded his fist on a table and said to me: "I tell you, Schoenbrun, we can win this war. We can have ten good Viet Nam divisions in six months and with what the French already have, why, these people can stop the Communists and drive them back." America's charge d'affaire in Saigon, a brilliant, veteran diplomat, Robert McClintock, nodded agreement with "Iron Mike." A room full of the top French political officers there later that night at a farewell dinner told me the same thing. I heard no defeatism from any of the responsible people in Indo-China, but I did hear and see an almost desperate crisis for all of these people, including "Iron Mike," who's the most optimistic, admitted bluntly that the situation is grave. Estimates run from the rosiest guess of two months to the gloomiest prediction of two weeks for all Indo-China to be lost if immediate steps are not taken. Here are the cold facts for the gloomand then I'll give you their recommended action. First, the military situation. The delta is teetering on the brink of disaster. The Communists have at least one hundred thousand armed men inside the delta; hold 90% of the villages. General Rene Cogny has a secret map which shows Communist positions in red. He calls it his "smallpox map" for it's covered all over with red blotches. Inside Hanoi itself there are some five hundred to seven hundred and fifty suicide troops ready at a signal to attack key installations. One week ago I rode into a fire fight in the streets of Hanoi only two blocks from my hotel. Last night the enemy attacked in force, only thirty miles south of the city, and then there are those five divisions that took Dienbienphu, flushed with victory now so that, tired and mauled as they are, they might still be thrown against the delta, rain or no rain, and they're only a four-day march away at most. In the south, in Saigon, there are almost two battalions of Communists infiltrated into the heart of the capital disguised as fishermen or beggars or bicycle taxi boys. Another three battalions are across the Mekong River on the Cambodian frontier menacing the road that links Saigon with Pnompenh. That's the military situation. The Commanding General of Indo-China, Henri Navarre, himself told me it is grave. Politically, it's almost worse. There's no government, there's no Chief-of-State, there's a population and the great majority pro-Viet Minh. They have no independence treaty, no democratic assembly. They are gangsters in charge of the security police in Saigon. They're bandits and extortionists running brothels, gambling casinos, and opium dens right in the heart of the city and there are no allies. France is divided and weak. Britain refuses action and America is talking big and doing nothing. Which side would you join if you were a Viet Namese peasant? What are we offering these people as an answer to Communism? No intervention, no reinforcements, no democracy, no government, and no protection. That is why Indo-China is all but lost and yet I saw and heard from good and brave men there, who have not given up, - send the Emperor back, they say, and make him lead his people. Let America back up its promise not to let Indo-China fall. Give us hope and give us arms and remember this - there isn't much time left.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow, in New York.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Dave Schoenbrun recorded the need for courage, hope and faith - particularly among men in battle. A French Huguenot soldier La-Nue once said: "Bravery founded on hope of recompense, experience of success, or rage or ignorance of danger is common bravery. True bravery proposes a just end, measures the dangers and meets the result with calmness and unhielding decision."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, May 17, 1954

This is the news:

The Supreme Court ruled today that it is unconstiutional to segregate white and negro children in [redacted] grade and high schools./The court's decision was unanimous./The justices declared that the "seperate but equal facilities" doctrine that has prevailed in 17 states and sections of four others "has no place in education."/Chief Justice Warren, speaking for his colleagues, said such seperate educational facilities are inherently unequal...segregation has no place in education..the opportunity for education [redacted] is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms./But the court ordered no immediate action to put its decision into effect./Instead it indicated that it will take at least until the end of this year..probably longer..to decide just what to do./The court will hear arguments from the states and persons concerned on how segregation in the public schools should be ended./It may let the states decide what to do; or perhaps lower federal courts will study the decision and determine how and when to put [redacted] IT into effect./In any EVENT, [redacted]

[redacted].Chief Justice Warren said in part:"I" these days it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms." The chief justice continued:"To seperate grade and high school children from others of a similar age and qualifications solely because of their race, generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone."

In a number of the affected states there were indications from high officials that the new ruling will be followed. But in Georgia, Governor Talmadge accused the Supreme Court of reducing the Constiution to" a mere scrap of paper." He says today's decision "raises a grave question as to the future of the nation"...and pledges to maintain segregation "without violence." IN South Carolina, Governor Byrnes.. a former member of our highest court.. said he was shocked...called on his people to exercise restraint and preserve order while he studies the decision. On the other hand, Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University, calls the decision

"the most important national mandate in civil rights since the emancipation proclamation." Governor Stanley of Virginia has called on his people for "cool heads, calm study and sound judgement."

In Washington, Senator Russell, a leader among southern Democrats, said that today's opinion "demonstrates that the Supreme Court is becoming a political arm of the executive branch of the government." Democratic Senator Maybank of South Carolina thinks it's "a shameful political rather than judicial decision." Senator Eastland of Mississippi says "the south will not abide by nor obey this legislative decision by a political court." Senator Lehman of New York says "all free men throughout the world must hail the decision with joy." C.I.O. President Reuther calls it "a heart-warming re-affirmation of the American democratic principles." And Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People told reporters: "As Joe Louis would say, I'm glad we won."

The Army-McCarthy hearings came to a halt today..at least for one week. The committee voted to recess after reciving a letter from the President saying that army officials have been forbidden to testify about the part the White House and its aides played in the controversey. I'd like to review the issue in a few minutes.

In Indo-China today the French broadcast a "last chance" ultimatum to the Communists to live up to a truce for the evacuation of French wounded from captured Dien Bien Phu..or be subjected to an all-out air attack. The French say the enemy has been using the truce to move [redacted] his men and arms from the Dien Bien Phu area to the Red River Delta..for a new assault on Hanoi. The Vietminh blame France for the collapse of the evacuation of the wounded. The enemy says the French have not sent planes for their men. The French say the enemy has not repaired the airfield to make it possible to land hospital planes.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that Great Britain will not commit itself to join a Southeast Asian alliance until after the Geneva conference is over.

The State Department announced tonight that "an important shipment of arms" has been sent to left-wing Guatamala "from Soviet-controlled territory." The Department says we "consider that this is a development of gravity." The shipment came from the [redacted] port of Stettin in [redacted] Poland. Its now being unloaded in Guatamala. The State Department does not say what we are going to do about it.

House Democratic Whip McCormack today called on the President to rebuke Postmaster General Summerfield for blaming the Democrats for the crisis in Indo-China. McCormack said "even a juvenile moron" wouldn't make the claim Summerfield did in a speech on Saturday. And in the Senate, Republican Senator Ferguson appealed to the Democrats to work with his party to shape a wise policy for Asia. He said: "The problems are extremely complex and are of great difficulty. To meet them successfully is going to require great patience, great forebearing and great determination. Let us work together."

Here in New York, Racketeer Frank Costello was sentenced to five years in prison and fined 30-thousand dollars for income tax evasion. The 63-year-old Costello was sent to jail immediately. Judge Medina refused to release him in bail pending an appeal.

Edward R. Murrow: May 17, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The confusion in the Army-McCarthy dispute has now been compounded to the point where the distinguished Senators have decided, by a straight Party vote - four to three - to recess the hearings for one week. This action was taken after President Eisenhower had issued instructions that no one in the Executive branch of the Government should testify about a meeting on January 21st which was attended by Attorney General Brownell, White House Advisor Sherman Adams, Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and others. The President said he was "maintaining the proper separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches of the government, in accordance with his responsibilities and duties under the Constitution." In so doing, he was defending the rights of the executive department that had been maintained by Presidents from George Washington through Harry Truman.

But John Adams, the Army counsel, had volunteered the information about the meeting, and had said that Sherman Adams had suggested that he start making the record of the Army's difficulties with Senator McCarthy and his staff. Today John Adams refused to talk any more about that meeting. Then came the fireworks. Senator McClellan thought responsibility for the Army's charges should perhaps be shifted from Secretary Stevens to some "higher authority." Senator Jackson thought there would be a grave injustice to everybody concerned, unless the whole story came out. Senator McCarthy called the President's order "an Iron curtain", a "cover up", "an almost unbelievable situation, which the American people will not stand for." McCarthy was sure the President wouldn't have issued that order "if he knew what it was all about". Senator McCarthy said he might have been doing an injustice to Struve Hensel and Adams of the Army, because he thought they had prepared the charges against him. Now he has his doubts.

McCarthy wanted to know what Ambassador Lodge was doing at that meeting; and also what part Attorney General Brownell had played in the whole affair. Almost lost in the day's proceedings, was the fact that Attorney General Brownell had ruled against publication of the two-and-a-quarter page document, which McCarthy had introduced as being a letter from J. Edgar Hoover, and which Mr. Hoover has denied having written. Before the vote to recess for a week was taken, Chairman Mundt said: "It may well be, that the sub-committee has been asking the wrong questions, of the wrong people, for a long time."

The Democratic members of the committee predicted that this long recess would mean that the hearings are terminated - that they won't start again. It was contended by the Republican members that the week's recess would provide an opportunity for discussion with the White House, and the possibility that the President might change his mind about the secrecy order. The Democrats cried, "Whitewash"; the Republicans contended this did not mean a discontinuation of the hearings. Senator McCarthy said when the President has it explained to him what he signed "I am sure he will revoke it."

This is not likely to happen unless the President chooses to reverse his Attorney General, and ignore impressive precedents that go back to George Washington.

This dispute had ultimately to reach to the White House, because it is a dispute between Senator McCarthy and the Army, and the President is the Commander-in-Chief. It might be possible, even under the unprecedented rules of the committee, to get at the truth of the original charges and counter-charges; but if the investigation is to be pursued throughout the entire chain of command - if motives are to be sought behind or beyond those who took action - the result can only be confusion, and an unprecedented violation of the traditional rights of the Executive Department.

The Republicans have sought to shorten and limit the investigation. The Democrats - conscious that this Republican family fight does them no harm politically - have opposed it. Now the issue has become the ancient one of a contest between the executive and legislative departments of the government. If the President stands firm on his decision of today, and if Senator McCarthy acts on his contention that "You can't go on with these hearings with the President's secrecy order in effect", then one way or another these hearings will end without conclusion; but the struggle between the executive and legislative branches of the government will continue.

We have been speaking of the relationship between the executive and legislative branches of this government. ~~More than 50 years ago~~, Teddy Roosevelt once remarked that "the government is us; we are the government - you and I." And with government...as with individuals...Josh Billings offered this advice:"A secret ceases to be a secret, if it is once confided. It is like a dollar bill - once broken, it's never a dollar again."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Supreme Court ruled today that it is unconstitutional to segregate white and negro children in grade and high schools. The court's decision was unanimous. The justices declared that the "separate but equal facilities" doctrine that has prevailed in 17 states and sections of four others "has no place in education." Chief Justice Warren, speaking for his colleagues, said such separate educational facilities are inherently unequal - segregation has no place in education - the opportunity for education is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms. But the court ordered no immediate action to put its decision into effect. Instead it indicated that it will take at least until the end of this year - probably longer - to decide just what to do. The court will hear arguments from the states and persons concerned on how segregation in the public schools should be ended. It may let the states decide what to do; or perhaps lower federal courts will study the decision and determine how and when to put it into effect. In any event, Chief Justice Warren said in part: "In these days it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms." The chief justice continued: "To separate and high school children from others of a similar age and qualifications solely because of their race, generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone." In a number of the affected states there were indicatic from high officials that the new ruling will be followed. But in Georgia, Governor Talmadge accused the Supreme Court of reducing the Constitution to "a mere scrap of paper." He says today's decision "raises a grave question as to the future of the nation" and pledges to maintain segregation "without violence." In South Carolina, Governor Byrnes, a former member of our highest court, said he was shocked, called on his people to exercise restraint and preserve order while he studies the decision. On the other hand, Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University, calls the decision "the most important national mandate in civil rights since the emancipation proclamation." Governor Stanley of Virginia has called on his people for "cool heads, calm study and sound judgment."

In Washington, Senator Russell, a leader among southern Democrats, said that today's opinion "demonstrates that the Supreme Court is becoming a political arm of the executive branch of the government." Democratic Senator Maybank of South Carolina thinks it's "a shameful political rather than judicial decision." Senator Eastland of Mississippi says "the south will not abide by nor obey this legislative deicsion by a political court." Senator Lehman of New York says "all free men throughout the world must hail the decision with joy." C.I.O. President Reuther calls it "a heart-warming re-affirmation of the American democratic principles." And Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People told reporters: "As Joe Louis would say, 'I'm glad we won.'"

The Army-McCarthy hearings came to a halt today - at least for one week. The committee voted to recess after receiving a letter from the President saying that army officials have been forbidden to testify about the part the White House and its aides played in the controversey. I'd like to review the issue in a few minutes.

In Indo-China today the French broadcast a "last chance" ultimatum to the Communists to live up to a truce for the evacuation of French wounded from captured Dienbienphu or be subjected to an all-out air attack. The French say the enemy has been using the truce to move his men and arms from the Dienbienphu area to the Red River Delta for a new assault on Hanoi. The Vietminh blame France for the collapse of the evacuation of the wounded. The enemy says the French have not sent planes for their men. The French say the enemy has not repaired the airfield to make it possible to land hospital planes.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that Great Britain will not commit itself to join a Southeast Asian alliance until after the Geneva conference is over.

The State Department announced tonight that "an important shipment of arms" has been sent to left-wing Guatamala "from Soviet-controlled territory." The Department says we "consider that this is a development of gravity." The shipment came from the port of Stettin in Poland. Its now being unloaded in Guatamala. The State Department does not say what we are going to do about it.

House Democratic Whip McCormack today called on the President to rebuke Postmaster General Summerfield for blaming the Democrats for the crisis in Indo-China. McCormack said "even a juvenile moron" wouldn't make this claim Summerfield did in a speech on Saturday. And in the Senate, Republican Senator Ferguson appealed to the Democrats to work with his party to shape a wise policy for Asia. He said: "The problems are extremely complex and are of great difficulty. To mmet them successfully is going to require great patience, great forebearing and great determination. Let us work together."

Here in New York, Racketeer Frank Costello was sentenced to five years in prison and fined 30-thousand dollars for income tax evasion. The 63-year-old Costello was sent to jail immediately. Judge Medina refused to release him in bail pending an appeal.

The confusion in the Armh-McCarthy dispute has now been compounded to the point where the distinguished Senators have decided, by a straight Party vote - four to three - to recess the hearings for one week. This action was taken after President Eisenhower had issued instructions that no one in the Executive branch of the Government shoul testify about a meeting on January 21st which was attended by Attorney General Brownell, White House Advisor Sherman Adams, Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and others. The President said he was "maintaining the proper separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches of the government, in accordance with his responsibilities and duties under the Constitution." In so doing, he was defending the rights of the executive department that had been maintained by Presidents from George Washington through Harry Truman. But John Adams, the Army counsel, had volunteered the information about the meeting, and had said that Sherman Adams had suggested that he start making the record of the Army's difficulties with Senator McCarthy and his staff. Today John Adams refused to talk any more about that meeting. Then came the fireworks. Senator McClellan thought responsibility for the Army's charges should perhaps be shifted from Secretary Stevens to some "higher authority." Senator Jackson thought there would be a grave injustice to everybody concerned unless the whole story came out. Senator McCarthy called the President's order "an Iron curtain," a "cover up," "an almost unbelievable situation which the American people will not stand for." McCart y was sure the President wouldn't have issued that order "if he knew what it was all about." Senator McCarthy said he might have been doing an injustice to Struve Hensel and Adams of the Army, because he thought they had prepared the charges against him. Now he has his doubts. McCarthy wanted to know what Ambassaodr Lodge was doing at that meeting; and also what part Attorney General Brownell had played in the whole affair. Almost lost in the day's proceedings was the fact that Attorney General Brownell had ruled against publication of the two-and-a-quarter page document which McCarthy had introduced as being a letter from J. Edgar Hoover, and which Mr. Hoover has denied having written. Before the vote to recess for a week was taken, Chairman Mundt said: "It may well be that the sub-committee has been asking the wrong questions of the wrong people for a long time." The Democratic members of the committee preducted that this long recess would mean that the hearings are terminated - that they won't start again. It was contended by the Republican members that the week's recess would provide an opportunity for discussion with the White House, and the possibility that the President might change his mind about the secrecy order. The Democrats cried: "Whitewash;" the Republicans contended this did not mean a discontinuation of the hearings. Senator McCarthy said when the President has it "explained to him what he signed" I am sure he will revoke it."

This is not likely to happen unless the President chooses to reverse his Attorney General, and ignore impressive precedents that go back to George Washington.

This dispute had ultimately to reach to the White House, because it is a dispute between Senator McCarthy and the Army, and the President is the Commander-in-Chief. It might be possible, even under the unprecedented rules of the committee, to get at the truth of the original charges and counter-charges; but if the investigation is to be pursued throughout the entire chain of command - if motives are to be sought behind or beyond those who took action - the result can only be confusion, and an unprecedented violation of the traditional rights of the Executive Department.

The Republicans have sought to shorten and limit the investigation. The Democrats - conscious that this Republican family fight does them no harm politically have opposed it. Now the issue has become the ancient one of a contest between the executive and legislative departments of the government. If the President stands firm on his decision of today, and if Senator McCarthy acts on his contention that "You can't go on with these hearings with the President's secrecy order in effect," then one way or another these hearings will end without conclusion; but the struggle between the executive and legislative branches of the government will continue.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have been speaking of the relationship between the executive and legislative branches of this government. Teddy Roosevelt once remarked that "the government is us; we are the government - you and I." And with government, as with individuals, Josh Billings offered this advice: "A secret ceases to be a secret if it is once confided. It is like a dollar bill - once broken, it's never a dollar again."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday May 18 1954

This is the news:

French sources at Geneva say that the United States and France have agreed to plan a Southeast Asia pact without waiting for British approval or the end of the Geneva conference. The British have made it known that they prefer to wait for Geneva to end before negotiating any such pact. And some British sources predict that the reported French-American agreement may injure relations with Washington.

In Geneva today there was another secret three hour meeting without any report on progress in negotiations on Indo-China.

And in Hanoi, a French spokesman says a single helicopter has brought out 18 more seriously wounded French soldiers from Dien Bien Phu. At the same time the French renewed their bombing of the enemy's key roads from Dien Bien Phu.

In Korea, our Fifth Air Force says enemy planes flew across the truce line twice in the past 24 hours..in violation of the armistice agreement.

And the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa say their planes sank one Communist warship, probably sank another and damaged a Mig..about 150 miles south of Shanghai.

In Washington today the President asked for progress reports on moves to end public school segregation in the District of Columbia. (where colored pupils outnumber white children) The President is on record favoring an end to segregation in the District.

In Georgia, Attorney General Eugene Cook said he would refuse to join in the Supreme Court's fall hearings, to determine how the new anti-segregation ~~decision~~ policy will be applied. [redacted] And Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association of Colored People told my colleague Charles Collingwood (~~ed; on the morning show~~) that the Court's decision will be accepted ~~quietly~~ quietly "unless there is deliberately formented trouble." White said: "The South is law abiding." I should like to review some aspects of the Supreme Court decision in a few minutes.

The President made a five and a half hour round trip to Charlotte, North Carolina, today to celebrate the 179th anniversary of the Mecklenberg Declaration of Inpdenence which was signed a year before the nation's declaration. The President was accompanied on the trip by Army Secretary Stevens. And he told a crowd of 30-thousand that "we are still confident in our armed forces from their secretaries and their high commanders down to the last private in the ranks." The President made no direct reference to the McCarthy-Army hearings which were recessed yesterday for one week.

At the White House, News Secretary Hagerty indicated that the President will not retreat from yesterday's order to high government officials not to talk to Senate investigators about their discussions of the McCarthy-Army row. Hagerty told reporters: "The President issued his letter..period." And when a reporter asked whether this order was designed to bring the hearings to an end Hagerty said that's "a silly question."

Acting Chairman Mundt said his meeting with Attorney General Brownell has been put off..because Brownell wants to study transcripts of the hearings. And after attending a Senate Republican Policy meeting, Mundt said he received no advice on the situation. He said "I don't believe there were any two opinions alike" expressed at the meeting.

The Senate Banking Committee voted approval of a public housing program that would more than meet the President's request for authority to build 35-thousand low-cost units in each of the next four years. The House has rejected this request.

A State Department spokesman says Communist shipment of arms to Gauatamala could be considered a threat to the security of the western hemisphere..we could take some move against Guatamala under the Rio treaty. But the spokesman did not forecast anything.

Here in New York, the appaelate division of the State Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Mickey Jelke, convicted on vice charges. In a three to two decision the court held that trial Judge Valente's action in barring the press and public during the state's case was "unorthodox and unwarranted." The court said:"We conceive it to be no part of the work of the judiciary..upon the facts here presented..to decide what a newspaper prints or to what portion of the people it caters to sell its papers." The court said the ban denied Jelke a fair and impartial trial.

This was the day the French government had set for fixing a starting time for debate on a European army. ~~in the National Assembly.~~ But it passed without official mention.

Edward R. Murrow: May 18, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The unanimous ruling against racial segregation in the public schools by the Supreme Court yesterday, will have an impact, ~~more widely felt than perhaps any ruling even handed down by the court.~~ Which cannot at this time be calculated, It not only goes to the heart of one of the acutest of domestic problems, it counts substantially in the great conflict of ideas, which now divides and dominates the world. The court, intentionally or unintentionally, has met, and gone far to dispose of, one of the most persuasive arguments used against the United States abroad. This has been, that the practice of democracy in this country has been tainted by undeniable racial inequality.

The argument has been losing some of its validity. The progress in negro education in the last decade has been notable. The armed services, when they banned segregation, demonstrated equality in a new and vivid way. Now the Supreme Court has swept aside its finding in 1896, that constitutional requirements were satisfied, when negroes received a "separate but equal" education. It recognized that if segregation is legally sanctioned the education is not truly equal, and hence the segregation is unconstitutional.

Students of world opinion can testify that this decision will add power to United States influence in the world. How much, is naturally hard to say. The ethical pieces in the armor of American defense aren't comparable with the other pieces, but they are no less essential and they may be even more important. Now American democracy has been made more convincing to the very persons whose understanding we need and seek.

Since the Supreme Court was breaking with the past - its own past in the ruling of 1896, and the past of segregated education in the South - it can be called fortunate that this could be done unanimously. It is sure to make the transition to new practices quieter. It also can be classed as judicial statesmanship, that the ruling is not to be applied immediately. Even the arguments about how the ruling is to become operative will not be heard till the autumn term. This will give the South time to catch its breath and examine plans for the future. It is reasonable to assume that some years will be needed before segregation has wholly disappeared from our public schools.

Though the difficulties ahead are not to be minimized, they do not appear to be as dangerous as would have been predicted a while back. For one thing, negro education in the South has improved remarkably in recent years, and this has been due quite as truly to the idealism of white educators as of negroes.

It is even conceivable that the end of segregation can be accomplished with good management and sense. Only five southern states still close the doors of their state universities and colleges to negro post-graduate students. In the other states integration has already been achieved, on the whole not unsatisfactorily. In Arizona and New Mexico, where local conditions have a certain similarity to the South, integrated schools have been established with little confusion or turmoil. Where the community could think through the changes in advance, there was little trouble. The Ford Foundation has reports on two or three dozen communities, in all parts of the country, where integrated schools have been established, and the only one where there was real trouble, was in the Middle West. And that one community was an admittedly "sick community", not at all typical of conditions in the South.

One of the big obstacles to integration in the South is finance. Northerners may not realize it, but the Southern states devote a much larger part of their income to public schools, than those in the North. Even so, they are only now in sight of having school rooms and teachers enough to accommodate all their children. They have spent more on white children than on negroes, on a ratio of $165 to $115. Now if education becomes equal, the standard may actually decline at least temporarily, as a result of the ruling. For some communities will find it next to impossible to increase taxes enough to give the negro children the education now provided the whites.

It is this economic problem that accounts for much of the vociferousness of the Southern outcry against integration. The economic problem is all the harder, because of the drift in the South from the farm to the city. It costs considerably more to educate a child in the city than in the country. The gap between the difference in cost has been widening and now is twice as much as a few years ago. And as the southern population is rising steadily, the states are rightly troubled to know where the school money is to come from.

The Supreme Court's requirement of equal education is sure to add to the attractiveness of the idea of federal contribution to the nation's school bills. The Court itself was not thinking in these terms. "Today" it said, "education is perhaps the most important function of state and local government." But it was not stressing who paid the bills. It was holding forth on the value of education. And the passage on this theme as written by Chief Justice ~~DOUGLAS~~ Warren is among the most noteworthy statements of social objectives ever to have come from that august body, or any organism of democracy.

We are inclined at times to under-estimate the importance of adequately educating the youth of this great nation of ours. Joseph Addison put it well when he said:"Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alienate, no despotism can enslave." And as Sir John Lubbock noted:"The important thing is not that every child be taught, but that he be given equal opportunity to learn."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

French sources at Geneva say that the United States and France have agreed to plan a Southeast Asia pact without waiting for British approval or the end of the Geneva conference. The British have made it known that they prefer to wait for Geneva to end before negotiating any such pact. And some British sources predict that the reported French-American agreement may injure relations with Washington.

In Geneva today there was another secret three hour meeting without any report on progress in negotiations on Indo-China.

And in Hanoi, a French spokesman says a single helicopter has brought out 18 more seriously wounded French soldiers from Dien Bien Phu. At the same time the French renewed their bombing of the enemy's key roads from Dien Bien Phu.

In Korea, our Fifth Air Force says enemy planes flew across the truce line twice in the past 24 hours in violation of the armistice agreement.

And the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa say their planes sank one Communist warship, probably sank another and damaged a Mig about 150 miles south of Shanghai.

In Washington today the President asked for progress reports on moves to end public school segregation in the District of Columbia where colored pupils outnumber white children. The President is on record favoring an end to segregation in the District.

In Georgia, Attorney General Eugene Cook said he would refuse to join in the Supreme Court's fall hearings to determine how the new anti-segregation policy will be applied. And Walter White, Executive Secretary of the National Association of Colored People told my colleague Charles Collingwood that the Court's decision will be accepted quietly "unless there is deliberately fomented trouble." What said: "The South is law abiding." I should like to review some aspects of the Supreme Court decision in a few minutes.

The President made a five and a half hour round trip to Charlotte, North Carolina, today to celebrate the 179th anniversary of the Mecklenberg Declaration of Independence which was signed a year before the nation's declaration. The President was accompanied on the trip by Army Secretary Stevens. And he told a crowd of 30-thousand that "we are still confident in our armed forces from their secretaries and their high commanders down to the last private in the ranks." The President made no direct reference to the McCarthy-Army hearings which were recessed yesterday for one week.

At the White House, News Secretary Hagerty indicated that the President will not retreat from yesterday's order to high government officials not to talk to Senate investigators about their discussions of the McCarthy-Army row. Hagerty told reporter "The President issued his letter. period." And when a reporter asked whether this order was designed to bring the hearings to an end Hagerty said"that's a silly question."

Acting Chairman Mundt said his meeting with Attorney General Brownell has been put off because Brownell wants to study transcripts of the hearings. And after attending a Senate Republican Policy meeting, Mundt said he received no advice on the situation. He said: "I don't believe there were any two opinions alike" expressed at the meeting.

The Senate Banking Committee voted approval of a public housing program that would more than meet the President's request for authority to build 35-thousand low-cost units in each of the next four years. The House has rejected this request.

A State Department spokesman says Communist shipment of arms to Guatamala could be considered a threat to the security of the Western hemisphere - we could take some move against Guatamala under the Rio treaty. But the spokesman did not forecast anything.

Here in New York, the appellate division of the State Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Mickey Jelke, convicted on vice charges. In a three to two decision the court held that trial Judge Valente's action in barring the press and public during the state's case was "unorthodox and unwarranted." The court said: "We conceive it to be no part of the work of the judiciary upon the facts here presented, to decide what a newspaper prints or to what portion of the people it caters to sell its papers." The court said the ban denied Jelke "a fair and impartial trial."

This was the day the French government had set for fixing a starting time for debate on a European army. But it passed without official mention.

The unanimous ruling against racial segregation in the public schools by the Supreme Court yesterday, will have an impact which cannot at this time be calculated. It not only goes to the heart of one of the acutest of domestic problems, it counts substantially in the great conflict of ideas, which now divides and dominates the world. The court, intentionally or unintentionally, has met, and gone far to dispose of, one of the most persuasive arguments used against the United States abroad. This has been, that the practice of democracy in this country has been tainted by undeniable racial inequality. The argument has been losing some of its validity. The progress in negro education in the last decade has been notable. The armed services, when they banned segregation, demonstrated quality in a new and vivid way. Now the Supreme Court has swept aside its finding in 1896, that constitutional requirements were satisfied, when negroes received a "separate but equal" education. It recognized that if segregation is legally sanctioned the education is not truly equal, and hence the segregation is unconstitutional. Students of world opinion can testify that this decision will add power to United States influence in the world. How much, is naturally hard to say. The ethical pieces in the armor of American defense aren't comparable with the other pieces, but they are no less essential and they may be even more important. Now American democracy has been made more convincing to the very persons whose understanding we need and seek. Since the Supreme Court was breaking with the past - its own past in the ruling of 1896, and the past of segregated education in the South - it can be called fortunate that this could be done unanimously. It is sure to make the transition to new practices quieter. It also can be classed as judicial statesmanship, that the ruling is not to be applied immediately. Even the arguments about how the ruling is to become operative will not be heard till the autumn term. This will give the South time to catch its breath and examine plans for the future. It is reasonable to assume that some years will be needed before segregation has wholly disappeared from our public schools.

Though the difficulties ahead are not to be minimized, they do not appear to be as dangerous as would have been predicted a while back. For one thing, negro education in the South has improved remarkably in recent years, and this has been due quite as truly to the idealism of white educators as of negroes. It is even conceivable that the end of segregation can be accomplished with good management and sense. Only five southern states still close the doors of their state universities and colleges to negro post-graduate students. In the other states integration has already been achieved, on the whole not unsatisfactorily. In Arizona and New Mexico, where local conditions have a certain similarity to the South, integrated schools have been established with little confusion or turmoil. Where the community could think through the changes in advance there was little trouble. The Ford Foundation has reports on two or three dozen communities in all parts of the country, where integrated schools have been established, and the only one where there was real trouble was in the Middle West. And that one community was an admittedly "sick community," not at all typical of conditions in the South. One of the big obstacles to integration in the South is finance. Northerners may not realize it, but the Southern states devote a much larger part of their income to public schools than those in the North. Even so, they are only now in sight of having school rooms and teachers enough to accommodate all their children. They have spent more on white children than on negroes, on a ratio of $165 to $115. Now if education becomes equal, the standard may actually decline at least temproarily, as a result of the ruling. For some communities will find it next to impossible to increase taxes enough to give the negro children the education now provided the whites.

It is this economic problem that accounts for much of the vociferousness of the Southern outcry against integration. The economic problem is all the harder, because of the drigt in the South from the farm to the city. It costs considerably more to educate a child in the city than in the country. The gap between the difference in cost has been widening and now is twice as much as a few years ago. And as the southern population is rising steadily, the states are rightly troubled to know where the school money is to come from. The Supreme Court's requirement of equal education is sure to add to the attractiveness of the idea of federal contribution to the nation's school bills. The Court itself was not thinking in these terms. "Today" it said, "education is perhaps the most important function of state and local government." But it was not stressing who paid the bills. It was holding forth on the value of education. And the passage on this theme as written by Chief Justice Warren is among the most noteworthy statements of social objectives ever to have come from that august body, or any organism of democracy.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are inclined at times to under-estimate the importance of adequately educating the youth of this great nation of ours. Joseph Addison put it well when he said: "Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alientate, no despotism can enslave." And as Sir John Lubbock noted: "The important thing is not that every child be taught, but that he be given equal opportunity to learn."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday May 19, 1954

This is the news:

The President today called for a quick, conclusive end to the McCarthy-Army hearings. At a news conference he said he favors letting the chips fall where they may. [We'll hear the President's views in a few minutes.]

And Army Secretary Stevens, following the President's refusal to change his recent executive order, issued a statement saying: the Army alone is responsible for the presentation and preparation of its case, against Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr. Stevens says he still believes the Army was subjected to improper pressures on behalf of Private Schine. And he saw no other honorable course but to bring the story to the attention of the Senate.

Senator McCarthy still thinks the White House has made a great mistake. He feels the President was not "fully advised." And McCarthy also feels that the President's executive order makes him play against a stacked deck. He says that for the first time since he got into the fight to expose Communists he's "sort of at a loss to know what COURSE to take." Mc Carthy told reporters he tried to get an appointment with the President to explain his side of the fight with the army..but it could not be arranged before the hearings "exploded."

Acting Chairman Mundt says the hearings will resume on Monday. And after conferring with Attorney General Brownell he said he feels Secretary Stevens should be required to repeat under oath the statement he made today..that the Army alone is responsible for the Army charges against McCarthy.

New Jersey's Democratic Governor Meyner told the National Press Club in Washington that he feels McCarthy "is through as a political force... that he has not survived the television test that "lays bare men's personalities and characters."

And Democratic Senator Monroney told a party rally in New Jersey that Senator McCarthy's tactics and ability can be compared to those of "a third rate assistant detective on a local vice squad.

McCarthy took the Senate floor today to accuse the Eisenhower Administration of what he called "criminal folly in granting funds to allies who sell the sinews of military and economic strength to Red China." The Senator called this "fantastic and unbelievable." And Foreign Aid Chief Stassen promptly replied that McCarthy's statement is "fantastic, unbelivable...and untrue." He accused McCarthy of "reaching toward diversionary headlines after the sorry spectacle of his record in recent hearings." IN his speech, McCarthy said he would campaign for the President if he were running again today. He explained: "Not because I think he's perfect, but his batting average is high."

At the White House news conference the President told reporters it might be possible, under certain conditions, to form a collective defense for Southeast Asia without the co-operation of the British. (The British have said they would consider such an agreement after the Geneva conference ends.)

And Mr. Eisenhower said he is "disturbed" by a shipment of arms from Communist Poland to Guatemala. He said it would be a terrible thing if a Communist dictatorship were established in this hemisphere.

The reporters, who had read dispatches from all over the free world praising the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in our public schools, asked the President if he has any advice for the South on how to carry out the decision. He said he hasn't the slightest advice... he is sworn to uphold the (CONSTITUTION) and he intends to do just that.

And the President also made it clear that he has no intention of re-appointing Gordon C. Clapp, the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, whose term expired Tuesday midnight. The President has thanked Clapp for his service "as you complete your term."

The House Ways and Means Committee today voted to bring farm operators..doctors and dentists..lawyers , architects and public accountants under the Social Security system. This would afect more than seven million persons and would be in line with the President's request to expand the program's coverage.

~~The House commerce committee today started hearings on a proposal to ban liquor advertising from newspapers, magazines, radio and television~~ Similar proposals have been defeated four times in the past four years. ~~Mrs. Glenn Hays of Illinois said the liquor industry is trying to~~ "break down standards in the home and create juvenile delinquency." Democratic Congressmen Celler ~~said it would be improper to deny the right to advertise to an industry that Congress has licensed, taxes and made legal. He said such a law would lead to a "general federal censorship" of press and~~ ~~[illegible]~~

Pakistan and the United States today signed a one-year mutual defense pact. It calls for us to help train and equip Pakistan's armed forces. India..Russia and Egypt has protested.

In Indo-China, French planes again attacked enemy columns moving from Dien Bien Phu toward the Red River delta. And the French announced that 24 more of their wounded men have been returned from Dien Bien Phu.

Again there was no reported progress at the Geneva talks on Indo-China. They were suspended for one day.

Nationalist China's air force says eight of its fighter planes.. (presumably the propeller type).. battled for ten minutes with Communist Mig jets. A communique makes no mention of any damage or losses.

South Korean President Rhee has ordered a three-day emergency police alert. [Eight million voters will elect a new national assembly tomorrow.]

And in Ireland the political forces of Premier de Valera and Opposition Leader John A. Costello are running a close race for control of the Irish Parliament.

~~At the White House today the President was asked if he is going to relax his executive order prohibiting any public discussion of any part executive department officials may have played in the McCarthy-Army dispute. Weiss recorded the proceedings.~~ ~~(run with ending~~

~~Lee~~

In the Canal Zone tonight a board of experts acknowledged that "a potentially dangerous conditions exists" because of a cracked hillside that threatens to topple into the Panama Canal. The experts say "immediate steps are necessary" to avert the danger of a rock slide which might block the canal for some time.

In Washington..at his news conference..the President was asked if he is going to relax his order banning any [redacted] testimony before the Mundt committee on ANY part members of the executive department may have played in the McCarthy-Army fight. We've recorded the president's reply.:

(runs 4;45 ending

Let's see what in the world we're trying to do and let's get ahead with it)

That was a recorded excerpt from the President's newsconference today.

This is Ed Murrow..I'll be back in a moment etc

The President, ~~at his news conference~~, made it clear that he does not want to see the Army-McCarthy hearings brought to an end until the [redacted] known and the truth is established. Perhaps he had in mind something Henri Amiel once said:""Truth is not only violated by falsehood; it may be equally outraged by silence." Of course, it's also true, as William James noted:"Every truth has practical consequences and these are the tests of truth."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 19, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... We have recorded the President's reply.

PRES. EISENHOWER: I have no intention whatsoever of relaxing or rescinding the order because it is a very moderate and proper statement of a division of powers between the Executive and the Legislative. Now, when I saw in the paper allegations to the effect that the issues of that order could use (sic) be used as a reason or excuse for calling off hearings, I was astonished. And lest there remain any doubt as to why the meeting of January 21st was called, I will tell you exactly why: There was an investigation going on in which an executive department of government, Defense Department (?) in principal (indistinct) the Army, was engaged with the committee of Congress. Finally there was proposed to them a question which they could not answer by themselves because it involved an executive order. It was proposed that they bring up the records and the individuals ... the records of the Loyalty Board and the individuals who comprised those loyalty boards. Under an executive order of longstanding that was impossible, so they had to have advice, and since of course an executive order is an instrument, drawn by the President, they asked an adviser or two of mine to be there, but they went ? ... it was done, I believe, in the district (sic) in the Attorney General's Office. That was the purpose of that meeting, to decide whether this question could be answered affirmatively or should be answered negatively under the terms of that executive order.

Now, the only reason I issued an order was because I saw an investigation going ahead where it appeared that there was going to be a long sidetrack established and go into a relationship between the President and?his advisers that had no possible connection with this investigation and which, in any event, would directly and instantly raise the old question of the proper division of powers between the executive and the legislature. Far from me trying to get any investigation off the track, I was merely trying with the timely statement to keep it on therails. I will say with respect to that investigation, as I've told you before, I hope it is concluded as soon as (indistinct) is possible but conclusively, so that the principals tell their stories openly and fully and so the public can know the facts ... but so we take the extraneous matters and these things that roam all up and down the alleys of government (?) and every kind of thought and idea are kept out of it. Now, I hope that disposes of my order.

MURROW: Then a reporter asked what the effect would be if the investigation should be called off?

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I don't think the facts have been brought out. This has aroused great interest in the United States. And make no mistake, I'm anxious to see it cease with all of the principals alike? telling their stories, because, ladies and gentlemen, let me say again - I just don't think anything today deserves to absorb the attention of the United States as compared to the study it should be making of our foreign situation, our foreign policy as it is applied to the various areas of the world, where does lie our enlightened self interest, where do we best support the whole theory of the ... ofthe hang together ...the cooperation among the nations of the free world, the program as it is applied to our own country in the terms of taxes and farm programs and everything that is there to keep us strong so we can pursue intelligently and withconfidence a peaceful program in the world. Nothing, nothing can be so important as that kind of a program and it's enacted? at this time - so consequently, much as I want to see this thing settled conclusively and so that we do know the facts, let the chips fall where they may, and let's get the facts out and then let's go on about the important business of this government.

And I personally feel, ladies and gentlemen, there's no time to waste if we should stand in great issues as a more united people, looking at the same set of facts - and I don't mean, as I've told you so often, I don't mean agreeing with me or with anybody else in details of procedure and methods. But let's see what it is we'retrying to do in the world and then let's get ahead with it.

MURROW: That was a recorded excerpt from the President's news conference today.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today called for a quick, conclusive end to the McCarthy-Army hearings. At a news conference he said he favors letting the chips fall where they may. We'll hear the President's views in a few minutes.

And Army Secretary Stevens, following the President's refusal to change his recent executive order, issued a statement saying: the Army alone is responsible for the presentation and preparation of its case against Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr. Stevens says he still believes the Army was subjected to improper pressures on behalf of Private Schine. And he saw no other honorable course but to bring the story to the attention of the Senate.

Senator McCarthy still thinks the White House has made a great mistake. He feels the President was not "fully advised." And McCarthy also feels that the President's executive order makes him play against a stacked deck. He says that for the first time since he got into the fight to expose Communists he's "sort of at a loss to know what course to take." McCarthy told reporters he tried to get an appointment with the President to explain his side of the fight with the army - but it could not be arranged before the hearings "exploded."

Acting Chairman Mundt says the hearings will resume on Monday. And after conferring with Attorney General Brownell he said he feels Secretary Stevens should be required to repeat under oath the statement he made today - that the Army alone is responsible for the Army charges against McCarthy.

New Jersey's Democratic Governor Meyner told the National Press Club in Washington that he feels McCarthy "is through as a political force - that he has not survived the television test that "lays bare men's personalities and characters."

And Democratic Senator Monroney told a party rally in New Jersey that Senator McCarthy's tactics and ability can be compared to those of "a third rate assistant detective on a local vice squad.

McCarthy took the Senate floor today to accuse the Eisenhower Administration of what he called "criminal folly in granting funds to allies who sell the sinews of military and economic strength to Red China." The Senator called this "fantastic and unbelievable." And Foreign Aid Chief Stassen promptly replied that McCarthy's statement is "fantastic, unbelievable and untrue." He accused McCarthy of "reaching toward diversionary headlines after the sorry spectacle of his record in recent hearings." In his speech, McCarthy said he would campaign for the President if he were running again today. He explained: "Not because I think he's perfect, but his batting average is high."

At the White House news conference the President told reporters it might be possible, under certain conditions, to form a collective defense for Southeast Asia without the cooperation of the British. The British have said they would consider such an agreement after the Geneva conference ends.

And Mr. Eisenhower said he is "disturbed" by a shipment of arms from Communist Poland to Guatamala. He said it would be a terrible thing if a Communist dictatorship were established in this hemisphere.

The reporters, who had read dispatches from all over the free world praising the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in our public schools, asked the President if he has any advice for the South on how to carry out the decision. He said he hasn't the slightest advice - he is sworn to uphold the Constitution and he intends to do just that.

And the President also made it clear that he has no intention of re-appointing Gordon C. Clapp, the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, whose term expired Tuesday midnight. The President has thanked Clapp for his service "as you complete your term."

The House Ways and Means Committee today voted to bring farm operators, doctors and dentists, lawyers, architects and public accountants under the Social Security system. This would affect more than seven million persons and would be in line with the President's request to expand the program's coverage.

Pakistan and the United States today signed a one-year mutual defense pact. It calls for us to help train and equip Pakistan armed forces. India, Russia and Egypt had protested.

In Indo-China, French planes again attacked enemy columns moving from Dien Bien Phu toward the Red River delta. And the French announced that 24 more of their wounded men have been returned from Dien Bien Phu.

Again there was no reported progress at the Geneva talks on Indo-China. They were suspended for one day.

Nationalist China's air force says eight of its fighter planes, presumably the propeller type, battled for ten minutes with Communist Mig jets. A communique makes no mention of any damage or losses.

South Korean President Rhee has ordered a three-day emergency policy alert. Eight million voters will elect a new national assembly tomorrow.

And in Ireland the political forces of Premier de Valera and Opposition Leader John A. Costello are running a close race for control of the Irish Parliament.

In the Canal Zone tonight a board of experts acknowledged that "a potentially dangerous condition exists" because of a cracked hillside that threatens to topple inot the Panama Canal. The experts say "immediate steps are necessary" to avert the danger of a rock slide which might block the canal for some time.

In Washington at his news conference, the President was asked if he is going to relax his order banning any testimony before the Mundt committee on any part members of the executive department may have played in the McCarthy-Army fight. We've recorded the president's reply:

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: I have no intention whatsoever of relaxing or rescinding the order because it is a very moderate and proper statement of a division of powers between the Executive and the Legislative. Now, when I saw in the paper allegations to the effect that the issues of that order could use (sic) be used as a reason or excuse for calling off hearings, I was astonished. And lest there remain any doubt as to why the meeting of January 21st was called, I will tell you exactly why:

There was an investigation going on in which an executive department of government, Defense Department in principal (indistinct) the Army, was engaged with the committee of Congress. Finally there was proposed to them a question which they could not answer by themselves because it involved an executive order. It was proposed that they bring up the records and the individuals - the records of the Loyalty Board and the individuals who comprised those loyalty boards. Under an executive order of longstanding that was impossible, so they had to have advice, and since of course an executive order is an instrument, drawn by the President, they asked an adviser or two of mine to be there, but it was done, I believe, in the Attorney General's office. That was the purpose of that meeting, to decide whether this question could be answered affirmatively or should be answered negatively under the terms of that executive order.

Now, the only reason I issued an order was because I saw an investigation going ahead where it appeared that there was going to be a long sidetrack established and go into a relationship between the President and his advisers that had no possible connection with this investigation and which, in any event, would directly and instantly raise the old question of the proper division of powers between the executive and the legislature. Far from me trying to get any investigation off the track, I was merely trying with the timely statement to keep it on the rails. I will say with respect to that investigation, as I've told you before, I hope it is concluded as soon as (indistinct) is possible but conclusively, so that the principals tell their stories openly and fully and so the public can know the facts but so we take the extraneous matters and these things that roam all up and down the alleys of government and every kind of thought and idea are kept out of it. Now, I hope that disposes of my order.

MURROW: Then a reporter asked what the effect would be if the investigation should be called off?

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: Well, I don't think the facts have been brought out. This has aroused great interest in the United States. And make no mistake, I'm anxious to see it cease with all of the principals alike? telling their stories, because, ladies and gentlemen, let me say again - I just don't think anything today deserves to absorb the attention of the United States as compared to the study it should be making of our foreign situation, our foreign policy as it is applied to the various areas of the world, where does lie our enlightened self interest, where do we best support the whole theory of the..of the hang together..the cooperation among the nations of the free world, the program as it is applied to our own country in the terms of taxes and farm programs and everything that is there to keep us strong so we can pursue intelligently and with confidence a peaceful program in the world. Nothing, nothing can be so important as that kind of a program and it's enacted? at this time - so consequently, much as I want to see this thing settled conclusively and so that we do know the facts, let the chips fall where they may, let's get the facts out and then let's go on about the important business of this government.

And I personally feel, ladies and gentlemen, there's no time to waste if we should stand in great issues as a more united people, looking at the same set of facts - and I don't mean, as I've told you so often, I don't mean agreeing with me or with anybody else in details of procedure and methods. But let's see what it is we're trying to do in the world and then let's get ahead with it.

MURROW: That was a recorded excerpt from the President's news conference today. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President, made it clear that he does not want to see the Army-McCarthy hearings brought to an end until the truth is established. Perhaps he had in mind something Henri Amiel once said: "Truth is not only violated by falsehood; it may be equally outraged by silence." Of course, it's also true, as William James noted: "Every truth has practical consequences and these are the tests of truth."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday May 20, 1954

This is the news:

New Zealand's Minister of external affairs...T. Clifton Webb..said after confering with Secretary of State Dulles today: he could not conceive of a satisfactory southeast asian alliance that does not include Great Britain. The President said yesterday it might be possible to go ahead without the British. (I'd like to discuss the Asiatic situation in a few minutes.)

In Geneva today, East and West agreed to start work on the actual terms of a cease-fire for the 7-year-old Indo-China war. And on the battlefields, the Communists advanced three miles and are now within 75 miles of Hanoi itself, despite heavy French air attacks. There are conflicting reports from HANOI -- the key to the French defenses in North Indo-China. One dispatch says the city is "near panic"; another says: "There is no general feeling of panic." Hanoi has about 600-thousand residents, including 300 American technicians, who are working at French air bases.

The Communists today released another 20 French wounded from the Dien Bien Phu. That brings to 135 the number of wounded evacuated so far.

On Formosa, Chiang Kai Shek, starting a new term as Nationalist China's president, has called for a strong anti-Communist Asian alliance. He said again that with "a reasonable amount of moral and material support" and adequate war supplies his forces could reconquer the Chinese mainland.

In Washington, Senator McCarthy told reporters that "he'll be there" when the Mundt committee resumes its hearings on Monday in the Army-McCarthy row. But McCarthy said he could "make no promises" on what steps he might take..indicating that he might decide not to testify himself. The Senator said today "its ridiculous beyond comprehension" to have the President and Army Secretary Stevens say they want everything in the open and then for the President to say that certain testimony on an executive meeting cannot be divulged. [redacted] Roosevelt [redacted] conservative." McCarthy [redacted] "someone should get to [redacted] those people to tell the truth"... a reference to members of the Executive who participated in [redacted]

3

The Senator added: "The actions of the executive department over the last few days demonstrate the need to elect a strong Republican congress." He said if the Republicans lose in November it will mean going back to individuals who will make "Franklin Roosevelt look like a great conservative." McCarthy said "someone should get to the President and tell him the smart thing is to tell those people to tell the truth" - a reference to members of the Executive who participated in the January 21 meeting.

The Bulletin of Atomic Scientists says today that it is "contrary to decency and common sense" for the government to revive old charges against Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, who guided work on the atomic bomb.

The Bulletin says in part: "It seems to us a breach of faith on the part of the government to call upon a man to assume such heavy responsibilities, in full knowledge of his life history, and then, after he has demonstrably done his best and given the most valuable services to the nation, to use the facts that were substantially known all the time to cast aspersions on his integrity."

The President acknowledged today that there is little chance of getting Congressional approval this year for his tariff program. Therefore he says he'll accept a one-year extension of the present recriprocal trade program.

The Commerce Department today eased controls on American exports to British-owned Hong Kong--sometimes a major port for trans-shipment to Communist China. The new order affects about 100 non-strategic commodities. Only yesterday Senator McCarthy denounced the Administration's attitude on trade with Red China as far too lax. He wants us to stop all aid to allies who trade with the Chinese Communists.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that "the bottom will fall out of American foreign policy" if the United States does not demonstrate that our free society works. And the President told the Committee for Economic Development that the "wisdom and forward-looking capacity" of business will keep us economically strong and progressive.

A House committee today approved the President's plan to permit retired workers to earn more income and still keep their social security payments.

The Nicaraguan ambassador to Washington said today his country has severed relations with Guatamala because Guatamala has violated an agreement not to spread Communist propaganda in Nicaragua. And in the Senate, Smathers of Florida, said an arms shipment from Poland to Guatemala is an attack on the Monroe doctrine. He wants immediate conferences on defense problems for the western hemisphere.

In Ireland today, Prime Minister de Valera conceded defeat in the Irish elections. He said: "The battle is over. The people have given their decision. The coalition parties have a majority and can form a government." John A. Costello, a former prime minister, is expected to form the new government.

And in France, West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer and the vice premier of France reached an agreement on a declaration of principles in their Saar dispute.

Edward R. Murrow: May 20, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

It is clear that urgent efforts are being made to hammer out some sort of collective action, or unified policy, to prevent the Communist domination of Indochina and all of South East Asia. These discussions are being kept secret, as they should be. The President conferred again today with his National Security Council. He had said on Wednesday, that we might go ahead with plans for an Asian Security Pact, without the British, if London continued to be reluctant. The President said such a plan would depend upon the support of New Zealand, Australia and certain Asian countries. Today the New Zealand Minister of External Affairs, T. Clifton Webb, said, after a conversation with Secretary of State Dulles, that he could not conceive of a satisfactory Asian alliance without British participation.

~~Today~~, In London, today, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that the conversations between the American and French Governments, on the whole subject of Indochina, have been of an informal nature, and no further commitments have been entered into by either party. He said Britain had not been informed in advance of these Franco-American discussions. The British press is inclined to believe that the Americans and the French may go ahead, and try to establish a united front in Indochina, without waiting to see what results, if any, may be achieved at the Geneva Conference.

Despatches from Geneva are in general agreement in concluding that things are not going well for the Western Powers there. #The Russians and Chinese are clearly stalling, while the communists in Indochina mount a new attack against the Red River delta. The French are suing for peace at Geneva, without any trump cards to play, either there or in Indochina. #At the outset of this Geneva Conference, the Russians and Chinese were frankly alarmed at the prospect of American intervention in Indochina. They, too, have to calculate the risk that Indochina might touch off the third World War. The American threat of toughness slowed the attack against Dien Bien Phu, and produced caution on the political front at Geneva. Then it became clear that there was to be no American intervention. At that point the Communists launched their all-out attack against Dien Bien Phu. President Eisenhower's statement about reaching some method whereby the two sides could live together in Indochina was widely regarded in that country as an American withdrawal. #Then came Mr. Dulles's statement that all South East Asia is not necessarily lost if Indochina should be lost. That was regarded as final proof that we had written off Indochina. So the Communists started mounting their attack against the Delta.

One of our basic difficulties is that as of now we do not have a firm determined and cohesive Vietnam government to support. That government has not yet asked for our aid. We are backing an emperor who has left his country, with his wife and children, and who receives five thousand dollars a month as a subsidy from the secret funds of the French Government. The entire Vietnam Cabinet, with the exception of the Defense Minister, has left the country, many taking their wives and children with them. David Schoenbrun, who spent a month in Indochina and is now in Geneva, cables me tonight that the Western democracies are fighting against the Communists without the support of the Vietnamese people, or a representative regime. Vietnam still doesn't have a genuine treaty of independence, nor a democratic assembly, nor a national front. Unless Emperor Bao Dai goes home and takes over the active leadership of his people; unless an independence treaty is signed and sealed, we face the alternative of writing off Indochina, or undertaking a war without coherent and effective Vietnamese support. The free world must decide to make war or make peace.

The British apparently feel that there is still the possibility of making peace. That is basically what the argument is about. There is a plan being discussed in Geneva which involves an armistice, and elections that would be guaranteed and supervised by the five big powers, including Communist China. These five powers would guarantee the continuation of peace in the area. # This plan is based upon the assumption that there can be no peace without Chinese participation and responsibility for it. Those who have produced this plan believe that such an agreement would cause the Communists to realize that a renewal of the war in Indochina, or active subversion on its borders, would mean war without limit. This in a sense is a return to an earlier doctrine enunciated by Mr. Dulles.

In all this speculation, confusion and contention, one fact emerges: there is in prospect no diplomatic victory at Geneva, no military victory in Indochina, unless or until American policy is clarified and agreed to, not only by the Western Powers but by Indochina's neighbors.

The success of any foreign policy, in the end, is determined by the willingness of those concerned to accept certain basic principles. Joshua Liebman once put it this way:"The pivot on which our lives must turn is the deep realization that every person is a dignified, essential human soul and that we are being guilty of gross inhumanity when we snub or abuse him."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

New Zealand's Minister of external affairs, T. Clifton Webb, said after conferring with Secretary of State Dulles today: he could not conceive of a satisfactory southeast Asian alliance that does not include Great Britain. The President said yesterday it might be possible to go ahead without the British. I'll try to discuss the Asiatic situation in a few minutes.

In Geneva today, East and West agreed to start work on the actual terms of a cease-fire for the 7-year-old Indo-China war. And on the battlefields, the Communists advanced three miles and are now within 75 miles of Hanoi itself, despite heavy French air attacks. There are conflicting reports from Hanoi - the key to the French defenses in North Indo-China. One dispatch says the city is "near panic;" another says: "There is no general feeling of panic." Hanoi has about 600-thousand residents including 300 American technicians who are working at French air bases.

The Communists today released another 20 French wounded from Dien Bien Phu. That brings to 135 the nimber of wounded evacuated so far.

On Formosa, Chiang Kai Shek, starting a new term as Nationalist China's president, has called for a strong anti-Communist Asian alliance. He said again that with "a reasonable amount of moral and material support" and adequate war supplies his forces could reconquer the Chinese mainland.

In Washington, Senator McCarthy told reporters that "he'll be there" when the Mundt committee resumes its hearings on Monday in the Army-McCarthy row. But McCarthy said he could "make no promises" on what steps he might take - indicating that he might decide not to testify himself. The Senator said today "its ridiculous beyond comprehension" to have the President and Army Secretary Stevens say they want everything in the open and then for the President to say that certain testimony on an executive meeting cannot be divulged.

The Senator added: "The actions of the executive department over the last few days demonstrate the need to elect a strong Republican congress." He said if the Republicans lose in November it will mean going back to individuals who will make "Franklin Roosevelt look like a great conservative." McCarthy said "someone should get to the President and tell him the smart thing is to tell those people to tell the truth" - a reference to members of the Executive who participated in the January 21 meeting.

The Bulletin of Atomic Scientists says today that it is "contrary to decency and common sense" for the government to revive old charges against Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, who guided work on the atomic bomb.

The Bulletin says in part: "It seems to us a breach of faith on the part of the government to call upon a man to assume such heavy responsibilities in full knowledge of his life history, and then, after he has demonstratively done his best and given the most valuable services to the nation, to use the facts that were substantially known all the time to case aspersions on his integrity."

The President acknowledged today that there is little chance of getting Congressional approval this year for his tariff program. Therefore, he says, he'll accept a one-year extension of the present reciptocal trade program.

The Commerce Department today eased controls on American exports to British-owned Hong Kong sometimes a major port for trans-shipment to Communist China. The new order affects about 100 non-strategic commodities. Only yesterday Senator McCarthy denounced the Administration's attitude on trade with Red China as far too lax. He wants us to stop all aid to allies who trade with the Chinese Communists.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that "the bottom will fall out of American foreign policy" if the United States does not demonstrate that our free society works. And the President told the Committee for Economic Development that the "wisdom and forward-looking capacity" of business will keep us economically strong and progressive.

A House committee today approved the President's plan to permit retired workers to earn more income and still keep their social security payments.

The Nicaraguan ambassador to Washington said today his country has severed relations with Guatamala because Guatamala has violated an agreement not to spread Communist propaganda in Nicaragua. And in the Senate, Smathers of Florida, said an arms shipment from Poland to Guatemala is an attack on the Monroe Doctrine. He wants immediate conferences on defense problems for the western hemisphere.

In Ireland today, Prime Minister de Valera conceded defeat in the Irish elections. He said: "The battle is over. The people have given their decision. The coalition parties have a majority and can form a government." John A. Costello, a former prime minister, is expected to form the new government.

And in France, West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer and the Vice Premier of France reached an agreement on a declaration of principles in their Saar dispute.

It is clear that urgent efforts are being made to hammer out some sort of collective action, or unified policy to prevent the Communist domination of Indo-China and all of South East Asia. These discussions are being kept secret, as they should be. The President conferred again today with his National Security Council. He had said on Wednesday that we might go ahead with plans for an Asian Security Pact, without the British if London continued to be reluctant. The President said such a plan would depend upon the support of New Zealand, Australia and certain Asian countries. Today the New Zealand Minister of External Affairs, T. Clifton Webb, said after a conversation with Secretary of State Dulles that he could not conceive of a satisfactory Asian alliance without British participation.

In London, today, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that the conversations between the American and French Governments on the whole subject of Indochina have been of an informal nature, and no further commitments have been entered into by either party. He said Britain had not been informed in advance of these Franco-American discussions. The British press is inclined to believe that the Americans and the French may go ahead and try to establish a united front in Indochina, without waiting to see what results, if any, may be achieved at the Geneva Conference.

Despatches from Geneva are in general agreement in concluding that things are not going well for the Western Powers there. The Russians and Chinese are clearly stalling, while the communists in Indochina mount a new attack against the Red River delta. The French are suing for peace at Geneva, without any trump cards to play, either there or in Indochina. At the outset of this Geneva Conference, the Russians and Chinese were frankly alarmed at the prospect of American intervention in Indochina. They, too, have to calculate the risk that Indochina might touch off the third World War. The American threat of toughness slowed the attack against Dien Bien Phu, and produced caution on the political front at Geneva. Then it became clear that there was to be no American intervention. At that point the Communists launched their all-out attack against Dien Bien Phu. President Eisenhower's statement about reaching some met od whereby the two sides could live together in Indochina was widely regarded in that country as an American withdrawal. Then came Mr. Dulles' statement that all South East Asia is not necessarily lost if Indochina should be lost. That was regarded as final proof that we had written off Indochina. So the Communists started mounting their attack against the Delta.

One of our basic difficulties is that as of now we do not have a firm determined and cohesive Vietnam government to support. That government has not yet asked for our aid. We are backing an emperor who has left his country, with his wife and children, and who receives five thousand dollars a month as a subsidy from the secret funds of the French Government. The entire Vietnam Cabinet, with the exception of the Defense Minister, has left the country, many taking their wives and children with them. David Schoenbrun, who spent a month in Indochina and is now is Geneva, cables me tonight that the Western democracies are fighting against the Communists without the support of the Vietnamese people, or a representative regime. Vietnam still doesn't have a genuine treaty of independence, nor a democratic assembly nor a national front. Unless Emperior Bao Dai goes home and takes over the active leadership of his people; unless an independence treaty is signed and sealed, we face the alternative of writing off Indochina, or undertaking a war without coherent and effective Vietnamese support. The free world must decide to make war or make peace.

The British apparently feel that there is still the possibility of making peace. That is basically what the argument is about. There is a plan being discussed in Geneva which involves an armistice, and elections that would be guaranteed and supervised by the five big powers, including Communist China. These five powers would guarantee the continuation of peace in the area. This plan is based upon the assumption that there can be no peace without Chinese participation and responsibility for it. Those who haveproduced this plan believe that such an agreement would cause the Communists to realize that a renewal of the war in Indochina, or active subversion on its borders, would mean war without limit. This in a sense is a return to an earlier doctrine enunciated by Mr. Dulles.

In all this speculation, confusion and contention, one fact emerges: there is in prospect no diplomatic victory at Geneva, no military victory in Indochina, unless or until American policy is clarified and agreed to, not only by the Western Powers but by Indochina's neighbors.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The success of any foreign policy, in the end, is determined by the willingness of those concerned to accept certain basic principles. Joshua Liebman once put it this way: "The pivot on which our lives must turn is the deep realization that every person is a dignified, essential human soul and that we are being guilty of gross inhumanity when we snub or abuse him."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, May 21, 1954.

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a sharp increase in social security payments for millions of retired workers, their dependents or survivors. The committee raised from 36-hundred to 42-hundred dollars, the maximum wage on which benefits and social security taxes are based. This bill calls for a maximum payment to a single retired worker of $98.50 a month..compared to the present $85. And the maximum will go up to $108.50 for a single worker who retires in the future. A worker and his wife, over 65, would get future payments of $162.75 a month..instead of the present $127.50 maximum.

The Senate today killed the President's proposal to lower the voting age from 21 to 18. A proposed constiutional amendment was favored by 34 Senators..opposed by 24. That was far short of the required two-thirds vote.

Army Secretary Stevens said in Montana today that the President has given him all the support he could have requested in his fight against Senator McCarthy and his aides.

And in Washington, Senate committee Democrats said they will approve the introduction into the hearing of the army's monitored phone calls provided all the calls are introduced. Chairman Mundt says "technicalities make this impossible."

Senator Mc Carthy told reporters [redacted] the Republican party "is committing slow and painful suicide" with the current hearings. He says he'll attend the hearings when they resume on Monday. But he'll make no promises for how long.

Democratic Senator Gilette of Iowa charged today that the [redacted] the Mc Carthy sub-committee has violated the Constitutional rights of our citizens. And the Senate should either control or abolish IT. [redacted]

Foreign Aid Chief Stassen says just about every paragraph in the trade speech made by Senator McCarthy ON WEDNESDAY --was false. A reporter asked if Stassen thought Mc Carthy knew his statements were false. Stassen said: "Certainly." He said Mc Carthy used false facts to reach really vicious conclusions. And he told the reporters: "We need less headline-hunters and more Eisenhower backers for the good of America."

The Cost of Living went down slightly in April as a result of reductions in the federal excise taxes. This was the third straight monthly decline. And it will mean a penny an hour pay cut for more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries. ~~C.I.O. President Reuther says he welcomes this the drop in and hopes it continues... Rising costs... "so Americans can enjoy higher living standards."~~

The government has silenced a short wave radio transmitter operated by the Communist Romanian legation in Washington. Presumably it had contact with the Communist government in Bucharest. Several months ago a station operated by the Hungarian legation was put off the air.

The ~~Nicaraguan~~ GUATEMALAN government told Washington today..in effect..to keep America's nose out of ~~Nicaraguan~~ GUATAMALA business. In comment on the State Department's charge that an important shipment of arms has arrived in ~~Nicaragua~~ GUATAMALA from Poland, the ~~Nicaraguan~~ GUATEMALAN government said: it has a perfect right to buy arms in Communist countries. It rejects what it calls "the intention of the American government to supervise the legitimate acts of soverign governments."

In Indo-China the Communists have over-run one small French ~~outpost~~ outpost 75 miles from Hanoi. But the French have stopped, at least for the moment, the enemy's march toward Hanoi.

~~On Formosa, Chiang Kai Shek, chief of staff says the Chinese Communists, with Russian help, are massing ships, troops and planes opposite the Tachen islands, 220 miles south of Formosa. The islands are the northern outpost of all Nationalist offshore bases.~~

In Korea, Synman Rhee's liberal party has won control of the South Korean national assembly.

In Washington, Federal Communications Commissioner Freida Hennock told reporters that she intends to beat what she called the big network "monopoly" or resign. She said this means the monopoly of CBS and NBC. Miss Hennock says current Senate hearings on ultra high frquency and very high frequency stations will determine whether "we have 200 big stations in two networks or 2-thousand big ultra high frequency stations.

In St. Louis, former Police Lieutenant Louis Shoulders was sentenced to three years in prison for lying about what happened to the missing $300-thousand dollars in the [redacted] Greenlease [redacted] kidnap case, [redacted]. And former Rookie Patrolman DOLAN was sentenced to two years on the same charge. Eight months ago they were the heroes of the case.

Edward R. Murrow: May 21, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

When the British Foreign Office openly admitted last night that the widening rift between Britain and the United States is the most serious since the end of the war, it confirmed an extraordinarily important fact. # Everyone knows that British-American unity is the core of Western strength. Anything that disrupts that unity reduces that strength. It is being disrupted at a time when Western power is suffering a serious defeat in Indochina, and when negotiations are being held in Geneva to end the fighting on the best possible terms. A widening rift between the United States and Great Britain obviously reduces the chances of getting favorable truce terms at Geneva. Nothing could be plainer.

So it is imperative that Anglo-American relations be lifted back onto the rails. It may be helpful to analyze how and why they left the rails. But what matters is to get them back.

One useful comment to make about the rift is that it was not produced by Britain and the United States wanting different and irreconcilable things. That kind of rift would be hard to repair. But what happened is that both Britain and the United States had a policy as to Indochina based on the success of the Navarre plan. That was the French plan for military victory in Indochina. It failed. When it failed, London and Washington were left without a policy. And that has been the basic difficulty. Two countries without a policy cannot exert power, and Western power is not being effectively exerted at the critical moment, not in Geneva and not in the Red River Delta.

But it would be wrong to say that the two countries disagree about their end objectives. They do agree. They want a collective security system that will stem the advance of Communism in Southeast Asia. Both President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Churchill have said so emphatically. They are not in accord about what to do now. It is the vacuum - the absence of a policy - that is creating so much misunderstanding over the meanings of words, phrases and meetings.

Two important points needed to be cleared up. One is how Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden came to misunderstand each other about holding talks on Southeast Asian security before the end of the Geneva conference. The other is just what commitments the United States can make today for intervention in Indochina.

On the first point, there seems to be no doubt there was a misunderstanding. Mr. Eden did not, as some reports suggest, back away from an undertaking knowingly made. After his talks with Mr. Dulles in London - before the Geneva conference - the Foreign Office sent out reports to its Embassies about this conversation that did not mention any immediate talks about security in Southeast Asia. So when British Ambassador, Sir Roger Makins, was invited by the State Department to attend the first of these talks, he just didn't know what was going on. He had never heard of such talks and he asked London about them. He was told not to go to the meeting, as it had not been agreed to.

What Mr. Dulles said to Mr. Eden and Mr. Eden said to Mr. Dulles may never be established. They did agree that whatever happened at Geneva there was to be consideration of a security system in Southeast Asia. Mr. Dulles obviously banked on the assumption that considering something after Geneva necessitated preliminary talks now. He urgently wanted the talks to start at once. Mr. Eden as obviously assumed that nothing would be done now that could disturb the Communists in Geneva, for he urgently needed to give his home opinion that impression. It is not uncommon for even veteran diplomats to come away from conversations each believing he got what he wanted. That seems to have happened in this case. Military talks now are to begin in Washington the end of next week. So what is important is to remove the suspicion of bad faith.

The other question about what commitments the United States can make right now is of far greater moment. Two theories prevail among the better informed Washington correspondents as to what the National Security Council has already formally accepted as a policy about intervention. One is that given only a little collective backing the United States is at once ready for military intervention of a limited kind. The other is that no such decision has been reached, and that conditions for intervention remain more or less what they were in Korea. That is, there has to be a functioning local government committed to the resistance to a recognizable aggression, that it must have forces of its own, and it must ask our help.

Nothing has been said by President Eisenhower or Secretary Dulles suggesting that these Korean pre-conditions have been relaxed for Indochina. Admiral Radford, in his dealings with the French, has given the "impression" that American help can be had virtually right away. All that the public can do at this stage is to interpret what it hears and sees. But it is reasonable to believe that no specific formula has been adopted as to when and how there can be intervention. For if such a formula had been agreed to, the differing American viewpoints and activities would have been pulled together into a consistent whole. There would be no confusion in Washington.

One must be fair enough to see that if there can be doubt in this country about our foreign policy, our Allies are entitled to be even more mystified.

Much of international diplomacy could be expedited, if all concerned could agree on terms of reference. This search for clarity and understanding, reminds me of something Will Rogers once said:" The minute a thing is long and complicated it confuses. Whoever wrote the Ten Commandments made 'em short. They may not always be kept, but they can be understood. They are the same for all men."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 21, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a sharp increase in social security payments for millions of retired workers, their dependents or survivors. The committee raised from 36-hundred to 42-hundred dollars the maximum wage on which benefits and social security taxes are based. This bill calls for a maximum payment to a single retired worker of $98.50 a month compared to the present $85. And the maximum will go up to $108.50 for a single worker who retires in the future. A worker and his wife, over 65, would get future payments of $162.75 a month instead of the present $127.50 maximum.

The Senate today killed the President's proposal to lower the voting age from 21 to 18. A proposed constitutional amendment was favored by 34 Senators - opposed by 24. That was far short of the required two-thirds vote.

Army Secretary Stevens said in Montana today that the President has given him all the support he could have requested in his fight against Senator McCarthy and his aides.

And in Washington, Senate committee Democrats said they will approve the introduction into the hearing of the army's monitored phone calls provided all the calls are introduced. Chairman Mundt says "technicalities make this impossible."

Senator McCarthy told reporters the Republican party "is committing slow and painful suicide" with the current hearings. He says he'll attend the hearings when they resume on Monday. But he'll make no promises for how long.

Democratic Senator Gilette of Iowa charged today that the McCarthy subcommittee has violated the Constitutional rights of our citizens. And the Senate should either control or abolish it.

Foreign Aid Chief Stassen says just about every paragraph in the trade speech made by Senator McCarthy on Wednesday was false. A reporter asked if Stassen thought McCarthy knew his statements were false. Stassen said: "Certainly." He said McCarthy used false facts to reach really vicious conclusions. And he told the reporters: "We need less headline-hunters and more Eisenhower backers for the good of America."

The Cost of Living went down slightly in April as a result of reducations in the federal excise taxes. This was the third straight monthly decline. And it will mean a penny an hour pay cut for more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries.

The government has silenced a short wave radio transmitter operated by the Communist Romanian legation in Washington. Presumably it had contact with the Communist government in Bucharest. Several months ago a station operated by the Hungarian legation was put off the air.

The Guatemalan government told Washington today, in effect, to keep America's nose out of Guatamalan business. In comment on the State Department's charge that an important shipment of arms has arrived in Guatamala from Poland, the Guatemalan government said: it has a perfect right to buy arms in Communist countries. It rejects what it calls "the intention of the American government to supervise the legitimate acts of sovereign governments."

In Indo-China the Communists have over-run one small French outpost 75 miles from Hanoi. But the French have stopped, at least for the moment, the enemy's march toward Hanoi.

In Korea, Syngman Rhee's liberal party has won control of the South Korean national assembly.

In Washington, Federal Communications Commissioner Freida Hennock told reporters that she intends to beat what she called the big network "monopoly" or resign. She said this means the monopoly of CBS and NBC. Miss Hennock says current Senate hearings on ultra high frequency and very high frequency stations will determine whether "we have 200 big stations in two networks or 2-thousand big ultra high frequency stations.

In St. Louis, former Police Lieutenant Louis Shoulders was sentenced to three years in prison for lying about what happened to the missing 300-thousand dollars in the Greenlease kidnap case. And former Rookie Patrolman Dolan was sentenced to two years on the same charge. Eight months ago they were the heroes of the case.

When the British Foreign Office openly admitted last night that the widening rift between Britain and the United States is the most serious since the end of the war, it confirmed an extraordinarily important fact. Everyone knows that British-American unity is the core of Western strength. Anything that disrupts that unity reduces that strength. It is being disrupted at a time when Western power is sufferi a serious defeat in Indochina, and when negotiations are being held in Geneva to end the fighting on the best possible terms. A widening rift between the United States and Great Britain obviously reduces the chances of getting favorable truce terms at Geneva. Nothing could be plainer. So it is imperative that Anglo-American relations be lifted back onto the rails. It may be helpful to analyze how and why they left the rails. But what matters is to get them back. One useful comment to make about the rift is that it was not produced by Britain and the United States wanting different and irreconcilable things. That kind of rift would behard to repair. But what happened is that both Britain and the United States had a policy as to Indo-China based on the success of the Navarre plan. That was the French plan for military victory in Indochina. It failed. When it failed, London and Washington were left without a policy. And that has been the basic difficulty. Two countries without a policy cannot exert power, and Western power is not being effectively exerted at the critical moment, not in Geneva and not in the Red River Delta.

But it would be wrong to say that the two countries disagree about their end objectives. They do agree. They want a collective security system that will stem the advance of Communism in Southeast Asia. Both President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Churchill have said so emphatically. They are not in accordabout what to do now. It is the vacuum - the absence of a policy - that is creating so much misunderstanding over the meanings over the meanings of words, phrases and meetings. Two important points needed to be cleared up. One is how Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden came to misunderstand each other about holding talks on Southeast Asian security before the end of the Geneva conference. The other is just what commitments the United States can make today for intervention in Indochina. On the first point, there seems to be no doubt there was a misunderstanding. Mr. Eden did not, as some reports suggest, back away from an undertaking knowingly made. After his talks with Mr. Dulles in London - before the Geneva conference - the Foreign Office sent out reports to its Embassies about this conversation that did not mention any immediate talks about security in Southeast Asia. So when British Ambassador, Sir Roger Makins, was invited by the State Department to attend the first of these talks, he just didn't know what was going on. He had never heard of such talks and he asked London about them. He was told not to go to the meeting, as it had not been agreed to. What Mr. Dulles said to Mr. Eden and Mr. Eden said to Mr. Dulles may never be established. They did agree that whatever happened at Geneva there was to be consideration of a security system in Southeast Asia. Mr. Dulles obviously banked on the assumption that considering something after Geneva necessitated preliminary talks now. He urgently wanted the talks to start at once. Mr. Eden as obviously assumed that nothing would be done now that coulddisturb the Communists in Geneva, for he urgently needed to give his home opinion that impression It is not uncommon for even veteran diplomats to come away from conversations each believing he got what he wanted. That seems to have happened in this case. Military talks now are to begin in Washington the end of next week. So what is important is to remove the suspicion of bad faith. The other question about what commitments the United States can make right now is of far greater moment. Two theories prevail among the better informed Washington correspondents as to what the National Security Council has already formally accepted as a policyabout interventio One is that given only a little collective backing the United States is at once ready for military intervention of a limited kind. The other is that no such decision has been reached, and that conditions for intervention remain more or less what they were in Korea. That is, there has to be a functioning local government committed to the resistance to a recognizable aggression, that it must have forces of its own, and it must ask our help. Nothing has been said by President Eisenhower or Secretary Dulles suggesting that these Korean pre-conditions have been relaxed for Indochina. Admiral Radford, in his dealings with the French, has given the "impression" that American help can be had virtually right away. All that the public can do at this stage is to interpret what it hears and sees. But it is reasonable to believe that no specific formula has been adopted as to when and how there can be intervention. For if such a formula had been agreed to, the differing American viewpoints and activities would have been pulled together into a consistent whole. There would be no confusion in Washington. One must be fair enough to see that if there can be doubt in this country about our foreign policy, our Allies are entitled to be even more mystified.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Much of international diplomacy could be expedited if all concerned could agree on terms of reference. This search for clarity and understanding reminds me of something Will Rogers once said: "The minute a thing is long and complicated it confuses. Whoever worte the Ten Commandments made 'em short. They may not always be kept, but they can be understood. They are the same for all men."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, May 24, 1954

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today ordered lower federal courts to reconsider decision in a number of segregation cases in the light of the Supreme Court's decision last Monday. This decision held segregation in public schools to be unconstiutional. Today the court, in effect, granted Negroes new victories in appeals involving racial segregation in colleges, public housing, on a municipal golf course and a city-owned theater. The net effect of these decisions was to give a clear indication that the Court believes the constiutionality of segregation now extends beyond the school issue. To use the court's phrases: "in the light of "last Monday's ruling and "conditions that now previal."

The Court today also upheld a section of the McCarran Internal Security Act which says an alien must be deported if he was a Communist at any time after entering this country. This was a (7) to two decision. Justices Black and Douglas, in the minority, held that they could not agree that "because a man was once a Communist, he must always carry the curse."

The name of Vice President Nixon came into the Army-McCarthy hearings today..unofficially. During the resumed session today, Senator McCarthy charged that a high official of the executive department told Senator Potter, Michigan Republican, to ask the army for a copy of charges against McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr. Later, a member of the McCarthy staff identified the official as Mr. Nixon..although no one confirmed this and Mr. Nixon was not available for comment. Senator McCarthy charged that this high official, in effect, wanted to use Senator Potter as a means to make the charges public. Potter immediately acknowledged that a high official did call on him..but not for the purpose that McCarthy suggested..rather it was to make sure that some Republican member of the investigating committee had the report as soon as other members of Congress received it.

Army Secretary Stevens returned to the stand today and before winding up his testimony he insisted that the Army was acting on its own, without orders from the White House or any other non-Pentagon source, when it made it charges against McCarthy and HIS AIDES. At one point the Senator charged the Secretary with trying to "cover up" for some one else. Stevens denied this. McCarthy said that during his testimony Stevens either was in error or had committed perjury on some facts. Stevens..as did his Army counsel John G. Adams..both insisted the Army was solely responsible for the charges against McCarthy and his aides. But they acknowledged that White House Aide Sherman Adams had "suggested" that a record be kept of the alleged attempts to seek special favors for Private David Schine.

Then the private's commander at Fort Dix, Major General Cornelius Ryan, testified that he never had "another trainee who received a comparable number of passes" as did Private Schine: 16 during his eight weeks of basic training. General Ryan also said he never had another trainee who was working for a Senate committee. He said the effect of Schine's treatment caused "bewilderment and wonderment" on the part of other trainees at the company and platoon level. General Ryan said Roy Cohn once telephoned a Fort Dix officer and "was disturbed and very excited" about the treatment of Schine. The officer told the General that Cohn had threatened "not to forget the names" of the men who, he said, were making it difficult for Private Schine. General Ryan also testified that it was false to say that "the red carpet was rolled out for Schine" or that he was coddled at Fort Dix... His passes were issued for McCarthy committee business.

The State Department says we are flying a rush shipment of light arms and military vehicles to Honduras and Nicaragua..to offset the recent shipment of Communist arms to Guatamala. The shipments are being made "in implementation" of our mutual defense agreements.

The State Department denies that we have received any request from France to agree to an American military commander in Indo-China as a condition to our intervention in the war. In Indo-China today, the French say that a small French force, outnumbered three to two, has driven off an enemy force trying to surround the French garrison. And the enemy today released the French nurse who had been captured with the Dien Bien Phu garrison. She told reporters she had made up her mind to say nothing for publication.

In Geneva, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov snarled negotiations on a cease-fire in Indo-China by demanding political discussions..with the cease-fire to be handled on the battlefields.

In Paris, Britain's Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery said that in the event of war, Russia and her satellites could turn loose a 400-division army and an air force comprised almost wholly of jets..all within 30 days after the war started.

[redacted]

The Navy says one of its blimps has broken a world endurance record for a crew and aircraft by staying in the air without refueling for 180 hours.. [redacted] (seven and a half days.) That breaks the previous record by ten hours. And the Navy says a Viking rocket has reached a record altitude of 159 miles, at White Sands, New Mexico. That exceeds the previous record by 22 miles.

Edward R. Murrow: May 24, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

While we have all been concerned with the Geneva Conference, the march of military events in Indochina and the Army-McCarthy dispute, some interesting and important things have been happening in Germany. There are reliable reports that Russian officials in Geneva have been telling German observers there that Moscow is very interested in following up Molotov's offer made at Berlin, of expanding and improving relations between East and West Germany.

West Germany is today the power house, the dynamo of Western Europe. Chancellor Adenauer's government operates with a more secure working majority than does any major country in Western Europe. The Chancellor has found it necessary to repudiate the suggestions widely heard in Germany that his government is making overtures to Russia or Communist China at the present time. High West German officials are afraid that talk of closer German-Russian relations will awaken memories of the Rapallo Agreement of 1922 and the Ribbentrop-Molotov Pact of 1939. Such talk serves to remind that twice in the recent past a non-Communist Germany made a deal with Communist Russia. A repetition of this performance is not imminent, but it remains a possibility. Under certain circumstances Germany could move again down the path leading to an alliance with Russia. The Russians can always hold out the promise of vast markets stretching all the way to the China Sea; and they can also dangle the promise of something dear to the heart of all Germans - the re-unification of Germany.

The fact is that West Germany's relations with the Western Powers have descended gradually through successive degrees of ~~conclusion~~ confusion until they now are practically paralyzed. It is necessary to remember that almost exactly two years ago Germany and the Western nations signed the Bonn Agreement, giving Germany the full essence of sovereignty, and binding Germany to the Western Military Alliance. Since then the record has been one of frustration and confusion. Chancellor Adenauer's political opponents have been attacking him with increasing effect for committing Germany unreservedly to a Western policy, when the Western partners, particularly the French, do not deliver.

The Social Democrats, the Refugee Party and the Neo-Nazi Adventurers are in a position where they can win ground at the expense of Adenauer, by demanding closer relations with Russia as an alternative to the firm and fast alliance with the West which appears to many Germans to have bogged down.

There is a widespread belief in Britain and in France that the European Defense Community and the European Army Plan are dead. This was the pivot of our policy in regard to Western Europe. It was also the ground upon which Chancellor Adenauer chose to fight his political battles - thereby winning a handsome and substantial majority. If the European Army Plan fails, this country will have to re-appraise and re-examine its policy with respect to Western Europe, and the West Germans will likewise have to re-appraise and re-examine where their national self-interest lies.

As of today the West has powerful friends in West Germany. The government at Bonn is eager and willing to pursue a policy that is keyed to a West European federation. But this could be a temporary state of affairs. The Germans, by training and tradition, are experts at playing the East against the West. If the Western Alliance fails of its purpose, it will have discredited its friends in Germany, and have opened the road for the political victory of extremists of either the right or the left.

In the light of recent history it is a mistake to assume that West Germany must go Communist before it could associate itself with ~~Communist~~ Russian policy and purpose. Twice within thirty years a non-Communist German Government has done exactly that. It could happen again. If the West German Government, having staked its hopes and its existence on the European Army Plan, finds that its partners cannot or will not deliver, then that government is not likely long to survive. If the Western Alliance is unworkable, then the Germans must look elsewhere. The Germans are no strangers to extreme political and military action. The Russians can hold out at least two glittering promises - the restoration of pre-war frontiers and the prospect of ~~most~~ Much trade. If the European Army Plan does not go through, our policy and our purpose in Europe will have been frustrated, and chances for survival of a democratic, tolerant Western oriented German regime will probably have been destroyed. For it is the history of nations as of individuals, that when moderation does not achieve results, extremes are resorted to.

In politics, as in war, there are generally two courses that can be followed: time, patience and moderation...or action, extreme action, regardless of the consequences. Oscar Wilde once contended that "moderation is a fatal thing. Nothing, he said, succeeds like excess." But the Roman Horace argued:"There is due measure in all things. There are fixed limits, beyond and short of which right can find no place."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today ordered lower federal courts to reconsider decision in a number of segregation cases in the light of the Supreme Court's decision last Monday. This decision held segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional. Today the court, in effect, granted Negroes new victories in appeals involving racial segregation in colleges, public housing, on a municipal golf course and a city-owned theater. The net effect of these decisions was to give a clear indication that the Court believes the constitutionality of segregation now extends beyond the school issue. To use the court's phrases: "in the light of last Monday's ruling and "conditions that now prevail."

The Court today also upheld a section of the McCarran Internal Security Act which says an alien must be deported if he was a Communist at any time after entering this country. This was a 7 to two decision. Justices Black and Douglas, in the minority, held that they could no agree that "because a man was once a Communist, he must always carry the curse."

The name of Vice President Nixon came into the Army-McCarthy hearings today - unofficially. During the resumed session today, Senator McCarthy charged that a high official of the executive department told Senator Potter, Michigan Republican, to ask the army for a copy of charges against McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr. Later, a member of the McCarthy staff identified the official as Mr. Nixon, although no one confirmed this, and Mr. Nixon was not available for comment. Senator McCarthy charged that this high official, in effect, wanted to use Senator Potter as a means to make the charges public. Potter immediately acknowledged that a high official did call on him, but not for the purpose that McCarthy suggested - rather it was to make sure that some Republican member of the investigating committee had the report as soon as other members of Congress received it.

Army Secretary Stevens returned to the stand today and before winding up his testimony he insisted that the Army was acting on its own, without orders from the White House or any other non-Pentagon source, when it made it charges against McCarthy and his aides. At one point the Senator charged the Secretary with trying to "cover up" for some one else. Stevens denied this. McCarthy said that during his testimony Stevens either was in error or had committed perjury on some facts. Stevens as did his Army Counsel, John G. Adams, both insisted the Army was solely responsible for the charges against McCarthy and his aides. But they acknowledged that White House Aide Sherman Adams had "suggested" that a record be kept of the alleged attempts to seek special favors for Private David Schine.

Then the private's commander at Fort Dix, Major General Cornelius Ryan, testified that he never had "another trainee who received a comparable number of passes" as did Private Schine: 16 during his eight weeks of basic training. General Ryan also said he never had another trainee who was working for a Senate committee. He said the effect of Schine's treatment caused "bewilderment and wonderment" on the part of other trainees at the company and platoon level. General Ryan said Roy Cohn once telephoned a Fort Dix officer and "was disturbed and very excited" about the treatment of Schine. The officer told the General that Cohn had threatened "not to forget the names" of the men, who, he said, were making it difficult for Private Schine. General Ryan also testified that it was false to say that "the red carpet was rolled out for Schine" or that he was coddled at Fort Dix. His passes were issued for McCarthy committee business.

The State Department says we are flying a rush shipment of light arms and military vehicles to Honduras and Nicaragua to offset the recent shipment of Communist arms to Guatamala. The shipments are being made "in implementation" of our mutual defense agreements.

The State Department denies that we have received any request from France to agree to an American military commander in Indo-China as a condition to our intervention in the war. In Indo-China toda , the French say that a small French force, outnumbered three to two, has driven off an enemy force trying to surround the French garrison. And the enemy today released the French nurse who had been captured with the Dien Bien Phu garrison. She told reporters she had made up her mind to say nothing for publication.

In Geneva, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov snarled negotiations on a cease-fire in Indo-China by demanding political discussions with the cease-fire to be handled on the battlefields.

In Paris, Britain's Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery said that in the event of war, Russia and her satellites could turn loose a 400 division army and an air force comprised almost wholly of jets - all within 30 days after the war started.

The Navy says one of its blimps has broken a world endurance record for a crew and aircraft by staying in the air without refueling for 180 hours (seven and a half days.) That breaks the previous record by ten hours. And the Navy says a Viking rocket has reached a record altitude of 159 miles at White Sands, New Mexico. That exceeds the previous record by 22 miles.

While we have all been concerned with the Geneva Conference, the march of military events in Indochina and the Army-McCarthy dispute, some interesting and important things have been happening in Germany. There are reliable reports that Russian officials in Geneva have been telling German observers there that Moscow is very interested in following up Molotov's offer made at Berlin, of expanding and improving relations between East and West Germany.

West Germany is today the power house, the dyname of Western Europe. Chancellor Adenauer's government operates with a more secure working majority than does any major cointry in Western Europe. The Chancellor has found it necessary to repudiate the suggestions widely heard in Germany that his government is making overtures to Russia or Communist China at the present time. High West German officials are afraid that talk of closer German-Russian relations will awaken memories of the Rapallo Agreement of 1922 and the Ribbentrop-Molotov Pact of 1939. Such talk serves to remind that twice in the recent past a non-Communist Germany made a deal with Communist Russia. A repetition of this performance is not imminent, but it remains a possibility. Under certain circumstances Germany could move again down the path leading to an alliance with Russia. The Russians can always hold out the promise of vast markets stretching all the way to the China Sea; and they can also dangle the promise of something dear to the heart of all Germans - the re-unification of Germany. The fact is that West Germany's relations with the Western Powers have descended gradually through successive degrees of confusion until they now are practically paralyzed. It is necessary to remember that almost exactly two years ago Germany and the Western nations signed the Bonn Agreement, giving Germany the full essence of sovereignty, and binding Germany to the Western Military Alliance. Since then the record has been one of frustration and confusion. Chancellor Adenauer's political opponents have been attacking him with increasing effect for for committing Germany unreservedly to a Western policy, when the Western partners, particularly the French, do not deliver. The Social Democrats, the Refugee Party and the Neo-Nazi Adventurers are in a position where they can win ground at the expense of Adenauer, by demanding closer relations with Russia as an alternative to the firm and fast alliance with the West which appears to many Germans to have bogged down. There is a widespread belief in Britain and in France that the European Defense Community and the European Army Plan are dead. This was the pivot of our policy in regard to Western Europe. It was also the ground upon which Chancellor Adenauer chose to fight his political battles - thereby winning a handsome and substantial majority. If the European Army Plan fails, this country will have to re-appraise and re-examine its policy with respect to Western Europe, and the West Germans will likewise have to re-appraise and re-examine where their national self-interest lies.

As of today the West has powerful friends in West Germany. The government at Bonn is eager and willing to pursue a policy that is keyed to a West European federation. But this could be a temporary state of affairs. The Germans, by training and tradition, are experts at playing the East against the West. If the Western Alliance fails of its purpose, it will have discredited its friends in Germany, and have opened the road for the political victory of extremists of either the right or the left.

In the light of recent history it is a mistake to assume that West Germany must go Communist before it could associate itself with Russian policy and purpose. Twice within thirty years, a non-Communist German Government has done exactly that. It could happen again. If the West German Government, having staked its hopes and its existence on the European Army Plan, finds that its partners cannot or will not deliver, then that government is not likely long to survive. If the Western Alliance is unworkable, then the Germans must look elsewhere. The Germans are no strangers to extreme political and military action. The Russians can hold out at least two glittering promises - the restoration of pre-war frontiers and the prospect of much trade. If the European Army Plan does not go through, our policy and our purpose in Europe will have been frustrated, and chances for survival of a democratic, tolerant Western oriented German regime will probably have been destroyed. For it is the history of nations as of individuals, that when moderation does not achieve results, extremes are resorted to.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In politics, as in war, there are generally two courses that can be followed: time, patience and moderation, or action, extreme action, regardless of the consequences. Oscar Wilde once contended that "moderation is a fatal thing. Nothing, he said, succeeds like excess." But the Roman Horace argued: "There is due measure in all things. There are fixed limits, beyond and short of which right can find no place."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday May 25, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says the Communist shipment of arms to Gautamala may be a move to set up a red base near the Panama Canal.. just 750 air miles away. [I'd like to discuss this situation in a few minutes.]

The Secretary also told reporters that we will support any appeal to the United Nations to send a peace observation commission to Southeast Asia. And he said we would not intervene in the war in Indo-China unless: it was to defend freedom..not colonialism; unless other nations in the area realize the peril; unless the U.N. would give us some sort of moral approval; and unless Congress approves such intervention.

Prime Minister Churchill said in London today that the forthcoming Five Power military staff ~~talks must be~~ on Indo-China kept completely seperate from the Southeast Asia alliance proposed by Washington.

In Geneva today, for the first time in more than four weeks of conferences, East and West started to talk about concrete steps necessary to end the fighting in Indo-China. ~~Some~~ Western sources reported "some progress" in the secret meetings. ~~Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov has not repeated his demand for the discussion of political questions.~~

In Indo-China, French bombers again attacked enemy troop concentrations west of Hanoi. And the French news agency reports that Life Magazine photographer Robert Capa was killed in Northern Indo-China when he stepped on a land mine. The agency reported no other details.

French Nurse Genevieve de GALLARD TERROBE told reporters in Hanoi today that after the fall of Dien Bien Phu wounded French soldiers were kept in an underground hospital for three days..in total darkness... until the Communists MADE make-shift tents. She said after the surrender she could do little for the wounded "except smile at them." She said she didn't see much of the fighting because she was always working with the wounded.."many times in mud up to my knees."

In Washington today army witnesses testified that Private G. David Schine, a former consultant to the McCarthy committee, received four times as many passes as the average trainee during his basic training period at Fort Dix. The Army produced a chart to demonstrate this. Senator McCarthy called the chart "phoney" and "dishonest." But a general, a colonel and a lieutenant all testified they saw nothing dishonest about it. Major General Ryan, the commandant at Fort Dix, said he never heard Secretary Stevens ask Private Schine to pose for a photographer with him.. a charge made by Roy Cohn. Ryan said Schine was repeatedly given special leaves..but always on the grounds that it was to do work for the McCarthy committee. The General said Schine made 250 long distance calls from Fort Dix and he knows of no other private who approached this. The General acknowledged that this was all right if a private had the money and the time. He also testified that during Schine's eight-week training period 29 calls were made by McCarthy staff members to General Ryan's office on behalf of Schine. General Ryan said Schine was given a "superior" efficiency rating but was rated only "fair" in character. Another army witness, Colonel Be Lew, aide to Secretary Stevens testified that at Fort Monmouth last October, after Roy Cohen was denied entrance to a secret laboratory, Cohen said:"This means war with the army. I don't understand why you let Communists work in here and won't let me in. I have access to F.B.I. files. We'll investigate the heck out of the army."(Cohn has denied that he ever said he had access to F.B.I. files.) Another army witness, Lieut. John Blount, aide to General Ryan, said that in a phone conversation Roy Cohn was very angry over the treatment given Private Schine and said so "in no uncertain terms."

(The Army charges that McCarthy and his staff used improper pressures to win preferential treatment for Schine. Senator McCarthy charges the Army used Schine as a hostage to blackmail the committee into abandoning its investigation of alleged Communism in the army.)

~~The District of Columbia Boar of Education today adopted a plan for ending segregation of white and negro students in Washington's public schools. It calls for: all assigments in the school system to be made on merit, not race or color. .... No pupil to be favored or discriminated against because of race or color...No children to be permitted to att nd schools outside the boundaries in which they leave for reasons of race or color... no personnel records pupil or to make reference to race or color ... and all schools to be used to maximum efficiency without regard to race or color. The Board did not vote on when to put this into effect.~~

Ethiopia's Emperor Hailie Selassie arrived in New York today and POINTED OUT THAT his country was the only one in the Near East and Middle East to send troops to Korea.

The Board of Immigration Appeals today suspended a deportation order against Singer Dick Haymes. The board acted on the basis of a charge by Haymes' attorney that Immigration Officials instructed an employe in Los Angeles NOT to warn Haynes that if he left the country for Hawaii he might not be eligible to get back in.

And the House Ways and Means Committee reversed itself and decided not to make an estimated 150-thousand doctors and interns eligible for social security.

Edward R. Murrow: May 25, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles told his news conference today that the value of the arms recently shipped to Guatemala from Poland was ten million dollars. The value of the two air cargoes of arms the United States has just sent to Honduras and Nicaragua is only one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. However, the tiny American air shipments are a gesture. It served notice that the United States will not permit Guatemala's power to be increased in relation to that of its neighbors through Communist help.

Foreign Minister TORIELLO of Guatemala Called Mr Dulles Remarks, Exagerations of Fantastic things" a ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~. He had held a ninety-minute conference with Ambassador John Peurifoy and said that at their talk the ground had been laid to end the tension between his country and the United States. He told his countrymen the United States has the right to sell arms to Honduras, and Honduras has the right to buy them. He did not mention Nicaragua, presumably because diplomatic relations with that country have been broken off.

He described his talk with Mr. Peurifoy as long and friendly, and as a result he hoped the problems with the United States could be resolved cordially. "The situation just could not continue", he declared. "It was like an elastic band that had been stretched and stretched until it was at the breaking point."

2

Experience has taught that sometimes Senor Toriello talks with optimism, without having something concrete in mind to base it on. Anyhow, whatever was said to Mr. Peurifoy was not reported by the Ambassador to Mr. Dulles in time for his news conference today. Senor Toriello was quite correct in saying the United States has a right to sell arms to Honduras, and Honduras to buy them. The United States has just completed mutual defense agreements with Honduras and Nicaragua, calling for military training programs and arms shipments. They are the first Central American defense agreements. Similar ones have been signed with Ecuador, Peru, Cuba, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Uruguay and the Dominican Republic.

The arms flown to Honduras and Nicaragua would have been shipped anyway under the new agreements, whether Guatemala had received the Polish shipment or not. But they hardly would have been flown in, even though the cost of air freight is not much more than shipment by boat.

Flying the arms dramatized the American concern over Guatemala being strengthened by Communist aid. The concern was dramatized still more by Mr. Dulles in pointing out today that Guatemala might be building up a military strong point near the Panama Canal. He said the important question is whether Guatemala is being subjected to Communist colonialism.

In the words of the Caracas resolution, he pointed out, that would endanger the peace of America.

The facts about the Guatemalan arms shipment from Poland are now being quickly gathered and will be laid before the members of the Organization of American States. The United States does not intend to act singly to discipline Guatemala. But it is taking the lead to obtain information so as to be in a position to invite whatever action is found to be called for. Under the Rio treaty economic sanctions can be imposed by a two-thirds vote. Military sanctions call for a unanimous vote.

Guatemala already is the strongest Central American country. It has an army of twenty-two thousand as against twenty-five hundred in Honduras; and three thousand and a reserve of four thousand in Nicaragua. An army of twenty-two thousand may seem pretty small. But precisely because it is small, and the neighboring armies are smaller, the arrival of two thousand tons of arms in Guatemala can make a big difference in relative power.

Washington well realizes that Guatemala is a show-window display of the success of Communist infiltration in this hemisphere. Here is a country with only four Communists in Congress, no Communists in the cabinet, and probably not more than three thousand dues-paying Communists all told.

The army itself is not strongly permeated and undoubtedly would not permit open seizure of power by Communists. Yet President Arbenz, though securely in control because of his influence with the army, works in close accord with leaders of the Communist movement. They are, in the main, young intellectuals of great zeal. They have already won much of organized labor and are on the way to winning a hold in the rural hinterland with promises of land reform. Communists have infiltrated the social services, the school system and the propaganda office. They have followed the Party line by organizing and then joining the Popular Front. They have set up local branches of the main Communist front organizations, like the World Peace Council, the World Federation of Democratic Youth, the International Students Union, and the International Women's Democratic Federation. And Guatemalan labor belongs to the World Federation of Trade Unions. So when Moscow wants an echo from abroad it always can get it. And the echo carries far beyond Guatemala's borders.

Obviously the remedy for this situation is not simply to fly arms to Honduras and Nicaragua. The Administration in Washington knows this, and is laying far-reaching economic plans. It remains to be seen how soon they can be applied and how far they can reach.

These are tense days in which we're living. And our policy in Latin America seems to be based on a theory Nathan Bailey once put this way: "Threats without power are like powder without ball." But perhaps Ramsey MacDonald was right when he concluded that "arms have never yet saved a nation from war, nor have they given security to either strong or weak from attack."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says the Communist shipment of arms to Gautamala may be a move to set up a red base near the Panama Canal just 750 air miles away. I'd like to discuss this situation in a few minutes.

The Secretary also told reporters that we will support any appeal to the United Nations to send a peace observation commission to Southeast Asia. And he said we would not intervene in the war in Indo-China unless: it was to defend freedom not colonialims; unless other nations in the area realize the peril; unless the U.N. would give us some sort of moral approval; and unless Congress approves such intervention.

Prime Minister Churchill said in London today that the forthcoming Five Power military staff talks on Indo-China be kept completely seperate from the South-east Asia alliance proposed by Washington.

In Geneva today, for the first time in more than four weeks of conferences, East and West started to talk about concrete steps necessary to end the fighting in Indo-China. Western sources reported "some progress" in the secret meetings.

In Indo-China, French bombers again attacked enemy troop concentrations west of Hanoi. And the French news agency reports that Life Magazine photographer Robert Capa was killed in Northern Indo-China when he stepped on a land mine. The agency reported no other details.

French Nurse Genevieve de Gallard Terraube told reporters in Hanoi today that after the fall of Dien Bien Phu wounded French soldiers were kept in an underground hospital for three days in total darkness until the Communists made make-shift tents. She said after the surrender she could do little for the wounded "except smile at them." She said she didn't see much of the fighting because she was always working with the wounded "many times in mud up to my knees."

In Washington today army witnesses testified that Private G. David Schine, a former consultant to the McCarthy committee, received four times as many passes as the average trainee during his basic training period at Fort Dix. The Army produced a chart to demonstrate this. Senator McCarthy called the chart "phoney and dishonest." But a general, a colonel and a lieutenant all testified they saw nothing dishonest about it. Major General Ryan, the commandant at Fort Dix, said he never heard Secretary Stevens ask Private Schine to pose for a photographer with him - a charge made by Roy Cohn. Ryan said Schine was repeatedly given special leaves - but always on the grounds that it was to do work for the McCarthy committee. The General said Schine made 250 long distance calls from Fort Dix and he knows of no other private who approached this. The General acknowledged that this was all right if a private had the money and the time. He also testified that during Schine's eight week training period 29 calls were made by McCarthy staff members to General Ryan's office on behalf of Schine. General Ryan said Schine was given a "superior" efficiency rating but was rated only "fair" in character. Another army witness, Colonel Be Low, aide to Secretary Stevens testified that at Fort Monmouth last October, after Roy Cohn was denied entrance to a secret laboratory, Cohn said: "This means war with the Army. I don't understand why you let Communists work in here and won't let me in. I have access to F.B.I. files. We'll investigate the hock out of the army." (Cohn has denied that he ever said he had access to F.B.I. files.) Another army witness, Lieutent John Blount, aid to General Ryan, said that in a phone conversation Roy Cohn was very angry over the treatment given Private Schine and said so "in no uncertain terms."

The Army charges that McCarthy and his staff used improper pressures to win preferential treatment for Schine. Senator McCarthy charges the Army used Schine as a hostage to blackmail the committee into abandoning its investigation of alleged Communism in the army.

Ethiopia's Emperior Hailie Selassie arrived in New York today and pointed out that his country was the only one in the Near East and Middle East to send troops to Korea.

The Board of Immigration Appeals today suspended a deportation order against Singer Dick Haymes. The board acted on the basis of a charge by Haymes's attorney that Immigration Officials instructed an employee in Los Angeles NOT to warn Haymes that if he left the country for Hawaii he might not be eligible to get back in.

And the House Ways and Means Committee reversed itself and decided not to make an estimated 150-thousand doctors and interns eligible for social security.

Secretary Dulles told his news conference today that the value of the arms recently shipped to Guatemala from Poland was ten million dollars. The value of the two air cargoes of arms the United States has just sent to Honduras and Nicaragua is only one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. However, the tiny American air shipments are a gesture. It served notice that the United States will not permit Guatemala's power to be increased in relation to that of its neighbors through Communist help.

Foreign Minister Toriello of Guatemala called Mr. Dulles' remarks exagerations of fantastic things. He had held a ninety-minute conference with Ambassador John Peurifoy and said that at their talk the ground had been laid to end the tension between his country and the United States. He told his countrymen the United States has the right to seel arms to Honduras, and Honduras has the right to buy them. He did not mention Nicaragua, presumably because diplomatic relations with that country have been broken off.

He described his talk with Mr. Peurifoy as long and friendly, and as a result he hoped the problems with the United States could be resolved cordially. "The situation just could not continue", he declared. "It was like an elastic band that had been stretched and stretched until it was at the breaking point."

Experience has taught that sometimes Senor Toriello talsk with optimism, without having something concrete in mind to base it on. Anyhow, whatever was said to Mr. Peurifoy was not reported by the Ambassador to Mr. Dulles in time for his news conference today. Senor Toriello was quite correct in saying the United States has a right to sell arms to Honduras, and Honduras to buy them. The United States has just completed mutual defense agreements with Honduras and Nicaragua, calling for military training programs and arms shipments. They are the first Central American defense agreements. Similar ones have been signed with Ecuador, Peru, Cuba, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Uruguay and the Dominican Republic.

The arms flown to Honduras and Nicaragua would have been shipped anyway under the new agreements, whether Guatemala had received the Polish shipment or not. But they hardly would have been flown in, even though the cost of air freight is not much more than shipment by boat.

Flying the arms dramatized the American concern over Guatemala being strengthened by Communist aid. The concern was dramatized still more by Mr. Dulles in pointing out today that Guatemala might be building up a military strong point near the Panama Canal. He said the important question is whether Guatemala is being subjected to Communist colonialism. In the words of the Caracas resolution, he pointed out, that would endanger the peace of America.

The facts about the Guatemalan arms shipment from Poland are now being quickly gathered and will be laid before the members of the Organization of American States. The United States does not in end to act singly to discipline Guatemala. But it is taking the lead to obtain information so as to be in a position to invite whatever action is found to be called for. Under the Rio treaty economic sanctions can be imposed by a two-thirds vote. Military sanctions call for a unanimous vote.

Guatemala already is the strongest Central American country. It has an army of twenty-two thousand as against twenty-five hundred in Honduras; and three thousand and a reserve of four thousand in Nicaragua. An army of twenty-two thousand may seem pretty small, and the neighboring armies are smaller, the arrival of two thousand tons of arms in Guatemala can make a big difference in relative power.

Washington well realizes that Guatemala is a show-window display of the success of Communist infiltration in this hemisphere. Here is a country with only four Communists in Congress, no Communists in the cabinet, and probably not more than three thousand dues-paying Communists all told.

The army itself is not strongly permeated and undoubtedly would not permit open seizure of power by Communists. Yet President Arbenz, though securely in control because of his influence with the army, works in close accord with leaders of the Communist movement. They are, in the main, young intellectuals of great zeal. They have already won much of organized labor and are on the way to winning a hold in the rural hinterland with promises of land reform. Communists have infiltrated the social services, the school system and the propaganda office. They have followed the Party line by organizing and then joining the Popular Front. They have set up local branches of the main Communist front organizations like the the World Peace Council, the World Federation of Democratic Youth, the International Students Union, and the International Women's Democratic Federation. And Guatemalan labor belongs to the World Federation of Trade Unions. So when Moscow wants an echo from abroad it always can get it. And the echo carries far beyond Guatemala's borders. Obviously the remedy for this situation is not simply to fly arms to Honduras and Nicaragua. The Administration in Washington knows this, and is laying far-reaching economic plans. It remains to be seen how soon they can be applied and how far they can reach.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These are tense days in which we're living. And our policy in Latin America seems to be based on a theory Nathan Bailey once put this way: "Threats without power are like powder without ball." But perhaps Ramsey MacDonald was right when he concluded that "arms have never yet saved a nation from war, nor have they given security to either strong or weak from attack."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday May 26, 1954

This is the news:

At least 89 AND POSSIBLY 100 men were killed today by an explosion and fire on the aircraft carrier Bennington. Another 201 were injured..many badly burned. The skipper of the Bennington, Captain William F. Raborn says he is not yet able to say what caused the explosion that occurred as his ship was off the New England coast. When the Bennington put into Quonset Point, Rhode Island, he told reporters: "All leads have proved groundless. There was nothing explosive in the area where the explosion took place." The explosion occurred near the Bennington's living quarters.. (one reason for the high casualties) the second worst peacetime disaster in the navy's history. [redacted] And Captain Raborn, promising the full facts WHEN they are available, told reporters:"I am proud to be the commanding officer of such a heroic, unselfish crew of American seamen."

United States naval authorities at Balboa in the Canal Zone announced tonight that they have seized the French Line ship S.S.Wyoming. It was passing through the Canal with what its captain called "heavy machinery"..which turned out to be arms..believed bound for Guatemala.

One spokesman for the French Line says the Wyoming had a "few cases of hunting rifles aboard."Another spokesman says there are "no arms aboard."

[redacted]

The air force says three of is B-36 bombers will make a "flying goodwill visit" tomorrow to Nicaragua.. a buffer between the Panama Canal and Guatemala. The Defense Department says the bomber flight will help celebrate Nicaragua's independence day..(It also will be a demonstration of our military power.)

The Mundt committee today voted to DROP [redacted] charges made by the army against Francis Carr, a McCarthy staff member, and charges made by Mc Carthy against H. Struve Hensel, assistant secretary of defense. The vote was four to three..Republicans against Democrats. And it came after the Democratic committee members protested: this was a deliberate effort to keep Carr from testifying AND a possible slick whitewash... Army Counsel Welch says it was Carr who originated the charge that [redacted] Secretary Stevens tried to switch the McCarthy committee from investigating the army to an investigation of the navy and air force. Hensel's counsel called the committee decision complete vindication of his client. Democratic Senator Symington says he'll carry his fight to the SENATE FLOOR TO hear from both Carr and Hensel [redacted] Senator McCarthy approved the vote. He said he didn't think he could get "the facts" from

Hensel..who he has accused of master-midning the army's case..because of the President's recent executive order. Earlier, the army ended its case..on the 21st day..with the testimony of Captain Joseph Miller, who had been Private David Schine's company commander at Fort Dix. Miller testified that: Schine told him he was in the army to try to remake the military establishment, along modern lines..that Schine apparently offered him a trip to Florida.. that Schine once disobeyed orders, and left the post on New Year's eve..that Schine said he would mention Captain Miller in "reports" he was writing. Tomorrow's witness will be Roy Cohn. [redacted]

Adlai Stevenson said in Mississippi today, that the Republicans in Congress are caught between apathy, and McCarthy, and are trying to usurp the powers of the President. He said this invasion of the executive domain, has brought on "a constitutional crisis." Stevenson said:"In the last 16 months Republican free-booters have raked their president fore and aft, with everything from the Bricker amendment (to curb the President's treaty powers) to intimidation of our diplomats, and slander of our army." And Stevenson said Mr. Eisenhower is still "reluctant to man the barricades of his office and defend those rights and perform those duties that are his."

Attorney General Brownell today announced a roundup of 11 leaders of the Peurto Rican Nationalist party. They are charged with seditious conspiracy to overthrow our government. Six of the suspects were arrested here in Chicago..four in New York and one in San Juan, the capital of Peurto Rico.

~~Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio today threatened perjury action against a witness he charged had "weasled out of the truth" at a hearing on tax exempt foundations. He made this charge against Aaron Sargent a San Fransisco attorney whose testimony has linked foundation funds with a conspiracy to influence education along socialist lines.~~

The House Veterans Committee today unanimously approved an increase of nearly ten per cent for federal pensions and compensation payments to ex-servicemen and their dependents.

~~New York Central stockholders met in Albany today to vote on who they want to run control the railroad. But the decision will probably not be known until Tuesday.~~

At the Geneva conference, a showndown appears to be near in the efforts to bring about an end to the war in Indo-China. My colleague David Schoenbrun is covering that conference in Geneva. And this is what he has to record.:

(runs 6;27 ending
Now back to erm")

This is Ed Murrow..I811 be back etc.

CBS 5915

~~NY MAY 26, 1954~~

ZOUSMER ~~AARON~~

~~NEWSROOM~~

~~WDRM~~

AS DAVID SCHOENBRUN POINTED OUT, THOSE ATTENDING THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ARE STILL SEARCHING FOR A SOLUTION, TO BRING THE INDO-CHINA WAR TO AN END. THOMAS CARLYLE ONCE REMARKED."LET HIM WHO GROPES PAINFULLY, IN DARKNESS OF UNCERTAIN LIGHT, LAY THIS PRECEPT WELL TO HEART. DO THE DUTY WHICH LIETH NEAREST TO THEE, WHICH THOU KNOWEST TO BE A DUTY. THE SECOND DUTY WILL ALREADY HAVE BECOME CLEARER." ~~END~~

~~AARON~~

Good nite + Good Luck.

1954 MAY 26 PM 5:29

K

CORRECTION FIFTH LINE CHANGE FIRST WORD WILL TO READ "WELL"

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 26, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... At the Geneva conference a showdown appears to be near in the efforts to bring about an end to the war in Indochina. My colleague David Schoenbrun, normally stationed in Paris, is covering that conference in Geneva. And this is what he has to record:

SCHOENBRUN: The Communists are pressing their offensive on both the military and diplomatic fronts tonite against a still confused and divided Western coalition. Communist successes were scored today on all the battle fronts, on the delta of the Red River, on the banks of the Thames and the Seine, and here on the verdant shores of Lake Leman. Up in the delta of the north some twenty thousand Communist troops attacked in force the garrison at Yenphu, just north of Hanoi, in what reporters there warned might become another Dienbienphu. Dispatches from Hanoi broke a three-week-old censorship ban on news that Yenphu had been cut off and was being supplied by air. I was up on that road out of Hanoi about two weeks ago, when we first heard of an encircling move against that garrison. It's a key post. If it falls the Viets can move down and begin the envelopment of Hanoi from the east, astride the vital road to the port of Haiphong.

Here at Geneva itself the Communists are pressing their advantage too in a shrewdly calculated and smoothly timed diplomatic envelopment of the West. At the conference table they're dangling tempting olive branches at the French and theBritish. At yesterday's session the Vietminh proposed a cease-fire and the regrouping of belligerent forces in zones of influence, to be followed by a cessation of hostile moves, such as arms shipments or reinforcements. It's just the sort of proposal best calculated to appeal to the war-weary people and Parliament of France and to the trigger-nervous British, who are fearful that continued hostilities may set off an ultimate explosion between China and America.

The Communists are exploiting these fears adroitly, using them to drive a wedge into the Western alliance, and tonite they made another move. The news comes from London. Eight members of the British Labor Party, including former Premier Clement Attlee and the fiery Welshman Aneurin Bevan, have accepted an invitation to visit China in August. All of these moves are tied in closely, for the Communists obviously know where the Western weak points are and miss no chance to explore them.

One of the most extraordinary tactical moves came here in Geneva this afternoon when the Chinese invited all major news agencies to a conference, to announce the possibility of an exchange of American and Chinese prisoners if -- and it's a big if -- the United States would talk directly to China. It was another shrewd mixture of olive branch and steel fist, for it was coupled with an attack on the United States for holding Chinese students and doctors in America who wanted to go home. The main purpose of the announcement seemed here to be aimed at giving ammunition to critics of American policy on China, particularly our policy of refusing to deal with the Chinese or to recognize them as a major world power. This is a policy under heavy fire here in all delegations, not excluding our own American team, many of whose members are privately critical of our ostrich-like refusal to look at the China issue squarely.

But perhaps the greatest Communist success of all was scored in Paris, where an angry Parliament finally forced Premier Laniel to accept a debate next week on Indochinese policy, a debate that he had fought two confidence votes to avoid. Once again the French are in danger of being caught at an international conference with their Cabinet down, an open invitation to the Communists to make no concessions here to Bidault, since they might get a complete sell-out from some other foreign minister if Bidault is overthrown.

If this sounds like a blackly pessimistic view of Western chances, then it sounds exactly the way this reporter means it to. As soberly as I can make it out, after four weeks in Indochina and one week here in Geneva, I have found that it is the consensus of reporters and diplomats that we are losing the battle of Geneva, just as we are losing the battle of the delta. Is it completely hopeless? Can nothing be done to meet this Communist challenge and counter it? Certainly not. As late as it is, as weak and divided as the West has been, there are still steps that can be taken; there are measures under consideration to avert a military and diplomatic rout. Of course, if the French Government falls, then nothing is going to work. But if it holds, then this is what can be done: Reinforcements can be sent from France to stiffen the delta defenses, while a Southeast Asia pact is formed to guarantee the security of the entire region; and, above all, to let the Communists know that they will not be allowed to go any further. That must be done if the diplomats are to be able to do anything at all in Geneva. Then a cease-fire can be negotiated, which might amount to a defacto partition of Vietnam. That, in fact, is the way this conference is tending right now.

Strategically, the loss of north Vietnam, of the delta, would not seriously imperil the Southeast Asia defense. In fact, most of the north and a good part of the delta are already under Communist occupation. The main strongpoints left are Hanoi, the port of Haiphong and an important quadrilateral where the Red River runs into the China Sea. It is the region of Hatzien (?), the home of the fiercely anti-Communist Catholic Vietnamese. A plan is under top-secret study here in every delegation to set a cease-fire line that would at least protect the port of Haiphong and the Catholic quadrilateral. This would mean, perhaps, giving up Hanoi, which is of political and psychological importance but not strategic. This creation of a Communist buffer state in the north, with a capital at Hanoi, is the deal that will be made here if any settlement at all is possible; while at the same time a new defense line guaranteeing Southeast Asia is thrown across the south and, above all, the Kingdoms of Laos and Cambodia, which are the covers for Burma and Thailand. If this cannot be worked out, then we will have to face up to the loss of all Indochina or to the drastic measures that must be taken to save Indochina. And let there be no doubt about that that involves! That will be up to the United States of America, for we will be faced then with the same crisis that shook our nation when the British pulled out of Greece.

This is David Schoenbrun recording in Geneva. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

At least 89 and possible 100 men were killed today by an explosion and fire on the aircraft carrier Bennington. Another 201 were injured - many badly burned. The skipper of the Bennington, Captain William F. Raborn says he is not yet able to say what caused the explosion that occurred as his ship was off the New England coast. When the Bennington put into Quonset Point, Rhode Island, he told reporters: "All leads have proved groundless. There was nothing explosive in the area where the explosion took place." The explosion occurred near the Bennington's living quarters (one reason for the high casualites, the second worst peacetime disaster in the navy's history.) And Captain Raborn, promising the full facts when they are available, told reporters: "I am proud to be the commanding officer of such a heroic, unselfish crew of American seamen."

United States naval authorities at Balboa in the Canal Zone announced tonight that they have seized the French Line ship, S.S. Wyoming. It was passing through the Canal with what its captain called "heavy machinery" which turned out to be arms, believed bound for Guatemala. One spokesman for the French Line says the Wyoming had a "few cases of hunting rifles aboard." Another spokesman says there are "no arms aboard."

The air force says three B-36 bombers will make a "flying goodwill visit" tomorrow to Nicaragua - a buffer between the Panama Canal and Guatemala. The Defense Department says the bomber flight will help celebrate Nicaragua's independence day - it will also be a demonstration of our military power.

The Mundt committee today voted to drop charges made by the army against Francis Carr, a McCarthy staff member, and charges made by McCarthy against H. Struve Hensel, assistant secretary of defense. The vote was four to three - Republicans against Democrats. And it came after the Democratic committee members protested: this was a deliberate effort to keep Carr from testifying and a possible slick whitewash. Army Counsel Welch says it was Carr who originated the charge that Secretary Stevens tried to switch the McCarthy committee from investigating the army to an investigation of the navy and air force. Hensel's counsel called the committee decision complete vindication of his client. Democratic Senator Symington says he'll carry his fight to the Senate floor to hear from both Carr and Hensel. Senator McCarthy approved the vote. He said he didn't think he could get "the facts" from Hensel who he has accused of master-minding the army's case - because of the President's recent executive order. Earlier, the army ended its case on the 21st day with the testimony of Captain Joseph Miller who had been Private David Schine's company commander at Fort Dix. Miller testified that: Schine told him he was in the army to try to remake the military establishment along modern lines - that Schine apparently offered him a trip to Florida - that Schine once disobeyed orders and left the post on New Year's eve - that Schine said he would mention Captain Miller in "reports" he was writing. Tomorrow's witness will be Roy Cohn.

Adlai Stevenson said in Mississippi today that the Republicans in Congress are caught between apathy and McCarthy and are trying to usurp the powers of the President. He said this invasion of the executive domain has brought on " a constitutional crisis." Stevenson said: "In the last 16 months Republican free-booters have raked their president fore and aft with everything from the Bricker amendment to curb the President's treaty powers to intimidation of our diplomats and slander of our army." And Stevenson said Mr. Eisenhower is still "reluctant to man the barricades of his office and defend those rights and perform those duties that are his."

Attorney General Brownell today announced a roundup of 11 leaders of the Puerto Rican Nationalist party. They are charged with seditious conspiracy to overthrow our government. Six of the suspects were arrested here in Chicago - four in New York and one in San Juan, the capital of Puerto Rico.

The House Veterans Committee today unanimously approved an increase of nearly ten percent for federal pensions and compensation payments to ex-servicemen and their dependents.

At the Geneva conference a showdown appears to be near in the efforts to bring about an end to the war in Indo-China. My colleague David Schoenbrun is covering that conference in Geneva, and this is what he has to record:

SCHOENBRUN: The Communists are pressing their offensive on both the military and diplomatic fronts tonight against a still confused and divided western coalition. Communist successes were scored today on all the battle fronts, on the delta of the Red River, on the banks of the Thames and the Seine, and here on the verdant shores of Lake Leman. Up in the delta of the north some twenty thousand Communist troops attacked in force the garrison at Yenphu, just north of Hanoi, in what reporters there warned might become another Dienbienphu. Dispatches from Hanoi broke a three-week-old censorship ban on news that Yenphu had been cut off and was being supplied by air. I was up on that road out of Hanoi about two weeks ago, when we first heard of an encircling move against that garrison. It's a key post. If it falls the Viets can move down and begin the envelopment of Hanoi from the east, astride the vital road to the port of Haiphong. Here at Geneva itself the Communists are pressing their advantage too in a shrewdly calculated and smoothly timed diplomatic envelopment of the West. At the conference table they're dangling tempting olive branches at the French and the British. At yesterday's session the Vietminh proposed a cease-fire and the regrouping of belligerent forces in zones of influence, to be followed by a ceasation of hostile moves, such as arms shipments or reinforcements. It's just the sort of proposal best calculated to appeal to the war-weary people and Parliament of France and to the trigger-nervous British, who are fearful that continued hostitlities may set off an ultimate explosion between China and America.

The Communists are exploiting these fears adroitly, using them to drive a wedge into the Western alliance, and tonight they made another move. The news comes from London. Eight members of the British Labor Party, including former Premier Clement Attlee and the fiery Welshman Aneurin Bevan, have accepted an invitation to visit China in August. All of these moves are tied in closely, for the Communists obviously know where the Western weak points are and miss no chance to explore them.

One of the most extraordinary tactical moves came here in Geneva this afternoon when the Chinese invited all major news agencies to a conference, to announce the possibility of an exchange of American and Chinese prisoners if - and it's a big if - the United States would talk directly to China. It was another shrewd mixture of olive branch and steel fist, for it was coupled with an attack on the United States for holding Chinese students and doctors in America who wanted to go home. The main purpose of the announcement seemed here to be aimed at giving ammunition to critics of American policy on China, particularly our policy of refusing to deal with the Chinese or to recognize them as a major world power. This is a policy under heavy fire here in all delegations, not excluding our own American team, many of whose members are privately critical of our ostrich-like refusal to look at the China issue squarely. But perhaps the greatest Communist success of all was scored in Paris, where an angry Parliament finally forced Premier Laniel to accept a debate next week on Indochinese policy, a debate that he had fought two confidence votes to avoid. Once again the French are in danger of being caught at an international conference with their Cabinet down, an open invitation to the Communists to make no concessions here to Bidault, since they might get a complete sell-out from some other foreign minister if Bidault is overthrown.

If this sounds like a blackly pessimistic view of Western chances, then it sounds exactly the way this reporter means it to. As soberly as I can make it out, after four weeks in Indochina and one week here in Geneva, I have found that it is the consensus of reporters and diplomats that we are losing the battle of Geneva, just as we are losing the battle of the delta. Is it completely hopeless? Can nothing be done to meet this Communist challenge and counter it? Certainly not. As late as it is, as weak and divided as the West has been, there are still steps that can be taken; there are measures under consideration to avert a military and diplomatic rout. Of course, if the French Government falls, then nothing is going to work. But if it holds, then this is what can be done; Reinforcements can be sent from France to stiffen the delta defenses, while a Southeast Asia pact is formed to guarantee the security of the entire region; and, above all, to let the Communists know that they will not be allowed to go any further. That must be done if the diplomats are to be able to do anything at all in Geneva. Then a cease-fire can be negotiated, which might amount to a defacto partition of Vietnam. That, in fact, is the way this conference is tending right now. Strategically, the loss of north Vietnam, of the delta, would not seriously imperil the Southeast Asia defense. In fact, most of the north and a good part of the delta are already under Communist occupation. The main strongpoints left are Hanoi, the port of Haiphong and an important quadrilateral where the Red River runs into the China Sea. It is the region of Hatzien, the home of the fiercely anti-Communist Catholic Vietnamese. A plan is under top-secret study here in every delegation to set a cease-fire line that would at least protect the port of Haiphong and the Catholic quadrilateral. This would mean, perhaps, giving up Hanoi, which is of political and psychological importance but not strategic. This creation of a Communist buffer state in the north, with a capital at Hanoi, is the deal that will be made here if any settlement at all is possible; while at the same time a new defense line guaranteeing Southeast Asia is thrown across the south and, above all, the Kingdoms of Laos and Cambodia, which are the covers for Burma and Thailand. If this cannot be worked out, then we will have to face up to the loss of all Indochina or to the drastic measures that must be taken to save Indochina. And let there be no doubt about what that involves: That will be up to the United States of America, for we will be faced then with the same crisis that shook our nation when the British pulled out of Greece. This is David Schoenbrun recording in Geneva. I return you not to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As David Schoenbrun pointed out, those attending the Geneva conference are still searching for a solution to bring the Indo-China war to an end. Thomas Carlyle once remarked: "Let him who gropes painfully in darkness of uncertain light lay this precept well to heart. Do the duty which lieth nearest to thee, which thou knowest to be a duty. The second duty will already have become clearer."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday May 27, 1954

This is the news:

Attorney General Brownell has asked the Army to report to him on its investigation of how INFORMATION FROM a secret F.B.I. memorandum went from the army's files to Senator McCarthy. The Senator had introduced it at the Army-McCarthy hearings. The letter..which the Army called "phoney"..turned out to be a portion of a secret F.B.I. report. McCarthy said he received it from a young army intelligence officer. [redacted]

Brownell's statement today came after Democratic Senator McClellan told Senator McCarthy that he may have been guilty of a crime in receiving the secret data. He said:"You cannot [redacted] receive classified information obtained by criminal means without being guilty of a crime." And Mc Carthy said: if anyone in the administration wants to indict him for getting information to expose Communists let them go ahead. McCarthy said that the loyalty oath of every public officer to defend the country against all enemies "towers above any presidential security directive." Mc Clelland said:"I don't know of any loyalty oath anyone takes that requires him to commit a crime."

Roy Cohn was on the witness stand today and he introduced a seven-page memo charging that more than a thousand Communists have wormed their way into the military services. Cohn said the memo was prepared by Paul Crouch, a former Communist, now employed by the Justice Department's Immigration and Naturalization Service. Crouch has testified as a government witness in a series of trials. And Attorney General Brownell told reporters today the Department is investigating whether Crouch has given conflicting testimony at such trials.

At today's hearing, Roy Cohn contradicted a number of points in the previous testimony by Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel Adams. Cohn said both men tried to block the McCarthy investigations of the army and tried to discredit the committee. He said Adams told him it would be a "feather in Adams cap" if the committee did not investigate Fort Monmouth. Cohn said both Stevens and Adams tried to get the committee to lay-off the army and investigate possible Communism in the navy and air force. (Stevens and Adams have denied this.) Cohn said Adams threatened to have Private Schine sent overseas unless McCarthy dropped the Monmouth hearings and an investigation of the army loyalty board. Cohn said Adams frequently referred to Schine as "the hostage." He said Secretary Stevens once told Mc Carthy that Stevens would have to resign if the Fort Monmouth investigation went on. Cohn said General Lawton, the commander at Fort Monmouth, told the McCarthy committee that he had no success in getting rid of possible security risks until the committee moved into the picture. Cohn said General Lawton thought he had better not explain the reasons for this, "Because I'm working for Mr. Stevens." Cohn said Adams later told him he thought the General talked too much. Cohn accused Adams of "blackmail" and said Adams told him he'd stop at nothing to kill the McCarthy investigation of [redacted] the army. [redacted] Cohn returns [redacted] as witness tomorrow.

Here in New York [redacted], Admiral Carney, the [redacted] chief of naval operations, said today: [redacted] despite the Korean war the Allies still face the alternative of fighting Communist expansion or submitting to it. He said the choice now is graver than ever before. He asked: "If the free world loses Indo-China, can any thinking person convince himself that this is the last step in Communist expansion?" Admiral Carney said: "It is obvious that it is only a matter of time until the rest of Southeast Asia will be blanketed behind the curtain."

In Indo-China today, enemy troops moved closer TO SURROUNDED Yen Phu..only 30 miles south of Hanoi. And in Geneva, the British and French proposed that military experts begin at once, the mapping of truce lines for Indo-China. The Communists pointed out that no one has decided where the lines should be drawn. French Foreign Minister Bidault..just back from Paris.. suggests that Indo-China be cut up into a number of zones..some controlled by the French, some by the enemy.

And sources close to the American delegation say we may be willing to talk with the Chinese Communists about the release of 71 Americans now held in China.

The British Foreign Office says it was not consulted in advance, on the acceptance by eight top Labor Party leaders, to visit Red China.

And Prime Minister Churchill said today of the present world situation; "I have never brooded over a situation, which demanded more patience, composure, courage and perseverence THAN that which now unfolds itself."

The Navy still has no hint as to the origin of yesterday's explosion on the Aircraft Carrier Bennington, in which 91 officers and men lost their lives.

A House subcommittee investigating labor racketeering today voted to dismiss its counsel and chief investigator. Chairman Bender of Ohio charged this is part of a campaign to cover up racketeering. And Bender, who is a candidate for the Senate in Ohio, said he's ready to open hearings "in various Ohio cities."

Here in New York, the National Labor Relations Board is studying challenged ballots in yesterday's waterfront election. At the moment the Independent Longshoremn's Union has 319 more votes than the A.F. of L. But almost 18-hundred votes have been challenged.

And in Albany, the three men counting proxy votes cast at Yesterday's New York Central Railroad stockholders meeting, received a challenge on the proxies for 800-thousand shares of stock owned by two Texans.. who are backing Robert R. Young's fight for control of the railroad.

Edward R. Murrow: May 27, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

There seems to have been a change in our propaganda line directed at the satellite nations. It hasn't been announced, but here's what happened. A few weeks ago grown men were seen sending up balloons where a favorable wind carried them into Czechoslovakia. This device isn't new, it's been tried before. Last year the balloons carried leaflets implying that someday, somehow we were going to liberate the Czechs, the Poles and the others. To the people behind the Iron Curtain this meant an American army of liberation. Nothing happened, except that a considerable number of brave people inside the satellite countries got hurt, and there occurred a whole series of trials of so-called American agents.

A year ago we were urging resistance to the Communist regimes. This year we urged the Czechs to vote. Last year we urged them not to vote. This year we told them to vote for those they trust, and in that way place essentially anti-communist candidates in positions of power in the trade unions and in the local administrations. This is a policy of infiltration, "boring from within." Basically it's the same tactic the Communists themselves have always favored. This appears to be a new policy of encouraging a legal and legitimate opposition within the ranks of the Communist party at all levels. This Communist device has been turned against the Communists in Czechoslovakia, and there is considerable evidence that it's hurting. The pamphlets, plus Radio Free Europe, have actually created an opposition to the Communist Government in Czechoslovakia, within absolutely legal limits. This party, or movement, is called "People's Opposition". This is no vague resistance sentiment, or even vaguer promise of eventual liberation. The program, or platform in Czechoslovakia consists of ten points. Most of these ten points are taken directly from previous Communist promises which have not been fulfilled. They include higher wages, freedom for workers to quit their jobs, freedom for peasants to leave the collective farms, trade unions run by unionists themselves, more consumer goods and better housing. In short, the People's Opposition is demanding that the government fulfill its promises.

Alex Kendrick cables me from Vienna that these ten demands have swept Czechoslovakia like nothing since the V for Victory symbol during the war. The figure ten appears in paint on the walls of buildings. It was marked on tens of thousands of ballots on election day. The number ten is scrawled on the doors of Communist Party headquarters, on the cars of Party officials. The balloons carried stickers bearing the figure 10. These turn up on official letters, government documents and anything else that provides a sticking surface.

Last week's elections in Czechoslovakia were for national committees and shop committees. Our propaganda was aimed at getting elected to these committees people who are not whole-heartedly with the Communist regime. These are officially called "unreliable elements" by the Communists, but we apparently regard them as reliable. This is clearly an effort to apply internal pressure in a wholly legal fashion, under their own laws, in order to slow down and weaken the Communist regime.

It is always difficult to assess the success or failure of an effort of this kind behind the Iron Curtain. But it should be remembered that the Czechs have a long experience in living under foreign tyranny. Their communications systems with the outside world represent great courage and ingenuity. Even in the darkest days of the war, Benes and Masaryk in London received intelligence reports from Prague in a matter of hours. We do know that in last week's elections there were a million more ballots cast for local candidates than for the national slate. The voters were concentrating on electing their own local candidates. The official Czech reaction to our tactics has been violent. The Prague and Bratislava Radios keep repeating that"the provocatory actions of the Western Imperialists failed to influence the elections." Our experts on the borders think they are protesting too much. The Communist jamming of Radio Free Europe's broadcasts to Czechoslovakia has been intensified. A special militia has been organized in the Pilsen area to seek out balloon leaflets. There have been threats of heavy jail sentences for anyone found in possession of them.

This policy obviously isn't going to liberate Czechoslovakia, but it is a change, and it appears to have given the Communists considerably more trouble and concern than our previous policies.

In the fight for freedom, every act of encouragement - no matter how small - becomes significant to those living under tyranny. For as Heywood Broun once said:"There is no force which can stand up against a fierce, a free and stalwart spirit. The voice of such a one is louder than the roll of guns. And though it sags down to a whisper, it will be heard around the world."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Attorney General Brownell has asked the Army to report to him on its investigation of how information from secret F.B.I. memorandum went from the army's files to Senator McCarthy. The Senator had introduced it at the Army-McCarthy hearings. The letter, which the Army called "phoney" turned out to be a portion of a secret F.B.I. report. McCarthy said he received it from a young army intelligence officer.

Brownell's statement today came after Democratic Senator McClellan told Senator McCarthy that he may have been guilty of a crime in receiving the secret data. He said: "You cannot receive classified information obtained by criminal means without being guilty of a crime." And McCarthy said: if anyone in the administration wants to indict him for getting information to expose Communists let them go ahead. McCarthy said that the loyalty oath of every public officer to defend the country against all enemies "towers above any presidential security directive." McClelland said: "I don't know of any loyalty oath anyone takes that requires him to commit a crime."

Roy Cohn was on the witness stand today and he introduced a seven-page memo charging that more than a thousand Communists have wormed their way into the military services. Cohn said the memo was prepared by Paul Crouch, a former Communist, now employed by the Justice Department's Immigration and Naturalization Service. Crouch has testified as a government witness in a series of trials. And Attorney General Brownell told reporters today the Department is investigating whether Crouch has given conflicting testimony at such trials. At today's hearing, Roy Cohn contradicted a number of points in the previous testimony by Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel Adams. Cohn said both men tried to block the McCarthy investigations of the army and tried to discredit the committee. He said Adams told him it would be a "feather in Adams cap" if the committee did not investigate

Fort Monmouth. Cohn said both Stevens and Adams tried to get the committee to lay off the army and investigate possible Communism in the navy and air force. Stevens and Adams have denied this. Cohn said Adams threatened to have Private Schine sent overseas unless McCarthy dropped the Monmouth hearings and an investigation of the army loyalty board. Cohn said Adams frequently referred to Schine as "the hostage." He said Secretary Stevens once told McCarthy that Stevens would have to resign if the Fort Monmouth investigation went on. Cohn said General Lawton, the commander at Fort Monmouth, told the McCarthy committee that he had no success in getting rid of possible security risks until the committee moved into the picture. Cohn said General Lawton thought he had better not explain the reasons for this "Because I'm working for Mr. Stevens." Cohn said Adams later told him he thought the General talked too much. Cohn accused Adams of "blackmail" and said Adams told him he'd stop at nothing to kill the McCarthy investigation of the army.

Here in New York, Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said today: despite the Korean war the Allies still face the alternative of fighting Communist expansion or submitting to it. He said the choice now is graver than ever before. He asked: "If the free world loses Indo-China, can any thinking person convince himself that this is the last step in Communist expansion?" Admiral Carney said: "It is obvious that it is only a matter of time until the rest of Southeast Asia will be blanketed behind the curtain."

In Indo-China today, enemy troops moved closer to surrounded Yen Phu only 30 miles south of Hanoi. And in Geneva, the British and French proposed that military experts begin at once the mapping of truce lines for Indo-China. The Communists pointed out that no one has decided where the lines should be drawn. French Foreign Minister Bidault, just back from Paris, suggests that Indo-China be cut up into a number of zones - some controlled by the French, some by the enemy.

And sources close to the American delegation say we may be willing to talk with the Chinese Communists about the release of 71 Americans now held in China. The British Foreign Office says it was not consulted in advance on the acceptance by eight top Labor Party leaders to visit Red China.

And Prime Minister Churchill said today of the present world situation: "I have never brooded over a situation which demanded more patience, composure courage and perseverence than that which now unfolds itself."

The Navy still has no hint as to the origin of yesterday's explosion on the Aircraft Carrier Bennington in which 91 officers and men lost their lives.

A House subcommittee investigating labor racketeering today voted to dismiss its counsel and chief investigator. Chairman Bender of Ohio charged this is part of a campaign to cover up racketeering. And Bender, who is a candidate for the Senate in Ohio, said he's ready to open hearings "in various Ohio cities."

Here in New York, the National Labor Relations Board is studying challenged ballots in yesterday's waterfront election. At the moment the Independent Longshoremen's Union has 319 more votes than the A.F.L. But almost 18-hundred votes have been challenged.

And in Albany, the three men counting proxy votes cast at Yesterday's New York Central Railroad stockholders meeting, received a challenge on the proxies for 800-thousand shares of stock owned by two Texans - who are backing Robert R. Young's fight for control of the railroad.

There seems to have been a change in our propaganda line directed at the satellite nations. It hasn't been announced, but here's what happened. A few weeks ago grown men were seen sending up balloons where a favorable wind carried them into Czechoslovakia. This device isn't new, it's been tried before. Last year the balloons carried leaflets implying that someday somehow, we were going to liberate the Czechs, the Poles and the others. To the people behind the Iron Curtain this meant an American army of liberation. Nothing happened, except that a considerable number of brave people inside the satellite countries got hurt, and there occurred a whole series of trials of so-called American agents.

A year ago we were urging resistance to the Communist regimes. This year we urged the Czechs to vote. Last year we urged them not to vote. This year we told them to vote for those they trust, and in that way place essentially anti-communist candidates in positions of power in the trade unions and in the local administrations. This is a policy of infiltration, "boring from within." Basically it's the same tactic the Communists themselves have always favored. This appears to be a new policy of encouraging a legal and legitimate opposition within the ranks of the Communist party at all levels. This Communist device has been turned against the Communists in Czechoslovakia, and there is considerable evidence that it's hurting. The pamphlets, plus Radio Free Europe, have actually created an opposition to the Communist Government in Czechoslovakia, within absolutely legal limits. This party, or movement, is called "People's Opposition." This is no vague resistance sentiment, or even vaguer promise of eventual liberation. The program, or platform in Czechoslovakia consists of ten points. Most of these ten points are taken directly from previous Communist promises which have not been fulfilled. They include higher wages, freedom for workers to quit their jobs, freedom for peasants to leave the collective farms, trade unions run by unionists themselves, more consumer goods and better housing. In short, the People's Opposition is demanding that the government fulfill its promises.

Alex Kendrick cables me from Vienna that these ten demands have swept Czechoslovakia like nothing since the V for Victory symbol during the war. The figure ten appears in paint on the walls of buildings. It was marked on tens of thousands of ballots on election day. The number ten is scrawled on the doors of Communist Party headquarters, on the cars of Party offidals. The balloons carried stickers bearing the figure 10. These turn up on official letters, government documents and anything else that provides a sticking surface. Last week's elections in Czechoslovakia were for national committees and shop committees. Our propaganda was aimed at getting elected to these Committees people who are not whole-heartedly with the Communist regime. These are officially called "unreliable elements" by the Communists, but we apparently regard them as reliable. This is clearly an effort to apply internal pressure in a wholly legal fashion, under their own laws, in order to slow down and weaken the Communist regime. It is always difficult to assess the success or failure of an effort of this kind behind the Iron Curtain. But it should be remembered that the Czechs have a long experience in living under foreign tyranny. Their communications systems with the outside world represent great courage and ingenuity. Even in the darkest days of the war, Benes and Masaryk in London received intelligence reports from Prague in a matter of hours. We do know that in last week's elections there were a million more ballots cast for local candidates than for the national slate. The voters were concentrating on electing their own local candidates. The official Czech reaction to our tactics has been violent. The Prague and Bratislava Radios keep repeating that "the provocatory actions of the Western Imperialists failed to influence the elections." Our experts on the borders think they are protesting too much. The Communist jamming of Radio Free Europe's broadcasts to Czechoslovakia has been intensified. A special militia has been organized in the Pilsen area to seek out balloon leaflets. There have been threats of heavy jail sentences for anyone found in possession of them. This policy obviously isn't going to liberate Czechoslovakia, but it is a change, and it appears to have given the Communists considerably more trouble and concern than our previous policies.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a momemt with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In the fight for freedom, every act of encouragement - no matter how small - becomes significant to those living under tyranny. For as Heywood Broun once said: "There is no force which can stand up against a fierce, a free and stalwart spirit. The voice of such a one is louder than the roll of guns. And though it sags down to a whisper, it will be heard around the world."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday May 28/1954

This is the news:

Attorney General Brownell, with the President's approval, declared today that no individual can usurp the President's constitutional [redacted] responsibility, to enforce the laws of the land. In an obvious reply to Senator McCarthy's appeal to government employes to give information to him, Brownell said no individual can over-ride the President's orders to federal employes. [I'd like to DISCUSS [redacted] this dispute in a few minutes.]

At today's Army-McCarthy hearing, Senator Mc Carthy said again, that he would continue to get his information from every source possible. And Chairman Mundt supported him saying: "I don't care if President Eisenhower calls it reprehensible. Its like a football game. It may be reprehensible to get in there and rough 'em up, but you win the game."

The committee had a long debate today, on a supbena served on Senator Mc Carthy, to produce from the committee's own files, evidence of committee work done by Private David Schine. The supbena was later withdrawn after Roy Cohn, on the witness stand for ANOTHER [redacted] day, said he would supply what papers he can. In today's testimony Cohn: admitted he once protested a kitchen police assignment given to Private Schine at Fort Dix. Cohn said he did this only because Schine was needed for committee work. He said under oath that Schine did work for the committee when he was out on passes. He denied that Schine went to Florida at Christmas time or on New Years Day. When Committee Counsel Jenkins recalled that Army Secretary Stevens has testified that he received 65 telephone calls on the Schine matter from members of the McCarthy staff, Roy Cohn said this was not unusual in view of the circumstances... the fact that Schine was doing committee work at the same time he was going through his basic training. Jenkins asked why the McCarthy committee could not arrange for Schine to finish his work before he was drafted in November. Cohn said the committee tried..but it couldn't be done. Cohn denied an army colonel's testimony that Cohn had said he had access to F.B.I. files and "declared war" on the army. And Cohn said that he never heard Senator McCarthy ask for a commission for Schine..as testified by Army Secretary Stevens. The witness also said he was "almost positive" that he never called an army general "two or three times a day" about a direct commission for Schine. Cohn returns to the stand on Tuesday morning.

Here in New York today, a loyalty board HAS cleared Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, the top American in the United Nations secretariat. The board said it normally does not [redacted] disclose any information on its proceedings. But because the news leaked out, that hearings were held on Dr. Bunche, the board announced today that it has unanimously agreed, that there is no doubt as to Dr. Bunche's loyalty.

The State Department said today that military talks with Great Britain, France, Australia and New Zealand, will start in Washington on June third. The military men will survey the military situation in the Far East..and mutual resources for dealing with the crisis in Indo-China.

Today in Indo-China, 17 American fighter planes arrived in Hanoi, together with fresh French troop reinforcements. The enemy succeeded in capturing another French fort 20 miles from Hanoi, but the French commander in Northern Indo-China says the new troops..and the promise of more.. makes "him look to the future with optomism."

The French government today called up 80-thousand draftees.. ahead of schedule. The French cannot send draftees to combat zones outside of France in peacetime.. and they call Indo-China a police action, not a war. But the new draftees will relieve professional soldiers for service in Indo-China.

At the Geneva conference, the Communists agreed in principle to call military experts to work out details of the partition of Indo-China. But they rejected Western demands to take quick action.

And on the Korean dispute, six nations whose soldiers fought in Korea, rejected the enemy plan to unify the country by what the Western powers call a "rigged" election.

In Washington a joint session of Congress heard Ethiopia's Emperor Haillie Selassie call on the free world to "fearlessly" pursue the principle of collective security. ~~He said, "We feel that neither can the call for aid against aggression be refused by any state large or small."~~

The State Department said today that the French line ship Wyoming was carrying properly-declared non-military arms when it was stopped at the Panama Canal wednesday. ~~The Wyoming had seven box s of pistols, rifles and shotguns.~~

Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida said today that the shipment of Communist arms to Guatamela is "Russian intervention in Latin America and emphasizes the challenge that this nation has no choice but to meet."

The Justice Department says that seven corporations controlled by Greek ship owner Niarchos have pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the United States... by illegally obtaining surplus American ships after World War Two. They AGREED TO Return the Ships — ~~and then fined one hundred thousand dollars each.~~ and Make a 4 Million dollar indemnity payment. ~~And the government says the Niarchos interests have agreed to give back 19 vessels.. and pay us 4 million dollars. This represents what we theoretically lost while the ships were not in our possession.~~

~~The government is also bringing antitrust suits against four major perfume companies. Lanthanie, Lanvin, Christian Dior, Jean~~

Edward R. Murrow: May 28, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

I should like to read the text of the statement issued by the White House today, for it is likely to be a considerable footnote in the history of our turbulent time. Jim Haggerty, the President's News Secretary, told reporters: "I talked this morning with the President and the Attorney General, and at the direction of the Attorney General I should like now to issue the following statement in his name, with the approval of the President. "The obligations and duties of the Executive, Judicial and Legislative Branches of our Government are defined by the Constitution. The Executive Branch of the Government has the sole and fundamental responsibility under the Constitution for the enforcement of our laws and presidential orders. They include those to protect the security of our nation, which were carefully drawn for this purpose." The statement continues: "That responsibility cannot be usurped by any individual who may seek to set himself above the laws of our land, or to over-ride orders of the President of the United States to Federal employees of the Executive Branch of the Government."

This was an obvious and direct reference to Senator McCarthy's statement of yesterday, when he said publicly: "I would like to notify those two million Federal employees that I feel it is their duty to give us any information which they have about graft, corruption, communists, treason, and that there is no loyalty to a superior which can tower above and beyond their loyalty to their country." Today Senator McCarthy's reply to the White House statement was that he hoped to remain in the Senate - see many Presidents come and go; said he was going to continue to get information from within the government whenever he can, and to protect his informants.

In this reporter's opinion the issue between the Eisenhower Administration and Senator McCarthy has finally been joined. It is Constitutional, and therefore fundamental. The President and the Attorney General have labelled the Senator as one who "seeks to set himself above the laws of our land, and to over-ride orders of the President of the United States." This is not a dispute between the Attorney General and the Senator about a document or a ruling by the Justice Department. It is a head-on collision between the President and the Senator. In due course it will cause senators and citizens to be counted on whether or no there shall occur a fundamental change in our system of government - whether there is to be an elaborate system of informers inside the government, violating the law and their oath by providing to a senator documents and information which can only properly be described as stolen. There arises also the question, at least in theory, about the legal status of those who knowingly receive stolen goods.

For many months supporters of the President have been saying that in due course, and on ground of his own choosing, the President would deal with Senator McCarthy. The ground has been chosen. The President, even before he was elected, did everything possible to appease the Senator, to make him "a member of the team." It didn't work. And once more the result of appeasement is conflict. Both sides are fully committed, and there would seem to be no possibility of compromise or withdrawal.

On the investigating committee the Republicans have supported, or at least not opposed Senator McCarthy's position. Now they and the other members of the Senate must choose on a fundamental issue between the position taken up and clearly defined by the President of the United States on the one hand, and the Junior Senator from Wisconsin on the other.

A great deal has been spoken and written about the waste of time, the circus atmosphere, the need to expedite and the unimportance of the current investigation. But out of it has emerged in outlines so clear that all can understand, a basic Constitutional issue. It can be simply stated. Who is going to run the government of this country, protect its security, direct its affairs and manage the nation's business?

There have been times in our history when the Executive Branch of the Government has attempted to dominate the Legislature, and even the Judicial. There have been times when the Congress has made inroads on the prerogative of the Executive. What is here involved is whether a single senator shall publicly recruit and legalize what might be called a private Gestapo within the ranks of those employed by the Federal Government. The contribution to public ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ enlightenment that has been made by the President and by the Senator is to delineate and define the issue, so that reasoning men and women may debate it.

There would seem to be no question that the lines are now drawn between the President and the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. The long-anticipated test of authority is approaching. And somehow, I'm reminded of this line from Shakespeare: "An two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind." We hope you have a pleasant weekend...drive carefully.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Attorney General Brownell, with the President's approval, declared today that no individual can usurp the President's constitutional responsibility to enforce the laws of the land. In an obvious reply to Senator McCarthy's appeal to government employees to give information to him, Brownell said no individual can over-ride the President's orders to federal employees. I'd like to discuss this dispute in a few minutes.

At today's Army-McCarthy hearing, Senator McCarthy said again that he would continue to get his information from every source possible. And Chairman Mundt supported him saying: "I don't care if President Eisenhower calls it reprehensible. Its like a football game. It may be reprehensible to get in there and rough 'em up, but you win the game."

The committee had a long debate today on a supboena served on Senator McCarthy to produce from the committee's own files evidence of committee work done b Private David Schine. The Subpoena was later withdrawn after Roy Cohn, on the witness stand for another day, said he would supply what papers he can. In today's testimony Cohn admitted he once protested a kitchen police assignment given to Private Schine at Fort Dix. Cohn said he did this only because Schine was needed for committee work. He said under oath that Schine did work for the committee when he was out on passes. He denied that Schine went to Florida at Christmas time or on New Years Day. When Committee Counsel Jenkins recalled that Army Secretary Stevens has testified that he received 65 telephone calls on the Schine matter from emmbers of the McCarthy staff, Roy Cohn said this was not unusual in view of the circumstances - the fact that Schine was doing committee work at the same time he was going through his basic training. Jenkins asked why the McCarthy committee could not arrange for Schine to finish his work before he was drafted in November. Cohn said the committee tried, but it couldn't be done. Cohn denied an army colonel's testimony that Cohn had said he had access to F.B.I. files and "declared war" on the army. And Cohn said that he never heard Senator McCarthy ask for a commission for Schine as testified by Army Secretary Stevens. The witness also said he was "almost positive" that he never called an army general "two or three times a day" about a direct commission for Schine. Cohn returns to the stand on Tuesday morning.

Here in New York today, a loyalty board has cleared Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, the top American in the United Nations secretariat. The board said it normally does not disclose any information on its proceedings. But because the news leaked out that hearings were held on Dr. Bunche, the board announced today that it has unanimously agreed that there is no doubt as to Dr. Bunche's loyalty.

The State Department said today that military talks with Great Britain, France, Australia and New Zealand will start in Washington on June third. The military men will survey the military situation in the Far East and mutual resources for dealing with the crisis in Indo-China.

Today in Indo-China, 17 American fighter planes arrived in Hanoi together with fresh French troop reinforcements. The enemy succeeded in capturing another French fort 20 miles from Hanoi, but the French commander in Northern Indo-China says the new troops, and the promise of more makes "him look to the future with optimism."

The French government today called up 80-thousand draftees ahead of sheedule. The French cannot send draftees to combat zones outside of France in peacetime and they call Indo-China a police action not a war. But the new draftees will relieve professional soldiers for service in Indo-China.

At the Geneva conference the Communists agreed in principle to call military experts to work out details of the partition of Indo-China. But they rejected Western demands to take quick action.

And on the Korean dispute, six nations whose soldiers fought in Korea, rejected the enemy plan to unify the country by what the Western powers call a "rigged" election.

In Washington a joint session of Congress heard Ethiopia's Emperor Haillie Selassie call on the free world to "fearlessly" pursue the principle of collective security.

The State Department said today that the French line ship Wyoming was carrying properly-declared non-military arms when it was stopped at the Panama Canal Wednesday.

Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida said today that the shipment of Communist arms to Guatamala is "Russian intervention in Latin America and emphasized the challenge that this nation has no choice but to meet."

The Justice Department says that seven corporations controlled by Greek ship owner Niarchos have pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the United States by illegally obtaining surplus American ships after World War Two. They agreed to return the ships and make a four million dollars indemnity payment.

I should like to read the text of the statement issued by the White House today, for it is likely to be a considerable footnote in the history of our turbulent time. Jim Haggerty, the President's News Secretary, told reporters: "I talked this morning with the President and the Attorney General, and at the direction of the Attorney General I should like now to issue the following statement in his name, with the approval of the President. "The obligations and duties of the Executive, Judicial and Legislative Branches of our Government are defined by the Constitution. The Executive Branch of the Government has the sole and fundamental responsibility under the Constitution for the enforcement of our laws and presidential orders. They include those to protect the security of our nation, which were carefully drawn for this purpose." The statement continues: "That responsibility cannot be usurped by any individual who may seek to set himself above the laws of our land, or to over-ride orders of the President of the United States to Federal employees of the Executive Branch of the Government." This was an obvious and direct reference to Senator McCarthy's statement of yesterday, when he said publicly: "I would like to notify those two million Federal employees that I feel it is their duty to give us any information which they have about graft, corruption, communists, treason, and that there is no loyalty to a superior which can tower above and beyond their loyalty to their country." Today Senator McCarthy's reply to the White House statement was that he hoped to remain in the Senate - see many Presidents come and go; said he was going to continue to get information from within the government whenever he can, and to protect his informants. In this reporter's opinion the issue between the Eisenhower administration and Senator McCarthy has finally been joined. It is Constitutional, and therefore fundamental. The President and the Attorney General have labelled the Senator as one who "seeks to set himself above the laws of our land, and to over-ride orders of the President of the United States." This is not a dispute between the Attorney General and the Senator about a document or a ruling by the Justice Department. It is a head-on collision between the President and the Senator. In due course it will cause senators and citizens to be counted on whether or not there shall occur a fundamental change in our system of government - whether there is to be an elaborate system of informers inside the government, violating the law and their oath by providing to a senator documents and information which can only properly be described as stolen. There arises also the question at least in theory, about the legal status of those who knowingly receive stolen goods. For many months supporters of the President have been saying that in due course, and on ground of his own choosing, the President would deal with Senator McCarthy. The ground has been chosen. The President, even before he was elected, did everything possible to appease the Senator, to make him a "member of the team." It didn't work. And once more the result of appeasement is conflict. Both sides are fully committed, and there would seem to be no possibility of compromise or withdrawal. On the investigating committee the Republicans have supported, or at least not opposed, Senator McCarthy's position. Now they and the other members of the Senate must choose on a fundamental issue between the position taken up and clearly defined by the President of the United States on the one hand, and the Junior Senator from Wisconsin on the other.

A great deal has been spoken and written about the waste of time, the circus atmosphere, the need to expidite and the unimportance of the current investigation. But out of it has emerged in outlines so clear that all can understand, a basic Constitutional issue. It can be simply stated. Who is going to run the government of this country, protect its security, direct its affairs and manage the nation's business? There have been times in our history when the Executive Branch of the Government has attempted to dominate the Legislature, and even the Judicial. There have been times when the Congress has made inroads on the prerogative of the Executive. What is here involved is whether a single senator shall publicly recruit and legalize what might be called a private Gestapo within the ranks of those employed by the Federal Government. The contribution to public enlightenment that has been made by the President and by the Senator is to delineate and define the issue, so that reasoning men and women may debate it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There would seem to be no question that the lines are now drawn between the President and the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. The long-anticipated test of authority is approaching. And somehow, I'm reminded of this line from Shakespeare: "An two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind." We hope you have a pleasant weekend - drive carefully.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday May 31, 1954

This is the news:

Navy Secretary Charles S. Thomas said today that this nation need fear no "foreign foe or agnostic creed" if we are united behind the President. In a Memorial Day address at Arlington National Cemetery, Thomas said: "If we [redacted] dissipate our strength, squander our riches, neglect our faith and fall into disunity of a divided house, then we can defeat ourselves and lose victory before the final battle is fought." After the President had placed a wreath at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, Secretary Thomas said: "We must reject those who ask us to [redacted] distrust the motives of loyal Americans with whom we happen to disagree." Soon [redacted] after the services were over the President flew to New York. He speaks here tonight at ceremonies marking the 200th anniversary of Columbia University. The President's speech, described as a major foreign policy address, will be broadcast over most of these CBS Radio stations ~~at 10:30 9:30 p.m. eastern time.~~ Later tonite

This was the first Memorial Day in four years that American men were not fighting in Korea. But on the aircraft carrier Bennington, at Quonset Point, Rhode Island, some 25-hundred persons paid tribute to the

~~100 crew members who died in an explosi~~

100 crew members who died in an explosion and fire at sea last Wednesday. The Reverend Joseph O'Callahan, the first chaplain to be awarded the Medal of Honor, said on the Bennington's flight deck:"This is indeed a unique memorial..unlike any other in any city or town in the nation. For aboard THIS flight deck we are honoring those who died within a week."

In Washington, Chairman Mundt of THE Senate committee hearing the McCarthy-Army dispute said today that he thinks an armistice has been reached in what he described as "a sort of supbena war" in the hearings. He says he has taken no action on Senator McCarthy's request that material be supbenead from the army's files. And New York's Democratic Senator Lehman spoke today of what he called "the shocking implications of McCarthyism".. a reference to McCarthy's appeal to government workers to give him infomation on graft, corruption or Communism. Lehman said by doing this McCarthy "challenges the entire basis of law and government. He threatens to subvert the government by law , and replace it with government by Mc Carthy."

In Geneva today, the Russians proposed that a neutral commission..similar to that operating in Korea.. be set-up to supervise any cease-fire in Indo-China. But American sources say Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith feels such a commission cannot be neutral... that a really neutral commission can only be one under United Nations supervision.

The Russian newspaper Pravda today praises British Foreign Secretary Eden but attacks the French for their positions at Geneva. Pravda says the French "prefer to do nothing and await prompting of the Americans."

In Saigon, authoritative French military sources say the United States may undertake a big airlift soon to help meet the menace of the new Communist offensive against the Red River Delta. The French say the rebels have now moved the bulk of their 40-thousand-man army from fallen Dien Bien Phu to within 42 miles of Hanoi. The French say the whole of four Red divisions should be concentrated for a new attack within 10 days.

The French today agreed to release 575 wounded rebel prisoners now held in Indo-China. This follows the release of 868 Frenchmen wounded and captured at Dien Bien Phu.

And in Tunisia, the French resident-general announced today that military reinforcements are arriving from France..and reserve officers are being called up..to deal with what he called "the threat of outlaws." # French settlers demonstrated against the resident-General on Saturday. They demanded that he resign on the grounds that action against independence-minded terrorists had not been strong enough.

At Indianapolis today, Bill Vukovich, of Fresno, California, won the 500-mile Indianapolis Speedway race for the second year in a row. Vukovich averaged almost 131 miles an hour to finish a lap ahead of Jimmy Bryan of Pheonix, Arizona. Third place went to Jack McGrath of South Pasadena, California.

And in Kansas City, the weather Bureau has issued a special bulletin warning of severe thunderstorms and the possibility of scattered tornadoes across northeastern Oklahoma, and eastern Kansas and northern and western Missouri.

Edward R. Murrow: June 1, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Eight E~~gyptologist~~s were allowed yesterday to peer into the corridor containing the scented soul-ship of King Cheops, and in great excitement they agreed that what they saw was one of the greatest historical finds ever made. The corridor, which lies close to Cheops' great pyramid, had been sealed off last week after the surprise discovery by the young Egyptian archeologist Kamal el-Malahk. He had been so little prepared for what he found that he didn't even have a flashlight, and had to throw light into the corridor with a mirror. Yesterday the seal was removed and light was supplied by an electric bulb powered by a hand motor. Each of the scientists in turn had a look.

What they saw was the largest funeral ship ever discovered, and the first not to have been despoiled by vandals. It is estimated to be forty yards long. It had several wooden decks now topped by a collapsed wooden canopy. It had oars, also a twenty-five foot sweep oar, and the upright of a rudder. The canopy probably was covered by a braided and tasseled cloth. The faint aroma of incense and wood, noted when the opening was first made, had gone by the time of the second opening.

Early Egyptians believed that the soul needed to journey in a ship that could only exist as the spirit of a replica built for the dead person's grave. The peasant was buried with a little one of clay. The great Cheops built a sumptuous one, probably built two, and the second one is believed to be in an adjoining corridor. Archeologists believe they will find this, and perhaps also the jar in which Cheops' internal organs were deposited, a statue of the King, papyri of inscribed incantations, and much more to give information about his times.

This reporter feels about all this somewhat like the young Egyptians who first peered into the newly-opened chamber. Only what this reporter sees is a perspective in time. Cheops lived 5,000 years ago, or if W.M.F. Petrie is right, 6,000 years. We live from day to day, not often reminded of the great depth of time. Then comes a flash of light into obscurity, and we see human history as a very long process. I might also say it is a very humbling process. Professor Arnold Toynbee, in his celebrated study of history, enumerated twenty-six species of civilization and said categorically that sixteen of them are dead and buried. The implication, of course, is that civilizations, like men, are mortal, our own included.

Cheops was a very powerful King. He was the greatest exponent up to his time of the slave state. He recruited the whole population of Egypt to build his pyramid - one hundred thousand persons working at a stretch of three months at a time. He devoted all his wealth to the task, and most of the lives of his people. He even sold his daughter to raise money for his building operations, though she later was to build a smaller pyramid of her own out of stones given her by her lovers.

The name Cheops and his brother Kefren - who also built a great pyramid with slave labor - were so hated in Egypt that fourteen centuries later their names were never spoken. This we are told by Heroditus, the father of historians and journalists, who found the names not used at the time he visited Egypt.

I am aware that Heroditus is more readable than he is accurate. I know the myths about Cheops are not all verified. But it is a fact that he was powerful enough to enslave his people to build his pyramid, that it embodies a very considerable knowledge of mathematics and even astronomy, that Cheops left behind, not only this fabulous monument but a hatred that passed from generation to generation; and finally, that his civilization vanished.

What comes to this reporter's mind is that Cheops had more right to expect his civilization to survive than this generation has to expect its own to do so. To Cheops the earth seemed eternal, and stone was indestructible. The power that could build the biggest monument was the biggest power man might aspire to, certainly bigger than any power of human kindness.

Today we have cause for pride in what has been added to human knowledge and ethics. We know a great deal about how to prolong life. But we have also devised means of quick and utter self-destruction that are still uncontrolled. So we actually have less promise that our civilization will endure than Cheops had. I am not suggesting that ours will not endure, for obviously it can. But if Cheops had known about such things and been a betting man he might have thought his chances were a hundred to one of ours.

I cannot refrain from quoting part of a sonnet of Shelley in making a report on Cheops. "I met a traveler from an antique land" (it reads) "who said: 'Two vast and trunkless legs of stone stand in the desert. Near them on the sand, half sunk, a shattered visage lies. And on the pedestal these words appear: "My name is Ozymandias, King of Kings. Look on my works ye mighty, and despair." Nothing beside remains. Round the decay of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare the lone and level sands stretch far away."

If you're on the road (TONITE) [redacted] - a [redacted]...don't add your name to the holiday casualty lists.

Publilius Syrus...centuries before cars were invented...offered some good advice when he said:"It is well to learn caution by the misfortunes of others." Don't take unnecessary chances as you're driving home. Try and keep in mind this line from the New Testament:"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 31 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Navy Secretary Charles S. Thomas said today that this nation need fear no "foreign foe or agnostic creed" if we are united behind the President. In a Memorial Day address at Arlington National Cemetery, Thomas said: "If we dissipate our strength, squander our riches, neglect our faith and fall into disunity of a divided house, then we can defeat ourselves and lose victory before the final battle is fought." After the President had placed a wreath at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, Secretary Thomas said: "We must reject those who ask us to distrust the motives of loyal Americans with whom we happen to disagree." Soon after the services were over the President flew to New York. He speaks here tonight at ceremonies marking the 200th anniversary of Columbia University. The President's speech, described as a major foreign policy address, will be broadcast over most of these CBS Radio stations later tonight.

This was the first Memorial Day in four years that American men were not fighting in Korea. But on the aircraft carrier Bennington, at Quonset Point, Rhode Island, some 25-hundred persons paid tribute to the 100 crew members who died in an explosion and fire at sea last Wednesday. The Reverend Joseph O'Callahan, the first chaplain to be awarded the Medal of Honor, said on the Bennington's flight deck: "This is indeed a unique memorial - unlike any other in any city or town in the nation. For aboard this flight deck we are honoring those who died within a week.

In Washington Chairman Mundt of the Senate committee hearing the McCarthy-Army dispute said today that he thinks an armistice has been reached in what he described as "a sort of subpoena war" in the hearings. He says he has taken no action on Senator McCarthy's request that material be subpoened from the army's files. And New York's Democratic Senator Lehman spoke today of what he called "the shocking implications of McCarthyism" - a reference to McCarthy's appeal to government workers to give him information on graft, corruption or Communism.

Lehman said by doing this McCarthy "challenges the entire basis of law and government. He threatens to subvert the government by law, and replace it with government by McCarthy."

In Geneva today, the Russians proposed that a neutral commission similar to that operating in Korea be set up to supervise any cease-fire in Indo-China. But American sources say Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith feels such a commission cannot be neutral - that a really neutral commission can only be one under United Nations supervision.

The Russian newspaper Pravda today praises British Foreign Secretary Eden but attacks the French for their positions at Geneva. Pravda says the French "prefer to do nothing ans await prompting of the Americans."

In Saigon, authoritative French military sources say the United States may undertake a big airlift soon to help meet the menace of the new Communist offensive against the Red River Delta. The French say the rebels have not moved the bulk of their 40-thousand-man army from fallen Dien Bien Phu to within 42 miles of Hanoi. The French say the whole of four Red divisions should be concentrated for a new attack within 10 days.

The French today agreed to release 575 wounded rebel prisoners now held in Indo-China. This follows the release of 868 Frenchmen wounded and captured at Dien Bien Phu.

And in Tunisia, the French resident-general announced today that military reinforcements are arriving from France and reserve officers are being called up to deal with what he called "the threat of outlaws." French settlers demonstrated against the resident-General on Saturday. They demanded that he resign on the grounds that action against independence-minded terrorists had not been strong enough.

At Indianapolis today, Bill Vukovich, of Fresno, California, won the 500-mile Indianapolis Speedway race for the second year in a row. Vukovich averaged almost 131 miles an hour to finish a lap ahead of Jimmy Bryan of Phoenix, Arizona. Third place went to Jack McGrath of South Pasadena, California.

And in Kansas City, the weather Bureau has issued a special bulletin warning of severe thunderstorms and the possibility of scattered tornadoes across nort eastern Oklahoma, and eastern Kansas and northern and western Missouri.

Eight Experts were allowed yesterday to peer into the corridor containing the scented soul-ship of King Cheops, and in great excitement they agreed that what they saw was one of the greatest historical finds ever made. The corridor, which lies close to Cheops' great pyramid, had been sealed off last week after the surprise discovery by the young Egyptian archelogoist Kamal el-Malahk. He had been so little prepared for what he found that he didn't even have a flashlight, and had to throw light into the corridor with a mirror. Yesterday the seal was removed and light was supplied by an electric bulb powered by a hand motor. Each of the scientists in turn had a look. What they saw was the largest funeral ship ever discovered, and the first not to have been despoiled by vandals. It is estimated to be forty yards long. It had several wooden decks now topped by a collapsed wooden canopy. It had oars, also a twenty-five foot sweep oar, and the upright of a rudder. The canopy probably was covered by a braided and tasseled cloth. The faint aroma of incense and wood, noted when the opening was first made, had gone by the time of the second opening. Early Egyptians believed that the soul needed to journey in a ship that could only exist as the spirit of a replica built for the dead person's grave. The peasant was buried with a little one of clay. The great Cheops built a sumptuous one, probably built two, and the second one is believed to be in an adjoining corridor. Archeologists believe they will find this, and perhaps also the jar in which Cheops' internal organs were deposited, a statue of the King, papyri of inscribed incantations, and much more to give information about his times. This reporter feels about all this somewhat like the young Egyptians who first peered into the newly-opened chamber. Only what this reporter sees is a perspective in time. Cheops lived 5,000 years ago, or if W.M.F. Petrie is right, 6,000 years. We live from day to day, not often reminded of the great depth of time. Then comes a flash of light into obscurity, and we see human history as a very long process. I might also say it is a very humbling process. Professor Arnold Toynbee, in his celebrated study of history, enumerated twenty-six species of civilization and said categorically that sixteen of them are dead and buried. The implication, of course, is that civilizations, like men, are mortal, our own included

Cheops was a very powerful King. He was the greatest exponent up to his time of the slave state. He recruited the whole population of Egypt to build his pyramid - one hundred thousand persons working at a stretch of three months at a time. He devoted all his wealth to the task, and most of the lives of his people. He even sold his daughter to raise money for his building operations, though she later was to build a smaller pyramid of her own out of stones given her by her lovers The name Cheops and his brother Kefren - who also built a great pyramid with slave labor - were so hated in Egypt that fourteen centuries later their names were never spoken. This we are told by Heroditus, the father of historians and journalists, who found the names not used at the time he visited Egypt. I am aware that Heroditus is more readable that he is accurate. I know the myths about Cheops are not all verified. But it is a fact that he was powerful enough to enslave his people to build his pyramid, that it embodies a very considerable knowledge of mathematics and even astronomy, that Cheops left behind, not only this favulous monument but a hatred that passed from generation to generation; and finally, that his civilization vanished. What comes to this reporter's mind is that Cheops had more right to expect his civilization to survive than this generation has to expect its own to do so. To Cheops the earth seemed eternal, and stone was indestructible. The power that could build the biggest monument was the biggest power man might aspire to, certainly bi er than any power of human kindness. Today we have cause for pride in what has been added to human knowledge, and ethics. We know a great deal about how to prolong life. But we have also devised means of quick and utter self-destruction that are still uncontrolled. So we actually have less promise that our civilization will endure than Cheops had. I am not suggesting that ours will not endure, for obviously it can. But if Cheops had known about such things and been a betting men he might have thought his chances were a hundred to one of ours.

I cannot refrain from quoting part of a sonnet of Shelley in making a report on Cheops. "I met a traveler from an antique land" (it reads) "who said: 'Two vast and trunkless legs of stone stand in the desert. Near them on the sand, half sunk, a shattered visage lies. And on the pedestal these words appear: "My name is Ozymandias, King of Kings. Look on my works ye mighty, and despair." Nothing beside remains. Round the decay of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare the lone and level sands stretch far away."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: If you're on the road tonight - don't add your name to the holiday casualty lists. Publilius Syrus, centruries before cars were invented offered some good advice when he said: "It is well to learn caution by the misfortunes of others." Don't take unnecessary chances as you're driving home. Try and keep in mind this line from the New Testament: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday June 1, 1954

This is the news:

A special Atomic Energy Commission panel, agreed unanimously today, that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer is loyal and discreet. But, by a two to one vote, the panel recommended against restoring the atomic scientist, to his job as a government consultant. I'll try to review the panel's recommendations in a few minutes.

At the Army-McCarthy hearings, Army Counsel Welch said today, he has "grave suspicions" about the authenticity of the memoranda that the McCarthy group used, to support its charge, that Private Schine had been held as a "hostage" by the army.. and that the Army tried to "blackmail" the Mc Carthy committee, to call off its investigation of the army. After questioning the Senator's secretary who could not recall the individual memoranda.. and acknowledged she did not keep her original shorthand notebooks, Counsel Welch questioned, whether the charges..the backbone of the McCarthy case.. "are the real McCoy or not." He suggested that an investigation be made of typewriters and the like in the McCarthy office. Committee Counsel Jenkins advised him the F.B.I. has said this would not be "feasible or revealing." Senator McCarthy charged that Welch had, in effect, accused his office secretary of perjury.

Mc Carthy also called for lie-detector tests of all the principals in the case..saying he'd be the first to submit. He said this would end the whole investigation in 24 hours.

Earlier, Democratic Senator McClelland said that the people are entitled to a legal opinion on whether the President or McCarthy is right in their [redacted] dispute over government secret files. Mc Carthy contends that the President's secrecy directive..(barring federal workers from turning over secret papers to the Senator.) would hamstring Congress and let traitors go undetected. Mc Clelland said the issue is whether McCarthy is entitled to get by "theft" information which Congress cannot get from legitimate channels. Mc Carthy said he would not abide by any secrecy directives from anyone.

Roy Cohn returned to the stand and denied that he ever said he would wreck the army and oust Army Secretary Stevens if Private Schine, a former committee consultant, was shipped overseas. Cohn also testified that he had an investigation made of Schine's regimental commander at Fort Dix..Colonel Earl C. Ringler. Cohn said he did this after Schine reported that the Colonel had referred to the McCarthy investigation at Fort Monmouth as a "witch hunt." Cohn also said that Army Counsel John G. ADAMS [redacted] had told him several times that Private Schine would have received a Commission if he had not been a member of the McCarthy staff.

And on the Senate floor, Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont said the investigating commission has not dug into the real mystery. He defined this as the personal relationship between Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Private Schine. Flanders said Cohn seems to have what he called "an almost passionate anxiety to retain the services of Schine." Flanders also [redacted] charged that "if McCarthy was in the pay of the Communists he could not have done a better job for them." And Flanders said: Mc Carthy's anti-Communist campaign "so completely parrallels that of Adolf Hitler as to strike fear into the heart of any defenseless minority. # Mc Carthy--during today's hearing.. called [redacted] Flanders viscious and dishonest..he said he wants Flanders to [redacted] testify before the committee on [redacted] the "trouble" he described in the senate speech.

Mc Carthy also said that the committee should consider the extent..as he put it..to which the Justice Department is going to prevent the testimony of certain witnesses. He charged that former Communist Paul Crouch, has said he has been ordered "banished to Hawaii" to avoid TESTIMONY [redacted] before the committee.

~~In other developments: Republican Senator Ferguson joined his colleages Knowland, Smith of New Jersey and Duff of Pennsylvania in siding with the President and against McCarthy in the matter of secrecy directives. And H. Struve Hensel, the assistant secretary of defense, insisted on being called to testify unless McCarthy withdraws charges made against Hensel. Last week the committee decided to drop the charge that Hensel "wasted" the army's case against McCarthy.~~

The House of Representatives today approved a bill that would open the social security system to another 10 million persons...increase the benefits and the tax.

And the President asked Congress for an extra defense appropriation of one billion loo-million dollars for military construction.

At the United Nations, Thailand's appeal for a U.N. peace committee to make an on-the-spot check of the war in southeast Asia will be taken up by the Security Council on Thursday.

There was little progress on Indo-China at the Geneva conference. But on the battlefields French forces today drove back the enemy six miles from Phu Ly..the key road junction 30 miles south of Hanoi.

Edward R. Murrow: June 1, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The Atomic Energy Security Board, reviewing the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, was made up of Gordon Gray, President of the University of North Carolina, Thomas Morgan, former president of the Sperry Corporation, and Ward Evans, Professor at Loyola University, Chicago. The Board agreed that Dr. Oppenheimer had been loyal and discreet, but it decided by a vote of two to one - Professor Evans dissenting - that he should not be cleared as a consultant to the Atomic Energy Commission. The Board heard forty witnesses, listened to over three thousand pages of testimony; the meetings were secret; Dor Oppenheimer was represented by counsel, usually four in number.

The report of the Board acknowledges that this case puts the security system of the United States on trial. It recognizes two points of view: "There are those who apprehend that our program for security at this point in history consists of an uneasy mixture of fear, prejudice and arbitrary judgment. They feel that reason and fairness and justice have abdicated, and their places have been taken by hysteria and depression. On the other hand, there is a strong belief that in recent times our government has been less than unyielding towards the problem of Communism, and that loose and pliable attitudes regarding loyalty and security have prevailed to the danger of our society and its institutions."

The Board found itself in agreement with much that underlies both points of view.

The majority of the Board found that Dr. Oppenheimer had been "less than candid"in some of his testimony; that he had, in the thirties and forties, associated with a considerable number of Communist front organizations; that he had made contributions to these organizations. The majority also found that he had associated with known Communists. On the subject of the Hydrogen Bomb,that Dr. Oppenheimer, during the latter part of the war, had no misgivings about its development; after the war urged continuing research in the field; but that in the autumn of 1949 he opposed the development of the H-Bomb on moral and political grounds. His views became known among scientists, but the Board did not find that Dr. Oppenheimer urged other scientists not to work on the H-Bomb program. However, the majority thought that his enthusiastic support would have encouraged other scientists to work on it.

The Board made no categorical finding as to whether Oppenheimer's opposition to the big bomb definitely slowed down its development. The Board was impressed by the fact that even those who were critical of Dr. Oppenheimer's judgment and activities testified as to their belief in his loyalty. The Board believed that had Oppenheimer given his enthusiastic support to the H-Bomb program, a concerted effort would have been made at an earlier date.

Professor Evans, in his minority report, contends that much of the derogatory information about Oppenheimer was in the hands of the Commission when he was cleared in 1947. He says of Oppenheimer: "His judgment was bad in some cases, and most excellent in others; but in my estimation it is better now than it was in 1947; and to damn him now and ruin his career and his service - I cannot do it." Professor Evans says "Oppenheimer did not hinder the development of the H-Bomb, and there is absolutely nothing in the testimony XXX to show that he did. Professor Evans contends that the failure to clear Oppenheimer will be a black mark on the escutcheon of our country. "His witnesses are a considerable segment of the scientific backbone of our nation, and they endorse him. I am worried about the effect an improper decision may have on the scientific development in our country."

Under the rules and regulations Dr. Oppenheimer is entitled to request a review of his case by the Personnel Security Board. He has waived this right of review, and requested immediate consideration of his case by the whole Atomic Energy Commission. His lawyers are preparing a brief, and have asked to make ~~all~~ ORAL argument before the Commission. Oppenheimer's lawyers take issue with four conclusions reached by the majority. The first two CONCLUSIONS alleged serious disregard for the requirements of the security system, and susceptibility to influence. OPPENHEIMER'S LAWYERS contend that the facts do not support the conclusions. THEY also deny that his conduct in connection with the Hydrogen Bomb program, which was characterized as "disturbing and lacking in candor" stand in stark contrast with the conclusions of the majority. They contend that the injection into a security case of a scientist's alleged lack of enthusiasm for a particular program is "fraught with grave consequences to this country." And they ask: "How can a scientist risk advising the government, if he is told that at some later day a Security Board may weigh in the balance the degree of his enthusiasm for some official program?"

Both the majority and minority reports on the Oppenheimer case will repay careful reading, for they go to the heart of one of the most difficult problems of this scientific age. The relationship between scientists and the government, and the conduct of the nation's security program. This hearing was conducted with decorum, in secrecy. The Board's findings and the minority report have been published. Professor Oppenheimer was represented by counsel with the right of cross-examination. And Professor Oppenheimer has the right of appeal to the entire Board.

This is a scientific age in which we're living, where much of our progress is determined by the extent to which scientists and government agencies are willing to cooperate. It's as Disraeli once said:"What art was to the ancient world, science is to the modern." It's also true, as Einstein remarked:"The reason science, which saves work and makes life easier, brings us little happiness is because we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A special Atomic Energy Commission panel agreed unanimously today that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer is loyal and discreet. But by a two to one vote the panel recommended against restoring the atomic scientist to his job as a government consultant. I'll try to review the panel's recommendations in a few minutes.

At the Army-McCarthy hearings, Army Counsel Welch said today he has "grave suspicions" about the authenticity of the memoranda that the McCarthy group used to support its charge that Private Schine had been held as a "hostage" by the Army and that the Army tried to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to call of its investigation of the army. After questioning the Senator's secretary who could not recall the individual memoranda and acknowledged she did not keep her original shorthand notebooks, Counsel Welch questioned whether the charges - the backbone of the McCarthy case "are the real McCoy or not." He suggested that an investigation be made of typewriters and the like in the McCarthy office. Committee Counsel Jenkins advised him the FBI has said this would not be "feasible or revealing." Senator McCarthy charged that Welch had, in effect, accused his office secretary of perjury. McCarthy also called for lie-detector tests of all the principals in the case saying he'd be the first to submit. He said this would end the whole investigation in 24 hours.

Earlier, Democratic Senator McClelland said that the people are entitled to a legal opinion on whether the President or McCarthy is right in their dispute over government secret files. McCarthy contends that the President's secrecy directive barring federal workers from turning over secret papers to the Senator would hamstring Congress and let traitors go undetected. McClelland said the issue is whether McCarthy is entitled to get by "theft" information which Congress cannot get from legitimate channels. McCarthy said he would not abide by any secrecy directives from anyone.

Roy Cohn returned to the stand and denied that he ever said he would wreck the army and oust Army Secretary Stevens if Private Schine, a former committee consultant, was shipped overseas. Cohn also testified that he had an investigation made of Schine's regimental commander at Fort Dix, Colonel Earl C. Ringler. Cohn said he did this after Schine reported that the Colonel had referred to the McCarthy investigation at Fort Monmouth as a "witch hunt." Cohn also said that Army Counsel John G. Adams had told him several times that Private Schine would have received a commission if he had not been a member of the McCarthy staff.

And on the Senate floor, Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont said the investigating commission has not dug into the real mystery. He defined this as the personal relationship between Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn and Private Schine. Flanders said Cohn seems to have what he called "an almost passionate anxiety to retain the services of Schine." Flanders also charged that "if McCarthy was in the pay of the Communists he could not have done a better job for them." And Flanders said: McCarthy's anti-Communist campaign "so completely parallels that of Adolf Hitler as to strike fear into the heart of any defenseless minority. McCarthy, during today's hearing, called Flanders viscious and dishonest - he said he wants Flanders to testify before the committee on the "trouble" he described in the senate speech.

McCarthy also said that the committee should consider the extent, as he put it, to which the Justice Department is going to prevent the testimony of certain witnesses. He charged that former Communist Paul Crouch, has said he has been ordere "banished to Hawaii" to avoid testimony before the committee.

The House of Representatives today approved a bill that would open the social security system to another 10 million persons - increase the benefits and the tax.

And the President asked Congress for an extra defense appropriation of one billion 100 million dollars for military construction.

At the United Nations, Thailand's appeal for a U.N. peace committee to make an on-the-spot check of the war in Southeast Asia will be taken up by the Security Council on Thursday.

There was little progress on Indo-China at the Geneva conference. But on the battlefields French forces today drove back the enemy six miles from Phu Ly - the key road junction 30 miles south of Hanoi.

The Atomic Energy Security Board, reviewing the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, was made up of Gordon Gray, President of the University of North Carolina, Thomas, Morgan, former president of the Sperry Corporation, and Ward Evens, Professor at Loyola University, Chicago. The Board agreed that Dr. Oppenheimer had been loyal and discreet, but it decided by a vote of two to one - Professor Evans dissenting - that he should not be cleared as a consultant to the Atomic Energy Commission. The Board heard forty witnesses, listened to over three thousand pages of testimony; the meetings were secret; Dr. Oppenheimer was represented by counsel, usually four in number. The report of the Board acknowledges that this case puts the security system of the United States on trial. It recognizes two points of view: "There are those who apprehend that our program for security at this point in history consists of an uneasy mixture of fear, prejudice and arbitrary judgment. They feel that reason and fairness and justice have abdicated, and their places have been taken by hysteria and depression. On the other hand, there is a strong belief that in recent times our government has been less than unyielding towards the problem of Communism, and that loose and pliable attitudes regarding loyalty and security have prevailed to the danger of our society and its institutions." The Board found itself in agreement with much that underlies both points of view. The majority of the Board found that Dr. Oppenheimer had been "less than candid" in some of his testimony; that he had, in the thirties and forties, associated with a considerable number of Communist front organizations; that he had made contributions to these organizations. The majority also found that he had associated with known Communists. On the subject of the Hydrogen Bomb, that Dr. Oppenheimer, during the latter part of the war, had no misgivings about its development; after the war urged continuing research in the field; but that in the autumn of 1949 he opposed the development of the H-Bomb on moral and political grounds. His views became known among scientists, but the Board did not find that Dr. Oppenheimer urged other scientists not to work on the H-Bomb program. However, the majority thought that his enthusiastic support would have encouraged other scientists to work on it. The Board made no categorical finding as to whether Oppenheimer's opposition to the big bomb definitely slowed down its development. The Board was impressed by the fact that "even those who were critical of Dr. Oppenheimer's judgment and activities testified as to their belief in his loyalty. The Board believed that had Oppenheimer given his enthusiastic support to the H-Bomb program, a concerted effort would have been made at an earlier date.

Professor Evans, in his minority report, contends that much of the derogatory information about Oppenheimer was in the hands of the Commission when he was cleared in 1947. He says of Oppenheimer: "His judgment was bad in some cases, and most excellent in others; but in my estimation it is better now than it was in 1947, and to damn him now and ruin his career and his service - I cannot do it." Professor Evans says "Oppenheimer did not hinder the development of the H-bomb, and there is absolutely nothing in the testimony to show that he did. Professor Evans contends that the failure to clear Oppenheimer will be a black mark on the escutcheon of our country. "His witnesses are a considerable sugment of the scientific backbone of our nation, and they endorse him. I am worried about the effect an improper decision may have on the scientific development in our country."

Under the rules and regulations Dr. Oppenheimer is entitled to request a review of his case by the Personnel Security Board. He has waived this right of review, and requested immediate consideration or his case by the whole Atomic Energy Commission. His lawyers are preparing a brief, and have asked to make oral argument before the Commission. Oppenheimer's lawyers take issue with four conclusi reached by the majority. The first two conclusions alleged serious disregard for the requirements of the securit system, and susceptibility to influence. Oppenheimer's lawyers contend that the facts do not support the conclusions. They also deny that his conduct in connection with the Hydrogen Bomb program, which was characterized as "disturbing and lacking in candor" stand in stark contrast with the conclusions of the majority. They contend that the injection into a security case of a scientist's alleged lack of enthusiasm for a particular program is "fraught with grave consequences to this country." And they ask: "How can a scientist risk advising the government, if he is told that at some later day a Security Board may weigh in the balance the degree of his enthusiasm for some official program?"

Both the majority and minority reports on the Oppenheimer case will repay careful reading, for they go to the heart of one of the most difficult problems of this scientific age. The relationship between scientists and the government, and the conduct of the nation's security program. This hearing was conducted with decorum, in secrecy. The Board's findings and the minority report have been published. Professor Oppenheimer was represented by counsel with the right of cross-examination. And Professor Oppenheimer has the right of appeal to the entire Board.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This is a scientific age in which we're living, where much of our progress is determined by the extent to which scientists and government agencies are willing to cooperate. It's as Disraeli once said: "What art was to the ancient world, science is to the modern." It's also true, as Einstein remarked: "The reason science, which saves work and makes life easier, brings us little happiness is because we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday June 2, 1954

This is the news:

The President said today his Administration has rolled up an impressive record in fighting [redacted] COMMUNISTS IN THIS COUNTRY. At a news conference he again made known his support of Attorney General Brownell's ruling..obviously directed at Senator McCarthy.. that no one can set himself above the laws of our land..by inviting federal workers to give the Senator secret information. The President said the appropriate federal agencies are constantly checking on Communists in this country..this is being done quietely, relentlessly and with conformance with due process of law. The President said that henecforth he has just one aim and idea: to get congressional approval of his legislative program.

Senator Mc Carthy told members of the Mundt committee hearing the McCarthy-army disupte, that the Administration is heading in the right direction in rooting out Communists from government. He has some questions about the speed with which this is being done. And Mc Carthy said again he is not bound by any presidential order which would make it impossible for his committee to get information on wrong-doing in the executive branch of the government. Later in the hearing, McCarthy

Wednesday June 2, 1954

This is the news:

The President said today his Administration has rolled up an impressive record in fighting [redacted] COMMUNISTS IN THIS COUNTRY. At a news conference he again made known his support of Attorney General Brownell's ruling..obviously directed at Senator McCarthy.. that no one can set himself above the laws of our land..by inviting federal workers to give the Senator secret information. The President said the appropriate federal agencies are constantly checking on Communists in this country..this is being done [redacted] quietely, relentlessly and with conformance with due process of law. The President said that henecforth he has just one aim and idea: to get congressional approval of his legislative program.

Senator Mc Carthy told members of the Mundt committee hearing the McCarthy-army disupte, that the Administration is heading in the right direction in rooting out Communists from government. He has some questions about the speed with which this is being done. And Mc Carthy said again he is not bound by any presidential order which would make it impossible for his committee to get information on wrong-doing in the executive branch of the government. Later in the hearing, McCarthy said the White House could perform a great service to the country if it stops what he called "the bickering and fighting" with his committee. He said the committee should be getting the fullest White House co-operation and that should be flowing both ways. He said there is no reason for "a contest."

At today's hearing, Mc Carthy said his committee. [redacted] t..has been investigating Communist penetration into the C.I.A... the Central Intelligence Agency, our top-secret intelligence body. The C.I.A. Director Allen W. Dulles hurriedly issued a statement saying the charges of Communist penetration is false. [redacted] Dulles also noted that last summer McCarthy charged MAT an alleged Communist employe of the [redacted] Government Printing Office [redacted] had [redacted] access to C.I.A. classified material. Allen Dulles says that was false, too. And he noted that he has not received an answer to a request sent Mc Carthy last October asking for any information he may have on personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mc Carthy also said today that his committee is investigating alleged Communists in atomic and hydrogen plants. [redacted]

During today's session the committee voted unanimously to recommend to the Senator that he turn over to the Defense Department the the names of 130 persons ~~[illegible]~~ Mc Carthy charges are security risks.

Roy Cohn was on the stand again with Army Counsel Welch accusing him of evasive answers; Mc Carthy said Cohn's answers were direct. Cohn said his law firm had never handled a case as reprsentatives of Private Schine or his family. He did not answer with a name when asked who directed Schine's work when he was an unpaid consultant with the McCarthy committee. He said he tried to get Schine an army commission because he felt Schine was qualified. He disagreed with Counsel Welch's language in the suggestion that Cohn used "high-powered" influence in an "anxious" effort to get Schine a commission. Cohn also said he thinks that if the McCarthy committee drops its investigation of alleged Communists in the army, the army will relax its own efforts in this regard.

The President, at his news conference, said today he could not comment on the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer because it is still going through a sort of judicial proceeding. A security board had barred Oppenheimer from secret atomic files although finding him loyal. Oppenheimer too, refused comment.

Mr. Eisenhower told reporters: he positively will not compromise principles on his flexible farm price support program. # he considers that the Russians have closed the door, for the immediate future, on his plan to establish an international atomic pool for peaceful uses.. and he still believes 18-year-olds should have the right to vote in federal elections. The President said he believes the states right argument was mistakenly injected in the Senate debate that defeated the proposed Constiutional amendment.

The Atomic Energy Commission told Congress today that it has spent over nine billion dollars on nuclear weapons. This has brought the nation to "a high state of preparedness against aggression." Now, the Commission says, is the time to spend more public funds for the "constructive and peace-time use of the atom which may make a greater contribution to the maintenance of peace.. as great or greater than its effect as a deterrent to war."

The House Veterans Committee today cleared the Disabled American Veterans of any fund-raising irregularities.

And the election inspectors counting votes in the battle for control of the New York Central Railroad have rejected a management [redacted] challenge of 800-thousand votes cast by supporters of Robert R. Young.

At his news conference today the President said he has by no means decided whether to ask Congress for authority to INTERVENE in Southeast Asia. But his top advisers have suggested the possibility of asking Congress to permit such action.

Today, in Indo-China, French planes destroyed a string of enemy bases only 12 miles from Hanoi.

And at Geneva, the Russians and Chinese Communists insisted over western opposition, that Communist nations must help police an armistice in Indo-China. The United States, Britain and France argued that it is impossible for a Communist country to be neutral..therefore no Communist countries should be included on the commission.

Edward R. Murrow: June 2, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Being somewhat wearied of words and wrangling, of committee hearings and contention, this reporter betook himself to Grossinger's AND KUTCHER'S in the Catskills. That's the rolling, lake-studded country of New York State. There considerable conversation was had with two soft-spoken young men who are preparing to belabor each other about the head and body with six-ounce gloves, come June 17TH in Yankee Stadium. The two young men are Rocky Marciano, heavyweight champion of the world, and the challenger Ezzard Charles. It is possible that conversations with these two relaxed and affable fighters may have produced certain comments and attitudes which might be applicable to politicians and to more anonymous folk, but I do not assert that this is true. Both men are given to understatement; they refrain from boasting, and they consider well before answering. Both regard their profession as a job of work to be done, a job requiring long and careful preparation, training and discipline. Both CHARLES + MARCIANO concentrate on correcting the weak or doubtful weapons in their arsenal. Both men rose to fame and fortune from humble and obscure origins. As youngsters they both day-dreamed about being the Champ. Both have discovered that reality doesn't quite fit the dream. They thought that there would be more glory and less work in being the number one man in their chosen profession.

Rocky Marciano is proud of the fact that no one "coddled" him when he was in the army with the Combat Engineers; claims he dug more holes than any G.I. in his outfit. Ezzard Charles served for 24 months in Italy, and learned to speak the language. He has the hands of a musician, plays the bass fiddle and the saxophone, and reads a lot, including poetry. But while he's in training he neither plays nor reads; says it takes his mind off his work, spoils his concentration.

Marciano has been up there in the Catskills since January. He works and trains hard, except when a busload of kids turn up to visit his training camp; then he's more interested in fooling around with the kids than he is in doing road work or sparring. No one is allowed to smoke in his training quarters. # Both men agree that on fight night they are unconscious of the huge crowds surrounding them. Charles says: "I think only of the man in front of me; it's a poor time to be thinking of anything else." Both agree that when they knock an opponent down the main thing they think about is whether he's going to get up. # Of the only time he was knocked down - that was by Walcott - Marciano says: "I was embarrassed; all my friends from Brockton had come to see me, and there I was sitting on the canvas."

Marciano thinks the best advice he ever received was from his mother, who told him simply that he ought to listen to people who knew what they were talking about." Charles remembers an Army Chaplain who told him when he was separated from the army that he should forget what he had been taught about war, and learn to live again as a citizen of the community.

This reporter has seldom encountered less bombast, arrogance or personal pride. Perhaps it is because both men, train by rules, fight by rules, and in the final test must rely only upon themselves. They cannot subpoena anyone to help them; cannot lie or equivocate their way to victory. If their preparation is inadequate the result will be not merely embarrassment but defeat. They can seek refuge in no amendment. They cannot walk out of the ring if the tide of battle flows against them. They cannot violate the rules with impunity. They cannot strike low blows without penalty. There is a referee and not a chairman. And in the end there is a decision that is clearcut and final.

This reporter unfortunately has but a limited acquaintance among prize fighters. But these two young men are in a sense typical of our system of democratic free enterprise. Marciano, the son of Italian parents, worked as a dishwasher, road construction worker and many other things.

Charles, a negro, WORKED HIS WAY THRU High School AS a PORTER & CAR WASHER; WAS raised by his great-grandmother who admonished him always to go to church and stay out of street fights. But the thing that impressed me most about these two young men, who will belabor each other for gain and glory, was their casual, soft-spoken, instinctive good manners; their respect for each other; their toleration for a reporter who didn't even know the right questions to ask; and their intense concentration on the job in hand. They thought before they spoke, that was refreshing. And it's even money that neither one of them will ever be a politician.

There is a certain quality about athletes...good athletes anyway... that others in public life could do worse than follow. They have a strong faith in themselves and a becoming degree of modesty. Grenville Kleiser once said:" You impress others by your own faith and they will have faith in you only in the degree that you have faith in yourself." And as Syrus noted:"Modesty can not be taught; it must be born."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said today his Administration has rolled up an impressive record in fighting Communists in this country. At a news conference he again made known his support of Attorney General Brownell's ruling - obviously directed at Senator McCarthy - that no one can set himself above the laws of our land by inviting federal workers to give the Senator secret information. The President said the appropriate federal agencies are constantly checking on Communists in this country - this is being done quietely, relentlessly and with conformance with due process of law. The President said that henceforth he has just one aim and idea: to get congressional approval of his legislative program.

Senator McCarthy told members of the Mundt committee hearing the McCarthy-army dispute, that the Administration is heading in the right direction in rooting out Communists from government. He has some questions about the speed with which this is being done. And McCarthy said again he is not bound by any presidential order which would make it impossible for his committee to get information on wrong-doing in the executive branch of the government. Later in the hearing, McCarthy said the White House could perform a great service to the country if it stops what he called "the bickering and fighting" with his committee. He said the committee should be getting the fullest White House cooperation and that should be flowing both ways. He said there is no reason for "a contest."

At today's hearing, McCarthy said his committee has been investigating Communist penetration into the CIA - the Central Intelligence Agency, our top-secret intelligence body. The CIA Director, Allen W. Dulles hurriedly issued a statement saying the charges of Communist penetration is false. Dulles also noted that last summer McCarthy charged that an alleged Communist employee of the Government Printing Office had access to CIA classified material. Allen Dulles says that was false, too. And he noted that he has not received an answer to a request sent McCarthy last October asking for any information he may have on personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency. McCarthy also said today that his committee is investigating alleged Communists in atomic and hydrogen plants.

During today's session the committee voted unanimously to recommend to the Senator that he turn over to the Defense Department the names of 130 persons McCarthy charges are security risks. Roy Cohn was on the stand again with Army Counsel Welch accusing him of evasive answers; McCarthy said Cohn's answers were direct. Cohn said his law firm had never handled a case as representatives of Private Schine or his family. He did not answer with a name when asked who directed Schine's work when he was an unpaid consultant with the McCarthy committee. He said he tried to get Schine an army commission because he felt Schine was qualified. He disagreed with Counsel Welch's language in the suggestion that Cohn used "high-powered" influence in an "anxious" effort to get Schine a commission. Cohn also said he thinks that if the McCarthy committee drops its investigation of alleged Communists in the army, the army will relax its own efforts in this regard.

The President, at his news conference, said today he could not comment on the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer because it is still going through a sort of judicial proceeding. A security board had barred Oppenheimer from secret atomic files although finding him loyal. Oppenheimer too, refused comment.

Mr. Eisenhower told reporters: he positively will not compromise principles on his flexible farm price support program. He considers that the Russians have closed the door, for the immediate futur., on his plan to establish an international atomic pool for peaceful uses and he still believes 18-year-olds should have the right to vote in federal elections. The President said he believes the states right argument was mistakenly injected in the Senate debate that defeated the proposed Constitutional amendment.

The Atomic Energy Commission told Congress today that it has spent over nine billion dollars on nuclear weapons. This has brought the nation to "a high state of preparedness against aggression." Now, the Commission says, is the time to spend more public funds for the "constructive and peace-time use of the atom which may make a greater contribution to the maintenance of peace as great or greater than its effect as a deterrent to war."

The House Veterans Committee today cleared the Disabled American Veterans of any fund-raising irregularities.

And the election inspectors counting votes in the battle for control of the New York Central Railroad have rejected a management challenge of 800-thousand votes cast by supporters of Robert R. Young.

At his news conference todaythe President said he has by no means decided whether to ask Congress for authority to intervene in Southeast Asia. But his top advisers have suggested the possibility of asking Congress to permit such action.

Today, in Indo-China, French planes destroyed a string of enemy bases only 12 miles from Hanoi.

And at Geneva, the Russian and Chinese Communists insisted over western opposition, that Communist nations must help police an armistice in Indo-China. The United States, Britain and France argued that it is impossible for a Communist country to be neutral therefore no Communist countries should be included on the commission.

Being somewhat wearied of words and wrangling of committee hearings and contention, this reporter betook himself to Grossinger's and Kutcher's in the Catskills. That's the rolling, lake-studded country of New York state. There considerable conversation was had with two soft-spoken young men who are preparing to belabor each other about the head and body with six-ounce gloves, come June 17th in Yankee Stadium. The two young men are Rocky Marciano, heavyweight champion of the workd, and the challenger Ezzard Charles. It is possible that conversations with these two relaxed and affable fighters may have produced certain comments and attitudes which might be applicable to politicians and to more anonymous folk, but I do not assert that this is true. Both men are given to understatement; they refrain from boasting, and they consider well before answering. Both regard their profession as a job of work to be done, a job requiring long and careful preparation, training and discipline. Both Charles and Marciano concentrate on correcting the weak or doubtful weapons in their arsenal. Both men rose to fame and fortune from humble and obscrue origins. As youngsters they both day-dreamed about being the Champ. Both have discovered that reality doesn't quite fit the dream. They thought that there would be more glory and less work in being the number one man in their chosen profession.

Rocky Marciano is proud of the fact that no one "coddled" him when he was in the army with the Combat Engineers; claims he dug more holes than any G.I. in his outfit. Ezzard Charles served for 24 months in Italy, and learned to speak the language. He has the hands of a musician, plays the bass fiddle and the saxophone, and reads a lot, including poetry. But while he's in training he neither plays nor reads; says it takes his mind off his work, spoils his concentration. Marciano has been up there in the Catskills since January. He works and trains hard, except when a busload of kids turn up to visit his training camp; then he's more interested in fooling around with the kids than he is in doing road work or sparring. No one is allowed to smoke in his training quarters. Both menagree that on fight night they are unconscious of the huge crowds surrounding them. Charles says: "I think only of the man in front of me; it's a poor time to be thinking of anything else." Both agree that when they knock an opponent down the main thing they think about is whether he's going to get up. Of the only time he was knocked down - that was by Walcott - Marciano says: "I was embarrassed; all my friends from Brockton had come to see me, and there I was sitting on the canvas."

Marciano thinks the best advice he ever he ever received was from his Mother, who told him simply that he "ought to listen to people who knew what they were talking about." Charles remembers an Army Chaplain who told him when he was separated from the army that he should forget what he had been taught about war, and learn to live again as a citizen of the community. This reporter has seldom encountered less bombast, arrogance or personal pride. Perhaps it is because both men, train by rules, right by rules, and in the final test must rely only upon themselves. They cannot subpoena anyone to help them; cannot lie or equivocate their way to victory. If their preparation is inadequate the result will be not merely embassassment but defeat. They can seek refuge in no amendment. They cannot walk out of the ring if the tide of battle flows against them. They cannot violate the rules with inpunity. They cannot strike low blows without penalty. There is a referee and not a chairman. And in the end there is a decision that is clearcut and final. This reporter unfortunately has but a limited acquaintance among prize fighters. But these two young men are in a sense typical of our system of democratic free enterprise. Marciano, the son of Italian parents, worked as a dishwasher, road construction worker and many other things. Charles, a negro, worked his way through highschool as a porter and car washer; was raised by his great-grandmother who admonished him always to go to church and stay out of street fights. But the thing that impressed me most about these two young men, who will belabor each other for gain and glory, was their casual, soft-spoken, instinctive good manners; their respect for each other; their toleration for a reporter who didn't even know the right questions to ask; and their intense concentration on the job in hand. They thought before they spoke, that was refreshing. And it's even money that neither one of them will ever be a politician.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is a certain quality about athletes, good athletes anyway, that others in public life could do worse than follow. They have a strong faith in themselves and a becoming degree of modesty. Grenville Kleiser once said: "You impress others by your own faith and they will have faith in you only in the degree that you have faith in yourself." And as Syrus noted: "Modesty cannot be taught; it must be born." Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday, June 3, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

The Defense Department said tonight, that it wants the names of those Senator McCarthy says, are security risks in our defense plants. McCarthy had said earlier, that there were roughly 130, alleged communists working in these plants, at the present time. But that apparently the Defense Department didn't want this information from him. He had indicated that the Department knew most - if not all - of the names.

Tonight, Assistant Defense Secretary Fred Seaton, in a letter to McCarthy, said that the Defense Department wants the names. But it can not agree in advance, to the suggestion made by McCarthy, that the names be kept secret, until those involved have had a chance to testify. The Seaton letter said that it's possible, action has already been taken, by the Defense Department, on some names on the list. And therefore, the letter went on, the Defense Department must be free to act, without having to consult with the Senator.

McCarthy, after studying the letter, said he could not agree to these conditions, and will not turn over the names - unless some new agreement is reached.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing itself, Roy Cohen, chief counsel for the McCarthy Committee, said that group has still not given up in its efforts to question Army Loyalty Board members. He said the Board, in at least one instance, cleared for secret radar work, a man with a record of pro-Communist activity. This man, he said, had circulated a pamphlet opposing the draft.

Cohen also said that if cases of perjury at the hearings are to be established, the McCarthy side faces a "stacked deck." He said Attorney General Brownell, or his assistants, instigated the hearings, and the same officials would be responsible for deciding whether or not to prosecute for perjury.

Army Counsel Welch repeatedly asked Cohen to say whether sworn statements by Army Counselor John Adams to the effect that Cohen threatened to wreck the army if Private Shine were sent overseas -- whether these statements were true or false. Cohen said it was not for him - but for the subcommittee hearing the charges - to decide.

In the course of the day, three monitored telephone calls between Senator Dirksen and Army Secretary Stevens were put in the record. In one of these, Stevens said he and the army were being "crucified" by McCarthy and he - Stevens - was going to have to do something - maybe drastic.

At a news conference, Foreign Aid Director Harold Stassen who has been having a running argument with McCarthy, said any employe in his department who gives unauthorized information to the Senator will be fired.

The Senate, late in the day, passed a housing bill liberalizing government assistance to home owners and setting up funds for 35-thousand housing units for each of the next four years. The vote was 66 to 16. Southern Democrats argued against the public housing units with continued reference to the Supreme Court's recent Anti-Segregation decision. [The bill now goes into conference, since the House bill provides for no public housing grants.]

Secretary of State Dulles went before a joint congressional committee on Atomic Energy today and said he believes our secrecy laws in this field are outmoded and should be modified. He said the laws, enacted 8 years ago, are a "real handicapp in our collective efforts with our allies abroad." He said they should be brought up to date on atomic warfare methods because " our potential enemies have knowledge vastly superior to that of some of the nations we count as friends."

Three of the five members of the atomic energy commission today went on record against any increase in the power of Commission Chairman Lewis L. [redacted] Straws. Commissioners Smyth and Thomas E. Murray made their [redacted] objections known before the Senate-House atomic energy committee. Murray complained that the suggested change would increase "the present trend toward centralization of authority" in Chairman Straws. The third commission member, Eugene M. Zuckert, told reporters: "Any addition to the power of the chairman is dangerous to the commission." [redacted]

At the United Nations, the Security Council over-rode Russian opposition and decided to debate Thailand's request for a U.N. [redacted] watchdog committee to study the Indo-China war. [redacted] The ambassador from Thailand said this war not only is a direct threat to his country.. but menaces the legal government of Laos and Cambodia. The Russians argued that the request for a U.N. commission is an American plot to wreck the conference in Geneva.. and justify allied intervention in Indo-China.

On the battlefronts today, about 200 French Union troops were wiped out by three Communist battalions in an ambush in south Viet Nam. The [redacted] attack occurred about 220 miles northeast of Saigon.

In Europe today, a Belgian transport plane..carrying pedigreed pigs from Great Britain to Yugoslavia.. was shot up over the Austrian-Yugoslav border. The radio officer was killed.. two other crew members injured. One said he thought the attacking plane was a Communist Mig. The plane made an emergency landing in Austria.

~~In Washington, the associate research director for a~~ house ~~committee studying tax exempt foundations, charged that tax-free~~ funds "have ~~promoted a world wide~~ social revolution. Thomas Mc Neice ~~said he'll present "documented" evidence to prove this~~

And Air Force Secretary Talbott says a board has recommended three sites from which Talbott will chose a permanent home for an air force academy. They are: Alton, Illinois...Colorado Springs, Colorado and Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

In Washington today military representatives of five powers met to discuss the defense of Southeast Asia . And in Geneva the conference on Indo-China and Korea passed through another un-eventiful day. So we asked Correspondent David Schoenbrun, in Paris, to sum up the situation. Here is his recorded report:

(runs 5;00 ending: Now back to erm in ny)

This is Ed Murrow..I'll be back in a moment with the etc

For those who watch and wait and hope...and anticipate the worst....

from political conferences, these words by Thomas Guthrie might be helpful:"The greatest things ever done on earth have been done by little and little...little agents, little persons, little things...by every one doing his own work, filling his own sphere, holding his own post and saying: Lord, what wilt thou have me do ?

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 3, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Washington today military representatives of five powers met to discuss the defense of SoutheastAsia; and in Geneva the conference on Indochina and Korea passed thru another uneventful day. So we asked correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris to sum up the situation. Here is his recorded report.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris - one of the two capitals in which the fate of the Far Eastern conference is being decided; the other is Hanoi. The one place where the Geneva conference is not being decided is Geneva. This reporter returned from Geneva yesterday to explore the political climate here in Paris and will be going back to Geneva tonite. But my feeling is that nothing is going to happen in Geneva itself until events have gelled in France and Indochina. The reason: diplomats at a conference table, trying to negotiate an end to war, are necessarily subject to the battle itself and the cohesion or lack of it on the home front.

Let's look at the battlefields and the home fronts today to judge the odds of Geneva. First, Hanoi, capital city of North Tonkin, hub of the delta. I was up in Hanoi exactly four weeks ago tonite. It was the last nite of freedom for the men at Dienbienphu. Exactly four weeks ago the Communists launched their final assault against that fortress. We knew then that Hanoi would be the next target and that it would take General Giap just about four weeks to move up his artillery and divisions. Well, here we are, four weeks later. What has been done to meet that threat, and with what effect on Geneva? The answer: nothing much has been done to meet the threat, and at Geneva our position has gotten just that much weaker. The Communists are closing in today on Hanoi, attacking at Phuly and Yenphu to the south, while north of Hanoi this week they took an important post on the Haiphong road only nine short miles from Hanoi itself.

The French are still talking about reinforcements, about changing the Supreme Command, about American help - just talking. This morning here in Paris there was another secret session at the Premier's office about appointing General Jean Valouis (?) or General Salan, or both, to replace Navarre. That's the third such meeting this week - and still no decision. In Washington military experts are meeting to consider the threat of Indochina, but such a meeting has been at least a month overdue. Meanwhile in Geneva the conferees have been discussing the composition of a commission to supervise and control a cease-fire and an armistice if and when the fighting stops. Why, we might ask, should the fighting stop under these circumstances? Is there any reason why the Communists should quit now, at the gates of Hanoi, within sight of victory// against a confused and divided Franco-Vietnamese army and a far from united Western alliance? How can our diplomats at Geneva force terms on the adversary when we're losing on the battlefield and when the French Government at home is tottering, with another dangerous confidence vote expected next week? Ever since Geneva started the diplomats have been fighting with their hands tied behind their backs. From Washington has come a policy of bluff and bluster, threats which were hastily dropped the minute they were challenged; in Paris, defeatism; and in London, well, the kindest definition would be hesitation. The result: Dienbienphu fell during the conference, Hanoi is ~~being~~ on the point of being invested, the French command is almost demoralized and the Vietnamese Government virtually nonexistent.

Here in Paris tonite is the Prime Minister of Vietnam, Prince Buu Loc, a courageous and clean-handed statesman, a rarity in Vietnam. But althe he is clean-handed, he is also empty-handed. He came here five weeks ago to get a treaty of independence from the French and a decree of democracy and representative government from the Emperor. He's here tonite in Paris, about to go home again, returning without independence and without a democratic assembly. And where has his Emperor been in this month since Dienbienphu has fallen? Sunning himself in a chateau on the French Riviera. What has been the effect on Geneva? Six long weeks of procedural wrangling without any real result or any expected. TheCommunists are playing for time. Why shouldn't they? If we were winning the battle, would we stop and draw a cease-fire line that left a big city in Communist hands? There is little hope of a cease-fire at Geneva until the Communist ~~army~~ armies run into a brick wall around Hanoi, a wall they cannot pierce. Then, if there's virtual stalemate on the battlefield, there can be a settlement at Geneva. But even stabilization of the front is not enough. There must also be stability in the rear area, too, in Paris and Washington and in London. And there's no real sign of that yet.

That's the way that Geneva must be read, against that background. Then perhaps it will become clear what is happening and why. We've got to pull ourselves together in order to pull out of a very deep and booby-trapped hole - and we haven't begun to do it yet.

This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Defense Department said tonight that it wants the names of those Senator McCarthy says are security risks in our defense plants. McCarthy had said earlier that there were roughly 130 alleged communists working in these plants at the present time. But that apparently the Defense Department didn't want this information from him. He had indicated that the Department knew most - if not all - of the names.

Tonight, Assistant Defense Secretary Fred Seaton, in a letter to McCarthy, said that the Defense Department wants the names. But it cannot agree in advance, to the suggestion made by McCarthy that the names be kept secret until those involved have had a chance to testify. The Seaton letter said that it's possible action has already been taken by the Defense Department on some names on the list. And therefore, the letter went on, the Defense Department must be free to act without having to consult with the Senator.

McCarthy, after studying the letter, said he could not agree to these conditions and will not turn over the names unless some new agreement is reached.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing itself, Roy Cohn, chief counsel for the McCarthy Committee, said that group has still not given up in its efforts to question Army Loyalty Board members. He said the Board, in at least one instance, cleared for secret radar work, a man with a record of pro-Communist activity. This man, he said, had circulated a pamphlet opposing the draft.

Cohn also said that if cases of perjury at the hearings are to be established, the McCarthy side faces a "stacked deck." He said Attorney General Brownell or his assistants instigated the hearings and the same officials would be responsible for deciding whether or not to prosecute for perjury.

Army Counsel Welch repeatedly asked Cohn to say whether sworn statements by Army Counselor John Adams to the effect that Cohn threatened to wreck the army if Private Schine were sent overseas - whether these statements were true or false. Cohn said it was not for him - but for the subcommittee hearing the charges - to decide.

In the course of the day, three monitored telephone calls between Senator Dirksen and Army Secretary Stevens were put in the record. In one of these, Stevens said he and the army were being "crucified" by McCarthy and he - Stevens - was going to have to do something - maybe drastic.

At a news conference, Foreign Aid Director Harold Stassen who has been having a running argument with McCarthy, said any employee in his department who gives unauthorized information to the Senator will be fired.

The Senate, late in the day, passed a housing bill liberalizing government assistance to home owners and setting up funds for 35-thousand housing units for each of the next four years. The vote was 66 to 16. Southern Democrats argued against the public housing units with continued reference to the Supreme Court's recent Anti-Segregation decision. The bill now goes into conference, since the House bill provides for no public housing grants.

Secretary of State Dulles went before a joint congressional committee on Atomic Energy today and said he believes our secrecy laws in this field are out-moded and should be modified. He said the laws, enacted 8 years ago, are a real handicapp in our collective efforts with out allies abroad. He said they should be brought up to date on atomic warfare methods because "our potential enemies have knowledge vastly superior to that of some of the nations we count as friends."

Three of the five members of the atomic energy commission today went on record against any increase in the power of Commission Chairman Lewis L. Straws. Commissioners Smyth and Thomas E. Murray made their objections known before the Senate-House atomic energy committee. Murray complained that the suggested change would increase "the present trend toward centralization of authority" in Chairman Straws. The third commission member, Eugene M. Zuckert, told reporters: "Any addition to the power of the chairman is dangerous to the commission."

At the United Nations, the Security Council over-rode Russian opposition and decided to debate Thailand's request for a U.N. watchdog committee to study the Indo-China war. The ambassador from Thailand said this war not only is a direct threat to his country - but menaces the legal governments of Laos and Cambodia. The Russians argued that the request for a U.N. commission is an American plot to wreck the conference in Geneva and justify allied intervention in Indo-China.

On the battlefronts today, about 200 French Union troops were wiped out by three Communist battalions in an ambush in South Viet Nam. The attack occurred about 220 miles northeast of Saigon.

In Europe today, a Belgian transport plane carrying pedigreed pigs from Great Britain to Yugoslavia was shot up over the Austrian-Yugoslav border. The radio officer was killed - two other crew members injured. One said he thought the attacking plane was a Communist Mig. The plane made an emergency landing in Austria.

And Air Force Secretary Talbott says a board has recommended three sites from which Talbott will chose a permanent home for an air force academy. They are: Alton, Illinois, Colorado Springs, Colorado and Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

In Washington today military representatives of five powers met to discuss the defense of Southeast Asia. And in Geneva the conference on Indo-China and Korea passed through another un-eventful day. So we asked Correspondent David Schoenbrun, in Paris, to sum up the situation. Here is his recorded report:

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris - one of the two capitals in which the fate of the Far Eastern conference is being decided; the other is Hanoi. The one place where the Geneva conference is not being decided is Geneva. This reporter returned from Geneva yesterday to explore the political climate here in Paris and will be going back to Geneva tonight. But my feeling is that nothing is going to happen in Geneva itself until events have jelled in France and Indochina. The reason: diplomats at a conference table, trying to negotiate an end to war, are necessarily subject to the battle itself and the cohesion or lack of it on the home front.

Let's look at the battlefields and the home fronts today to judge the odds of Geneva. First, Hanoi, capital city of North Tonkin, hub of the delta. I was up in Hanoi exactly four weeks ago tonight. It was the last night for freedom for the men at Dienbienphu. Exactly four weeks ago the Communists launched their final assault against that fortress. We knew then that Hanoi would be the next target and that it would take General Giap just about four weeks to move up his artillery and divisions. Well, here we are, four weeks later. What has been done to meet that threat, and with what effect on Geneva? The answer: nothing much has been done to meet the threat, and at Geneva our position has gotten just that much weaker. The Communists are closing in today on Hanoi, attacking at Phuly and Yenphu to the south, while north of Hanoi this week they took an important post on the Haiphong road only nine short miles from Hanoi itself.

The French are still talking about reinforcements, about changing the Supreme Command, about American help - just talking. This morning here in Paris there was another secret session at the Premier's office about appointing General Jean Valouis or General Salan, or both, to replace Navarre. That's the third such meeting this week - and still no decision. In Washington military experts are meeting to consider the threat of Indochina, but such a meeting has been at least a month overdue. Meanwhile in Geneva the conferees have been discussing the composition of a commission to supervise and control a cease-fire and an armistice if and when the fighting stops. Why, we might ask, should the fighting stop under these circumstances? Is there any reason why the Communists should quit now, at the gates of Hanoi, within sight of victory against a confused and divided France-Vietnamese army and a far from United Western alliance? How can our diplomats at Geneva force terms on the adversary when we're losing on the battlefield and when the French Government at home is tottering, with another dangerous confidence vote expected next week? Ever since Geneva started the diplomats have been fighting with their hands tied behind their backs. From Washington has come a policy of bluff and bluster, threats which were hastily dropped the minute they were challenged; in Paris, defeatism; and in London, well, the kindest definition would be hesitation. The result: Dienbienphu fell during the conference, Hanoi is on the point of being invested, the French command is almost demoralized and the Viet-namese Government virtually nonexistent. Here in Paris tonight is the Prime Minister of Vietnam, Prince Bu Loc, a courageous and clean-handed statesman, a rarity in Vietnam. But although he is clean-handed, he is also empty-handed. He came here five weeks ago to get a treaty of independence from the French and a decree of democracy and representative government from the Emperor. He's here tonight in Paris, about to go home again, returning without independence and without a democratic assembly. And where has his Emperor been in this month since Dienbienphu has fallen? Sunning himself in a chateau on the French Riviera. What has been the effect on Geneva? Six long weeks of procedural wrangling without any real result or any expected. The Communists are playing for time. Why shouldn't they? If we were winning the battle, would we stop and draw a cease-fire line that left a big city in Communist hands? There is little hope of a cease-fire at Geneva until the Communist armies run into a brick wall around Hanoi, a wall they cannot pierce. Then, if there's virtual stalemate on the battlefield, there can be a settlement at Geneva. But even stabilization of the front is not enough. There must also be stability in the rear area, too, in Paris and Washington and in London. And there's no real sign of that yet. That's the way that Geneva must be read, against that background. Then perhaps it will become clear what is happening and why. We've got to pull ourselves together in order to pull out of a very deep and booby-trapped hole - and we haven't begun to do it yet. This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For those who watch and wait and hope and anticipate the worst from political conferences, these words by Thomas Guthrie might be helpful: "The greatest things ever done on earth have been done by little and little, little agents, little persons, little things, by every one doing his own work, filling his own sphere, holding his own post and saying: Lord, what wilt thou have me do?

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, June 4, 1954

This is the news:

Roy Cohn agreed today to permit the Mundt Committee to hear monitored records of phone calls he had, with Army Secretary Stevens. And Cohn says he expects Mc Carthy committee aide, Francis Carr, to agree to the same thing by Monday. Cohn's decision [redacted] came after Democratic Senator Symington said, he would demand the dismissal of both Cohn and Carr, if they refused to agree to make public their monitored phone calls with the army. This came after several of Symington's monitored phone calls to Secretary Stevens, were put into the record. Symington says they all occurred before there was any thought of the present hearing. He said they concerned General Zwicker, whom Stevens says was abused by Mc Carthy. The Symington-Stevens records, show that Symington suggested the two work together..that Stevens said McCarthy had "beat his brains out" because Stevens refused to let General Zwicker testify again... that Symington told Stevens, that Deputy Attorney General Rogers was "one fellow on our side..you can't go wrong with him."

After the monitored calls were put into the record, Chairman Mundt said they cast "a new light" on the whole controversey. McCarthy demanded that Symington resign from the committee, and that Deputy Attorney General Rogers be ~~suphoneed.~~ SUBPENAED Symington called the McCarthy suggestions A [redacted] diatribe..said he would not resign.. that both Stevens and Rogers had asked him to help maintain army morale.

~~And before the day was over [redacted] McCarthy agreed to [redacted] his [redacted] charges [redacted] the [redacted] army~~

In another congressional hearing..before the Joint atomic energy committee... Chairman Straws of the atomic energy commission said the commission cannot effectively run ~~[redacted]~~ ATOMIC affairs unless his authority is increased. He asked the committee to name him "the principal" officer of the commission. At present all five members have equal powers. Two commissioners charged today that Straws has failed to consult them about some atomic policies. Both Thomas E. Murray and Henry D. Smyth testified they were not told in advance, FOR EXAMPLE, that the President was going to announce that we did not need bigger hydrogen bombs. ~~S~~ Straws denied this.

3

Secretary of State Dulles told Congress today that the military situation in Indo-China "is grave, but by no means hopeless." Dulles was appearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in support of the President's three-and-a-half billion dollar foreign aid program. He urged Congress to allow the President great flexibility in spending the money, so he could act "quickly and decisively" in meeting the threat of Communist aggression. The situation in Indo-China, Secretary Dulles said, is fraught with danger, not only to the immediate area but to the security of the United States and its allies. "The area is one which is vital to the peace and safety of the United States." He reported evidence that Soviet arms have been supplied to the Communist forces in Indo-China in increasing quantities. The Communist plan, Dulles said, is not only to take over Indo-China, but to dominate all of Southeast Asia.

Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, let it be known that his group would make a thorough review of the international situation before approving the foreign aid request. He pointed out that Congress voted last year to end all foreign aid spending as soon as possible.

4)

IN INDO-CHINA TODAY, [redacted] Communist forces [redacted] overran two outposts, southeast of Hanoi. And the vital supply road between Hanoi and Haiphong is threatened.

At Geneva, the conference called for the purpose of bringing peace to Indo-China, spent another fruitless day. No new subjects were discussed.

In Paris, treaties were signed granting independence to Vietnam within the framework of the French Union. And in a few minutes [redacted] I'D like to review a new Franco-American development.

[redacted] In Athens today, Greece and Yugoslavia began drafting an agreement to bind them... with Turkey... in an alliance for mutual defense.

5

Archbishop Cushing of Boston said today that he believes "a lot of good" will come out of the Army-McCarthy controversy... because it is clarifying a great deal of misunderstanding. The archbishop said he does not think Senator McCarthy is dividing the country, or the Catholic Church.

The Federation of American Scientists today decried as "fantastic" the findings of the special security board against [redacted] atomic physicist Robert Oppenheimer. The board refused to reinstate Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance to atomic secrets, although it declared him a loyal citizen.

~~The Defense Department today asked Congress for authority to share more atomic information with our allies. (And the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Louis Strauss, told Congress he can not effectively run the atomic program unless he is given more authority than he now has.~~

~~A federal grand jury in New Haven, Connecticut, today indicted seven Communist Party leaders on charges of conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government.~~

And in St. Louis, ~~four Communists were sentenced to five years~~ in prison on the ~~same charge. A fifth defendant in the case got three years.~~

[redacted]

~~apparently of [redacted] advance [redacted] governor of the~~

Edward R. Murrow: June 4, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

A remarkable change has come over the outlook for staving off disaster, in Indochina. It is due to agreement between the United States and France on the main points of the crisis. My colleague David Schoenbrun cables me from Geneva an outline of the agreement, which he says is still in the form of minutes, concluding three weeks of negotiations. The United States has agreed to back up France with full air and naval support, asking Congress for this authority, should the Chinese intervene in Indochina, and has added two hundred million dollars to its contribution to a stepped-up French defense effort. The agreement will be seen to conform to the main conditions laid down by Secretary Dulles, for its main points are:

First, that American air and naval support would only be given to a truly free and independent Vietnam Republic, which would ask for it as a member of the French Union:

Second, any action must first be approved by the United States Congress, but the Administration pledges itself to make such a request, if and when needed, and that the President's whole weight and authority should be put behind it.

Third, France must first take the necessary steps to prove that everything possible is being done, before allied intervention is requested.

Fourth, as many Allied nations as possible, particularly Asian, must also be asked by Vietnam and France to meet the crisis. Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos already have indicated, they will join a Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, and Burma is beginning to give the proposal consideration.

Much now depends on the continuance of Communist intransigeance at Geneva. The agreement is not yet being implemented, but the peril in the Delta grows, and the Communist stalling is rapidly bringing about a situation requiring action.

Schoenbrun points out, that the French Government, despite its precarious position at home, where it faces a vote of no confidence next week, has taken bold steps to live up to its end of the agreement. It named General Paul Ely as new Commander-in-Chief in Indochina. He is the second highest officer, outranked only by Marshal Juin. As Chief of Staff of the French Army, and even more as Chairman of the Standing Group in NATO, he is one of the top Western commanders, and his appointment is a clear sign, that the French Government has decided to make a supreme effort.

This, coupled with the news that General Ely is being given both civilian and military responsibility, and that Bao Dai will return to Vietnam in about ten days, means a drastic change in the Vietnam situation.

It is one that top observers have clamored for for weeks, as the only way to save the situation.

Schoenbrun learns, that when the present French High Commissioner turns over his ambassadorial credentials to General Ely, he also will turn over to Emperor Bao Dai the Big Palace in Saigon. This palace, flying the French flag, has been a thorn in Vietnam's flesh.

"When I was in Saigon a few weeks ago", says Schoenbrun, "French Ambassador De Jean told me he was most anxious to turn the palace over, if only Bao Dai would return to take up office and run his country, instead of sunning himself in the Riviera, or on his brief returns home, hunting tigers with his favorite Indians. Monsieur De Jean has labored mightily for this transfer of sovereignty to the Vietnamese, and will be leaving the country with the best wishes of most of them for having successfully accomplished his mission - which he said, 'was to liquidate myself, so as to be a better friend and partner in the future.'

"So at last it has been done" comments Schoenbrun, "very late, but it must be hoped, not too late, to stop the rout on the battlefield and the disintegration of the regime. It may be too late to re-conquer what the Communists have won so far, but it should not be too late to obtain a cease-fire leaving the Vietnamese in a strong position."

Schoenbrun now anticipates a bolder policy from Vietnam. Yesterday, possibly knowing in advance about the agreement with the United States, the Vietnam Defense Minister, Dr. Huy Quar, announced in Saigon that any cease-fire would be a disaster, and that the war must be immediately internationalized. It is the first time any Vietnamese official has ventured to make such a statement. Presumably the Vietnamese will want the French and Americans to re-conquer all their country for them. This confronts the Western Powers with a choice between two courses. Should they stop the Communist advance, stabilize a front, allowing them to hold the major cities and ports, which will still take a great effort; or should they go the whole way to build up the ten divisions needed to destroy the Communist army, and run the risk of Chinese intervention, and the spread of the war.

Schoenbrun cables: "Our objective has been to stop communism from overwhelming Indochina and Southeast Asia. It has never been to crush Vietminh and extend territory under Bao Dai. This is a good time to be remembering this, and not to swing from defeatism to all-out warfare, with all the grave possibilities involved."

As my colleague, David Schoenbrun has pointed out, the basic problem in Indo China is how to stop the advance of Communism and at the same time try to avoid an all-out war. It would seem that Lawrence of Arabia summed the situation up well when he said:"There could be no honour in a sure success but much might be wrested from a sure defeat."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Roy Cohn agreed today to permit the Mundt Committee to hear monitored records of phone calls he had with Army Secretary Stevens. And Cohn says he expects McCarthy committee aide, Francis Carr, to agree to the same thing by Monday. Cohn's decision came after Democratic Senator Symington said he would demand the dismissal of both Cohn and Carr if they refused to agree to make public their monitored phone calls with the army. This came after several of Symington's monitored phone calls to Secretary Stevens were put into the record. Symington says they all occurred before there was any thought of the present hearing. He said they concerned General Zwicker, whom Stevens says was abused by McCarthy. The Symington-Stevens records show that Symington suggested the two work together that Stevens said McCarthy had "beat his brains out" because Stevens refused to let General Zwicker testify again that Symington told Stevens that Deputy Attorney General Rogers was "one fellow on our side - you can't go wrong with him."

After the monitored calls were put into the record, Chairman Mundt said they cast "a new light" on the whole controversy. McCarthy demanded that Symington resign from the committee and that Deputy Attorney General Rogers be subpoenaed. Symington called the McCarthy suggestions a diatribe - said he would not resign - that both Stevens and Rogers had asked him to help maintain army morale.

In another congressional hearing before the Joint atomic energy committee, Chairman Strwas of the atomic energy commission said the commission cannot effectively run atomic affairs unless his authority is increased. He asked the committee to name him "the principal" officer of the commission. At present all five members have equal powers. Two commissioners charged today that Straws has failed to consult them about some atomic policies. Both Thomas E. Murray and Henry D. Smyth testified they were not told in advance for example, that the President was going to announce that we did not need bigger hydrogen bombs. Straws denied this.

Secretary of State Dulles told Congress today that the military situation in Indo-China "is grave, but by no means hopeless." Dulles was appearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in support of the President's three-and-a-half billion dollars foreign aid program. He urged Congress to allow the President great flexibility in spending the money, so he could act "quickly and decisively" in meeting the threat of Communist aggression. The situation in Indo-China, Secretary Dulles said, is fraught with danger, not only to the immediate area but to the security of the United States and its allies. "The area is one which is vital to the peace and safety of the United States." He reported evidence that Soviet arms have been supplied to the Communist forces in Indo-China in increasing quantiti The Communist plan, Dulles said, is not only to take over Indo-China, but to dominat all of Southeast Asia.

Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, let it be known that his group would make a thorough review of the international situation before approving the foreign aid request. He pointed out that Congress voted last year to end all foreign aid spending as soon as possible.

In Indo-China today, Communist forces overran two outposts, southeast of Hanoi. And the vital supply road between Hanoi and Haiphong is threatened.

At Geneva, the conference called for the purpose of bringing peace to Indo-China spent another fruitless day. No new subjects were discussed.

In Paris, treaties were signed granting independence to Vietnam within the framework of the French Union. And in a few minutes I'd like to review a new France-American development.

In Athens today, Greece and Yugoslavia began drafting an agreement to bind them, with Turkey, in an alliance for mutual defense.

Archbishop Cushing of Boston said today that he believes "a lot of good" will come out of the Army-McCarthy controversey because it is clarifying a great deal of misunderstanding. The archbishop said he does not think Senator McCarthy is dividing the country or the Catholic Church.

The Federation of American Scientists today decried as "fantastic" the findings of the special security board against atomic physicist Robert Oppenheimer. The board refused to reinstate Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance to atomic secrets, although it declared him a loyal citizen.

A remarkable change has come over the outlook for staving off disaster, in Indochina. It is due to agreement between the United States and France on the main points of the crisis. My colleague David Schoenbrun cables me from Geneva an outline of the agreement, which he says is still in the form of minutes, concluding three weeks of negotiations. The United States has agreed to back up France with full air and naval support, asking Congress for this authority, should the Chinese intervene in Indochina, and has added two hundred million dollars to its contributio to a stepped-up French defense effort. The agreement will be seen to conform to the main conditions laid down by Secrdary Dulles, for its main points are:

First, that American air and naval support would only be given to a truly free and independent Vietnam Republic, which would ask for it as a member of the French Union:

Second, any action must first be approved by the United States Congress, but the Administration pledges itself to make such a request, if and when needed, and that the President's whole weight and authority should be put behind it.

Third, France must first take the necessary steps to prove that everything possible is being done, before allied intervention is requested.

Fourth, as many Allied nations as possible, particularly Asian, must also be asked by Vietnam and France to meet the crisis. Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos already have indicated, they will join a Southeast Asia Treaty Organization and Burma is beginning to give the proposal consideration.

Much now depends on the continuance of Communist intransigeance at Geneva. The agreement is not yet being implemented, but the peril in the Delta grows, and the Communist stalling is rapidly bringing about a situation requiring action. Schoenbrun points out that the French Government, despite its precarious position at home, where it faces a vote of no confidence next week, has taken bold steps to live up to its end of the agreement. It named General Paul Ely as new Commander-in-Chief in Indochina. He is the second highest officer, outranked only by Marshal Juin. As Chief of Staff of the French Army, and even more as Chairman of the Standi Group in NATO, he is one of the top Western commanders, and his appointment is a clear sign that the French Government has decided to make a supreme effort.

This, coupled with the news that General Ely is being given both civilian and military responsibility, and that Bao Dai will return to Vietnam in about ten days, means a drastic change in the Vietnam situation. It is one that top observers have clamored for for weeks, as the only way to save the situation. Schoenbrun learns, that when the president French High Commissioner turns over his ambassadorial credentials to General Ely, he also will turn over to Emperior Bao Dai the Big Palace in Saigon. This palace, flying the French flag, has been a thorn in Vietnam' flesh. "When I was in Saigon a few weeks ago," says Schoenbrun, "French Ambassador De Jean told me he was most anxious to turn the palace over, if only Bao Dai would return to take up office and run his country, instead of sunning himself in the Riviera, or on his brief returns home, hunting tigers with his favorite Indians. Monsieur De Jean has labored mightily for this transfer of sovereignty to the Vietnamese, and will be leaving the country with the best wishes of most of them for having successfully accomplished his mission - which he said 'was to liquidate myself, so as to be a better friend and partner in the future.'

"So at last it has been done" comments Schoenbrun, "very late, but it must be hoped, not too late, to stop the rout on the battlefield and the disintegration of the regime. It may be too late to re-conquer what the Communists have won so far, but it should not be too late to obtain a cease-fire leaving the Vietnamese in a strong position."

Schoenbrun now anticipates a bolder policy from Vietnam. Yesterday, possibly knowing in advance about the agreement with the United States, the Vietnam Defense Minister, Dr. Huy Quar, announced in Saigon that any cease-fire would be a disaster, and that the war must be immediately internationalized. It is the first time any Vietnamese official has ventured to make such a statement. Presumably the Vietnamese will want the French and Americans to re-conquer all their country for them. This confronts the Western Powers with a choice between two courses. Should they stop the Communist advance, stabilize a front, allowing them to hold the major cities and ports, which will still take a great effort; or should they go the whole way to build up the ten divisions needed to destroy the Communist army, and run the risk of Chinese intervention, and the spread of the war. Schoenbrun cables: "Our objective has been to stop Communism from overwhelming Indochina and Southeast Asia. It has neverbeen to crush Vietminh and extend territory under Bao Dai. This is a good time to be remembering this, and not to swing from defeatism to all-out warfare, with all the grave possibilities involved."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As my colleague, David Schoenbrun has pointed out, the basic problem in Indo China is how to stop the advance of Communism and at the same time try to avoid an all-out war. It would seem that Lawrence of Arabia summed the situation up well when he said: "There could be no honor in a sure success but much might be wrested from a sure defeat."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, June 7, 1954

This is the news:

Senator McCarthy today demanded that Democratic Senator Symington testify under oath before the Mundt committee hearing the Army-McCarthy case. Symington said he would if the full Senate thinks it's material. McCarthy said he thinks the matter should be taken to the Senate. Symington said he's willing-"let's see how it goes." All this occured after McCarthy summarized a telephone (CONVERSATION) between Symington and Army Secretary Stevens that was read into the (RECORD) on Friday. In this call, Symington made it (CLEAR) he wanted to talk with Lawyer Clark Clifford, former counsel to (former) President Truman..in relation to the General Zwicker case. Symington also warned Secretary Stevens that if he were going to play with Mc Carthy he must forget the Marquis of Queenesberry rules.

Today Mc Carthy said this conversation showed: that Symington wanted Clark Clifford to pull strings from behind the scenes..that Symington was conniving in an attempt to have the Republican party commit suicide..that Symington encouraged Stevens to cheat, lie and gouge. Mc Carthy called Symington "Sanctimonious Stu", asked him to step down from the Mundt committee, and asked that Clark Clifford be supbenead.

To this Symington replied: he would be happy to meet McCarthy on the Senate floor because..as he put it.."especially since I always tell the truth." He said McCarthy had refused to take the oath when another Senate committee was investigating him. Symington told Mc Carthy..sitting just a few feet away:"I'm not afraid of anything about you or anything you say about me." And he said Mc Carthy had done great damage to the nation by charging that the Eisenhower Administration had "added a year of treason" to the 20 years of treason Mc Carthy attributes to the Democrats.

Before this outburst more than a dozen monitored telephone calls were placed in evidence. They showed that: Secretary Stevens after discussing the case of David Schine with Defense Secretary Wilson decided that Schine must finish basic training. After that the Army would try to find a special job for his (TALENTS) Roy Cohn told Stevens it would "save embarrassmet all around" if Schine could be placed with the (CENTRAL) Intelligence Agency. Stevens tried but was told that the C.I.A. has a policy against accepting men about to be drafted.

The mointored phone calls reveal Mc Carthy warning Stevens that he would (LIVE) to regret it" if he didn't allow army officers to testify before the Mc Carthy committee. Mc Carthy also told Stevens he did not want, Private Schine transferred back to the Mc Carthy committee from the army. He said Cohn was unreasonable about Schine. Mc Carthy described Schine as a good boy, but not indispensable.

Three different phone calls noted that in regard to certain information about Schine Senator McCarthy, his staff aide Francis Carr and Army Counsel John Adams all said, in effect, "Don't tell Roy Cohn about it."

The President visited Washington College at (CHESTERTOWN), Maryland today. He received an honorary degree, and told his audience that no branch of the federal government should be allowed to become "a busybody".. interfering in the lives of the American people.

The Supreme Court today upheld the registration section of the Federal Lobbying act. But it did not rule on the penalty provision.

And the court decided by a five to three vote, that the federal government has the authority to regulate the price of all natural gas flowing into interstate commerce. The court held that the Federal Power Commission may fix the rates, for all natural gas produced and gathered by the Phillips-Petroleum Company.. and sold to pipeline companies for interstate consumption. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas calls the decision shocking.. says it has "turned upside down" the conditions under which 23-hundred producers have been operating for years.

The government reports that unemployment dropped by 160-thousand persons in May. And in the same month employment rose by 521-thousand.

In Indo-China, enemy troops appeared to be moving closer to the Red River Delta in preparation for an all-out assault. And French Commander Navarre, who has been ordered back to Paris, told reporters: reports of grave danger to the Delta are pure hysteria. He said the enemy could attack soon..but not on a massive scale. Navarre said a French campaign, during the past five months, to smash enemy forces in Central Annam, has failed. This was an effort, started in January, to seize a long strip of land on the Viet Nam coast.

And in South Korea, President Rhee said today: it is time to walk out of the Geneva conference and tell the Communists: get out of Korea and Indo-China or we shall fight with every weapon at our command.

Edward R. Murrow: June 7, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Washington is watching an interesting struggle over a revision of powers within the Atomic Energy Commission. It is proposed to give the Chairman greater authority than other members by assuring him sole administrative control. The bill amending the atomic law would name the chairman "the principal officer" of the commission. The commission would continue to make the policy, but the issue is one-man rule as against commission-rule in administering it.

Chairman Louis L. Straus and Joseph Campbell favor the change; Eugene Zuckert, Henry ~~DeWolf~~ Smyth and Thomas E. Murray oppose it. Such an issue naturally attracts attention, for the public usually is ~~unwilling~~ Reluctant to concentrate a great deal of power in one man. And it would be a great deal of power if the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission were made the "principal officer." When the commission finishes its present expansion program, it will have a gross capital investment and equipment of eight billion dollars. This is more than Dupont, General Motors and U.S. Steel put together. Running it single-handed would mean a lot of power, and that can be said without any reflections on the capabilities and character of Chairman Straus.

But more interesting - and surely more significant - is another issue raised by the Commission in its report to Congress. This has to do with the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. The Commission recommends that private industry take this over from the government. This is what the report says: "Obtaining full participation of the nation's electrical energy producers and equipment manufacturers in the development and production of nuclear power is, in our judgment, the best way of securing the maximum return on the public investment in this phase of our atomic energy program."

Previously in the report the commission had said, in effect, that we are a society of private enterprise and should remain so. Nuclear power, it said: "should be produced and distributed by the private and public power systems and not by the commission." And that, it argued, would let nuclear power "confirm and strengthen, rather than change, our way of life."

But what the Commission proposes may itself be a change in our way of life. It is not easy to find a name for the kind of society it would produce. Obviously it wouldn't be socialism, for though the people put up the money for atomic development and now own the process and the plant, the profits under socialism (if there are profits) would go directly or indirectly to the people.

But just because something isn't socialism it isn't automatically free or private enterprise. In free enterprise the capital is put up by private persons - at a risk - and that is what entitles them to the profits they make. Obviously it wouldn't be free or private enterprise to collect the equivalent of seventy-five dollars from every person in the United States for nuclear development, which is what the government has done. This is public money and the discovery and the industry now belong to the public. Of course, if private industry BUYS ITS WAY IN, and the public is reimbursed for its capital outlay, that could end up as private enterprise. But the A.E.C. doesn't suggest that this should happen. And nothing is being said about it so far in Congress. It just isn't explained how the public property is to become private property.

I should mention that giving public property to private persons, or selling it at nominal cost, is not necessarily reprehensible. It was worthily done by Abraham Lincoln in the Homestead Act, for example. But it is not the same to give away a whole range of new knowledge and a vast equipment that have cost the public an outlay of twelve billion dollars.

This is not said to object to atomic energy for peaceful purposes becoming a function of private enterprise. Most Americans will agree that this is a valid objective. But one is entitled to know just how this public property is to become private property. And we may need a new name for the kind of society we might become.

As I said, it isn't socialism, but it also isn't pure private enterprise. If one assumes that neither the Administration nor Congress wants to arrange simply a gigantic hand-out of the public property, what do they have in mind?

It is not a mixed economy, even though the proposal is that the government stop making nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and go on making it for defense. For it is not characteristic of a mixed economy to turn over publicly financed and operated functions to private persons.

Another name for the proposal may be subsidy. Letting private industry benefit from the nearly four billions it cost simply to develop nuclear energy and use part of the public's plant and equipment, would be one of the most sensational subsidies of all time. Must we learn to call our form of society in the atomic era "subsidized free enterprise"? One should hope not. It sounds like double-talk.

To quote again from the A.E.C. report, the aim is: "securing the maximum return on the public investment." But the maximum return to whom? Is it to the public which put up the capital? Or is it to private corporations? These questions are worth thinking about.

The question of who is to be respohsible for developing atomic energy for peaceful purposes will probably be ~~[illegible]~~ decided...~~as have other great [illegible]~~.by the people themselves. Mark Twain once remarked:"We make little account of that vague, formless, inert mass, that mighty underlying force which we call "the people." But the throne which the people supports stands; when that support is removed, nothing in this world can save it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator McCarthy today demanded that Democratic Senator Symington testify under oath before the Mundt committee hearing the Army-McCarthy case. Symington said he would if the full Senate thinks it's material. McCarthy said he thinks the matter should be taken to the Senate. Symington said he's willing - "let's see how it goes." All this occured after McCarthy summarized a telephone conversation between Symington and Army Secretary Stevens that was read into the record on Friday. In this call, Symington made it clear he wanted to talk with Lawyer Clark Clifford, former counsel to former President Truman in relation to the General Zwicker case. Symington also warned Secretary Stevens that if he were going to play with McCart y he must forget the Marquis of Queenesberry rules.

Today McCarthy said this conversation showed that Symington wanted Clark Clifford to pull strings from behind the scenes - that Symington was conniving in an attempt to have the Republican party commit suicide - that Symington encouraged Stevens to cheat, lie and gouge. McCarthy called Symington "Sanctimonious Stu" - asked him to step down from the Mundt committee and asked that Clark Clifford be subpoenaed.

To this Symington replied: he would be happy to meet McCarthy on the Senate floor because, as he put it, "especially since I always tell the truth." He said McCarthy had refused to take the oath when another Senate committee was investigating him. Symington told McCarthy, sitting just a few feet away: "I'm not afraid of anything about you or anything you say about me." And he said McCarthy had done great damage to the nation by charging that the Eisenhower Administration had "added a year of treason" to the 20 years of treason McCarthy attributes to the Democrats.

Before this outburst more than a dozen monitored telephone calls were placed in evidence. They showed that Secretary Stevens after discussing the case of David Schine with Defense Sec etary Wilson decided that Schine must finish basic training. After that the Army would try to find a special job for his talents. Roy Cohn told Stevens it would "save embarrassment all around" if Schine could be placed with the Central Intelligence Agency. Stevens tried but was told that the CIA has a policy against accepting men about to be drafted.

The monitored phone calls reveal McCarthy warning Stevens that he would "live to regret it" if he didn't allow army officers to testify before the McCarthy committee. McCarthy also told Stevens he did not want Private Schine transferred back to the McCarthy committee from the army. He said Cohn was unreasonable about Schine. McCarthy described Schine as a good boy but not indispensable. Three different phone calls noted that in regard to certain information about Schine, Senator McCarthy, his staff aide Francis Carr and Army Counsel John Adams all said, in effect, "Don't tell Roy Cohn about it."

The President visited Washington College at Chestertown, Maryland today. He received an honorary degree and told his audience that no branch of the federal government should be allowed to become "a busybody" - interfering in the lives of the American people.

The Supreme Court today upheld the registration section of the Federal Lobbying act. But it did not rule on the penalty provision.

And the court decided by a five to three vote, that the federal government has the authority to regulate the price of all natural gas flowing into interstate commerce. The court held that the Federal Power Commission may fix the rates for all natural gas produced and gathered by the Phillips-Petroleum Company and sold to pipeline companies for interstate consumption. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas calls the decision shocking - says it has "turned upside down" the condition under which 23-hundred producers have been operating for years.

The government reports that unemployment dropped by 160-thousand persons in May. And in the same month employment rose by 521-thousand.

In Indo-China, enemy troops appeared to be moving closer to the Red River Delta in preparation for an all-out assault. And French Commander Navarre, who has been ordered back to Paris, told reporters: reports of grave danger to the Delta are pure hysteria. He said the enemy could attack soon, but not on a massive scale. Navarre said a French campaign, during the past five months to smash enemy forces in Central Annam, has failed. This was an effort, started in January, to seize a long strip of land on the Viet Nam coast.

And in South Korea, President Rhee said today: it is time to walk out of the Geneva conference and tell the Communists "get out of Korea and Indo-China or we shall fight with every weapon at our command.

Washington is watching an interesting struggle over a revision of powers within the Atomic Energy Commission. It is proposed to give the Chairman greater authority than other members by assuring him sole administrative control. The bill amending the atomic law would name the chairman "the principal officer" of the commission. The commission would continue to make the policy, but the issue is one-man rule as against commission-rule in administering it. Chairman Louis L. Straws and Joseph Campbell favor the change; Eugene Zuckert, Henry Smyth and Thomas E. Murray oppose it. Such an issue naturally attracts attention, for the public usually is reluctant to concentrate a great deal of power in one man. And it would be a great deal of power if the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission were made the "principal officer." When the commission finishes its present expansion program, it will have a gross capital investment and equipment of eight billion dollars. This is more than DuPont, General Motors and U.S.Stell put together. Running it single-handed would mean a lot of power, and that can be said without any reflections on the capabilities and character of Chairman Straws. But more interesting - and surely more significant - is another issue raised by the Commission in its report to Congress. This has to do with the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. The Commission recommends that private industry take this over from the government. This is what the report says: "Obtaining full participation of the nation's electrical energy producers and equipment manufacturers in the development and production of nuclear power is, in our judgment, the best way of securing the maximum return on the public investment in this phase of our atomic energy program."

Previously in the report the commission had said, in effect, that we are a society of private enterprise and should remain so. Nuclear power, it said: "should be produced and distributed by the private and public power systems and not by the commission." And that, ir argued, would let nuclear power "confirm and strengthen, rather than change, our way of life." But what the Commission proposes may itself be achange in our way of life. It is not easy to find a name for the kind of society it would produce. Obviously it wouldn't be socialism, for though the people put up the money for atomic development and now own the process and the plant, the profits under socialism (if there are profits) would go directly or indirectly to the people. But just because something isn't socialism it isn't automatically free or private enterprise. In free enterprise the capital is put up b private persons - at a risk - and that is what entitled them to the profits they make. Obviously it wouldn't be free or private enterprise to collect the equivalent of seventy-five dollars from every person in the United States for nuclear development, which is what the government has done. This is public money and the discovery and the industry now belong to the public. Of course, if private industry BUYS ITS WAY IN, and the public is reimbursed for its capital outlay, that could end up as private enterprise. But the A.E.C. doesn't suggest this should happen. And nothing is being said about it so far in Congress. It just isn't explained how the public property is to become private property. I should mention that giving public property to private persons, or selling it at nominal cost, is not necessarily reprehensible. It was worthily done by Abraham Lincoln in the Homestead Act, for example. But it is not the same to give away a whole range of new knowledge and a vast equipment that have cost the public an outlay of twelve billion dollars. This is not said to object to atomic energy for peaceful purposes becoming a function of private enterprise. Most Americans will agree that this is a valid objective. But one is entitled to know just how this public property is to become private property. And we may need a new name for the kind of society we might become.

As I said, it isn't socialism, but it also isn't pure private enterprise. If one assumes that neither the Administration nor Congress wants to arrange simply a gigantic hand-out of the public property, what do they have in mind? It is not a mixed economy, even though the proposal is that the government stop making nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and go on making it for defense. For it is not characteristic of a mixed economy to turn over publicly financed and operated functions to private persons. Another name for the proposal may be subsidy. Letting private industry benefit from the nearly four billions it cost simply to develop nuclear energy and use part of the public's plant and equipment, would be one of the most sensational subsidies of all time. Must we learn to call our form of society in the atomic era "subsidized free enterprise"? One should hope not. It sounds like double-talk. To quote again from the A.E.C. report, the aim is: "securing the maximum return on the public investment." But the maximum return to whom? Is it to the public which put up the capital? Or is it to private corporations? These questions are worth thinking about.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The question of who is to be responsible for developing atomic energy for peaceful purposes will probably be decided by the people themselves. Mark Twain once remarked: "We make little account of that vague, formless, inert mass, that mighty underlying force which we call "the people." But the throne which the people supports stands; when that support is removed, nothing in this world can save it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, June 8, 1954

This is the news:

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov hinted today that the Communists want almost half of Indo-China to agree to peace there. Molotov told the Geneva conference the Communists now control three-quarters of Viet Nam... half of Laos and "less territory" in Cambodia. And he indicated they will seek permanent possession of areas [redacted] (OVER) -run by their geurrillas. Molotov also said agreement must be reached on political problems before the war can be ended. Just before the Russian minister made his speech.. which I'd like to review in a few minutes.. French Foreign Minister Bidault said "appreciable results" on Indo-China have been achieved at the conference. He said the participating nations must not give up their search for a final settlement.

On the battlefront, French planes burned two enemy gerrilla bases, seven miles east of Hanoi.

And in Paris, the National Assembly opening a debate on the conduct of the Indo-China war, heard former Premier Daladier say France has not the means to carry on the war..and that IT is "no longer of any real national interest." Daladier said the enemy has achieveved with the victory at Dien Bien Phu, more territory and more influence than they had achieved in the previous seven years. And Defense Minister Pleven told the Assembly France has almost reached the bottom of the barrel for manpower that can be used in Indo-China.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that the Geneva conference is near the show-down stage. He said the Communists are dragging their feet at Geneva..at the same time they are stepping-up the war in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles said:"The fact is a commentary upon the general attitude of the Communists and gives the lie to their greatly professed love for peace." Mr. Dulles also said the Administration has no present plans for asking Congress for authority to intervene in southeast Asia. And he said that during the past six months there have been more high level desertions from the Soviet Union than ever before in SOVIET history. He refused any further comment on this.

The chairman of the President's council of economic advisers...Arthur F. Burns..told reporters today: economic indicators suggest "an early upturn in business activity." And he said military spending, which is scheduled to decline in the next year, "will remain at very high levels."

The House Agriculture Committee today turned down the President's proposal for flexible farm price supports. The committee voted 21 to 8 to continue the present system of rigid high-level supports through 1955.

Army Counsel Welch told the Mundt committee members today that he doubts whether either side in the Army-McCarthy dispute will have a 100 per cent clear cut victory in the hearing. Welch told Senator McCarthy, in executive session, that the Senator has something of a genius for creating confusion... turmoil in the hearts and minds of the country. Senator McCarthy said that probably means he has a genius for bringing out facts which may disturb people. Again the Senator called (FOR) Senator Symington of Missouri to testify under oath. Symington agreed providing Mc Carthy first engages him in Senate debate and then agrees to testify about his personal finances..in connection with McCarthy's getting 10-thousand dollars for a housing pamphlet from the Lustron Company. This was considered by a Senate committee in 1952..but McCarthy did not then testify. Today the Committee Democrats demanded that Clark Clifford, former counsel to former President Truman be supbenead..as requested by Mc Carthy. But the four Republicans outvoted the three committee Democrats.

At West Point today, Army Secretary Stevens told the graduating class that he is pledged to protect the army's officers from "unwarranted abuse and attack." [redacted]

And the Senate Republican Policy committee wants a report from the Navy on why commissions are being withheld from three Naval Academy graduates..pending security checks. Senators Saltonstall and Ferguson want to know why the names of the men were released..and why the security checks were not completed before graduation.

Atomic Energy Commissioner Murray suggests that we stage a special demonstration of a 1954 model Hydrogen bomb and invite representatives of all nations..including Russia..to see what a destructive force it is.

And in Guatemala today, the Communist-supported government suspended all civil liberties..including the right to vote and freedom of the press..because of what it calls a plot to overthrow the government.

about 5:55

Today's plenary session of the Geneva Conference was the first public meeting in three weeks and it was summoned at the behest of Foreign Minister Molotov. He timed it to coincide with the opening of the debate on policy in Indochina in the French Assembly. Everyone at Geneva knew that was what Mr. Molotov had in mind. And it was well understood that what Mr. Molotov had to say in Geneva could save or destroy the government of Premier Laniel in Paris. It could save it if it made truce on acceptable terms appear to be within reach. It could destroy it if a truce was brought no nearer or if its terms were unacceptable.

¶ It was plain at Geneva today that Mr. Molotov had chosen not to save the Laniel regime. For what he did was to insist on something French Foreign Minister Bidault has already declared unacceptable. That is to hold political talks about Indochina now, concurrently with the military talks that have begun but so far have made no progress. That means delaying a truce until a political settlement is in sight. Moreover, Mr. Molotov made such a political settlement hard to believe in, for he insisted on Laos and Cambodia being lumped with Vietnam in a settlement, and denied that the governments of these two states controlled all their territory or enjoyed the confidence of the people. It has been the firm position of the United States, Britain and France that Laos and Cambodia should be kept intact, and the only partition they have envisaged has been of Vietnam. The Communists have done their utmost to get shadow regimes in both countries recognized as having some rights.

It needed some doing for Motolov to find a way to stab the French governemtn without the Communists appearing to be the ones who are delaying a truce. But Mr. Molotov managed it by accusing someone else of being responsibile. He blamed the United States. He said this country is trying to enlarge the war in Indochina and organizing the Asian states to enter the conflict. He did it by accusing the French of supporting these American aims. He did it too by assuming that talks about a truce, about regrouping of forces in Indochina after a cease fire, about elections in the three Indochinese states, all could be carried on successfully at the same time. He proposed that the political talks start in Geneva at once along with the military talks that began last week. And he proposed that political talks also be held in Indochina in conjunction with the military talks about to start there.

It remains to be seen how destructive Mr. Molotov has been. Paris will provide the answer to that question, though probably not before next week, when a confidence vote will be taken in the Assembly. It also remains to be seen how effective he has been in his job of public relations. Mr. Molotov came back from his hurried trip to Moscow less, rather than more, conciliatory. That made it necessary for him to try to create the illusion that it is not the Communists who are delaying agreement. It is clear that they are, and why they are. Mr. Dulles pointed today that they are playing for time, while the Vietminh sweep up more territory. The French admitted again today that the fighting in the Red River Delta is not going well, and that it may be even worse on the Central coast.

But If peace is to be made before the fighting ends, the Communists can be expected to ask pretty much the terms they would impose if they won. And that is implied in what Mr. Molotov demanded today. For not only did he throw Laos and Cambodia into the bag, he demanded the withdrawal of foreign troops as soon as a truce is made. By that Mr. Molotov meant French troops and only French troops. Offically there are no Chinese troops in Indochina so they can't be withdrawn, and by Soviet definition Vietminh troops are not foreign. So what he was proposing was turning over most of the Associated States to the Vietminh forces under the supervision of whatever control commission is established.

This proposal made the nature of this commission even more important than it has appeared heretofore. Molotov insisted today that it should have the same members as in Korea; Poland, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland and Sweden. In Korea the commission has been deadlocked on important issues. That is precisely what Mr. Molotov would want in Indochina.

Foreign Secretary Eden today proposed that the control commission be made up of the five Colombo states--those that attended the recent Asian conference in Colombo - India, Pakistan, Burma, Indonesia and Ceylon. He assured the conference it would NOT be deadlocked.

UnderSecretary Bedell Smith supported them. Monsieur Bidault, who spoke before Mr. Eden, rejected any commission which gave a veto power to any member.

Before today's meeting the Western countries thought that some progress had been made. Monsieur Bidault stressed this in his speech today, for its effect in Paris. It apparently had been agreed that the truce should come first, and once it is put into effect, it should be followed by a regroupment of forces, with no reinforcements or shipments of ammunitions [redacted] allowed. All this is now swept away, [redacted] Obviously Mr. Molotov meant to sweep it away.

It was the longest session of the conference so far, and probably has been its most dismaying one. Now talk of early adjournment can hardly be avoided.

- 6

What we are witnessing at Geneva is a struggle for power on an international scale. But whatever actions are taken there, the diplomats involved would do well to remember what James Truslow Adams once said:"No form of society can be reasonably stable in which the majority of the people are not fairly content. People can not be content if they feel the foundations of their lives are wholly unstable

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov hinted today that the Communists want almost half of Indo China to agree to peace there. Molotov told the Geneva conference the Communists now control three-quarters of Viet Nam - half of Laos and "less territory" in Cambodia. And he indicated they will seek permanent possession of areas overrun by their guerrillas. Molotov also said agreement must be reached on political problems before the war can be ended. Just before the Russian minister made his speech, which I'd like to review in a few minutes, French Foreign Minister Bidault said "appreciable results" on Indo-China have been achieved at the conferenc. He said the participating nations must not give up their search for a final settleme

On the battlefront, French planes burned two enemy guerrilla bases, seven miles east of Hanoi.

And in Paris, the National Assembly opening a debate on the conduct of the Indo-China war, heard former Premier Daladier say France has not the means to carry on the war and that it is "no longer of any real national interest." Daladier said the enemy has achieved with the victory at Dien Bien Phu, more territory and more influence than they had achieved in the previous seven years. And Defense Minister Pleven told the Assembly France has almost reached the bottom of the barrel for manpower that can be used in Indo-China.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that the Geneva conference is near the show-down stage. He said the Communists are dragging their feet at Geneva at the same time they are stepping up the war in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles said: "The fact is a commentary upon the general attitude of the Communists and gives the lie to their greatly professed love for peace." Mr. Dulles also said the Administration has no present plans for asking Congress for authority to intervene in southeast Asia. And he said that during the past six months there have been more high level desertions from the Soviet Union than ever before in Soviet history. He refused any further comment on this.

The chairman of the President's council of economic advisers, Arthur F. Burns, told reporters today: economic indicators suggest "an early upturn in business activity." And he said military spending, which is scheduled to decline in the next year, "will remain at very high levels."

The House Agriculture Committee today turned down the President's proposal for flexible farm price supports. The committee voted 21 to 8 to continue the present system of rigid high-level supports through 1955.

Army Counsel Welch told the Mundt committee members today that he doubts whether either side in the Army-McCarthy dispute will have a 100 percent clear cut victory in the hearing. Welch told Senator McCarthy, in executive session, that the Senator has something of a genius for creating confusion - turmoil in the hearts and minds of the country. Senator McCarthy said that probably means he has a genius for bringout out facts which may disturb people. Again the Senator called for Senator Symington of Missouri to testify under oath. Symington agreed providing McCarthy first engages him in Senate debate and then agrees to testify about his personal finances in connection with McCarthy's getting 10-thousand dollars for a housing pamphlet from the Lustron Company. This was considered by a Senate committee in 1952, but McCarthy did not then testify. Today the Committee Democrats demanded that Clark Clifford, former counsel to former President Truman be subpoenaed, as requested by McCarthy. But the four Republican outvoted the three committee Democrats.

At West Point today, Army Secretary Stevens told the graduating class that he is pledged to protect the army's officers from "unwarranted abuse and attack."

And the Senate Republican Policy committee wants a report from the Navy on why commissions are being withheld from three Naval Academy graduates pending security checks. Senators Saltonstall and Ferguson want to know why the names of the men were released and why the security checks were not completed before graduation.

Atomic Energy Commissioner Murray suggests that we stage a special demonstration of a 1954 model Hudrogen bomb and invite representatives of all nations, including Russia, to see what a destructive force it is.

And in Guatemala today, the Communist-supported government suspended all civil liberties, including the right to vote and freedom of the press, because of what it calls a plot to overthrow the government.

Today's plenary session of the Geneva Conference was the first public meeting in three weeks and it was summoned at the behest of Foreign Minister Molotov. He timed it to coincide with the opening of the debate on policy on Indochina in the French Assembly. Everyone at Geneva knew that was what Mr. Molotov had in mind. And it was well understood that what Mr. Molotov had to say in Geneva could save or destroy the government of Premier Laniel in Paris. It could save it if it made truce on acceptable terms appear to be within reach. It could destroy it if a truce was brought no nearer or if its terms were unacceptable. It was plain at Geneva today that Mr. Molotov had chosen not to save the Laniel regime. For what he did was to insist on something French Foreign Minister Bidault has already declared unacceptable. That is, to hold political talks about Indochina now, concurrently with the military talks that have begun but so far have made no progress. That means delaying a truce until a political settlement is in sight. Moreover, Mr. Molotov made such a political settlement hard to believe in, for he insisted on Laos and Cambodia being lumped with Vietnam in a settlement, and denied that the governments of these two states controlled all their territory or enjoyed the confidence of the people. It has been the firm position of the United States, Britain and France that Laos and Cambodia should be kept intact, and the only parititon they have envisaged has been of Vietnam. The Communists have done their utmost to get shadow regimes in both countries recognized as having some rights.

It needed some doing for Molotov to find a way to stab the French government without the Communists appearing to be the ones who are delaying a truce. But Mr. Molotov managed it by accusing someone else of being responsible. He blamed the United States. He said this country is trying to enlarge the war in Indochina and organizing the Asian states to enter the conflict. He did it too, by assuming that talksabout a truce, about regrouping of forces in Indochina after a cease fire, about elections in the three Indochinese states, all could be carried on successfully at the same time. He proposed that the political talks start in Geneva at once along with the military talks that began last week. And he proposed that political talks also be held in Indo-China in conjunction with the military talks about to start there.

It remains to be seen how destructive Mr. Molotov has been. Paris will provide the answer to that question, though probably not before next week, when a confidence vote will be taken in the Assembly. It also remains to be seen how effective he has been in his job of public relations. Mr. Molotov came back from his trip to Moscow less, rather than more, conciliatory. That made it necessary for him to try to create the illusion that it is not the Communists who are delaying agreement. It is clear that they are, and why they are. Mr. Dulles pointed today that they are playing for time while the Vietminh sweep up more territory. The French admitted again today that the fighting in the Red River Delta is not going well, and that it may be even worse on the Central coast. But if peace is to be made before the fighting ends, the Communists can be expected to ask pretty much the terms they would impose if they won. And that is implied in what Mr. Molotov demanded today. For not only did he throw Laos and Cambodia into the bag, he demanded the withdrawal of foreign troops as soon as a truce is made. By that Mr. Molotov meant French troops and only French troops. Officially there are no Chinese troops in Indochina so they can't be withdrawn, and by Soviet definition Vietminh troops are not foreign. So what he was proposing was turning over most of the Associated States to the Vietminh forces under the supervision of whatever control commission is established.

This proposal made the nature of this commission even more important than it has appeared heretofore. Molotov insisted today that it should have the same members as in Korea, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland and Sweden. In Korea the commission has been deadlocked on important issues and that is precisely what Mr. Molotov would want in Indochina. Foreign Secretary Eden today proposed that the contr l commission be made up of the five Colombo states, those that attended the recent Asian conference in Colombo, India, Pakistan Burma, Indonesia and Ceylon. He assured the conference it would not be deadlocked. Under-secretary Bedell Smith supported him. Monsieur Bidault, who spoke before Mr. Eden, rejected any commission which gave a veto power to any member.

Before today's meeting, the Western countries thought that some progress had been made. Monsieur Bidault stressed this in his speech today, for its effect in Paris. It apparently had been agreed that the truce should come first, and once it is put into effect, it should be followed by a regroupment of forces, with no reinforcements or shipments of ammunitions being allowed. All this is now swept away; obviously Mr. Molotov meant to sweep it away.

It was the longest session of the conference so far, and probably had been its most dismaying one. Now talk of early adjournment can hardly be avoided.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What we are witnessing at Geneva is a struggle for power on an international scale. But whatever actions are taken there, the diplomats involved would do well to remember what James Truslow Adams once said: "No form of society can be reasonably stable in which the majority of the people are not fairly content. People cannot be content if they feel the foundations of their lives are wholly unstable.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, June 9/954

This is the news:

Army Counsel Welch today abruptly ended his cross-examination of Roy Cohn after Senator Mc Carthy attacked a [redacted] (MEMBER OF WELCH'S LAW FIRM) in Boston for having what he called "a communist front record." The break came soon after Welch drew from Cohn an admission that he and Private Schine were on a double date in a New York hotel on a Sunday night in January. Previous testimony by army officers noted that it was on the same night that a plea from Cohn succeeded in having Private Schine released from K.P. duty at Fort Dix. Welch was obviously trying to show that he had certain hotel and night club payment records on dates when Schine had been given PASSES from Fort Dix to do committee business. It was at this point that Senator McCarthy "REMINDED" WELCH [redacted] of Frederick Fisher. Last April, before the present hearings started, McCarthy announced that Fisher had once been a member of the National Lawyers Guild. Today McCarthy described the Guild as "the legal arm of the Communist party." Welch interrupted to explain that this happened when Fisher was at Harvard..that he is now an official of the Young Republican League in his community. Then Welch said to the Senator: "Until this moment, I never fully gauged your cruelty and recklessness." Welch said: "Fisher will always bear a scar INFLICTED BY YOU." [redacted] Mc Carthy replied:"I know this hurts you." And Welch said:"I'll say it does." The army counsel pleaded with McCarthy: He said:"Let's not assassinate this lad further. You've done enough; have you no sense of decency?" The Senator described the National Lawyers Guild as being the "foremost legal bulwark of the Communist party." Then Welch said, slowly, "If there is a God in heaven, this thing will do neither you nor your cause any further good." There was loud applause in the hearing room. Mc Carthy said he had reason to believe Welch did not know about Fisher's record when "you recommended him to the committee." Chairman Mundt pointed out the committee had had no recommendations from Welch. And the Boston lawyer thereupon said..as if in protest to McCarthy's charge..that he would not ask Roy Cohn any more questions. Later, out in the corridor, Welch SAID OF THE FISHER [redacted] STORY: "I'M close to tears. Here's a young kid with one mistake, and McCarthy tries to curcify him. I never saw such cruelty..such arrogance." McCarthy told reporters: "Too many people can dish it out, but can't take it."

Earlier in the day Mc Carthy and SENATOR Symington renewed their feud. Symington read a letter, offering to testify under oath--as requested by Mc Carthy. But Symington insisted that in return McCarthy must agree to testify under oath about his financial affairs. [redacted] Symington said he wanted a committee..to be appointed by Vice President Nixon..to find out (among other things) whether McCarthy used funds he received to fight Communism for his own use..whether McCarthy used friends and relatives to hide his financial transactions for "ulterior motives"..whether McCarthy's activities on behalf of "certain special interest groups such as housing, sugar and China" were motivated by self-interest. Symington also wants to know whether McCarthy has violated tax and banking laws, and federal and state corrupt practise laws.

Mc Carthy told the committee these are all viscious smear charges and accused Symington of once having paid-off a known Communist "out of union funds." Symington said this is not true..it's an old story.. and has been rejected by the voters of Missuri.

After Roy Cohn was dismissed from the witness stand, the committee voted unanimously to ask a delay for Cohn who is due to report for duty with the New York National Guard on Monday. Army Counsel Wech had said the absence of Cohn would make it almost impossible to continue the hearings.

With Cohn off the stand, Senator McCarthy took the oath and under Committee Counsel Jenkin's direct examaintion outlined "his very deep interest in the Communist problem. McCarthy said: unless we combat Communism in this government, it is a waste of time, money and blood to try to combat them in the rest of the world." He said unless we make sure there is no Communist infiltration of the government "in the period of our lives we will see a red world." Mc Carthy also spoke of fellow-travellers.. said they are not under Moscow's discipline. Then he said:"We know in this room here we have fellow travellers who will write as the Communists advise that they write".. a reference to some of the reporters...none identified by name. The Senator will continue testifying tomorrow.

The White House announces that the President will make a radio and television address to the nation tomorrow night..in support of his legislative program. He'll speak to officials of the Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee.

At Geneva today both Communist China and the United States blamed each other for blocking the road to peace in Indo-China. And as French forces there attacked several enemy strongpoints in the Red River Delta, a spokesman said the enemy now has forces all around Hanoi..generally only 40 miles from the city.

In Paris, Foreign Minister Bidault told the National Assembly all chances for a truce have not yet been fully exhausted at the Geneva conference. He offered to step aside if the Assembly thinks another negotiator can do better than he has done.

And Belgium today accused a Soviet jet fighter of the attack on an unarmed Belgian transport plane in which one person was killed. Belgium has asked Moscow for "compensation" for this man and two who were wounded.

In Washington today Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio asked a House investigator of tax-exempt foundations to comment on three statements Hays read TO HIM. The investigator, Thomas M. McNeice said the statements were "closely comparable to Communist literature." Hays then told McNeice that he had read excerpts from encyclicals on labor by Pope Leo the 13th and Pope Pius the eleventh. Hays said McNeice had proved "the danger of lifting paragraphs from some writings to prove a point." McNeice made it clear he was not calling the Catholic church communistic.

In California's election the voters decisively gave James Roosevelt the Democratic nomination for congress in the state's 26th district.... and they renominated Representative Condon, a Democrat. National Chairman Mitchell had denied both men the national committee's support. And in Los Angeles county, Mrs. Mildred Younger Republican defeated veteran Republican State Senator Tenney.

Edward R. Murrow: June 9, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

In a police state, the stories being told are often more illuminating than what appears in the papers or on the radio. My colleague Alexander Kendrick has sent me a few Iron Curtain stories from Vienna. He says that in Poland, three pedestrians were beating up a Communist official. "Why don't you help?" he shouts to a Polish policeman idling nearby. "Oh three are enough" replies the policeman.

In East Germany, the so-called People's Police were being trained in parachute jumping, by a Russian instructor. He explained to the two young Germans the latest type Russian parachute. After bailing out he tells them, to count ten, and then pull the cord. If the 'chute doesn't open, count ten more, and pull the cord again. If they land too far from the field, a Russian car will pick them up, and drive them back to base. The two trainees are taken up - they bail out, the first one pulls the cord - nothing happens. He counts ten and pulls again - nothing happens. He looks over and sees that his pal is having the same trouble. The parachutes won't open. As they plunge toward the earth, one young German shouts to the other: "Ja, and if I know the Russians, the car won't be there either".

Here's another story from East Germany. Comrade Mueller was [redacted] being tried by the Communist Party. "Well Comrade" said the Chair, "your errors were very serious, but we have decided not to throw you out of the Party." "That's a stiff sentence" replied Mueller, "but I submit to Party discipline, and can only say that I deserve it."

Here's a story from Rumania. One day on the walls of the Communist Party headquarters in Bucharest, there appeared anti-Communist slogans. Party officials hastily had the walls scrubbed clean, and then wrote on them "Cowards, why do you deface the walls at night? Why don't you come around in the daylight?" Next morning the wall carried this appended message: "Impossible, we are busy all day working in the Party headquarters."

A Chinese Communist at the Geneva Conference saw a modern Western city for the first time in his life. He was staggered by the shop windows, the pedestrians in good clothing, the busy traffic, the general air of prosperity and orderliness. That evening he wrote to his wife in China: "There are no slogans or banners here; but they have everything that the slogans on our banners demand."

Here's a story from Czechoslovakia. A Czech Communist was giving a lecture on anti-Soviet propaganda. A pupil asked for an example. The Communist said: "Well, you've heard of the two Frenchmen who dived twelve thousand feet in the Atlantic. We have just received word from Moscow that two Soviet scientists dived fifteen thousand feet. Do you believe that?" "Why not?" said the student. "Was this in the Atlantic also?" "No, in the Black Sea", replied the Communist. "But" said the student, "the Black Sea is only about eight thousand feet deep." "That" said the Communist, "is an example of anti-Soviet propaganda."

A final story that is being told quietly in East Germany. A political writer on a newspaper is called before the Communist Control Officer. "You are telling a lot of lies, Comrade", says the Russian. The reporter is abashed, but nods his head and says: "You are right, Comrade, and I'm ready to take my punishment." "Punishment nothing", said the Russian with a broad smile, "from now on you are Editor in Chief."

Then there is the tale of the Hungarian artist who escaped to Switzerland. A friend who called on him found his studio dominated by two huge portraits, one of Malenkov and the other of Rakosczi, the Hungarian Communist leader. The visiting friend expressed shocked surprise. But the artist explained: "It's the best means I know of preventing homesickness."

It may seem strange that there can exist behind the Iron Curtain countries, an atmosphere conducive to any sort of humor at all. But John Weiss, many years ago, perhaps sized the situation up well, when he remarked:"Humor is gravity, concealed behind the jest." As for those on the other side of the Curtain, Will Rogers noted appropriately "Everything is funny, as long as it is happening to somebody else."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Army Counsel Welch today abruptly ended his cross-examination of Roy Cohn after Senator McCarthy attacked a member of Welch's law firm in Boston for having what he called "a Communist front record." The break came soon after Welch drew from Cohn an admission that he and Private Schine were on a double date in a New York hotel on a Sunday night in January. Previous testimony by army officers noted that it was on the same night that a plea from Cohn succeeded in having Private Schine released from K.P. duty at Fort Dix. Welch was obviously trying to show that he had certain hotel and night club payment records on dates when Schine had been given passes from Fort Dix to do committee business. It was at this point that Senator McCarthy "reminded" Welch of Frederick Fisher. Last April, before the present hearings started, McCarthy announced that Fisher had once been a member of the National Lawyers Guild. Today McCarthy described the Guild as "the legal arm of the Communist party." Welch interrupted to explain that this happened when Fisher was at Harvard - that he is now an official of the Young Republican League in his community. Then Welch said to the Senator: "Until this moment, I never fully gauged your cruelty and recklessness." Welch said: "Fisher will always bear a scar inflicted by you." McCarthy replied: "I know this hurts you." And Welch said: "I'll say it does." The army counsel pleaded with McCarthy: He said: "Let's not assassinate this lad further. You've done enough; have you no sense of decency?" The Senator described the National Lawyers Guild as being the "foremost legal bulwark of the Communist party." Then Welch said, slowly, "If there is a God in heaven, this thing will do neither you nor your cause any further good." There was loud applause in the hearing room. MCCarthy said he had reason to believe Welch did not know about Fisher's record when "you recommended him to the committee." Chairman Mundt pointed out the committee had had no recommendations from Welch. And the Boston lawyer thereupon said, as if in protest to McCarthy's charge, that he would not ask

Roy Cohn any more questions. Later, out in the corridor, Welch said of the Fisher story: "I'm close to tears. Here's a young kid with one mistake and McCarthy tries to crucify him. I never saw such cruelty - such arrogance." McCarthy told reporters "Too many people can dish it out, but can't take it."

Earlier in the day McCarthy and Senator Symington renewed their feud. Symington read a letter offering to testify under oath as requested by McCarthy. But Symington insisted that in return McCarthy must agree to testify under oath about his financial affairs. Symington said he wanted a committee to be appointed by Vice President Nixon to find out (among other things) whether McCarthy used funds he received to fight Communism for his own use - whether McCarthy used friends and relatives to hide his financial transactions for "ulterior motives" - whether McCarthy's activities on behalf of "certain special interest groups such as housing, sugar and China" were motivated by self-interest. Symington also wants to know whether McCarthy has violated tax and banking laws, and federal and state corrupt practice laws.

McCarthy told the committee these are all viscious smear charges and accused Symington of once having paid-off a known Communist "out of union funds." Symington said this is not ture - it's an old story and has been rejected by the voters of Missouri.

After Roy Cohn was dismissed from the witness stand, the committee voted unanimously to ask a delay for Cohn who is due to report for duty with the New York National Guard on Monday. Army Counsel Welch had said the absence of Cohn would make it almost impossible to continue the hearings.

With Cohn off the stand, Senator McCarthy took the oath and under Committee Counsel Jenkin's direct examination outlined his very deep interest in the Communist problem. McCarthy said: "Unless we combat Communism in this government, it is a waste of time, money and blood to try to combat them in the rest of the world." He said unless we make sure there is no Communist infiltration of the government "in the period of our lives we will see a red world." McCarthy also spoke of fellow travellers - said they are not under Moscow's discipline. Then he said: "We know in this room here we have fellow travellers who will write as the Communists advise that they write" - a reference to some of the reporters - none identified by name. The Senator will continue testifying tomorrow.

The White House announces that the President will make a radio and television address to the nation tomorrow night in support of his legislative program. He'll speak to officials of the Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee.

At Geneva today both Communist China and the United States blamed each other for blocking the road to peace in Indo-China. And as French forces there attacked several enemy strongpoints in the Red River Delta, a spokesman said the enemy now has forces all around Hanoi - generally only 40 miles from the city.

In Paris, Foreign Minister Bidault told the National Assembly all chances for a truce have not yet been fully exhausted at the Geneva conference. He offered to step aside if the Assembly thinks another negotiator can do better than he has don

And Belgium today accused a Soviet jet fighter of the attack of an unarmed Belgian transport plane in which one person was killed. Belgium has asked Moscow for "compensation" for this man and two who were wounded.

In Washington today Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio asked a House investigator of tax-exempt foundations to comment on three statements Hays read to him. The investigator, Thomas M. McNeice said the statements were "closely comparable to Communist literature." Hays then told McNeice that he had read excerpts from encyclicals on labor by Pope Leo the 13th and Pope Pius the eleventh. Hays said McNeice had proved "the danger of lifting paragraphs from some writings to prove a point." McNeice made it clear he was not calling the Catholic church communi

In California's election the voters decisively gave James Roosevelt the Democratic nomination for congress in the state's 26th district - and they renominate Representative Condon, a Democrat. National Chairman Mitchell had denied both men th national committee's support. And in Los Angeles county, Republican Mrs. Mildred Younger defeated veteran Republican State Senator Tenney.

In a plice state the stories being told are often more illuminating than what appears in the papers or on the radio. My colleague Alwxander Kendrick has sent me a few Iron Curtain stories from Vienna. He says that in Poland three pedestrians were beating up a Communist official. "Why don't you help?" he shouts to a Polish policeman idling nearby. "Oh three are enough" replies the policeman.

In East Germany the so-called People's Police were being rained in parachute jumping by a Russian instructor. He explained to the two young Germans the latest type Russian parachute. After bailing out he tells them to count ten and then pull the cord. If the 'chute doesn't open, count ten more and pull the cord again. If they land too far from the field, a Russian car will pick them up and drive them back to base. The two trainees are taken up - they bail out, the first one pulls the cord - nothing happens. He counts ten and pulls again - noghing happens. He looks over and sess that his pal is having the same trouble. The parachutes won't open. As they plunge toward the earth, one young German shouts to the other: "Ja, and if I know the Russians, the car won't be there either."

Here's another story from East Germany. Comrade Mueller was being tried by the Communist Party. "Well Comrade" said the Chair, "your errors were very serious, but we have decided not to throw you out of the Party." "That's a stiff sentence" replied Mueller, "but I submit to Party discipline, and can only say that I deserve it."

Here's a story from Rumania. One day on the walls of the Communist Party headquarters in Bucharest, there appeared anti-Communist slogans. Party officials hastily had the walls scrubbed clean, and then wrote on them "Cowards, why do you deface the walls at night? Why don't you come around in the daylight?" Next morning the wall carried this appended message: "Impossible, we are busy all day working in the Party headquarters."

A Chinese Communist at the Geneva Conference saw a modern Western city for the first time in his life. He was staggered by the shop windows, the pedestrians in good clothing, the busy traffic, the general air of prosperity and orderliness.

That evening he wrote to his wife in China: "There are no slogans or banners here; but they have everything that the slogans on our banners demand."

Here's a story from Czechoslovakia. A Czech Communist was giving a lecture on anti-Soviet propaganda. A pupil asked for an example. The Communist said: "Well, you've heard of the two Frenchmen who dived twelve thousand feet in the Atlantic. We have just received word from Moscow that two Soviet scientists dived fifteen thousand feet. Do you believe that?" "Why not?" said the student, "was this in the Atlantic also?" "No, in the Black Sea", replied the Communist. "But" said the student, "the Black Sea is only about eight thousand feet deep." "That" said the Communist, "is an example of anti-Soviet propaganda."

A final story that is being told quietly in East Germany. A political writer on a newspaper is called before the Communist Control Officer. "You are telling a lot of lies, Comrad", says the Russian. The reporter is abashed but nods his head and says: "You are right, Comrade, and I'm ready to take my punishment." "Punishment nothing," said the Russian with a broad smile, "from now on you are Editor in Chief."

Then there is the tale of the Hungarian artist who escaped to Switzerland. A friend who called on him found his studio dominated by two huge protraits, one of Malenkov and the other of Rakosczi, the Hungarian Communist leader. The visiting friend expressed shocked surprise. But the artist explained: "It's the best means I know of preventing homesickness."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It may seem strange that there can exist behind the Iron Curtain countries an atmosphere conducive to any sort of humor at all. But John Weiss, many years ago, perhaps sized the situation up well when he remarked: "Humor is gravity concealed behind the jest." As for those on the other side of the Curtain, Will Rogers noted appropriately "Everything is funny as long as it is happening to somebody else.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday, June 10, 1954.

This is the news:

The President said today: we are in a truly serious international situation. It is inescapable. In a philosophic mood, the President told a White House news conference: the dangers facing us are greater than those we have faced at about any other time in our history. They could last 40 years. And Mr. Eisenhower said, more than anything else, he fears the inclination on the part of the public, to look at the international danger, on a point-by-point basis; rather than looking at the world-wide efforts by Communists to subvert all free nations. The President says he's puzzled by the appeal of Communism to persons outside of the iron curtain; and he's puzzled, that some of our own best educated men had fallen victims to communism. The President says we cannot fight Communism ~~my~~ 84 military strength alone. The free people of the world must remain strong in heart.. and we must fight with intellectual, economic and spiritual weapons, as well as military weapons.

The President told reporters..in reference to Indo-China... that at the moment he has no plans to ask Congress for power to take some new action. He still does not believe we should start a war. As a military man he believes that the French forces are now in better defensive positions than they were before the fall of Dien Bien Phu. And he has no doubt but that they could be helped by outside military aid.

The enemy in Indo-China moved a bit closer to Hanoi today... forcing the French to abandon one post..and overwhelming another.

The Army says we are sending 12 more officers to join the 180 [redacted] men and officers we now have in Indo-China in the military assistance advisory group.

And in Seattle today, Secretary of State Dulles, in effect, rejected British and French arguments that the United Nations should take no action on Indo-China while [redacted] peace negotiations are underway in Geneva. Mr. Dulles appealed for speedy action by the U.N's Security Council to send a peace observation commission to Southeast Asia. He said:"Knowledge has never yet been an impediment to honest negotiation." The Secretary also said that at present there is perhaps "too much difference of opinion between the memebers of the non-Communist world." [redacted] And Again Mr. Dulles warned that the time for European unity "is fast running out.." that France and Italy have not yet ratified the European Defense plan. He said if Western Europe remains divided "there may have to be a basic shift in American policy."

And at Geneva, British Foreign Secretary Eden, who has been the champion of compromise, said today that failure of the conference lies just around the corner, unless "wide and deep differences" between East and West can be adjusted. If they cannot be, Eden proposed that the conference admit to the world that "we have failed."

At the Army-McCarthy hearing in Washington, Senator McCarthy testified, that while he believes Army Secretary Stevens to be a fundamentally truthful and honest man.. a good, loyal American.. he also believes that Stevens was "mouse-trapped", into making charges against the Senator and his staff. Mc Carthy said Stevens didn't understand the Communist conspiracy, or what he called "the very rough politics being played down here in Washington." Mc Carthy said Stevens acted at the urging of Democratic Senator Symington, Clark Clifford (a former advisor to former President Truman)... and certain White House and Justice Department officials.

In the past Mc Carthy had accused [redacted] ASSISTANT Defense Secretay H. Struve Hensel of "masterminding" the army's case. The United Press tonight reports that in a secret committee session on May 17, McCarthy said he made this "assumption" after he "added two and two together." McCarthy is quoted as saying: he read that Hensel drafted the charges..and he found out his committee had been investigating Hensel in a minor way. Then the Senator said: "I add two and two and I assume that is the motive."

At today's hearing Senator McCarthy supported in some detail the testimony given by his counsel Roy Cohn. And he [redacted] said not "one iota of improper influence" was used of behalf of Private David Schine.

And after an executive session in the late afternoon, Democratic Senator McClellan said the Republicans on the committee had outvoted the Democrats..4 to 3.. and decided to end the hearing when the testimony of McCarthy Cohn and Francis Carr is completed.

At his news conference today the President told reporters he has merely postponed..not abandoned.. his call for a three-year extension and revision of the reciprocal trade act. (The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a one-year extension.) Mr. Eisenhower also said he supports all Republican political candidates as a basic principle..because he believes the President's party should have control of Congress if its to be responsible. The President asked the reporters not to ask him questions on specific candidates because that might be embarrassing. No such questions were asked. Mr. Eisenhower also said he believes we should give our allies more information on atomic energy. And he would continue work on his plan to pool atomic energy for peaceful purposes even if the Russians refuse to go along. Mr. Eisenhower is making a radio and television address tonight on his legislative program.

Four of the five atomic energy commissioners today endorsed legislation aimed at ending their argument over who is to be the commission's boss. Chairman Straws says all the members except Thomas E. Murray agree on the proposed language of the law. It would give all commissioners equal authority with the chairman empowered to carry out policies and serve as official spokesman.

Edward R. Murrow: June 10, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The young lawyer named by Senator McCarthy in yesterday's hearing, Frederick G. Fisher, junior, said today in part: "It is obvious that I have been dragged before the national scene, not because of anything that I am, or anything that I have done; but because Senator McCarthy thought that this would be a clever way of embarrassing the Army." Mr. Fisher said: "I served my country in the last war, and am ready to serve it again. I detest Communism, I always have, I always will." Fisher said he joined the National Lawyers' Guild in 1947, his second year in the Harvard Law School. At that time many honorable and outstanding lawyers were also members of the Guild. Fisher said in February 1950, like other lawyers at the time, he resigned because he disagreed with the activities of the Guild.

Fisher said: "Just what, if anything, I am being accused of I am unable to understand. Without any prior notice, or chance to explain or defend myself, I find an attempt made to brand me as subversive and unpatriotic, simply because as a law student I, like many others, joined a legal organization whose purposes I believed to be entirely proper."

Yesterday, after Senator McCarthy had named Mr. Fisher as a member of an organization which he termed "the legal arm of the Communist Party", Army Counsel Welch, of whose law firm Fisher is a member, became highly emotional. He said: "Until this moment, Senator, I think I never really gauged your cruelty or your recklessness." He begged that "this lad be not assassinated further." He asked if the Senator "had no sense of decency." Mr. Welch, a veteran of the courtroom, was near to tears because a young man whom he liked, knew, trusted and worked with had been attacked. It is safe to assume, I think, that had Mr. Welch never heard of Mr. Fisher, his emotions, his anger would have been considerably less.

It seems to this reporter that there is a widespread tendency on the part of all human beings to believe that because a thing happens to a stranger, or to someone far away, it doesn't happen at all. Someone once said something to the effect: "Do you consider it strange that I regard a cut upon my finger as more important than the death of thousands, if I be separated from those thousands by oceans and continents?" For most of us reality attaches only to those things that strike near home, and that is as true of a bomb as of an accusation. The human conscience becomes callous. The muscles of moral indignation become flabby when those who are being damaged, either in their bodies or their reputations are remote and unknown. Despite modern communications it is difficult to communicate over any considerable distance, unless there be some common denominator of experience. You cannot describe adequately the destruction of a city, or a reputation, to those who have never witnessed either. You cannot describe adequately aerial combat to a man who has never had his feet off the ground. We can read with considerable equanimity of the death of thousands by war, flood or famine in a far land, and that intelligence jars us rather less than a messy automobile accident on the corner before our house. Distance cushions the shock.

This is the way humans behave and react. Their emotions are not involved; their anger or their fear not aroused, until they approach near to danger, doubt, deceit or dishonesty. If these manifestations do not affect us personally, we seem to feel that they do not exist. Perhaps this is selfishness, perhaps it is lack of imagination - I don't know. I do remember discussing this aspect of human behavior with many friends in London during the V-1 period, when those lethal machines, sounding like a slow-speed washing machine, would cut out directly overhead and nose down to explode several blocks away. The individual reaction was one of relief, and very little consciousness of or compassion for the individuals who were destroyed only a few blocks away, unless they happened to be personal friends. It must be presumed, I think, that Counsel Welch is familiar, very familiar with Senator McCarthy's record and tactics. He had, up to yesterday, maintained an almost affable, avuncular relationship with the Senator. He was pressing Mr. Cohn, but by Mr. Cohn's admission doing him no personal injury, when Senator McCarthy delivered his attack upon Mr. Fisher, at which point Counsel Welch reacted like a human being.

Most of us seek for security of some kind, and in the process ~~XXXX~~ attempt to insulate ourselves from unpleasantness. General Douglas MacArthur once spoke of security in these terms: "The problem involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character that will synchronize with our almost matchless advance in science, art, literature and all material developments of the past two thousand years. It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said today: we are in a truly serious international situation. It is inescapable. In a philosophic mood, the President told a White House news conference: the dangers facing us are greater than those we have faced at about any other time in our history. They could last 40 years. And Mr. Eisenhower said more than anything else he fears the inclination on the part of the public to look at the international danger on apoint-by-point basis; rather than looking at the world-wide efforts by Communists to subvert all free nations. The President says he's puzzled by the appeal of Communism to persons outside of the iron curtain; and he's puzzled that some of our own best educated men had fallen victims to communism. The President says we cannot fight Communism by military strength alone. The free people of the world must remain strong in heart and we must fight with intellectual, economic and spiritual weapons as well as military weapons.

The President told reporters, in reference to Indo-China, that at the moment he has no plans to ask Congress for power to take some new action. He still does not believe we should start a war. As a military man he believes that the French forces are now in better defensive positions than they were before the fall of Dien Bien Phu. And he has no doubt but that they could be helped by outside military aid.

The enemy in Indo-China moved a bit closer to Hanoi today forcing the French to abandon one post and overwhelming another.

The Army says we are sending 12 more officers to join the 180 men and officers we now have in Indo-China in the military assistance advisory group.

And in Seattle today, Secretary of State Dulles, in effect, rejected British and French arguments that the United Nations should take no action on Indo-China while peace negotiations are underway in Geneva. Mr. Dulles appealed for speedy action by the U.N.'s Security Council to send a peace observation commission to Southeast Asia. He said: "Knowledge has never yet been an impediment to honest negotiation." The Secretary also said that at present there is perhaps "too much difference of opinion between the members of the non-Communist world." And again Mr. Dulles warned that the time for European unity "is fast running out;" that France and Italy have not yet ratified the European Defense plan. He said if Western Europe remains divided "there may have to be a basic shift in American policy.

And at Geneva, British Foreign Secretary Eden, who has been the champion of compromise, said today that failure of the conference lies justaround the corner unless "wide and deep differences" between East and West can be adjusted. If they cannot be, Eden proposed that the conference admit to the world that "we have failed."

At the Army-McCarthy hearing in Washington, Senator McCarthy testified that while he believes Army Secretary Stevens to be a fundamentally truthful and honest man - a good, loyal American. He also believes that Stevens was "mouse-trapped" into making charges against the Senator and his staff. McCarthy said Stevens didn't understand the Communist conspiracy or what he called "the very rough politics being played down here in Washington." McCarthy said Stevens acted at the urging of Democratic Senator Symington, Clark Clifford (a former advisor to former President Truman) and certain White House and Justice Department officials.

In the past McCarthy had accused assistant Defense Secretary H. Struve Hensel of "masterminding" the army's case. The United Press tonight reports that in a secret committee session on May 17, McCarthy said he made this "assumption" after he "added two and two together." McCarthy is quoted as saying: he read that Hensel drafted the charges and he found out his committee had been investigating Hensel in a minor way. Then the Senator said: "I add two and two and I assume that is the motive."

At today's hearing Senator McCarthy supported in some detail the testimony given by his counsel Roy Cohn. And he said not "one iota of improper influence" was used on behalf of Private David Schine.

And after an executive session in the late afternoon, Democratic Senator McClellan said the Republicans on the committee had outvoted the Democrats 4 to 3 and decided to end the hearing when the testimony of McCarthy, Cohn and Francis Carr is completed.

At his news conference today the President told reporters he has merely postponed - not abandoned - his call for a three-year extension and revision of the reciprocal trade act. (The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a one-year extension.) Mr. Eisenhower also said he supports all Republican political candidates as a basic principle - because he believes the President's party should have control of Congress if its to be responsible. The President asked the reporters not to ask him questions on specific candidates because that might be embarrassing. No such questions were asked. Mr. Eisenhower also said he believes we should give our allies more information on atomic energy. And he would continue work on his plan to pool atomic energy for peaceful purposes even if the Russians refuse to go along. Mr. Eisenhower is making a radio and television address tonight on his legislative program.

Four of the five atomic energy commissioners today endorsed legislation aimed at ending their argument over who is to be the commission's boss. Chairman Straws says all the members except Thomas E. Murray agree on the proposed language of the law. It would give all commissioners equal authority with the chairman empowered to carry out policies and serve as official spokesman.

The young lawyer named by Senator McCarthy in yesterday's hearing, Frederick G. Fisher, junior, said today in part: "It is obvious that I have been dragged before the national scene, not because of anything that I am, or anything that I have done; but because Senator McCarthy thought that this would be a clever way of embarrassing the Army." Mr. Fisher said: "I served my country in the last war, and am ready to serve it again. I detest Communism, I always have, I always will." Fisher said he joined the National Lawyers' Guild in 1947, his second year in the Harvard Law School. At that time many honorable and outstanding lawyers were also members of the Guild. Fisher said in February 1950, like other lawyers at the time, he resigned because he disagreed with the activities of the Guild.

Fisher said: "Just what, if anything, I am being accused of I am unable to understand. Without any prior notice, or chance to explain or defend myself, I find an attempt made to brand me as subversive and unpatriotic, simply because as a law student, I, like many others, joined a legal organization whose purposes I believed to be entirely proper."

Yesterday, after Senator McCarthy had named Mr. Fisher as a member of an organization which he termed "the legal arm of the Communist Party," Army Counsel Welch, of whose law firm Fisher is a member, became highly emotional. He said, "Until this moment, Senator, I think I never really gauged your cruelty or your recklessness." He begged that "this lad be not assassinated further." He asked if the Senator "had no sense of decency." Mr. Welch, a veteran of the courtroom, was near to tears because a young man whom he liked, knew, trusted and worked with had been attacked. It is safe to assume, I think, that had Mr. Welch never heard of Mr. Fisher, his emotion, his anger would have been considerably less. It seems to this reporter t at there is a widespread tendency on the part of all human beings to believe that because a thing happens to a stranger, or to someone far away, it doesn't happen at all. Someone once said something to the effect: "Do you consider it strange that I regard a cut upon my finger as more important than the death of thousands, if I be separated from those thousands by oceans and continent For most of us reality attaches only to those things that strike near home, and that is as true of a bomb as of an accusation. The human conscience becomes calloused. The muscles of moral indignation become flabby when those who are being damaged, either in their bodies or their reputations are remote and unknown. Despite modern communications it is difficult to communicate over any considerable distance, unless there be some common denominator of experience. You cannot describe adequately the destruction of a city, or a repuration, to those who have never witnessed either. You cannot describe adequately aerial combat to a man who has never had his feet off the ground. We can read with considerable equanimity of the deal of thousands by war, flood or famine in a far land, and that intelligence jars us rather less than a messy automobile accident on the corner before our house. Distance cushions the shock. This is the way humans behave and react. Their emotions are not involved their anger or their fear not aroused, until they approach near to danger, doubt, deceit or dishonesty. If these manifestations do not affect us personally, we seem to feel that they do not exist. Perhaps this is selfishness, perhaps it is lack of imagination - I don't know. I do remember discussing this aspect of human behavior with many friends in London during the V-1 period, when those lethal machines, sounding like a slow-speed washing machine, would cut out directly overhead and nose down to explode several blocks away. The individual reaction was one of relief, and very little consciousness of or compassion for the individuals who were destroyed only a few blocks away, unless they happened to be personal friends. Itmust be presumed, I think, that Counsel Welch is familiar, very familiar with Senator McCarthy's record and tactics. He had, up to yesterday, maintained an almost affable, avuncular relationship with the Senator. He was pressing Mr. Cohn, but by Mr. Cohn's admission doing him no personal injury, when Senator McCarthy delivered his attack upon Mr. Fisher, at which point Counsel Welch reacted like a human being.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Most of us seek for security of some kind, and in the process attempt to insulate ourselves from unpleasantness. General Douglas MacArthur once spoke of security in these terms: "The problem involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character that will synchronize with our almost matchless advance in science, art, literature and all material developments of the past two thousand years. It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, June 11, 1954

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that open aggression by Communist China in the Pacific or in southeast Asia "would be a deliberate threat to the United States itself." The Secretary said in Los Angeles that in such an event...regardless of any other country.. "the right of self-preservation would demand that we meet the issue squarely." Again he said we would intervene in the present war in Indo-China only if several conditions were met; among them a guarantee from the French that they would not withdraw until the fight was won.

In Indo-China today French planes attacked enemy guerrilla bases in the Red River Delta.

And in Geneva, British Foreign Secretary Eden told the Communists the Korean peace talks should be called off immediately unless the enemy is willing to compromise. He asked for "some sign that agreement is possible." Chou en Lai, the Chinese Communist premier, dared the West to break off the talks.

~~In Paris, where Premier Laniel's government faces defeat in a confidence vote tomorrow, the Strong Popular Republican Party warned the~~ ~~National Assembly that if Laniel falls it will demand dissolution of the Assembly. The Popular Republicans, third largest parliamentary group in France, also said they would join no new cabinet unless it favored the European defense policy.~~

In Washington today, Presidential Assistant SHERMAN Adams ~~was~~ said that Mr. Eisenhower may not run for another term if the Republicans lose control of Congress in the November elections. As he put it: "The loss of Congress might make a certain farm in Pennsylvania an attractive place to retire to." (The President owns a farm at Gettysburgh.)

At the army-McCarthy hearings, Counsel Jenkins told Senator McCarthy there is a "direct contradiction" in two statements he has made on what John Adams, the army counsel, told him about the possibility of General Lawton being fired from Fort Monmouth. McCarthy said there was no contradiction. Mc Carthy acknowledged that Private Schine could have finished his committee work before he was drafted..but McCarthy said he asked him to interview witnesses and this delayed his normal work. McCarthy said he hired Schine for two reasons: because he was willing tow work for nothing..and because he knew more about the State Department's information program than any other young man McCarthy knew. As partial proof of this Mc Carthy offered a paper prepared by Schine for the State Department. He described it as a long-range plan for psychological warfare against the Communists.

Democratic Senator Jackson called this "an amazing document".. he read to the committee a propoal for a "deminform".. a world association of democratic parties. Jackson said the plan also called for pin-ups, as part of a free world information program. Mc Carthy said he couldn't subscribe to the whole plan, but thought it showed a great deal of thought. Roy Cohn wanted to make a statement, but Chairman Mundt adjourned the meeting saying the Schine proposal was "not ludicrous."

As soon as the hearing was over-- [redacted] Roy Cohn walked over to Robert F. Kennedy, the counsel for the Democratic committee members, and told him...Kennedy says...to "Tell Jackson we are going to get him on Monday." Kennedy later told reporters Cohn accused him of having a personal hatred. Cohn said he did accuse Kennedy of this, and asked Kennedy if he thought THAT WITH [redacted] this hatred he was qualified to advise the Democrats. Kennedy said he then told Cohn "he had a nerve threatening" him. He said Cohn had threatened another Democratic Senator. Reporters heard Kennedy say: "You can't get away with it Cohn. Don't you make any warnings to Democratic senators." Cohn said: "I'll make any warnings to you I want to, anywhere, anytime." When the near-fight was broken up, reporters asked the 27-year-old Cohn what it was all about. He said of the 28-year-old Kennedy, brother of Senator Kennedy, "Oh, we got a cute kid here." During the hearing Cohn, under oath, has denied charges that he once threatened "to get" Army Sect. Stevens.

The other excitement of the day came EARLIER when Republican Senator Flanders walked into the committee room, [redacted] approached McCarthy and handed him an invitation to hear an attack on him that Flanders proposed for later in the day. And later, on the Senate floor, Flanders called for Mc Carthy to be fired from all his committee chairmanships unless he purges himself of contempt by answering charges by a Senate committee in 1952... The charges concerned McCarthy's financial affairs. McCarthy, when informed of the speech said of Flanders: "I think they should get a man with a net and take him to a good quiet place."

Navy Secretary Thomas announced today that security clearance has been given to three Annapolis midshipmen who were graduated last week but failed to receive commissions..until the SECURITY checks were completed. Thomas said he was sorry the men could not be cleared before graduation.

Housing Administrator Cole says 200 corporations made nearly 40 million dollars in "windfall" profits on 70 apartment projects. He says the names are being sent to the Justice Department.

And here in New York reporters have been told by authoritative sources that Robert R. Young has won control of the New York Central [redacted] railroad by more than one million votes.

Edward R. Murrow: June 11, 1954. 7.45 p.m

It seems to this Reporter that -

The setting in world affairs is ominous. The Geneva Conference is at the point of admitted failure. The military position in Indochina is deplorable. France faces a paralyzing parliamentary crisis. The European Defense Community appears to be lost. Western unity is loose at the seams. This set of conditions is being generally recognized as the most unfavorable since the war. At this time, the two men most responsible for American foreign policy in the United States have made statements, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles. Naturally the first interest has been to learn if they announced some line of action measuring up to the sense of menace. They did not. If they had, that would have made news of transcendent importance. We are without that news, and the world's capitals are not feverishly discussing what America proposes to do.

But the fact that America is not proposing to do something new also is news, even if it is negative news. It may add to the prevailing discouragement, but it should not count as altogether discouraging. President Eisenhower, speaking at some length about the world crisis yesterday, mentioned the possibility that the present state of danger might last forty years. That ~~is~~ May be regarded as - a dismaying outlook. On the other hand it shows that Mr. Eisenhower does not foresee an early showdown in the East-West conflict. He does not endorse the idea of a preventive war which some individuals advocate. He does not adopt the alternative policy of carrying the war to China, which is popular in certain quarters. Likewise, he does not believe that the Kremlin wants a show-down soon, or is preparing to force it. What the President conveyed was his honest conviction that though the situation is grave, a catastrophe is not in sight. Indeed it is far, far out of sight. Forty years is a long way off.

Many persons abroad have the impression that the United States is close to intervention in Indochina. For their benefit, Mr. Eisenhower said that he had no intention of asking Congress for such action, and he repeated that he would not take such action without the authorization of Congress. I repeat that this is negative news. But it seems to be clear that Mr. Eisenhower meant it to be encouraging, rather than otherwise.

Mr. Dulles has spoken THREE TIMES in the last two days, and he has been even more negative than the President. For the French, at least, he was the opposite of encouraging. For he repeated in Los Angeles today a statement that will weaken Laniel in his dying struggle to remain Premier. He said that the United States will act alone to meet the Communist threat in Southeast Asia only if the Chinese Communists launch overt military agression, which would be a deliberate threat to the United States.

This is not news to the French; they know it as one of the carefully-phrased conditions that have to be met, before we or our Allies enter the Indochina war. They know this is one of them: we will not act alone unless there is overt military aggression by the Chinese. This assurance by Mr. Dulles may have been tailored to the special fears of the Western States, though Vice President Nixon and Senator Knowland evidently don't think that way about California. But it couldn't be given in Los Angeles without shaking Paris like an earthquake. It is telling the Chinese Communists that if they don't formally come into the war, the United States will not react if Hanoi falls. Why should the Communists intervene if Hanoi is going to fall without it, which apparently it will? Saying this is anything but helpful. It is giving Laniel a shove at a moment when he is toppling already. Laniel's chance for survival depends on his getting either an honorable peace at Geneva, or effective military aid in Indochina. It now seems sure he is getting neither. That isn't Mr. Dulles's fault. Even so, there are more tactful moments for brutal frankness.

Otherwise Mr. Dulles's comments were commendable enough. Mr Dulles' Seattle address was one of the clearest analyses he has made of American foreign policy. It will serve as effective rebuttal to the Communist charge, that the United States supports colonialism. He put in ~~right~~ proper perspective the need for free world unity, and the realities of inter-dependence. He stressed the devotion of the United States to the United Nations, and said pointedly it was not our fault that the Indochinese conflict had been kept from consideration by that body. He warmly supported Thailand's request for a mission of U.N. observers. He stressed the need for the European Defense Community, though he did not add what is obvious, that if Laniel falls tomorrow, only a major miracle will be able to save it.

Our Allies must conclude from both Mr. Dulles and President Eisenhower that the chances of an early United States intervention in Southeast Asia are increasingly dim. Some of them may be relieved that nothing precipitous on our part is in the works. But that is saying that for them, too, the only good thing about the news is that it isn't worse.

It can certainly be contended that no nation in history has pursued, after a successful war, a more unsordid and unselfish policy than has this nation in relation to former enemies and present Allies. But as Francis Bacon said: "The best way to keep good acts in memory is to refresh them with new." And probably Edward Lane was right about both nations and individuals when he said: "Our actions are judged good or evil according to our intentions."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that open aggression by Communist China in the Pacific or in southeast Asia "would be a deliberate threat to the United States itself." The Secretary said in Los Angeles that in such an event regardless of any other country "the right of self-preservation would demand that we meet the issue squarely." Again he said we would intervene in the present war in Indo-China only if several conditions were met; among them a guarantee from the French that they would not withdraw until the fight was won.

In Indo-China today French planes attacked enemy guerrilla bases in the Red River Delta.

And in Geneva, British Foreign Secretary Eden told the Communists the Korean peace talks should be called off immediately unless the enemy is willing to compromise. He asked for "some sign that agreement is possible." Chou en Lai, the Chinese Communist premier, dared the West to break off the talks.

In Washington today, Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams said that Mr. Eisenhower may not run for another term if the Republicans lose control of Congress in the November elections. As he put it: "The loss of Congress might make a certain farm in Pennsylvania an attractive place to retire to." The President owns a farm at Gettysburgh.

At the Army-McCarthy hearings, Counsel Jenkins told Senator McCarthy there is a "direct contradiction" in two statements he has made on what John Adams, the army counsel, told him about the possibility of General Lawton being fired from Fort Monmouth. McCarthy said there was no contradiction. McCarthy acknowledged that Private Schine could have finished his committee work before he was drafted - but McCarthy said he asked him to interview witnesses and this delayed his normal work. McCarthy said he hired Schine for two reasons: because he was willing to work for nothing, and because he knew more about the State Department's information program than any other young man McCarthy knew. As partial proof of this McCarthy offered a paper prepared by Schine for the State Department. He described it as a long-range plan for psychological warfare against the Communists. Democratic Senator Jackson called this "an amazing document" - he read to the committee a proposal for a dominform" - a world association of democratic parties. Jackson said the plan also called for pin-ups as part of a free world information program. McCarthy said he couldn't subscribe to the whole plan but thought it showed a great deal of thought. Roy Cohn wanted to make a statement but Chairman Mundt adjourned the meeting saying the Schine proposal was "not ludicrous."

As soon as the hearing was over, Roy Cohn walked over to Robert F. Kennedy, the counsel for the Democratic committee members and told him, Kennedy says, to "Tell Jackson we are going to get him on Monday." Kennedy later told reporters Cohn accused him of having a personal hatred. Cohn said he did accuse Kennedy of this and asked Kennedy if he thought that with this hatred he was qualified to advise the Democrats. Kennedy said he then told Cohn "he had a nerve threatening him." He said Cohn had threatened another Democratic Senator. Reporters heard Kennedy say: "You can't get away with it Cohn. Don't you make any warnings to Democratic senators." Cohn said: "I'll make any warnings to you I want to, anywhere, anytime." When the near-fight was broken up, reporters asked the 27-year-old Cohn what it was all about. He said of the 28-year old Kennedy, brother of Senator Kennedy, "Oh, we got a cute kid here." During the hearing Cohn, under oath, has denied charges that he once threatned to get Army Secretary Stevens.

The other excitement of the day came earlier when Republican Senator Flanders walked into the committee room, approached McCarthy and handed him an invitation to hear an attack on him that Flanders proposed for later in the day. And later, on the Senate floor, Flanders called for McCarthy to be fired from all his committee chairmanships unless the purges himself of contempt by answering charges by a Senate committee in 1952 - the charges concern McCarthy's financial affairs. McCarthy, when informed of the speech said of Flanders: "I think they should get a man with a net and take him to a good quiet place."

Navy Secretary Thomas announced today that security clearance has been given to three Annapolis midshipmen who were graduated last week but failed to receive commissions - until the security checks were completed. Thomas said he was sorry the men could not be cleared before graduation.

Housing Administrator Cole says 200 corporations made nearly 40 million dollars in "windfall" profits on 70 apartment projects. He says the names are being sent to the Justice Department.

And Here in NewYork reporters have been told by authoritative sounces that Robert R. Young has won control of the New York Central railroad by more than one million votes.

It seems to this reporter that the setting in world affairs is ominous. The Geneva Conference is at the point of admitted failure. The military position in Indochina is deplorable. France faces a paralyzing parliamentary crisis. The European Defense Community appears to be lost. Western unity is loose at the seems. This set of conditions is being generally recognized as the most unfavorable since yhe war. At this time, the two men most responsible for American foreign policy in the United States have made statements, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles. Naturally the first interest has been to learn if they announced some line of action measuring up to the sense of menace. They did not. If they had, that would have made news of transcendent importance. We are without that news, and the world's capitals are not feverishly discussing what America proposes to do.

But the fact that America is not proposing to do something new also is news, even if it is negative news. It may add to the prevailing discouragement, but it should not count as altogether discouraging. President Eisenhower, speaking at some length about the world crisis yesterday, mentioned the possibility that the presnet state of danger might last forty years. That may be regarded as a dismaying outlook. On the other hand it shows that Mr. Eisenhower does not foresee an early showdown in the East-West conflict. He does not endorse the idea of a preventive war which some individuals advocate. He does not adopt the alternative policy of carrying the war to China, which is popular in certain quarters. Likewise, he does not believe that the Kremlin wants a show-down soon, or is preparing to force it. What the President conveyed was his honest conviction that though the situation is grave, a catastrophe is not in sight. Indeed it is far, far out of sight. Forty years is a long way off.

Many persons abroad have the impression that the United States is close to intervention in Indochina. For their benefit, Mr. Eisenhower siad, that he had no intention of asking Congress for such action, and he repeated that he would not take such action without the authorization of Congress. I repeat that this is negative news. But it seems to be clear that Mr. Eisenhower meant it to be encouraging, rather than otherwise. Mr. Dulles has spoken three times in the last two days, and he has been even more negative than the President. For the French, at least, he was the opposite of encouraging. For he repeated in Los Angeles today a statement that will weaken Laniel in his dying struggle to remain Premier. He said that the United States will act alone to meet the Communist threat in Southeast Asia only if the Chinese Communists launch overt military aggression, which would be a deliberate threat to the United States. This is not news to the French; they know it as one of the carefully-phrased conditions that have to be met, before we or our Allies enter the Indochina war. They know this is one of them: we will not act alone unless there is overt military aggression by the Chinese. This assurance by Mr. Dulles may have been tailored to the special fears of the Western States, though Vice President Nixon and Senator Knowland evidently don't think that way about California. But it couldn't be given in Los Angeles without shaking Paris like an earthquake. It is telling the Chinese Communists that if they don't formally come into the war, the United States will not react if Hanoi falls. Why should the Communists intervene if Hanoi is going to fall without it, which apparently it will? Saying this is anything but helpful. It is giving Laniel a shove at a moment when he is toppling already. Laniel's chance for survival depends on his getting either an honorable peace at Geneva, or effective military aid in Indochina. It now seems sure he is getting neither. That isn't Mr. Dulles's fault. Even so, there are more tactful moments for brutal frankness. Mr. Dulles's Seattle address was one of the clearest analyses he has made of American foreign policy. It will serve as effective rebuttal to the Communist charge, that the United States supports colonialism. He put in proper perspective, the need for free world unity, and the realities of inter-dependence. He stressed the devotion of the United States to the United Nations, and said pointedly it was not our fault that the Indochinese conflict had been kept from consideration by that body. He warmly supported Thailand's request for a mission of U.N. observers. He stressed the need for the European Defense Community, though he did not add what is obvious, that if Laniel falls tomorrow, only a major miracle will be able to save it. Our Allies must conclude from both Mr. Dulles and President Eisenhower that the chances of an early United States intervention in Southeast Asia are increasingly dim. Some of them may be relieved that nothing precipitous on our part is in the works. But that is saying that for them, too, the only good thing about the news is that it isn't wor

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It can certainly be contended that no nation in history has pursued, after a successful war, a more unsordid and unselfish policy that has this nation in relation to former enemies and present Allies. But as Francis Bacon said: "The best way to keep good acts in memory is to refresh them with new." And probably Edward Lane was right about both nations and individuals when he said: "Our actions are judged good or evil according to our intentions."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, June 14, 1954

This is the news:

British Foreign Secretary EDEN today suggested to the Geneva conference that it be ended soon. Eden's suggestion came after Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov made what Eden called "a driblet of minor concessions" on an Indo-China peace conference. Eden suggested that the conference now knew that the Communists have nothing that would contribute to a settlement of the war in Indo-China.

And in Saigon, the French high command reported today that Chinese military aid to the rebels has been increased in the last week. A spokesman offered no figures..or details. But he said the increased aid is coming into Indo-China over the usual highway routes from China to the Vietminh bases in northern Viet Nam.

In France itself, Pierre Mendez-France is trying to work out a program that might get him confirmed as premier. The Laniel government was defeated on a vote of no confidence on Saturday. Mendes-France..according to his past statements..favors a quick end to the war in Indo-China and a cut in French military committments to Europe. The experts in the French parliament are saying he will not be able to form a new government.

The State Department today urged the Senate to withhold aid from France and Italy until they ratify the European defense community. Assistant Secretary of State Livingston Merchant told the Foreign Relations committee that the law should be changed so that our aid could be cut-off from any country that fails to (RATIFY) E.D.C. He also said that chances of French ratification are "excellent" despite the political crisis in Paris. Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey says the State Department's proposed change is to use foreign aid as a "lever" to force French and Italian approval.

General Gruenther, the supreme commander of allied forces in Europe, told the House Foreign Affairs committee that his military experts have not been able to discover a way to substitute atomic power for manpower in Europe. The general also reported that Russia has improved and modernized her military forces.. And he spoke of a considerable build-up (OF) Communist satellite forces.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing today, Francis Carr, the executive director of the McCarthy committee, said that as early as last December he felt that the army was using former committee consultant Private Schine as a "hostage" to get McCarthy to call-off an investigation of communism in the army. Carr said he (knew) of nothing improper that was done by Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn (or) himself. ..on behalf of Schine. He said he was told by Army (Counsellor) John Adams in March that the army's fued with McCarthy had been taken out of Adams' hands and had become a high policy matter in the Administration. Carr says Adams told him that the fued was a subject of conferences with Deputy Attorney General Rogers and other Justice Department officials. Carr said Adams repeatedly "baited" Roy Cohn on the question of Schine's army service. And he testified that there were no written documents or memos available on the interviews Schine conducted on behalf of the committee during his committee service. Carr said Schine passed on such information to Cohn.

Before today's session ended Senator Symington, Missouri Democrat, questioned Carr about the status of clearance of office and staff personnel. Carr said: there were no subversives on the staff.. they had no secret F.B.I. documents in the committee files. Senator McCarthy charged that Symington was engaged in a dishonest smear of the young men on the McCarthy committee. Symington answered that in all the years he has been in government, the McCarthy committee files are the sloppiest, and most dangerously handled files, he has ever seen.

Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont, who has made Senate speeches attacking McCarthy, has received [redacted] anonymous phone calls saying "he will be taken care of." An aide SAYS special police precuations have been taken to protect the Senator.. although they consider the calls to be "crackpot threats."

The House agriculture committee today voted to over-ride Secrtary of Agriculture Benson, and increase dairy price supports by about six and a half per cent.

And the government predicts that spending for new construction this year will set an all-time record of 36-billion dollars.

The President today signed into law a new pledge of alligiance to the flag which adds the words "under God"... From now on the pledge will conclude:"one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." [redacted]

[redacted] of ~~"growing up in this [illegible] century."~~

~~"[illegible]~~

Here in New York, Robert R. Young took control of the New York Central Railroad and the new board of directors named Alfred E. Pearlman, a western railroad man, to be the Central's new president.

In New Jersey, state officials announced that former Governor Harold Hoffman, who died early this month, had left a letter to a daughter confessing that he used 300-thousand dollars of the funds of the South Amboy Trust Company for his political and personal expenses. 16 YEARS AGO. ~~[illegible]~~

~~[illegible]..so[illegible] shortages have been found in the [illegible] And in Hamburg, Germany, from six to eight tons of training ammunition..enroute from Switzerland to Guatamala, has been intercepted by allied and West German authorities.~~

In 54 American and Canadian cities today most activitiy was halted for ten minutes in the first continental air raid drill. For a summary of ~~[illegible]~~ the results of the test we've asked Civil Defense Administrator Val Peterson TO REPORT TO YOU from the National Emergency headquarters just outside of washington. Here is Governor Peterson:

(runs 5 mins..ending...."the American people."

A

Adlai Stevenson told Vassar College graduates today to "align yourself with the forces of courage..of non-conformity." He said strange things have been going on in this country and added:"The Oppenheimer case even suggests a weird new science of 'security'..which would deny us the security of science." Stevenson attacked those politicians of both parties who , he said, "are unwilling to come out openly for the minority because of fear of social or economic reprisal." Stevenson defined non-coformity as "quite simply the American rights of experimentation, of dissent."

At Northwestern's commencement exrecises, Deputy Defense Secretary Robert T. Anderson said: fear, suspicion, hatred and mistrust "feed upon themselves and if unchecked may lead to a climate of rigid, uncompromising extremism." Anderson added:"The great danger to democracies from within is this fact..that in times of great stress and insecurity people may be persuaded by unreasoning passion into believing that they must choose between extremes of political action."

B

And in Atlantic City, A.F. of L. President Meany said the nation needs a foreign policy "based not upon bluff but upon strength." Meany also attacked the administration for [redacted] what he called failure to take steps to meet "the creeping unemployment problem."

Since this nation has yet to undergo the experience of direct enemy attack, there are undoubtedly those who still regard air raid tests as a minor annoyance and of little real value. But others less fortunate would I'm sure agree with these observations by Edmund Burke and James Russell Lowell:" Education is the cheapest defense of nations...one thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, June 14, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For a summary of the results of the test, we've asked Civil Defense Administrator, Val Peterson, to report to you. From the national emergency headquarters just outside of Washington, here is Governor Peterson.

PETERSON: Thank you, Ed. Today's nationwide civil defense test has thus far proved effectively what we had assumed, that the nation's civil defense team still has a long way to go in the field of operational readiness. This is not to minimize the amazing scope and effectiveness of what's been accomplished up to this hour in the exercise. The biggest part of the problem is yet to come from the Federal standpoint. In the next twelve hours there will be a heavy burden on our operational services, here in the primary command center and in the secondary command center at Arly, Maryland. Here we will be meeting the demands for mobile support, medical supplies, food, clothing, doctors and nurses to aid the stricken areas which have exhausted their own resources. For the purpose of this problem, in the first international civil defense exercise on the North American continent, forty-one principal target cities in the United States were hit with atomic we... weapons. The cities of San Juan, Puerto Rico, and Honolulu were hit with guided missiles. Eight Canadian cities were also hit during this exercise. The Federal civil defense system of Canada and its ten provinces have been working partners in this exercise since it started in mid-morning. We have been in close touch with the civil defense authorities of Canada during the entire day. They, too, report a successful exercise up to this hour. There is the closest cooperation between the United States and Canadian civil defense authorities, both at the national and local levels. They are grand fellow workers and splendid neighbors.

Some eighty-five other American cities are also taking part, either as support areas or as targets for non-nuclear weapons. This means that the entire United States is vitally effected by today's hypothetical attack. Up to this hour we know that twenty-four cities have been hit. Estimated are five million, three hundred twenty-two thousand killed and two million, two hundred ninety-one thousand injured, with many more dead and injured still unreported. Chemical and biological warfare attacks were hypothetically carried out in several states.

The real purpose of this exercise, which was planned many months ago, is to test the operational readiness and training of the nation's civil defense team at all levels of government. And this is most important: To make the American people more aware of the civil defense problem and their own responsibilities in it.

We have nodefinite figures immediately available. But it is estimated that between two and three million civil defense workers are participating in Operation Alert. Of equal importance - because it alerts the public to the dangers that it faces - is the fact that this exercise is directly effecting between fifty and seventy-five million people in the cities and states active in this hypothetical attack. Aside from a number of city-wide air raid drills, in Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia and other large cities, perhaps the most dramatic incident occurred in Mobile, Alabama, where they staged a large scale test evacuation prior to the attack. Some 26,000 people moved by foot and by car from a 450-block area in downtown Mobile. This kind of civil defense evacuation drill is in store for every American target city. We believe that the impact of this national civil defense exercise will serve both as a grim and reassuring alert to the American people.

MURROW: President Eisenhower rather took the whole White House staff underground today when the alert sounded ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

British Foreign Secretary Eden today suggested to the Geneva Conference that it be ended soon. Eden's suggestion came after Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov made what Eden called "a driblet of minor concessions" on an Indo-China peace conference. Eden suggested that the conference now knew that the Communists have nothing that would contribute to a settlement of the war in Indo-China.

And in Saigon, the French high command reported today that Chinese military aid to the rebels has been increased in the last week. A spokesman offered no figures or details. But he said the increased aid is coming into Indo-China over the usual highway routes from China to the Vietminh bases in northern Viet Nam.

In France itself, Pierre Mendez, France is trying to work out a program that might get him confirmed as premier. The Laniel government was defeated on a vote of no confidence on Saturday. Mendes-France, according to his past statements, favors a quick end to the war in Indo-China and a cut in French military committments to Europe. The experts in the French parliament are saying he will not be able to form a new government.

The State Department today urged the Senate to withhold aid from France and Italy until they ratify the European defense community. Assistant Secretary of State Livingston Merchat told the Foreign Relations committee that the law should be changed so that our aid could be cut off from any country that fails to ratify E.D.C. He also said that chances of French ratification are "excellent" despite the political crisis in Paris. Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey says the State Department's proposed change is to use foreign aid as a "lever" to force French and Italian approval.

General Gruenther, the supreme commander of allied forces in Europe, told the House Foreign Affairs committee that his military experts have not been able to discover a way to substitute atomic power for manpower in Europe. The general also reported that Russia has improved and modernized her military forces. And he spoke of a considerable build-up of Communist satellite forces.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing today, Francis Carr, the executive director of the McCarthy hearing, said that as early as last December he felt that the army felt that the army was using former committee consultant Private Schine as a "hostage" to get McCarthy to call off an investigation of communism in the army. Carr said he knew of nothing improper that was done by Senator McCarthy, Roy Cohn or himself, on behalf of Schine. He said he was told by Army Counsellor John Adams in March that the army's feud with McCarthy had been taken out of Adams' hands and had become a high policy matter in the Administration. Carr says Adams told him that the fued was a subject of conferences with Deputy Attorney General Rogers and other Justice Department officials. Carr said Adams repeatedly "baited" Roy Cohn on the question of Schine's army service. And he testified that there were no written documents or memos available on the interviews Schine conducted on behalf of the committee during his committee service. Carr said Schine passed on such information to Cohn.

Before today's session ended, Senator Symington, Missouri Democrat, questioned Carr about the status of clearance of office and staff personnel. Carr said: there were no subversives on the staff - they had no secret F.B.I. documents in the committee files. Senator McCarthy charged that Symington was engaged in a dishonest smear of the young men on the McCarthy committee. Symington answered that in all the years he has been in government the McCarthy committee files are the sloppiest and most dangerously handled files he has ever seen.

Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont, who has made Senate speeches attacking McCarthy, has received anonymous phone calls saying "he will be taken care of." An aide says special police precautions have been taken to protect the Senator although they consider the calls to be "crackpot threats."

The House agriculture committee today voted to over-ride Secretary of Agriculture Benson and increase dairy price supports by about six and a half percent.

And the government predicts that spending for new construction this year will set an all-time record of 36-billion dollars.

The President today signed into law a new pledge of allegiance to the flag which adds the words "under God". From now on, the pledge will conclude: "one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Here in New York, Robert R. Young took control of the New York Central Railroad and the new board of directors named Alfred E. Pearlman, a western railroad man to be the Central's new president.

In New Jersey, state officials announced that former Governor Harold Hoffman, who died early this month, had left a letter to a daughter confessing that he used 300-thousand dollars of the funds of the South Amboy Trust Company for his political and personal expenses 16 years ago.

In 54 American and Canadian cities today most activity was halted for ten minutes in the first continental air raid drill. For a summary of the results of the test we've asked Civil Defnese Administrator Val Peterson to report to you from the National Emergency headquarters just outside of Washington. Here is Governor Peterson:

PETERSON: Thank you, Ed. Today's nationwide civil defense test has thus far proved effectively what we had assumed, that the nation's civil defense team still has a long way to go in the field of operational readiness. This is not to minimize the amazing scope and effectiveness of what's been accomplished up to this hour in the exercise. The biggest part of the problem is yet to come from the Federal standpoint In the next twelve hours there will be a heavy burden on our operational services, here in the primary command center and in the secondary command center. Here we will be meeting the demands for mobile support, medical supplies, food, clothing, doctors and nurses to aid the stricken areas which have exhausted their own resources For the purpose of this problem, in the first international civil defense exercise on the North American continent forty-one principal target cities in the United States were hit with atomic weapons. The cities of San Juan, Puerto Rico, and Honolulu were hit with guided missiles. Eight Canadian cities were also hit during this exercise. The Federal civil defense system of Canada and its ten provinces have been working partners in this exercise since it started in mid-morning. We have been in close touch with the civil defense authorities of Canada during the entire day. They, too, report a successful exercise up to this hour. There is the closest co-operation between the United States and Canadian civil defense authorities, both at the national and local levels. They are grand fellow workers and splendid neighbors.

Some eighty-five other American cities are also taking part, either as support areas or as targets for non-nuclear weapons. This means that the entire United States is vitally affected by today's hypothetical attack. Up to this hour we know that twenty-four cities have been hit. Estimated are five million, three hundred twenty-two thousand killed and two million, two hundred ninety-one thousand injured, with many more dead and injured still unreported. Chemical and biological warfare attacks were hypothetically carried out in several states. The real purpose of this exercise, which was planned many months ago, is to test the operational readiness and training of the nation's civil defense team at all levels of government. And this is most important: to make the American people more aware of the civil defense problem and their own responsibilities in it. We have no definite figures immediately available. But it is estimated that between two and three million civil defense workers are participating in Operation Alert. Of equal importance because it alerts the public to the dangers that it faces is the fact that this exercise is directly affecting between fifty and seventy-five million people in the cities and states active in this hypothetical attack. Aside from a number of city-wide air raid drills, in Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia and other large cities, perhaps the most dramatic incident occurred in Mobile, Alabama, where they staged a large scale test evacuation prior to the attack. Some 26,000 people moved by foot and by car from a 450-block area in downtown Mobile. This kind of civil defense evacuation drill is in store for every American target city. We believe that the impact of this national civil defense exercise will serve both as a grim and reassuring alert to the American people.

MURROW: Adlai Stevenson told Vassar College graduates today to "align yourself with the forces of courage of non-conformity." He said strange things have been going on in this country and added: "The Oppenheimer case even suggests a weird new science of 'security' which would deny us the security of science." Stevenson attacked those politidans of both parties who, he said, "are unwilling to come out openly for the minority because of fear of social or economic reprisal." Stevenson defined non-comformity as "quite simply the American rights of experimentation, of dissent."

At Northwestern's commencement excercises, Deputy Defense Secretary Robert T. Anderson said: fear, suspicion, hatred and mistrust "feed upon themselves and if unchecked may lead to a climate of rigid, uncompromising extremism." Anderson added: "The great danger to democracies from within is this fact - that in times of great stress and insecurity people may be persuaded by unreasoning passion into believing that they must choose between extremes of political action."

And in Atlantic City, A.F.L. President Meany said the nation needs a foreign policy "based not upon bluff but upon strength." Meany also attacked the administration for what he called failure to take steps to meet "the creeping unemployment problem."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Since this nation has yet to undergo the experience of direct enemy attack there are undoubtedly those who still regard air raid tests as a minor annoyance and of little real value. But others less fortunate would I'm sure agree with these observations by Edmund Burke and James Russell Lowell: "Education is the cheapest defense of nations - one thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, June 15, 1954

This is the news:

The White House says Prime Minister Churchill and Anthony Eden will visit Washington in ten days. Secretary of State Dulles says he hopes their meetings with the President and others will lead to closer understanding on the collective defense of Southeast Asia against Communism. I'd like to review some aspects of this meeting in a few minutes.

In the House of Commons today, Sir Winston announced that the Geneva conference is deadlocked..efforts to negotiate a stable peace for Korea and an end to the Indo-China war are both hopeless. [redacted]

And at Geneva today, the 16 allies whose troops fought in Korea broke off negotiations with the enemy. They explained that the seven weeks of arguments with the Communists showed that all of their efforts to settle the Korean problem were rejected. The allies said they made the decision to break off the talks "reluctantly and regretfully." Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov said the 16 nations will have to bear the responsibility for this.

And the Chinese Communists, at Geneva, today said they would consider the release of a number of Americans they now hold in China.. if the prisoners have records of good behavior. The Communists want the release of Chinese students they claim we are detaining in this country. There are 54 American civilians and 29 of our military personnel in Communist China.

In Paris, Pierre Mendez-France says he expects to ask the National Assembly to confirm him as premier on Thursday. ~~And the United Press reports that a group of ex-premiers have joined forces to~~ keep ~~Mendez-France from winning confirmation. The ex-premiers include: Laniel, Pleven, Bidault, Faure, Mayer, Queille, Pinay, Reynaud and Andre Marie.~~

At the Army-McCarthy hearing, Francis P. Carr testified that he does not think the army is coddling Communists at this time. But he does think that Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel John Adams went to great lengths to prevent the exposure of persons who cleared Communists in loyalty investigations. Joseph Welch, when cross-examining Carr ridiculed the McCarthy group's contention that the army tried to use Privet Schine as "a hostage" to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to call off an investigation of Communism in the army. Welch asked: what did the army threaten to do to Schine except to let him wear the army (UNIFORM.) Carr agreed that he knew nothing worse than K.P. duty threatened for Schine. And Carr said that as far as he knows there was no discrimination against Schine in the army... he felt Schine should have been commissioned but that "is the army's business." And both Carr and Assistant Army Counsel St. Clair agreed that it was ludicrous to accept a plan attributed to John Adams by Carr. Carr testified yesterday that Adams told him if Senator Mc Carthy would make no fuss about the impending removal of General Lawton from Fort Monmouth, then Adams would arrange a week-end pass for Private Schine.

At one point Counsel Welch wanted to ask Carr for the names of persons employed in McCarthy's office. The Senator ruled this out saying it was a smear campaign..that he was not going to "have them digging into the lives of the little girls in my office."

[redacted]

And Carr testified that once McCarthy and Roy Cohn consulted Schine about the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer.

Cohn returned to the stand briefly and praised McCarthy as "a great American whose only crime has been to try to protect the nation against Communist infiltration. The Senator returns to the stand tomorrow.

Attorneys for Dr. Oppenheimer have told the Atomic Energy Commission that the scientist's lack of enthusiasm for the H-bomb program was not a valid reason for labelling him a security risk. The lawyers say that to deny clearance to Oppenheimer "is in the broadest sense really inconsistent with the interests of national security."

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters today that there is a reign of terror in Guatemala... being carried out by the government. He says a great majority of the people there want to clean out the Communists. But they are facing intense Communist terrorism.

And New Jersey's Governor Meyner today made public a report saying that the Late Governor Hoffman mismanaged the state's Division of Employment Security . Hoffman was also accused of making a false deposit of 300-thousand dollars involving state funds.

Edward R. Murrow: June 15, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The news that Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden are coming to Washington for the week end of June 25th suggests two positive conclusions. One is that the Geneva Conference has come to an end. There may not be final adjournment right away. The conference may be given formal but unreal prolongation of life. But the Churchill-Eden visit emphasizes how unreal that would be. They would not be coming to Washington if hope remained for useful negotiations. The Geneva Conference has gone the way of the Berlin Conference; it already has failed. The two great countries of the Western Alliance now need to answer the questions: Where do we go from here? And how do we proceed together?

The other conclusion suggested by the meeting is that Sir Winston is not retiring from British politics. He will overshadow Mr. Eden in these talks; certainly Mr. Eden will not overshadow him. If he were handing over the reins to his Foreign Secretary this would be the occasion to show it. He would stay at home and let Mr. Eden cope with Anglo-American relations. But Sir Winston has been the British architect and inspiration of the alliance with the United States, and he continues to be the chief British influence for its preservation. Sooner or later Sir Winston will cease to be Prime Minister. But it is clear from this visit that he is not now preparing to retire.

Two topics will dominate the talks. One is the creation of a Southeast Asian security system; the other is the problem of German re-armament. Mr. Dulles said this today. He also said that the French would not be taking part, but there was nothing unusual in that since decisions were not being reached. It may be only a coincidence, but the last time Sir Winston came to Washington the French were having a crisis. Sir Winston may have come just at that time, so as to have the talks without the French being present. It is just possible he is doing it again.

The project of a Southeast Asian security system has occasioned some misunderstanding between Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden. When Mr. Eden first agreed to talks about it, Mr. Dulles assumed he was willing to start them right away, that is while Geneva was just starting. Mr. Eden thought he agreed to hold talks after the Geneva conference. Whoever was to blame for the misunderstanding, the talks at last are to be held, and that should permit the restoration of Anglo-American amity and accord.

Actually it will help the talks to be holding them now, for the military spadework for them was finished in the staff meetings just concluded in Washington. No news came out of these meetings, but they were harmonious and useful. The staffs answered only military questions, and they were about what could be undertaken militarily in a number of hypothetical circumstances. The experts covered all likely contingencies and came up with agreed conclusions for them all. So a security system can start with an immediate estimate in hand, as to what is involved in military terms.

As to the European security system, its future has been put in some jeopardy by the French political crisis. It may be still too early to write off the European Defense Community altogether. But if Monsieur Mendez-France becomes Premier, France will stop trying to behave like a Great Power, and will trim all its foreign commitments. Probably Monsieur Mendez-France will not become Premier; that is the best guess in Paris. And if he doesn't, the man who does may be able to get the E.D.C. treaty ratified. But the chance certainly is slimmer than it was. And the Churchill-Eden visit will make it possible to do, in political terms, what the military staffs did for Southeast Asia, set up a number of alternatives depending on what happens in France.

So far the State Department has refused even to consider any alternative for a European Army with German ~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~ participation. But the fall of Laniel has made it necessary. A number of possibilities are being mentioned. One is to take the Bonn Government into NATO, which means to give it a national army with its own general staff. France must be expected to veto this if it decides it cannot trust Germany with arms to be borne only in a European Army and without a German general staff.

Another possibility is to expand the lightly armed German frontier police, along with the Germans employed by the British and Americans in their logistic services in their zones in Germany. This would be arming the Germans on the pattern being used in Japan. But there is little reason to presume the Germans would like it. If they don't get into E.D.C., they are sure to want a national army with all the trimmings.

A further possibility is that Britain take the place of France in the Defense Community, with armies remaining national at the corps level instead of the divisional level as proposed at present for the E.D.C. This might reconcile the French to German re-armament.

A further possibility is to organize volunteer forces in Germany, to be raised and trained by the United States. That hardly sounds adequate to security needs. Another possibility is to leave Germany unarmed, but protected by the present forces of occupation. But that means the Germans being willing to forego their sovereignty.

The alternatives are not alluring. Only the one in which Britain joins the European Defense Community sounds like much. And it doesn't sound like a British idea.

If we have learned nothing else from the recent political history it is this: we are living in one world where the only effective action is united action. Edmund Burke may have been right when he said "The concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear." But if this is true, Thomas Fuller was also right when he concluded:"Weak things united often become strong."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House says Prime Minister Churchill and Anthony Eden will visit Washington in ten days. Secretary of State Dulles says he hopes their meetings with the President and others will lead to closer understanding on the collective defense of Southeast Asia against Communism. I'd like to review some aspects of this meeting in a few minutes.

In the House of Commons to ay, Sir Winston announced that the Geneva conference is deadlocked - efforts to negotiate a stable peace for Korea and an end to the Indo-China war are both hopeless.

And at Geneva today, the 16 allies whose troops fought in Korea broke off negotiations with the enemy. They explained that the seven weeks of arguments with the Communists showed that all of their efforts to settle the Korean problem were rejected. The allies said they made the decision to break off the talks "reluctantly and regretfully." Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov said the 16 nations will have to bear the responsibility for this.

And the Chinese Communists, at Geneva, today said they would consider the release of a number of Americans they now hold in China if the prisoners have records of good behavior. The Communists want the release of Chinese students they claim we are detaining in this country. There are 54 American civilians and 29 of our military personnel in Communist China.

In Paris, Pierre Mendez-France says he expects to ask the National Assembly to confirm him as premier on Thursday.

At the Army-McCarthy hearing, Francis P. Carr testified that he does not think the army is coddling Communists at this time. But he does think that Army Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel John Adams went to great lengths to prevent the exposure of persons who cleared Communists in loyalty investigations. Joseph Welch, when cross-examining Carr ridiculed the McCarthy group's contention that the army tried to use

Private Schine as "a hostage" to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to call off an investigation of Communism in the army. Welch asked: what did the army threaten to do to Schine except to let him wear the army uniform. Carr agreed that he knew nothing worse than K.P. duty threatened for Schine. And carr said that as far as he knows there was no discrimination against Schine in the army - he felt Schine should have been commissioned but that "is the army's business." And both Carr and Assistant Army Counsel St. Clair agreed that it was ludicrous to accept a plan attributed to John Adams by Carr. Carr testified yesterday that Adams told him if Senator McCarthy would make no fuss about the impending removal of General Lawton from Fort Monmouth, then Adams would arrange a week-end pass for Private Schine.

At one point Counsel Welch wanted to ask Carr for the names of persons employed in McCarthy's office. The Senator ruled this out saying it was a smear campaign - that he was not going to "have them digging into the lives of the little girls in my office."

And Carr testified that once McCarthy and Roy Cohn consulted Schine about the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer.

Cohn returned to the stand briefly and praised McCarthy as "a great American whose only crime has been to try to protect the nation against Communist infiltration. The Senator returns to the stand tomorrow.

Attorneys for Dr. Oppenheimer have told the Atomic Energy Commission that the scientist's lack of enthusiasm for the H-bomb program was not a valid reason for labelling him a security risk. The lawyers say that to deny clearance to Oppenheimer "is in the broadest sense really inconsistent with the interests of national security."

Secretary Dulles told reporters today that there is a reign of terror in Guatemala being carried out by the government. He says a great majority of the people there want to clean out the Communists. But they are facing intense Communist terrorism.

And New Jersey's Governor Meyner today made public a report saying that the Late Governor Hoffman mismanaged the state's Division of Employment Security. Hoffman was also accused of making a false deposit of 300-thousand dollars involving state funds.

The news that Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden are coming to Washington for the weekend of Jund 25th suggests two positive conclusions. One is that the Geneva Conference has come to an end. There may not be final adjournment right away. The conference may be given formal but unreal prolongation of life. But the Churchill-Eden visit emphasizes how unreal that would be. They would not be coming to Washington if hope remained for useful negotiations. The Geneva Conference has gone the way of the Berlin Conference; it already has failed. The two great countries of the Western Alliance now need to answer the question: Where do we go from here? And how do we proceed together? The other conclusion suggested by the meeting is that Sir Winston is not retiring from British politics. He will overshadow Mr. Eden in these talks; certainly Mr. Eden will not overshadow him. If he were handing over the reigns to his Foreign Secretary this would be the occasion to show it. He would stay at home and let Mr. Eden cope with Anglo-American relations. But Sir Winston has been the British architect and inspiration of the alliance with the United States, and he continues to be the chief British influence for its preservation. Sooner or later Sir Winston will cease tobe Prime Minister. But it is clear from this visit that he is not now preparing to retire.

Two topics will dominate the talks. One is the creation of a Southeast Asian security system; the other is the problem of German re-armament. Mr. Dulles said this today. He also said the French would not be taking part, but there was nothing unusual in that since decisions were not being reached. It may only be a coincidence, but the last time Sir Winston came to Washington, the French were having a crisis. Sir Winston may have come just at that time, so as to have the talks without the French being present. It is just possible he is doing it again.

The project of a Southeast Asian security system has occasioned some misunderstanding between Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden. When Mr. Eden first agreed to talks about it, Mr. Dulles assumed he was willing to start them right away, that is while Geneva was just starting. Mr. Eden thought he agreed to hold talks after the Geneva conference. Whoever was to blame for the misunderstanding, the talks are at last to be held, and that should permit the restoration of Anglo-American amity and accord.

Actually it will help the talks to be holding them now, for the military spadework for them was finished in the staff meetings just concluded in washington. No news came out of these meetings, but they were harmonious and useful. The staffs answered only military questions, and they were about what could be undertaken militarily in a number of hypothetical circumstances. The experts covered all likely contingencies and came up with agreed conclusions for them all. So a security system can start with an immediate estimate in hand, as to what is involved in military terms.

As to the European security system, its future has been put in some jeopardy by the French political crisis. It may be still too early to write off the European Defense Community altogether. But if Monsieur Mendez-France becomes Premier, France will stop trying to behave like a Great Power, and will trim all its foreign committments. Probably Monsieur Mendes-France will not become Premier; that is the best guess in Paris. And if he doesn't, the man who does may be able to get the E.D.C. treaty ratified. But the chance certainly is slimmer than it was. And the Churchill-Eden visit will make it possible to do, in political terms, what the military staffs did for Southeast Asia, set up a number of alternatives depending on what happens in France. So far the State Department has refused even to consider any alternative for a European Army with German participation. But the fall of Laniel has made it necessary. A number of possibilities are being mentioned. One is to take the Bonn Government into NATO, which means to give it a national army with its own general staff. France must be expected to veto this if it decides it cannot trust Germany wi h arms to be borne only in a European Army and without a German general staff.

Another possibility is to expand the lightly armed German frontier police, along with the Germans em loyed by the British and Americans in their logistic services in their zones in Germany. This would be arming the Germans on the pattern being used in Japan. But there is little reason to presume the Germans would like it. If they don't get into E.D.C., they are sure to want a national army with all the trimmings. A further possibility is that Britain take the place of France in the Defense Community, with armies remaining national at the corps level instead of the divisional level as proposed at present for the E.D.C. This might reconcile the Franch to German re-armament. A further possibility is to organize volunteer forces in Germany, to be raised and trained by the United States. That hardly sounds adequate to security needs. Another possibility is to leave Germany unarmed, but protected by the present forces of occupation. But that means the Germans being willing to forego their sovereignty. The alternatives are not alluring. Only the one in which Britain joins the European Defense Community sounds like much. And it doesn't sound like a British idea.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: If we have learned nothing else from the recent political history it is this: we are living in one world where the only effective action is united action. Edmund Burke may have been right when he said "The concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear." But if this is true, Thomas Fuller was also right when he concluded: "Weak things united often become strong."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed. June 16, 1954

This is the news:

The President said today that when Prime Minister Churchill visits Washington next week they will discuss every urgent world problem..and try to strengthen our bridge of friendship with Great Britain. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters at the White House that one of the main purposes of the conference will be to try to work out a joint policy for possible united action in Southeast Asia.

The President also said, in answer to a question, that the 16 allies who fought in Korea must now report to the United Nations on their decision that no agreement could be worked out with the Communists at Geneva. After the U.N. is informed we will have to take some action but the President does not know just what we'll do.

South Korea's President Rhee said in Seoul today that the breakup of the Korean peace talks demonstrates that "the free nations are no longer begging the Communists to come to some agreement to avoid at any cost the possibility of world war three." Rhee added:"I was not the only one who knew that nothing can be gained by talking with the Communists."

And General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander in Korea, said in Tokyo today that the breakup of the negotiations is no surprise to him. He said;"I'm glad it finally came about. We had to go through with it to prove once again that you can't believe the Communists."

In Geneva today, French Foreign ~~Minister~~ (MINISTER) Bidault..just in from Paris..is reported to be opposed to the American-British plan to suspend the talks on Indo-China. French sources say his sole purpose in returning to Geneva is to prevent a breakup of the conference.

And at the United Nations, Thailand ~~introduced~~ (INTRODUCED) a Security Council resolution calling for a peace patrol in Southeast Asia. We support it on the ground that a "real and continuing threat" to Thailand does exist.

At his news conference today the President was asked about his ~~plan~~ (PLANS) for 1956. Mr. Eisenhower said he is concentrating on the big problems of the present.. he is not casting his mind forward to running for another term...He isn't one to predict and..as he sees it..sufficient to the day are the evils thereof.

The President also told reporters: that he has never implied that he would support government price supports at 100 per cent of parity for farmers..and that recent events in Guatamala are very disturbing.

Later in the day the White House said a newspaper report that the President might replace Secretary of State Dulles with Governor Dewey is "absultely untrue."

At the Army-McCarthy hearings, Senator McCarthy, who didn't complete his testimony today, said that everything in his counter-charges against the army is true.. that the hearings have been a complete farce.. that they are the fault of the Democratic Committee members. Democratic Senator McClelland then said Army Secretary Stevens [redacted] got into this "mess" before he sought any Democratic help.

Mc Carthy said he thinks he made a mistake in offering concessions to get the Democrats back on the committee after they had left. He testified that the Central Intelligence Agency is the worst situation from the standpoint of Communist infiltration.. a charge that has been denied by C.I.A. Director Allen Dulles. At one point McCarthy "absolved" his aides, Roy Cohen and Francis Carr,, said the only thing they are guilty of is fighting Communism. Army Counsel Welch said the Senator was a witness not a judge and that the army was not going to let Communists cut the army's throat. McCarthy said: "Don't pull that on me. Don't pull that on me." Welch said McCarthy has no monopoly in battling Communists.. the fight goes on throughout the government. And the Senator repeated his view that federal workers have a solemn duty to divulge information to him under certain circumstances..despite the President having condemned this practise as rephrehensible.

The Atomic Energy Commission is now considering whether to accept a special board's finding that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer is a loyal American but should be barred from our atomic secrets as a security risk. Representative Hinshaw of California (Revealed) that the Commission decided to publish the text of the secret Oppenheimer hearing because Commissioner Zuckert has reported a summary of the case lost or stolen on Friday night. It was found Sunday in a railroad station.

The testimony shows that Dr. Edward Teller--whom Oppnehimer called the principal inventor of the H-bomb--testified that if, in 1945, Oppenheimer and others like him had lent "moral support" to the H-bomb project the bomb could have been developed four years earlier than it was developed. Teller said he would feel safer if Oppenheimer did not have custody of our vital secrets. And Willialm Borden, former secretary to the Congressional committee on atomic energy, said that "more probably than not Oppenheimer is an agent for the Soviet union." But contrary testimony came from distinguished scientists. For example: Dr. Norris Bradbury, now scientific director at Los Alamos, testified:"I do not regard him as a security risk." Dr. Robert Bacher, a former member of the Atomic energy commission, said Dr, Oppenheimer is a good security risk. And Oppenheimer himself said that in October of 1949, after we knew the Russians had developed an atomic bomb, the Atomic Energy Commission's advisory committee showed a "surprising unanimity" in agreeing that we ought NOT to take the iniatiative at that time in [redacted] an all-out program for the development of the Hodrogen bomb. This (is a) [redacted] fragmentary summary of the transcript the Commission has promised to review by the end of this month.

In Washington today a federal court jury found four Puerto Ricans guilty on five charges of assault with a dangerous weapon. This could mean a maximum sentence of 50 years in prison for each defendent. The jury had not yet decided on five other counts charging assault with intent to kill...which carries a maximum sentence of 75 years in prison. The jury's deliberations will continue after dinner.

Edward R. Murrow: June 16, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Dick Hottelet cables me from Germany tonight that German officials are earnestly hoping that the conversations between President Eisenhower and Sir Winston Churchill will produce concrete results. They believe that some Western action is necessary, (even if the French remain politically paralyzed.) ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ The Germans feel that the present deadlock is bringing the whole idea of European integration to the brink of ruin, and that serious German domestic consequences may result. The aging Chancellor Adenauer and other democratic forces in Western Germany have staked everything on the European Army plan. They are under increasing pressure to produce tangible results. The present German leaders believe it possible for the Americans and the British to go ahead with the European Army plan, and the so-called Bonn Conventions, even without French agreement. The Bonn Conventions would give to Western Germany the essence of sovereignty. They would terminate the occupation statute, and lift certain restrictions in fields such as civil aviation, scientific research and industrial capacity. They would eliminate the Allied High Commission, with its veto power over the actions of the German Government.

Such an Anglo-American declaration would have great psychological appeal, and create the impression in Germany that forward movement is possible. As things stand now, the Germans feel that they are not permitted to move one inch off dead center. They are not allowed to begin even the most preliminary non-military preparations for their ultimate defense force. They can't even start building barracks for the troops that might be called up a year from now.

Hottelet reports that responsible Germans are coming to the conclusion that it is impossible for Germany or for Europe to continue the present aimless drifting.

The pressure upon Adenauer from extreme nationalist sources is increasing. For example, the deputy chairman of Adenauer's own Christian Democratic Party decided yesterday that the convention for the election of the President of Germany next month shall be held in Berlin. Chancellor Adenauer opposed this decision, but his deputy made it under pressure of those who want to make this convention a great emotional occasion directed at Eastern Germany. Adenauer is by nature opposed to emotional demonstrations, and he wants Germany to lie low during the next few months, wait and see what happens; but he has clearly suffered a reverse due to the impatient pressure of nationalist forces within his own Party. Adenauer is a moderate man, committed to the idea of European unity and a European Army.

But in Germany, as elsewhere, moderate politicians whose policies produce no tangible results come under fire from both the extreme left and the extreme right. Yesterday Adenauer's Party lost its absolute majority in the German Parliament by the defection of one member who was dissatisfied with Adenauer's moderation on refugee affairs, the Saar and the eastern territories. The German Chancellor still retains a huge coalition majority, his government is in no immediate danger, but there are visible signs of increased friction between the Chancellor and his partners in the coalition. This friction arises from Adenauer's unequivocal commitment to the Western World, his efforts to reach an agreement with France over the Saar, and the fact that his policy of associating Germany completely with the Western Powers has so far produced no tangible results or increased stature; no more security or freedom of maneuver for the German Government.

Adenauer's political resources are not inexhaustible, and time will not stand still for him indefinitely. If the policy of moderation, of close and complete co-operation with Western Europe fails, then German politics and German history combine to shout that they will try more extreme measures.

Hottelet concludes his cable by saying that what Adenauer and his followers need right now is a gust of encouragement from the West.

As my colleague Dick Hottelet pointed out, the German people and the Adenauer government are ~~anxiously~~ looking for renewed signs of cooperation and encouragement from the West. Shakespeare once remarked that "the miserable have no other medicine but hope." Disraeli put it another way when he said:"Every production of genius must be the production of enthusiasm."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said today that when Prime Minister Churchill visits Washington next week they will discuss every urgent world problem and try to strengthen our bridge of friendship with Great Britain. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters at the White House that one of the main purposes of the conference will be to try to work out a joint policy for possible united action in Southeast Asia.

The President also said, in answer to a question, that the 16 allies who fought in Korea must now report to the United Nations on their decision that no agreement could be worked out with the Communists at Geneva. After the U.N. is informed we will have to take some action but the President does not know just what we'll do.

South Korea's President Rhee said in Seoul today that the breakup of the Korean peace talks demonstrates that "the free nations are no longer begging the Communists to come to some agreement to avoid at any cost the possibility of world war three." Rhee added: "I was not the only one who knew that nothing can be gained by talking with the Communists."

And General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander in Korea, said in Tokyo today that the breakup of the negotiations is no surprise to him. He said: "I'm glad it finally came about. We had to go through with it to prove once again that you can't believe the Communists."

In Geneva today, French Foreign Minister Bidault just in from Paris is reported to be opposed to the American-Britisn plan to suspend the talks on Indo-China. French sources say his sole purpose in returning to Geneva is to prevent a breakup of the conference.

And at the United Nations, Thailand introduced a Security Council resolution calling for a peace patrol in Southeast Asia. We support it on the ground that a "real and continuing threat" to Thailand does exist.

At his news conference today the President was asked about his plans for 1956. Mr. Eisenhower said he is concentrating on the big problems of the present - he is not casting his mind forward to running for another term. He isn't one to predict and as he sees it, sufficient to the day are the evils thereof.

The President also told reporters: that he has never implied that he would support government price supports at 100 percent of parity for farmers and that recent events in Guatamala are very disturbing.

Later in the day the White House said a newspaper report that the President might replace Secretary of State Dulles with Governor Dewey is "absolutely untrue."

At the Army-McCarthy hearings, Senator McCarthy, who didn't complete his testimony today, said that everything in his counter-charges against the army is true - that the hearings have been a complete farce - that they are the fault of the Democratic Committee members. Democratic Senator McClelland then said Army Secretary Stevens got into this "mess" before he sought any Democratic help.

McCarthy said he thinks he made a mistake in offering concessions to get the Democrats back on the committee after they had left. He testified that the Central Intelligence Agency is the worst situation from the standpoint of Communist infiltration - a charge that has been denied by C.I.A. Director Allen Dulles. At one point McCarthy "absolved" his aides, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr, said the only thing they are guilty of is fighting Communism. Army Counsel Welch said the Senator was a witness not a judge and that the army was not going to let Communists cut the army's throat. McCarthy said: "Don't pull that on me. Don't pull that on me." Welch said McCarthy has no monopoly in battling Communists - the fight goes on throughout the government. And the Senator repeated his view that federal workers have a solemn duty to divulge information to him under certain circumstances - despite the President having condemned this practice as reprehensible.

The Atomic Energy Commission is now considering whether to accept a special board's finding that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer is a loyal American but should be barred from our atomic secrets as a security risk. Representative Hinshaw of Califor revealed that the Commission decided to publish the text of the secret Oppenheimer hearing because Commissioner Zuckert has reported a summary of the case lost or stolen on Friday night. It was found Sunday in a railroad station.

The testimony shows that Dr. Edward Teller - whom Oppenheimer called the principal inventor of the H-bomb testified that if, in 1945, Oppenheimer and others like him had lent "moral support" to the H-bomb project the bomb could have been developed four years earlier than it was developed. Teller said he would feel safer if Oppenheimer did not have custody of our vital secrets. And William Borden, former secretary to the Congressional committee on atomic energy, said that "more probably than not, Oppenheimer is an agent for the Soviet union." But contrary testimony came from distinguished scientists. For example: Dr. Norris Bradbury, now scientific director at Los Alamos, testified: "I do not regard him as a security risk." Dr. Robert Bacher, a former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, said Dr. Oppenheimer is a good security risk. And Oppenheimer himself said that in October of 1949, after we knew the Russians had developed an atomic bomb, the Atomic Energy Commission's advisory committee showed a "surprising unanimity" in agreeing that we ought not to take the initiative at that time in an all-out program for the development of the Hydorgen bomb. This is a fragmentary summary of the transcript the Commission has promised to review by the end of this month.

In Washington today a federal court jury found four Puerto Ricans guilty on five charges of assault with a dangerous weapon. This could mean a maximum sentence of 50 years in prison for each defendent. The jury had not yet decided on five other counts charging assault with intent to kill which carries a maximum sentence of 75 years in prison. The jury's deliberations will continue after dinner.

Dick Hottelet cables me from Germany tonight that German officials are earnestly hoping that the conversations between President Eisenhower and Sir Winston Churchill will produce concrete results. They believe that some Western action is necessary even if the French remain politically paralyzed. The Germans feel that the present deadlock is bringing the whole idea of European integration to the brink of ruin, and that serious German domestic consequences may result. The aging Chancellor Adenauer and other democratic forces in Western Germany have staked everything on the European Army plan. They are under increasing pressure to produce tangible results. The present German leaders believe it possible for the Americans and the British to go ahead with the European Army plan, and the so-called Bonn Conventions, even without French agreement. The Bonn Conventions would give to Western Germany the essence of sovereignty. They would terminate the occupation statute, and lift certain restructions in fields such as civil aviation, scientific research and industrial capacity. They would eliminate the Allied High Commission, with its veto power over the actions of the German Government.

Such an Anglo-American declaration would have great psychological appeal, and create the impression in Germany that forward movement is possible. As things stand now, the Germans feel that they are not permitted to move one inch off dead center. They are not allowed to begin even the most preliminary non-military preparations for their ultimate defense force. They can't even start building barracks for the troops that might be called up a year from now. Hottelet reports that responsible Germans are coming to the conclusion that it is impossible for Germany or for Europe to continue the present aimless drifting. The pressure upon Adenauer from extreme nationalist sources is increasing. For example, the deputy chairman of Adenauer's own Christian Democratic Party decided yesterday that the convention for the election of the President of Germany next month shall be held in Berlin. Chancellor Adenauer opposed this decision, but his deputy made it under pressure of those who want to make this convention a great emotional occasion directed at Eastern Germany. Adenauer is by nature opposed to emotional demonstrations, and he wants Germany to lie low during the next few months, wait and see what happens; but he has clearly suffered a reverse due to the impatient pressure of nationalist forces within his own Party. Adenauer is a moderate man, committed to the idea of European unity and a European Army. But in Germany, as elsewhere, moderate politicians whose policies produce no tangible results come under fire from both the extreme left and the extreme right. Yesterday Adenauer's Party lost its absolute majority in the German Parliament by the defection of one member who was dissatisfied with Adenauer's moderation on refugee affairs, the Saar and the eastern territories. The German Chancellor still retains a huge coalition majority, his government is in no immediate danger, but there are visible signs of increased friction between the Chancellor and his partners in the coalition. This friction arises from Adenauer's unequivocal committment to the Western World, his efforts to reach an agreement with France over the Saar, and the fact that his policy of associating Germany completely with the Western Powers has so far produced no tangibl results or increased stature; no more security or freedom of maneuver for the German Government. Adenauer's political resources are not inexhaustible, and time will not stand still for him indefinitely. If the policy of moderation, of close and complete cooperation with Western Europe fails, then German politics and German history combine to shout that they will try more extreme measures.

Hottelet concludes his cable by saying that what Adenauer and his followers need right now is a gust of encouragement from the West.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As my colleague Dick Hottelet pointed out, the German people and the Adenauer government are looking for renewed signs of cooperation and encouragement from the West. Shakespeare once remarked that "the miserable have no other medicine but hope." Disraeli put it another way when he said: "Every production of genius must be the production of enthusiams."

Good Night and Good Luck!

code Edition

Thursday June 17, 1954

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings have ended..after 36 days..with each side maintaining its original position. And as the committee members made their last statements , Republican Senator Potter of Michigan issued a statement saying he will demand that top officials on both sides of the argument be fired. He feels "the principal accusation on each side was borne out by the testimony". And he believes there may have been perjury in the testimony. In the concluding testimony, Senator Mc Carthy at one point charged that the Democrats "connived" to bring the hearing about..said they miss no opportunity to halt the exposure of Communists. And at another point McCarthy offered to co-operate with the Democratic committeeman in the future. The Senator said the Democrats "shoved and goaded" Army Secretary Stevens into making his charges. He says the Democrats will "suffer and bleed" for this. And Democratic Senator McClelland said the Administration and the Republican party have proved their lack of capacity to conduct the affairs of government without turmoil. Mc Carthy promised to start seven new investigations into alleged communist infiltration of the government as soon as he's had a few days rest. And in the closing moments

Army Counsel Welch again attempted to prove, that the memorandum from the McCarthy side was not authentic. In a few minutes we'll hear portions of two of the concluding speeches by committee members.

Democratic Senator Lehman today started a new move to strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanships. He charged McCarthy has "grossly abused" his [redacted] authority, and "created public disrespect for Congress." The Lehman resolution, like a similar one by Republican Senator Flanders was sent to the rules committee. There is little chance that either will come out of that committee.

And Attorney General Brownell, in a speech, charged that Senator McCarthy's invitation to federal workers to give him information they may have on Communism, is an action that would "substitute government [redacted] by an individual, for government by law.

The Senate today approved a military budget of more than 29 billion dollars, for the fiscal year starting July first. Approval came on a voice vote, after Democrats failed in a move to add another 350-millions to the budget..to prevent a planned cut-back of two divisions in the army's strength. The Senate bill calls for about a half billion more than a similar bill approved by the House.

~~The air force today placed all of its heavy bombers in the Far East under the Strategic Air Command. They'll be moved to bases in Guam. This will give them protection behind a radar screen against any~~

~~surprise attack. And it should relieve the Japanese from worrying whether they might be the target of a major retaliatory attacks should war come to the Far East.~~

The House Foreign Affairs committee today approved a proposal to deny aid to Italy and France, unless they join the European army.

And the House of Representatives, after voting two months ago to end the public housing program, today decided to keep it alive, at least temporarily.

The State Department says that friendly countries are co-operating with us to prevent the shipment of new cargoes of arms to Guatemala. ~~And we are trying to set up an embargo against the sale or delivery of arms to the Communist-dominated country, by working through major shipping nations.~~

A Federal jury in Washington today found Puerto Rican extremist Lolita Lebron, innocent of having any intent to kill, when she and three male defendents, shot up the House of Representatives last March. The woman faces as much as 50 years in prison because yesterday she was found guilty of assault with a dangerous weapon. The men, guilty on both counts face as much as 75 years in prison.

At Geneva today, the United States and France agreed to go along with the French and indefinitely extend the talks on Indo-China. But the negotiations will be conducted by "second teams" from Washington and London.

In Paris, premier designate Pierre Mendes-France asked the National Assembly to confirm him. He promised to end the war in Indo-China within a month or resign. The Communist deputies announced they will support him but Mendes-France said he will not accept any help from "those who refused to pay tribute to the heroic Dien Bien Phu Garrison."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that Communist China..recognized by the British more than four years ago.. has now decided to send a charge d'affaires and a diplomatic staff to London.

And now a recorded excerpt from the closing hour of the Army-Mc Carthy hearing. First, Chairman Mundt:

5/

Mundt - McClellan -

We have just listened to two of the many concluding statements made today as the hearings came to an end. The Committee meets in executive session tomorrow. But it is still too early to estimate when the conclusions will be made known.

This is Ed Murrow...I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today... But first, Bob Dixon

The hearings are at an end. And we must now await whatever conclusions are drawn from the 36 days of testimony. For those involved John Galsworthy once remarked:"There is nothing more tragic in life than the utter impossibility of changing what you have done." For those passing judgement, Emerson noted:"God offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please - you can never have both."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 17, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And now here is a recorded excerpt from the closing hour of the Army-McCarthy hearings. First you will hear from Chairman Mundt.

MUNDT: The chair will say that insofar as he's concerned, he believes we have adduced the essential facts, that are essential and necessary in the writing of a report. The chair believes that insofar as he is concerned, the American audience - some twenty million, we are told, on radio and television and nobody? know? how many more millions of the press - have followed these hearings more carefully and more generally than any hearings ever before held on Capitol Hill. I can assure our friends in the audience that they know what we know, and that our report will be based on facts which have met the eye or ...? thear of everybody interested in following the record. Insofar as the chair is concerned, he wants for himself to sit down quietly with the printed record, to search out certain statements and facts to be pieced together along with certain change of evidence. And when those change of evidence have been carefully analyzed, he believes that he will be able to do his part in writing a report, whether happily we can agree to have a one-package report or whether more realistically, perhaps, we will find ourselves writing two reports or perhaps different viewpoints from different individual members.

The chair would like to say one thing about a phase of this hearing, which has been discussed a great deal and that isthe fact that we have frequently diverted from what were originally the basic issues; that there have been irrelevancies and diversions nobody will question. Most of those have revolved around significant disputes wherein honest men have a perfect right to differ, and wherein honest men have been differing in the business of self government since its very inception. Those are differences involving the functions and the rights and the prerogatives of congressional committees, and the functions and prerogatives of the Executive. And while it may appear to some that arguments, which have on occasion been heated and sometimes unhappily personal, are a reflection on our American system of government, the chair believes quite the reverse to be the truth. We settle, in America, our arguments by an exchange of viewpoints, sometimes heated, sometimes unhappily personal, but we don't settle them as duelists do, we don't settle them at pistol point, we don't settle them with violence, we settle them by an appeal to the mind.

I think, too, that we should recognize that we are fortunate in this country that we can adjudicate a difference of this kind openly, publicly, even though it takes a tremendous amount of time. In the chair's opinion that's a demonstration that Americanism and freedom and self government in this country are made of pretty sturdy stuff.

Thank you for your cooperation. I join you in a sigh of relief that we have come to the end of this unpleasant business. Now, Senator McClellan I recognize you.

McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'M compelled to say that this has been one of the most disagreeable, one of the most difficult public services that it has ever been my duty to perform. I had no animosity toward anyone, toward any individual when these hearings began. I think that I can say without any reservation whatsoever that I hold no animosity now towards anyone involved in the proceedings. I did say inthe beginning, Mr. Chairman, in that pre-statement I made when you opened these hearings, that the charges and the counter-charges that gave rise to this controversy were of such a grave nature as to make these proceedings mandatory. I think that statement was true. I also said that the charges and the accusations were so diametrically in conflict that as I saw it then they could not possibly be reconciled. I do not believe the testimony that has been given here over these long weeks can be under any process of reasoning reconciled. I further stated at the beginning of the hearings, Mr. Chairman, that we, the Democrat members, would wholeheartedly undertake to cooperate with and assist the majority in making these hearings impartial, fairand thorough, to the end that that which is true (sic) which was true might be revealed, and that which is false exposed without regard to the personalities that might be involved.

Mr. Chairman, I trust I have kept that pledge. You, my colleagues on this committee, the personalities involved in the controversy, this audience, and above all - the American people, who have witnessed this proceedings - they be my judge as to whetherI've been sincere and conscientious and faithful to try and perform this trust. But I am compelled to say in disillusion, Mr. Chairman, that the series of events, actions and conduct that precipitatedthe ugly but serious charges and countercharges have made these lengthy and unpleasant public hearings mandatory, I think will be recognized and long remembered as one of the most disgraceful episodes in the history of our government.

MURROW: We have just listened to two of the many concluding statements made today as the hearings came to an end...

(30)

Ed. trans. P.O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Army-McCarthy hearings have ended after 36 days, with each side maintaining its original position. And as the committee members made their last statements, Republican Senator Potter of Michigan issued a statement saying he will demand that top officials on both sides of the argument be fired. He feels "the principal accusation on each side was borne out by the testimony." And he believes there may have been perjury in the testimony. In the concluding testimony, Senator McCarthy at one point charged that the Democrats "connived" to bring the hearing about, said they miss no opportunity to halt the exposure of Communists. And at another point McCarthy offered to cooperate with the Democratic committeeman in the future. The Senator said the Democrats "shoved and goaded" Army Secretary Stevens into making his charges. He says the Democrats will "suffer and bleed" for this. And Democratic Senator McClelland said the Administration and the Republican party have proved their lack of capacity to conduct the affairs of government without turmoil. McCarthy promised to start seven new investigations into alleged communist infiltration of the government as soon as he's had a few days rest. And in the closing moments Army Counsel Welch again attempted to prove that the memorandum from the McCarthy side was not authentic. In a few minutes we'll hear portions of two of the concluding speeches by committee members.

Democratic Senator Lehman today started a new move to strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanships. He charged McCarthy has "grossly abused" his authority and "created public disrespect for Congress." The Lehman resolution, like a similar one by Republican Senator Flanders was sent to the rules committee. There is little chance that either will come out of that committee. And Attorney General Brownell in a speech charged that Senator McCarthy's invitation to federal workers to give him information they may have on Communism is an action that would "substitute government by an individual for government by law.

The Senate today approved a military budget of more than 29 billion dollars for the fiscal year starting July first. Approval came on a voice vote after Democrats failed in a move to add another 350-millions to the budget to prevent a planned cut-back of two divisions in the army's strength. The Senate bill calls for about a half billion more than a similar bill approved by the House.

The House Foreign Affairs committee today approved a proposal to deny aid to Italy and France unless they join the European army.

And the House of Representatives, after voting two months ago to end the public housing program, today decided to keep it alive at least temporarily.

The State Department says that friendly countries are cooperating with us to prevent the shipment of new cargoes of arms to Guatemala.

A Federal jury in Washington today found Puerto Rican extremist Lolita Lebron innocent of having any intent to kill when she and three male defendents shot up the House of Representatives last March. The woman faces as much as 50 years in prison because yesterday she was found guilty of assault with a dangerous weapon. The men, guilty on both counts, face as much as 75 years in prison.

At Geneva today, the United States and France agreed to go along with the French and indefinitely extend the talks on Indo-China. But the negotiations will be conducted by "second teams" from Washington and London.

In Paris, premier designate Pierre Mendes-France asked the National Assembly to confirm him. He promised to end the war in Indo-China within a month or resign. The Communist deputies announced they will support him, but Mendes-France said he will not accept any help from "those who refused to pay tribute to the heroic Dien Bien Phu Garrison."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that Communist China, recognized by the British more than four years ago has not decided to send a charge d'affaires and a diplomatic staff to London.

And now a recorded excerpt from the closing hour of the Army-McCarthy hearing. First, Chairman Mundt:

MUNDT: The chair will say that insofar as he's concerned, he believes we have adduced the essential facts, that are essential and necessary in the writing of a report. The chair believes that insofar as he is concerned, the American audience - some twenty million, we are told, on radio and television and nobody knows how many more millions of the press - have followed these hearings more carefully and more generally than any hearings ever before held on Capitol Hill. I can assure our friends in the audience that they know what we know, and that our report will be based on facts which have met the eye or the ear of everybody interested in following the record. Insofar as the chair is concerned, he wants for himself to sit down quietly with the printed record, to search out certain statements and facts to be pieced together along with certain change of evidence. And when those change of evidence have been carefully analyzed, he believes that he will be able to do his part in writing a report, whether happily we can agree to have a one-package report or whether more realistically, perhaps, we will find ourselves writing two reports or perhaps different viewpoints from different individual members. The chair would like to say one thing about a phase of this hearing, which has been discussed a great deal and that is the fact that we have frequently diverted from what were originally the basic issues; that there have been irrelevancies and diversions nobody will question. Most of those have revolved around significant disputes wherein honest men have a perfect right to differ, and wherein honest men have been differing in the business of self government since its very inception. Those are differences involving the functions and the rights and the prerogatives of congressional committees and the functions and prerogatives of the Executive. And while it may appear to some that arguments, which have on occasion been heated and sometimes unhappily personal, are a reflection on our American system of government, the chair believes quite the reverse to be the truth. We settle, in America, our arguments by an exchange of viewpoints, sometimes heated, sometimes unhappily personal, but we don't settle them as duelists do, we don't settle them at pistol point, we don't settle them with violence, we settle them by an appeal to the mind.

I think, too, that we should recognize that we are fortunate in this country that we can adjudicate a difference of this kind openly, publicly, even though it it takes a tremendous amount of time. In the chair's opinion that's a demonstration that Americanism and freedom and self government in this country are made of pretty sturdy stuff. Thank you for your cooperation. I join you in a sigh of relief that we have come to the end of this unpleasant business. Now, Senator McClellan I recognize you.

MC CLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'm compelled to say that this has been one of the most disagreeable, one of the most difficult public services that it has ever been my duty to perform. I had no animosity toward anyone, toward any individual when these hearings began. I think that I can say without any reservation whatsoever that I hold no animosity now towards anyone involved in the proceedings. I did say in the beginning, Mr. Chairman, in that pre-statement I made when you opened these hearings, that the charges and the counter-charges that gave rise to this controversy were of such a grave nature as to make these proceedings mandatory. I think that statement was true. I also said that the charges and the accusations were so diametrically in conflict that as I saw it then they could not possibly be reconciled. I do not believe the testimony that has been given here over these long weeks can be under any process of reasoning reconciled. I further stated at the beginning of the hearings, Mr. Chairman, that we, the Democrat members, would wholeheartedly undertake to cooperate with and assist the majority in making these hearings impartial, fair and thorough, to the end that which is true (sic) which was true might be revealed, and that which is false exposed without regard to the personalities that might be involved. Mr. Chairman, I trust I have kept that pledge. You, my colleagues on this committee, the personalities involved in the controversy, this audience, and above all-the American people, who have witnessed this proceedings - they be my judge as to whether I've been sincere and conscientious and faithful to try and perform this trust. But I am compelled to say in disillusion, Mr. Chairman, that the series of events, actions and conduct that precipitated the ugly but serious charges and counter charges have made these lengthy and unpleasant public hearings mandatory, I think will be recognized and long remembered as one of the most disgraceful episodes in the history of our government.

MURROW: We have just listened to two of the many concluding statements made today as the hearings came to an end. The Committee meets in executive session tomorrow. But it is still too early to estimate when the conclusions will be made known.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The hearings are at an end. And we must now await whatever conclusions are drawn from the 36 days of testimony. For those involved, John Galsworthy once remarked: "There is nothing more tragic in life than the utter impossibility of changing what you have done." For those passing judgment, Emerson noted: "Got offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please - you can never have both."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday June 18, 1954

This is the news:

The new French premier, Pierre Mendez-France, today called on his people for moral support. In a radio broadcast to the nation, Mendez-France said: "The time has come to rid ourselves of our incredulities, of our divisions, of our timidities." The new premier..whose proposals I'd like to review in a few minutes..is reported ready to fly to Geneva to join the Indo-China talks. And his aides say he may seek an invitation to the White House to follow next week's visit of Prime Minister Churchill. President Eisenhower today assured French President Coty that we are willing to work with the new French government toward the defense of Europe and in Indo-China.

In Geneva, Assistant Secretary of State Robertson charged today that at least 15 Viet Minh battalions have now invaded the states of Laos and Cambodia. And the Chinese communist premier, Chou en lai, refused to admit that there are any "foreign troops" in the two kingdoms.

At the United Nations, the Russians vetoed a Security Council proposal to send "peace observers" to the Indo-China border. The Russians say the United States supported this "to widen the conflict in Indo-China." Ambassador Lordge called the Soviet veto another example of Russian contempt for the opinions of mankind. And Secretary of State Dulles said it shows again how empty are the Soviet professions of peace.

Five American air force technicians are now missing in Indo-China. They were last seen heading off-limits in the direction of a bathing beach north of Hanoi. A Native reported seeing the men marching with Sengalese prisoners. And allied officials in Saigon believe they may be in Communist hands.

Democratic Senator Stennis of Mississippi charged today that the Defense Department, in effect, has violated "a solemn promise" to remove all 200 air force technicians from Indo-China by June 12th.

The Mundt committee met today to start considering a report on the Army-McCarthy hearing. The committee made no decisions. But the Democratic members..with McClellan of Arkansas as the spokesman called for action by the Executive Branch of government and by the committee. McClellan wants the Justice department to decide if perjury was committed at the hearings..and if so, to take action. He wants the Justice Department to determine if a crime was committed in connection with the two-and-a-quarter page document submitted by Senator McCarthy..and he wants the Executive department to weigh the testimony, and take what action is necessary against the executive department members, who were principals in the case: army secretary Stevens, Counsel Adams and Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel. McClellan also wants the committee to do something about two members of its staff who, he says, have not received Defense Department clearance--although it was requested more than a year ago. He also wants action on "the alleged threats" by staff members against SENATORS on the committee. [redacted]. And McClellan insists, that until this is done, there should be no further action by the McCarthy committee.

Senator McCarthy calls all this "clever, dishonest and extremely dangerous to the country"...says its an attempt to immobilize his committee..that the Democrats are trying to "keep us from investigating." And later the Senator told reporters he is investigating what he called "very serious charges" against a Democratic Senator. [redacted]n't [redacted]mitee [redacted]. He said the charges do not concern Communism..and the Senator IN QUESTION is not a member of his investigating committee.

New York's Governor Dewey said today that loyalty boards and the attorney general are "the only people who really do anything" to get Communists out of government.

The President today signed a bill giving the armed services authority to deny commissions to drafted doctors and dentists who are considered security risks. This grew out of the Major Peress case. (the officer given an honorable discharge after he refused to answer McCarthy committee ~~questions~~ questions.)

~~The Defense Department today made public a modified universal military training plan calling for a reserve force of 3 million trained men to be "immediately available" in the event of war. It calls for a continuation of the draft for an indefinite period...with drafted men to serve for two years and then be "forced" to serve six years in a reserve unit.~~

The British Foreign Office said today Britain will refuse to let American warships stop and search British merchant vessels for arms shipments bound for Guatemala. But the British promise "to co-operate to the fullest extent possible" to prevent ANY such arms trade.

And in Guatemala tonight, the Foreign minister told reporters: Guatemala is being bombed by unidentified planes, in what he called "the criminal invasion of our country." He said the planes hit oil storage tanks on the southwest Pacific coast. And he said troops mobilized on the Honduran border...Guatamalan exiles, and Cuban, and other "mercanaries"...are ready to invade the Communist ~~led~~ dominated country.

Edward R. Murrow: June 18, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

For France to put a premier into office with a huge majority is so unusual as to be almost incredible. It suggests that observers in France May have been all wrong about the Assembly being hopelessly divided on the big issues of the day. But a study of the victory of Pierre Mendes-France shows it to be not only credible but almost unavoidable. He made a series of propositions which the Assembly simply could not turn down, that is, except on purely personal grounds. And that was not called for since the new premier is one of the most respected men in French life.

The most important of his proposals was about peace in Indochina. He promised to resign if he does not obtain a truce on honorable terms by July twentieth. He did not say in detail what honorable terms would be. But he pledged that France would remain in Asia,- that security would be provided for the French forces in Indochina,- and that French strength there would not be reduced. So if he fails, and has to resign on July 20th, he guaranteed that his successor will not fall heir to a weakened position. He also promised that the peace would be made together with the Associated States and France's allies, which is another way of saying it will not be a capitulation.

It is too soon to foresee how he will fare with this proposal. If he is to succeed, the Communists will have to make better terms than they offered Monsieur Bidault. ~~Maybe they will, to keep their propaganda position~~ in their home ~~countries of being the side that really wants peace.~~ But it is not to be overlooked that they refused acceptable terms to Bidault simply to bring down the Laniel government. They wanted discord and confusion among the Allies more than they wanted a compromise peace. Beside, they didn't think they needed to compromise, as they felt sure that eventually they would get all that they want in Indochina. They dragged things out in Geneva so that the necessary military progress could be made in Indochina.

But there can be no dragging things out with Premier Mendes-France. He has set a deadline. He must have his truce by July 20th. And he has limited himself as to the kind of terms he can accept. So it remains to be seen whether the Communists like a government under Mendes-France better than one under Laniel. The Communists will have noted that the new premier, in a second proposal, promised to produce an acceptable compromise on a European Army containing Germans. That does not endear him to the Communists. Neither does the fact that he insisted on having his absolute majority in the Assembly without counting the communists who voted for him in a body. This is a government somewhat to the left of the preceding ones. But it is far from being what Moscow wants - a neutralist government.

The proposal Mendes-France made about the European Army was simply to try to get the various factions to unite on a compromise amending the Defense Community treaty in some respects. Failing in this he promised to lay his own solution before the Assembly himself. And again he set a deadline. The new solution is to be ready before the August recess. And if it is not accepted he will resign.

His third proposal was about economic reforms. The new premier intends to save money on military expenditure. He wants France to live within its resources and income. He promises to maintain the Atlantic Alliance, but also to make France independent of American aid. Here again he did not say how this was to come about. But he will lay a program before the Assembly by July 20th, and if it is not accepted he will resign.

So the life of his government hangs by a thread of three strands, and if any of the strands break, the thread breaks, and Mendes-France will be out. Actually he did not produce a single solution of the major problems. All he did was to promise to prepare the solutions before a given date. So the Assembly did not agree to solutions, it agreed only to give him a few weeks to find them all. So it is assuming a great deal to predict that he will succeed in all three of his tasks in the time set.

But even if the victory of Mendes-France is not quite as significant as it may appear, he counts as one of the most convincing and attractive premiers of recent times. He is not an imposing man physically, nor even a forceful orator. His speeches are quiet and sometimes marked with slight hesitation. But he is uncommonly lucid and uncommonly candid. And he has character. He showed that he is not merely ambitious when yesterday he had the premiership clinched, thanks to the support of the Communists, and frankly told the Assembly it must not have a government depending on communists dedicated to the interests of the foe with whom he has to bargain.

He is a young premier - 47. But being distinguished by his youth is not new for him. He was the youngest lawyer in France at 23, the youngest member of Parliament at 25, and at 30 was Under-Secretary in the government of Leon Blum. At 37 he was Finance Commissioner in De Gaulle's Committee of National Liberation. At 40 he was President of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund.

The younger generation in France dotes on him. As long as it keeps its faith in him he is sure of a future of great influence, not only in France but far beyond its borders.

We were talking of the victory of Mendes-France, and the opportunity he has of becoming a significant figure in world politics. William Simms once remarked that "he who would acquire fame, must not show himself afraid of courage." For as ~~Henry Wadsworth~~ Longfellow noted: "Fame comes only when deserved, and then it is as inevitable as destiny, for it is destiny."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The new French premier, Pierre Mendez-France, today called on his people for moral support. In a radio broadcast to the nation, Mendez-France said: "The time has come to rid ourselves of our incredulities, of our divisions, of our timidities." The new premier, whose proposals I'd like to review in a few minutes is reported ready to fly to Geneva to join the Indo-China talks. And his aides say he may seek an invitation to the White House to follow next week's visit of Prime Minister Churchill. President Eisenhower today assured French President Coty that we are willing to work with the new French government toward the defense of Europe and in Indo-China.

In Geneva, Assistant Secretary of State Robertson charged today that at least 15 Viet Minh battalions have now invaded the states of Laos and Cambodia. And the Chinese communist premier, Chou en lai, refused to admit that there are any "foreign troops" in the two kingdoms.

At the United Nations, the Russians vetoed a Security Council proposal to send "peace observers" to the Indo-China border. The Russians say the United States supported this "to widen the conflict in Indo-China." Ambassador Lodge called the Soviet veto another example of Russian contempt for the opinions of mankind. And Secretary of State Dulles said it shows again how empty are the Soviet professions of peace.

Five American air force technicians are now missing in Indo-China. They were last seen heading off-limits in the direction of a bathing beach north of Hanoi. A Native reported seeing the men marching with Bengalese prisoners. And allied officials in Saigon believe they may be in Communist hands.

Democratic Senator Stennis of Mississippi charged today that the Defense Department, in effect, has violated "a solemn promise" to remove all 200 air force technicians from Indo-China by June 12th.

The Mundt committee met today to start considering a report on the Army-McCarthy hearing. The committee made no decisions. But the Democratic members, with McClellan of Arkansas, as the spokesman, called for action by the Executive Branch of government and by the committee. McClellan wants the Justice Department to decide if perjury was committed at the hearings, and if so, to take action. He wants the Justice Department to determine if a crime was committed in connection with the two-and-a-quarter page document submitted by Senator McCarthy and he wants the Executive Department to weigh the testimony and take what action is necessary against the executive department members who were "principals" in the case: army secretary Stevens, Counsel Adams, and Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel. McClellan also wants the committee to do something about two members of its staff who, he says, have not received Defense Department clearance - although it was requested more than a year ago. He also wants action on "the alleged threats" by staff members against Senators on the committee. And McClellan insists that until this is done, there should be no further action by the McCarthy committee.

Senator McCarthy calls this "clever, dishonest and extremely dangerous to the country" - says its an attempt to immobilize his committee that the Democrats are trying to "keep us from investigating." And later the Senator told reporters he is investigating what he called "very serious charges" against a Democratic Senator. He said the charges do not concern Communism and the Senator in question is not a member of his investigating committee.

New York's Governor Dewey said today that loyalty boards and the attorney general are "the only people who really do anything" to get Communists out of government.

The President today signed a bill giving the armed services authority to deny commissions to drafted doctors and dentists who are considered security risks. This grew out of the Major Peress case - the officer given an honorable discharge after he refused to answer McCarthy committee questions.

The British Foreign Office said today Britain will refuse to let American warships stop and search British merchant vessels for arms shipments bound for Guatemala. But the British promise to cooperate to the fullest extent possible to prevent any such arms trade.

And in Guatemala tonight, the Foreign minister told reporters: Guatemala is being bombed by unidentified planes in what he called "the criminal invasion of our country." He said the planes hit oil storage tanks on the southwest Pacific coast. And he said troops mobilized on the Honduran border - Guatamalan exiles and Cuban, and other "mercanaries" are ready to invade the Communist-dominated country.

For France to put a premier into office with a huge majority is so unusual as to be almost incredible. It suggests that observers in France may have been all wrong about the Assembly being hopelessly divided on the big issues of the day. But a study of the victory of Pierre Mendez-France shows it to be not only credible but almost unavoidable. He made a series of propositions which the Assembly simply could not turn down, that is, except on purely personal grounds. And that was not called for since the new premier is one of the most respected men in French life. The most important of his proposals was about peace in Indochina. He promised to resign if he does not obtain a truce on honorable terms by July twentieth. He did not say in detail what honorable terms would be. But he pledged that France would remain in Asia, that security would be provided for the French forces in Indo-China, and that French strength there would not be reduced. So if he fails, and has to resign on July 20th, he guaranteed that his successor will not fall heir to a weakened position. He also promised that the peace would be made together with the Associated States and France's allies, which is another way of saying it will not be a capitulation. It is too soon to foresee how he will fare with this proposal. If he is to succeed, the Communists will have to make better terms than they offered Monsieur Bidault. But it is not to be overlooked that they refused acceptable terms to Bidault simply to bring down the Laniel government. They wanted discord and confusion among the Allies more than they wanted a compromise peace. Beside, they didn't think they needed to compromise, as they felt sure that eventually they would get all that they want in Indochina. They dragged things out in Geneva so that the necessary military progress could be made in Indochina. But there can be no dragging things out with Premier Mendes-France. He has set a deadline. He must have his truce by July 20th. And he has limited himself as to the kind of terms he can accept. So it remains to be seen whether the Communists like a government under Mendes-France better than one under Laniel. The Communists will have noted that the new premier, in a second proposal, promised to produce an acceptable compromise on a European Army containing Germans. That does not endear him to the Communists. Neither does the fact that he insisted on having his absolute majority in the Assembly without counting the Communists who voted for him in a body. This is a government somewhat to the left of the preceding ones. But it is far from being what Moscow wants - a neutralist government.

The proposal Mendes-France made about the European Army was simply to try to get the various factions to unite on a compromise amending the Defense Community treaty in some respects. Failing in this he promised to lay his own solution before the Assembly himself. And again he set a deadline. The new solution is to be ready before the August recess. And if it is not accepted he will resign. His third proposal was about economic reforms. The new premier intends to save money on military expenditure. He wants France to live within its resources and income. He promises to maintain the Atlantic Alliance, but also to make France independent of American aid. Here again he did not say how this was to come about. But he will lay a program before the Assembly by July 20th, and if it is not accepted he will resign. So the life of his government hangs by a thread of three strands, and if any of the strands break, the thread breaks, and Mendes-France will be out. Actually he did not produce a single solution of the major problems. All he did was to promise to prepare the solutions before a given date. So the Assembly did not agree to solutions, it agreed only to give him a few weeks to find them all. So it is assuming a great deal to predict that he will succeed in all three of his tasks in the time set. But even if the victory of Mendes-France is not quite as significant as it may appear, he counts as one of the most convincing and attractive premiers of recent times. He is not an imposing man physically, nor even a forceful orator. His speeches are quiet and sometimes marked with slight hesitation. But he is uncommonly lucid and uncommonly candid. And he has character. He showed that he is not merely ambitious when yesterday he had the premiership clinched, thanks to the support of the Communists, and frankly told the Assembly it must not have a government depending on communists dedicated to the interests of the foe with whom he has to bargain.

He is a young premier - 47. But being distinguished by his youth is not new for him. He was the youngest lawyer in France at 23, the youngest member of Parliament at 25, and at 30 was Under-Secretary in the government of Leon Blum. At 37 he was Finance Commissioner in De Gaulle's Committee of National Liberation. At 40 he was President of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund.

The Younger generation in France dotes on him. As long as it keeps its faith in him he is sure of a future of great influence, not only in France but far beyond its borders.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the victory of Mendes-France and the opportunity he has of becoming a significant figure in world politics. William Simms once remarked that "he who would acquire fame must not show himself afraid of courage." For as Longfellow noted: "Fame comes only when deserved and then it is as inevitable as destiny, for it is destiny."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, June 21, 1954

This is the news:

The Inter-American Peace Commission today agreed to Guatemala's request, to temporarily suspend consideration of Guatamela's complaint, charging "foreign aggression" against her.

~~This is the news:~~

~~[redacted] any~~

~~action [redacted]~~ Guatemala wants the Commission to keep the matter pending.. until it can observe results of yesterday's Security Council action. The United Nations voted unanimously for a cease-fire, and for all U.N. members to withhold aid from both the government and rebel forces in Guatemala. The Russians vetoed a move to place the whole matter before the Organization of American states.

Reports from Honduras indicate that the opposing forces in Guatemala may fight a battle at a town called Zacapa...20 miles inside the country. Forces from both sides appear to be heading in that direction. Today the Communist-dominated government said Guatemala city is calm... the army and police are in full control...businessmen were urged to re-open their businesses..parents to send their children back to school. And from the rebel-invaders there came radio reports that: their planes had bombed an army garrison at Coban, in Central Guatemala..from a base "inside" the country. ~~[redacted]~~ The rebels also warned the Guatemala army to keep off roads in the western part of the country. One report from the secret rebel radio threatened a fourth one-plane attack on the capital; another said the next attack on the capital would come from the invading infantry. And the rebel radio says its campaign is "progressing with magnificent success." A LATE GOVERNMENT COMMUNIQUE SAYS REBEL FORCES HAVE BEEN THROWN BACK IN THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE WAR.

And the State Department says many reports on what's going on in Guatemala are exaggerated.. The Department has received no new solid information since Saturday ..when it reported disturbances in three areas.

In Indo-China today, French forces pushed through a series of Communist-controlled villages 18 miles from Hanoi.

And Undersecretary of State Smith, back in Washington, from the Geneva conference, says we'll continue "a sincere, patient effort to negotiate a peace settlement for Indo-China."

At Geneva today, the Chinese Communists told us they hold 15 American airmen among the 83 Americans we claim are being detained by the Chinese. The Communists say 14 flyers and one missionary are dead. As for the other Americans, the Chinese say 30 are in prison.. 12 are unaccounted for. We have agreed to permit 15 Chinese nationals to leave this country and return to Communist China.

The Peiping Radio said today that in one of the Chinese Communists' most drastic "reforms" six party leaders have been fired..including the commander in Korea.

In Washington today, Senator Mundt told reporters "you could of gone on with the army-McCarthy hearings for twenty years" and not get the whole truth. He believes all the salient facts have now emerged...but "you could never run down the last possible grain of evidence." Mundt "guesses" that the committee will turn down the request by Assistant Secretary of ~~State~~ Defense Hensel to dismiss charges against him and "rebuke" Senator McCarthy. ~~Committee Counsel Ray Jenkins, who is available to help write the committee report "as long as necessary."~~

And Republican Senator Flanders disagrees with reports that his request to the Senate to deprive McCarthy of his chairmanships "is dead." He says his resolution is "very much alive"..even though it has been referred to the rules committee.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today ordered almost a 13 per cent cut in the 1955 wheat output. And he imposed what the United Press calls "probably the stiffest across-the-board farm controls in history" to curb other mounting crop surpluses. ~~Benson has set up strict new mmmmmmm program to make sure that land taken out of wheat, corn, cotton and other surplus crops is not planted in other crops now piling up in government warehouses. Farmers who do not go along, would lose federal price supports.~~

Both houses of congress suspended their sessions today to mark the deaths of Democratic Senator Hunt of Wyoming who shot and fatally wounded himself; and Hawaiian Delegate Farrington who died of a heart attack.

The Federal Reserve Board today authorized member banks to reduce the amount of money they must hold in reserve. This is aimed at freeing more cash for borrowing and stimulating business.

The American Medical Association was told today that "a chain of circumstantial evidence" shows that more men who are regular cigaret smokers die of cancer and heart diseasees than NON-SMOKING men. The report was prepared by directors of the American Cancer Society. There is no comment from tobacco industry sources.

In Kansas City, former President Truman is making a satisfactory recovery after AN emergency operation in which his gall bladder and appendix were removed.

And in Finland, Australian John Landy ran the mile in three minutes and 58 seconds.. cutting one and a quarter seconds off Roger Bannister's mark.

One of the most successful air strikes of the European war occurred in August of 1943. It did as much as anything else to demonstrate the power and the importance of the long-range strategic air force. It was against a place called Peenemuende, up on the Baltic coast.

Edward R. Murrow: June 21, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

[redacted] That raid set back the Nazi rocket production by six months. Undoubtedly it had a dramatic effect on what is known as history. For if the V-2 program had been fully developed in time, the Allied landing in Normandy could have been prevented altogether. Without the invasion of Normandy the war would have come to a different ending. It is anybody's guess what the ending would have been, but certainly one of the guesses is that the Allies would have lost.

The occasion for my talking about this subject is the publication of a book, "V-2" by General Walter Dornberger, who was in charge of the German Army's rocket project. We already knew the end of the story, how Germany lost the war. Now we know more details about how and why. It wasn't only the air raid, though that clinched it. Another reason was because the project didn't get the support of Hitler in time. And one reason it didn't get it was because Hitler had a dream that the new-fangled rockets never would be operational against England. "I can rely on my inspirations" he told Albert Speer, his Minister of Munitions. "It is therefore pointless to give support to the project." The result was that top priority was withheld until six weeks before the Allied raid.

Other factors of delay now come to light. And these have almost a topical interest today. Dornberger's top scientist - Professor Wernher von Braun - and two of his top engineers, were denounced as security risks, arrested and whisked away to face possible execution. This is an incredible story, though Americans may not find it so impossible to believe. The charge against the three was that they were interested in rockets only for peacetime uses, as space ships, hence they were not putting their whole enthusiasm into developing them for the war. The charges were fantastic and had their origin in stray and twisted remarks made to townspeople in Peenemuende. The evidence was gathered by security officers working for an eminent Nazi official engaged in a gigantic plot to increase his power. He wanted to get hold of the rocket project, and to do this he had to discredit the army. The plotter was Heinrich Himmler, and he partly succeeded. But General Dornberger finally was able to get his indispensable men out of prison, though by then more precious time had been lost. The incident shows how a drive for security, made to serve the ambition of a political plotter, could on this occasion result in the opposite of security.

A further cause of delay was some plotting by Hitler's own staff to get the rocket project out of the hands of the army. In the course of this intrigue, dictatorial authority at Peenemuende was given a civilian, with no experience in war administration, and no knowledge of the science or the techniques used in making rockets. It brought production almost to a standstill. This kind of intrigue was characteristic of Hitler's Germany. The inefficiency caused by plotting for power, almost reached the state of sabotage. In part it was the fault of Hitler for being half-mad. But probably the result would have been similar, had he been as wise as he thought he was.

It is something of a mystery how so much got done. The rockets never did reach their full potential destructiveness, but even in this chaos, forty-three hundred were operationally launched, fifteen hundred of them against England. If this number had been available at the time the troops and equipment were concentrated in the southern ports for the invasion, they would have spelled disaster for the Allies. If the project had been pushed in what General Dornberger calls the "lost two years", (1939-1941), and if top priority had not been withheld for eighteen months, history would have been uncrecognizably different.

The chief factor that saved the Allies was the air raid, and the chief factor in making the air raid possible at the right place was an English woman. She was Constance Babington-Smith, a flight officer in the Royal Air Force. Through sheer ability she had become head of the Allied Central Photographic Intelligence assigned to the Supreme Allied Headquarters. A study of air maps led her to notice a faint spot and a tiny, shadowy cross on a photograph of the Peenemuende region. The Allies knew Hitler's secret weapon was being made somewhere. Thanks to this woman's eyes they concluded that Peenemuende might be the place. So Peenemuende was thoroughly smashed.

In this way Miss Babington-Smith had a key part in making history and making it in a sensational way. One may ask what her reward has been. She was in the 1945 honors list as Member of the Order of the British Empire, Military Division, and she had a back-page interview in the New York Times when she visited New York that year. Not much glory, you may say. But making history is its own reward, and Constance Babington-Smith, though not wholly unsung, shared with others in obscurity the satisfaction of making much of the history in those years.

General Dornberger, in his book "V-2" made a considerable effort to give full credit to the intelligence work of Flight Officer Constance Babington-Smith. This reminds me of something Pliny the Younger once said:"I hold it a noble task to rescue from oblivion those who deserve to be eternally remembered." For, as Pierre Van Paassen remarked:"History is sometimes the shadow of a great man or woman."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 21, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Inter-American Peace Commission today agreed to Guatemala's request to temproarily suspend consideration of Guatamela's complaint charging "foreign aggressio against her. Guatemala wants the Commission to keep the matter pending until it can observe results of yesterday's Security Council action. The United Nations voted unanimously for a cease-fire and for all U.N. members to withhold aid from both the government and rebel forces in Guatemala. The Russians vetoed a move to place the whole matter before the Organization of American states.

Reports from Honduras indicate that the opposing forces in Guatemala may fight a battle at a town called Zacapa - 20 miles inside the country. Forces from both sides appear to be heading in that direction. Today the Communist-dominated government said Guatemala city is calm - the army and police are in full control - businessmen were urged to re-open their businesses - parents to send their children back to school. And from the rebel-invaders there came radio reports that: their planes had bombed an army garrison at Coban, in Central Guatemala from a base "inside" the country. The rebels also warned the Guatemala army to keep off roads in the western part of the country. One report from the secret rebel radio threatened a fourth one-plane attack on the capital; another said the next attack on the capital would come from the invading infantry. And the rebel radio says its campaign is "progressing with magnificent success." A late government communique says rebel forces have been thrown back in the first battle of the war. And the State Department says many reports on what's going on in Guatemala are exaggerated. The Department has received no new solid information since Saturday when it reported disturbances in three areas.

In Indo-China today, French forces pushed through a series of Communist-controlled villages 18 miles from Hanoi.

And Undersecretary of State Smith, back in Washington, from the Geneva conference says we'll continue "a sincere, patient effort to negotiate a peace settlement for Indo-China."

At Geneva today, the Chinese Communists told us they hold 15 American airmen among the 83 Americans we claim are being detained by the Chinese. The Communists say 14 flyers and one missionary are dead. As for the other Americans the Chinese say 30 are in prison - 12 are unaccounted for. We have agreed to permit 15 Chinese nationals to leave this country and return to Communist China.

The Peiping Radio said today that in one of the Chinese Communists most drasti "reforms" six party leaders have been fired including the commander in Korea.

In Washington today, Senator Mundt told reporters "you could have gone on with the Army-McCarthy hearings for twenty years" and not get the whole truth. He believes all the salient facts have now emerged but "you could never run down the last possible grain of evidence." Mundt "guesses" that the committee will turn down the request by Assistant Secretary of Defense Hensel to dismiss charges against him nad "rebuke" Senator McCarthy.

And Republican Senator Flanders disagrees with reports that his request to the Senate to deprive McCarthy of his chairmanships "is dead." He says his resolutic is "very much alive" even though it has been referred to the rules committee.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today ordered almost a 13 percent cut in the 1955 wheat output. And he imposed what the United Press calls "probably the stiffest across-the-board farm controls in history" to curb other mounting crop surpluses.

Both houses of Congress suspended their sessions today to mark the deaths of Democratic Senator Hunt of Wyoming who shot and fatally wounded himself and Hawaiian Delegate Farrington who died of a heart attack.

The Federal Reserve Board today authorized member banks to reduce the amount of money they must hold in reserve. This is aimed at freeing more cash for borrowing and stimulating business.

The American Medical Association was told today that "a chain of circumstantia evidence" shows that more men who are regular cigarett smokers die of cancer and heart diseases than non-smoking men. The report was prepared by directors of the American Cancer Society. There is no comment from tobacco industry sources.

In Kansas City, former President Truman is making a satisfactory recovery after an emergency operation in which his gall bladder and appendix were removed.

And in Finland, Australian John Landy ran the mile in three minutes and 58 seconds cutting one and a quarter seconds off Roger Bannister's mark.

One of the most successful air strikes of the European war occurred in August of 1943. It did as much as anything else to demonstrate the power and the importance of the long-range strategic air force. It was against a place called Peenemuende, up on the Baltic coast.

That raid set back the Naxi rocket production by six months. Undoubtedly it had a dramatic effect on what is known as history. For if the V-2 program had been fully developed in time, the Allied landing in Normandy could have been prevented altogether. Without the invasion of Normandy the war would have come to a different ending. It is anybody's guess what the ending would have been, but certainly one of the guesses is that the Allies would have lost. The occasion for my talking about this subject is the publication of a book, "V-2" by General Walter Dornberger, who was in charge of the German Army's rocket project. We already knew the end of the story, how Germany lost the war. Now we know more details about how and why. It wasn't only the air raid, though that clinched it. Another reason was because the project didn't get the support of Hitler in time. And one reason it didn't get it was because Hitler had a dream that the new-fangled rockets never would be operational against England. "I can rely on my inspirations" he told Albert Speer, his Minister of Munitions. "It is therefore pointless to give support to the project." The result was that top priority was withheld until six weeks before the Allied raid. Other factors of delay now come to light. And these have almost a topical interest today. Dornberger's top scientist - Professor Wernher von Braun - and two of his top engineers, were denounced as security risks, arrested and whisked away to face possible execution. This is an incredible story, though Americans may not find it so impossibel to believe. The charge against the three was that they were interested in rockets only for peacetime uses, as space ships, hence they were not putting their whole enthusiasm into developing them for the war. The charges were fantastic, and had their origin in stray and twisted remarks made to townspeople in Peenemuende. The evidence was gathered by security officers working for an eminent Nazi official engaged in a gigantic plot to increase his power. He wanted to get hold of the rocket project, and to do this he had to discredit the army. The plotter was Heinrich Himmler, and he partly succeeded. But General Dornberger finally was able to get his indispensable men out of prison, though by then more precious time had been lost. The incident shows how a drive for security, made to serve the ambition of a political plotter, could on this occasion result in the opposite of security. A further cause of delay was some plotting by Hitler's own staff to get the rocket project out of the hands of the army. In the course of this intrigue dictatorial authority at Peenemuende was given a civilian with no experience in war administration and no knowledge of the science or the techniques used in making rockets. It brought production almost to a standstill. This kind of intrigue was characteristic of Hitler's Germany. The inefficiency caused by plotting for power almost reached the state of sabotage. In part it was the fault of Hitler for being half-mad. But probably the result would have been similar had he been as wise as he thought he was. It is something of a mystery how so much got done. The rockets never did reach their full potential destructiveness, but even in this chaos, forty-three hundred were operationally launched, fifteen hundred of them against England. If this number had been available at the time the troops and equipment were concentrated in the southern ports for the invasion, they would have spelled disaster for the Allies. If the project had been pushed in what General Dornberger calls the "lost two years," (1939-1941) and if top priority had not been withheld for eighteen months, history would have been unrecognizably different. The chief factor that saved the Allies was the air raid, and the chief factor in making the air raid possible at the right place was an English woman. She was Constance Babington-Smith, a flight officer in the Royal Air Force. Through sheer ability she had become head of the Allied Central Photographic Intelligence assigned to the Supreme Allied Headquarters. A study of air maps led her to notice a faint spot and a tiny, shadowy cross on a phtograph of the Peenemuende region. The Allies knew Hitler's sec et weapon was being made somewhere. Thanks to this woman's eyes, they concluded that Peenemuende might be the place. So Peenemuende was thoroughly smashed. In this way Miss Babington-Smith had a key part in making history and making it in a sensational way. One may ask what her reward has been. She was in the 1945 honors list as Member of the Order of the British Empire, Military Division, and she had a back-page interview in the New York Times when she visited New York that year. Not much glory, you may say. But making histor is its own reward, and Constance Babington-Smith, though not wholly unsugn, shared with others in obscurity the satisfaction of making much of the history in those years.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Dornberger, in his book "V-2", made a considerable effort to give full credit to the intelligence work of Flight Officer Constance Babington-Smith. This reminds me of something Pliny the Younger once said: "I hold it a noble task to rescue from oblivion those who deserve to be eternally remembered." For, as Pierre Van Paassen remarked: "History is sometimes the shadow of a great man or woman."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday, June 22, 1954.

This is the news:

Dispatches from Guatemala City indicate that rebel planes have bombed and strafed the airport and military installations..for the first time since Saturday. There is no word yet on casualties or damage.

The anti-Communists in Guatemala claim they have now isolated Puerto Barrio..the principal port on the Caribbean and a link to Guatemala City. "The army of liberation"..as the invaders call themselves..says its forces are steadily pushing forward. But the Government says it has inflicted a heavy defeat on the rebels..captured many men and quantities of arms. This battle was said to have taken place 15 miles below Zacapa.

The State Department says the government is reported to have armed members of the Communist-dominated labor confederation and members of the pro-government political party. The Guatemala government has appealed to the United Nations Security Council for another meeting because "aggression has not stopped." The government charges the rebels are still operating from bases in Honduras and Nicaragua.

In Washington, Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas asked approval of a resolution reaffirming our determination that Russia shall not intervenein affairs of this hemisphere.

In Indo-China the French say they beat off a surprise attack by 3-thousand troops and killed 300 of them. And French Premier Mendes-France says that tomorrow he will go to Bern, the capital of Switzerland, to meet with Chinese Communist Premier Chou en Lai.

In London, the secret five power conference on world disarmament and atomic controls has ended in failure. Western officials say today's session will probably be the last.

In Washington, the government reports that higher grocery prices last month forced the cost of living up three tenths of one per cent.. the first rise in three months. And the National Industrial Conference Board reports that in May the dollar fell to the lowest point in history... it was worth 54 and one tenth cents..based on the January 1939 dollar of 100 CENTS.

~~Democratic Senator Robertson of Virginia said today that the President "asked for bread" in the form of a liberalized foreign trade program and Republican leaders voted to "give him a stone."~~

A House committee has approved a bill providing the death penalty for peace-time espionage. The maximum penalty now is life in prison, except in war-time.

The Administration today took the position that Alger Hiss has a legal right to a 700-dollar a year government pension.. despite his perjury conviction. The Civil Service Commission and the Budget Bureau say the government is obligated to go through with retirement pay to federal employes even though they are sent to prison for criminal acts. Hiss served almost 15 years with the government. Republican Representative Clardy of Michigan says the decision to pay a pension to Hiss leaves him "aghast, enraged and boiling mad."

The President and other Republican leaders today made known their delight that Senator Margaret Chase Smith has won a five to one primary victory in Maine. She beat a vigorous supporter of Senator McCarthy. The white house says: "The President has great admiration for Senator Smith and was highly pleased by the results."

The president of the C,I.O. steel workers-- David J. McDonald--said today that contract proposals submitted by U.S. Steel have proved unsatisfactory.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology reports that Dr. Karl Compton, chairman of the corporation of M.I.T., died in New York today. Dr. Karl Compton, who was 66, suffered a heart attack on Wednesday. He HAD played a leading role in the development of radar and the atomic bomb.

Former President Truman is reported much better but not yet "out of danger" following his operation for removal of a gall bladder and appendix.

And Studebaker and Packard have agreed to combine their forces..if their stockholders approve.

Edward R. Murrow: June 22, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

When Ambassador Lodge warned the Soviet Union in the Security Council to stay out of the Western Hemisphere, he put the issue as about everybody in the United States sees it. A shipment of ten million dollars worth of arms to Guatemala from Poland, does not by itself represent any great menace to United States security. But it is a Soviet foot in the door. No doubt, the positive denunciation of this shipment by the United States made the present attack on the communist-aided Guatemala government psychologically possible. It convinced disaffected Guatemalans that physical action against the Arbenz regime should be a profitable political venture. And to this extent Washington must expect to be held responsible. No evidence has been produced of actual connivance, certainly none of the kind attributed to President Theodore Roosevelt when Colombia refused to agree to the building of the Panama Canal. A revolution broke out in the then province of Panama, and within twenty-four hours United States Marines landed to restore order. Ultimately the new state of Panama was born. Nothing of this kind is even remotely possible in Guatemala.

Actually the danger to the United States from the arms shipment to Guatemala is Not Considerable. Military students call it far-fetched to speak of Guatemala imperilling the Panama Canal. The Canal is eight hundred and forty air miles away, and the only damage Guatemala could do would be through the air. Any airstrips for such a purpose could not be hidden, and could be dealt with on discovery. But that is not the main story. Guatemala already is stronger than its neighbors, and thanks to the arms shipments has become still stronger. In time a so-called people's army in Guatemala, supporting a radical land and labor program in neighboring countries, would further the spread of communism, and it is this that Moscow is working for.

Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, reported after his mission to Latin America a year and a half ago that he had conferred with thirty labor leaders in one country, who told him that many leaders of that country were receiving indoctrination behind the Iron Curtain at Soviet expense. In several countries, Dr. Eisenhower said, the communists seemed to have adequate funds to extend invitations, all expenses paid, to communist propaganda conferences and for student, labor and other meetings in Europe and elsewhere.

The Soviet plot is not so much against the Panama Canal as it is to get communism implanted for future growth. Dr. Eisenhower called attention to the population outlook. For the first time since our colonial days the people of Latin America in 1950 outnumbered those of the United States, and the rate of growth is twice the world average. In fifty years, if the present trend continues, Latin America will have five hundred million people, or more than twice as many as the combined population expected for the United States and Canada.

It is this long look ahead that makes the Soviet foot in the door appear so significant. But while it focuses attention on immediate developments, it also cries out for a far-sighted, wise and generous United States policy, that assists Latin American countries to cope with poverty and build enlightened social and political systems. For communism will not spread in countries that are prosperous, where people enjoy political and economic freedom. It will not be kept out by strong words or even by guns.

Dr. Eisenhower on his return from his mission in November 1953 made a challenging report that ended with eight specific recommendations. These were subsequently accepted by the Administration as its policy. It can be reported that while no one of the recommendations has been fully carried out - or well could be in the time available - some progress has been made on all of them. A quick survey shows more headway than might be inferred from reading the newspapers. There has been an increase in stockpiling copper and tin; the House has passed a change in the tax laws lightening the tax burden on American capital invested abroad; we have contributed from our wheat surplus to feed hungry Bolivians, and made agricultural aid available beyond the demands of the Point Four program. We are selling wheat to Brazil and probably to Chile. The Point Four program has expanded as much as the receiving states have asked, and has achieved some remarkable results, notably in Paraguay. We have worked enthusiastically to strengthen the Organization of American States; and support of educational projects and exchanges has increased.

This morning my friend and colleague Don Hollenbeck was founf dead in his gas filled apartment here in New York...Police called it suicide...He had been in ill health for some time...had been depressed about the state of the world for several years...Don Hollenbeck had spent twenty five years in the news business....Neither his perception nor his courage had been blunted by experience...he was a friend of truth...an enemy of injustice and intolerance ...His language had a cutting edge but I never heard him empoy it against an individual...He was a gentle man with a well disciplined mind...~~injustice~~xzxx ~~hizfellxxxxx~~xzxzxzx...There was no arrogance in him...but there was considerable steel....something caused the steel to snap...Thos of us who worked with him will miss his grace of manner,his devotion to truth,and justice ....his funnybone and his backbone were both fully developed...and if he should file a story from the place where he has gone it would be a good reporters best effort....

The danger of the Guatemalan crisis is that it centers attention only on the immediate phase of fighting communism. In the long run the United States wants to see democratic regimes come into power throughout the hemisphere. It may not always be easy to fight communism with liberalism, but it is far more effective than fighting it with reaction, something to watch out for in Guatemala. The scope for us to help in recruiting liberal governments in other countries is not great. Neither is the scope for keeping reactionary ones out of power. But in the long pull XXX United States influence can accomplish much. The present propaganda storms will pass and should not hurt our standing with our neighbors so long as we work on the basic problems as well as on the flare-up of the moment.

Edward R. Murrow: June 22, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

This morning my friend and colleague Don Hollenbeck was found dead in his gas-filled apartment here in New York. Police called it suicide. He had been in ill health for some time...had been depressed about the state of the world for several years. Don Hollenbeck had spent twenty-five years in the news business. Neither his perception nor his courage had been blunted by experience. He was a friend of truth...an enemy of injustice and intolerance. His language had a cutting edge, but I never heard him employ it against an individual. He was a gentle man with a well disciplined mind. There was no arrogance in him...but there was considerable steel... something caused the steel to snap. Those of us who worked with him will miss his grace of manner, his devotion to truth and justice...his funnybone and his backbone were both fully developed...and if he should file a story from the place where he has gone, it would be a good reporter's best effort.

We were talking of the struggle between freedom and tyranny. And what we can do to help others in their efforts to establish democratic regimes. Something George Truett once said would seem worth repeating:"There is a vast difference between toleration and liberty. Toleration is a concession; liberty is a right; toleration is a matter of expediency; liberty a matter of principle; toleration is a grant of man; liberty is a gift of God."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Dispatches from Guatemala City indicate that rebel planes have bombed and strafed the airport and military installations for the first time since Saturday. There is no word yet on casualties or damage. The anti-Communists in Guatemala claim they have now isolated Puerto Barrio the principal port on the Caribbean and a link to Guatemala City. "The army of liberation" as the invaders call themselves says its forces are steadily pushing forward. But the Government says it has inflicted a heavy defeat on the rebels captured many men and quantities of arms. This battle was said to have taken place 15 miles below Zacapa. The State Department says the government is reported to have armed members of the Communist-dominated labor confederation and members of the pro-government political party. The Guatemala government has appealed to the United Nations Security Council for another meeting because "aggression has not stopped." The government charges the rebels are still operating from bases in Honduras and Nicaragua.

In Washington, Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas asked approval of a resolution reaffirming our determination that Russia shall not intervene in affairs of this hemisphere.

In Indo-China the French say they beat off a surprise attack by 3-thousand troops and killed 300 of them. And French Premier Mendes-France says that tomorrow he will go to Bern, the capital of Switzerland to meet with Chinese Communist Premier Chou en Lai.

In London, the secret five power conference on world disarmament and atomic controls has ended in failure. Western officials say today's session will probably be the last.

In Washington, the government reports that higher grocery prices last month forced the cost of living up three tenths of one percent - the first rise in three months. And the National Industrial Conference Board reports that in May the dollar fell to the lowest point in history - it was worth 54 and one tenth cents - based on the January 1939 dollar of 100 cents.

A House committee has approved a bill providing the death penalty for peacetime espionage. The maximum penalty now is life in prison except in wartime.

The Administration today took the position that Alger Hiss has a legal right to a 700-dollar a year government pension despite his perjury conviction. The Civil Service Commission and the Budget Bureau say the government is obligated to go through with retirement pay to federal employees even though they are sent to prison for criminal acts. Hiss served almost 15 years with the government. Republican Representative Clardy of Michigan says the decision to pay a pension to Hiss leaves him "aghast, enraged and boiling mad."

The President and other Republican leaders today made known their delight that Senator Margaret Chase Smith has won a five to one primary victory in Maine. She beat a vigorous supporter of Senator McCarthy. The White House says: "The President has great admiration for Senator Smith and was highly pleased by the results."

The President of the C.I.O. steel workers, David J. McDonald, said today that contract proposals submitted by U.S. Steel have proved unsatisfactory.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology reports that Dr. Karl Compton, chairman of the corporation of M.I.T., died in New York today. Dr. Karl Compton, who was 66, suffered a heart attack on Wednesday. He had played a leading role in the development of radar and the atomic bomb.

Former President Truman is reported much better but not yet "out of danger" following his operation for removal of a gall bladder and appendix.

And Studebaker and Packard have agreed to combine their forces, if their stockholders approve.

When Ambassador Lodge warned the Soviet Union in the Security Council to stay out of the Western Hemisphere, he put the issue as about everybody in the United States sees it. A shipment of ten million dollars worth of arms to Guatemala from Poland, does not by itself represent any great menace to United States security. But it is a Soviet foot in the door. No doubt, the positive denunciation of this shipment by the United States made the present attack on the communist-aided Guatemala government psychologically possible. It convinced disaffected Guatemalans that physical action against the Arbenz regime should be a profitable political venture. And to this extent Washington must expect to be held responsible. No evidence has been produced of actual connivance, certainly none of the kind attributed to President Theodore Roosevelt when Colombia refused to agree to the building of the Panama Canal. A revolution broke out in the then province of Panama, and within twenty-four hours United States Marines landed to restore order. Ultimately the new state of Panama was born. Nothing of this kind is even remotely possible in Guatemala.

Actually the danger to the United States from the arms shipment to Guatemala is not considerable. Military students call it far-fetched to speak of Guatemala imperilling the Panama Canal. The Canal is eight hundred and forty air miles away, and the only damage Guatemala could do would be through the air. Any airstrips for such a purpose could not be hidden, and could be dealt with on discovery. But that is not the main story. Guatemala already is stronger than its neighbors, and thanks to the arms shipments, has become still stronger. In time a so-called people's army in Guatemala, supporting a radical land and labor program in neighboring countries, would further the spread of communism, and it is this that Moscow is working for. Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, reported after his mission to Latin America a year and a half ago that he had conferred with thirty labor leaders in one country, who told him that many leaders of that country were receiving indoctrination behind the Iron Curtain at Soviet expense. In several countries, Dr. Eisenhower said, the communists seemed to have adequate funds to extend invitations, all expenses paid, to communist propaganda conferences and for student, labor and other meetings in Europe and elsewhere. The Soviet plot is not so much against the Panama Canal as it is to get communism implanted for future growth. Dr. Eisenhower called attention to the population outlook. For the first time since our solonial days the people of Latin America in 1950 outnumbered those of the United States, and the rate of growth is twice the world average. In fifty years, if the present trend continues, Latin America will have five hundred million people, or more than twice as many as the combined population expected for the United States and Canada. It is this long look ahead that makes the Soviet foot in the door appear so significant. But while it focuses attention on immediate developments, it also cries out for a far-sighted, wise and generous United States policy, that assists Latin American countries to cope with poverty and build enlightened social and political systems. For communism will not spread in countries that are prosperous, where people enjoy political and economic freedom. It will not be kept out by strong words or even by guns. Dr. Eisenhower on his return from his mission in November 1953 made a challenging report that ended with eight specific recommendations. These were subsequently accepted by the Administration as its policy. It can be reported that while no one of the recommendations has been fully carried out - or well could be in the time available, some progress has been made on all of them. A quick survey shows more headway than might be inferred from reading the newspapers. There has been an increase in stockpiling copper and tin; the House has passed a change in the tax laws lightening the tax burden on American capital invested abraod; we have contributed from our wheat surplus to feed hungry Bolivians, and made agricultural aid available beyond the demands of the Point Four program. We are selling wheat to Brazil and probably to Chile. The Point Four program has expanded as much as the receiving states have asked, and has achieved some remarkable results, notably in Paraguay. We have worked enthusiastically to strengthen the Organization of American States; and support of education projects and exchanges has increased.

The danger of the Guatemalan crisis is that it centers attention only on the immediate phase of fighting communism. In the long run the United States wants to see democratic regimes come into power throughout the hemisphere. It may not always be easy to fight communism with liberalism, but it is far more effective than fighting it with reaction, something to watch out for in Guatemala. The scope for us to help in recuriting liberal governments in other countries is not great. Neither is the scope for keeping reactionary ones out of power. But in the long pull United States influence can accomplish much. The present propaganda storms will pass and should not hurt our standing with our neighbors so long as we work on the basic problems as well as on the flare-up of the moment.

This morning my friend and colleague Don Hollenbeck was found dead in his gas-filled partment here in New York. Police called it suicide. He had been in ill health for some time - had been depressed about the state of the world for several years. Don Hollenbeck had spent twenty-five years in the news business. Neither his perception nor his courage had been blunted by experience. He was a friend of truth - an enemy of injustice and intolerance. His language had a cutting edge, but I never heard him employ it against an individual. He was a gentle man with a well disciplined mind. There was no arrogance in him, but there was considerable steel - something caused the steel to snap. Those of us who worked with him will miss his grace of manner, his devotion to truth and justice - his funny-bone and his backbone were both fully developed - and if he should file a story from the place where he has gone, it would be a good reporter's best effort.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the struggle between freedom and tyranny. And what we can do to help others in their efforts to establish democratic regimes. Something George Truett once said would seem worth repeating: "There is a vast difference between toleration and liberty. Toleration is a concession; liberty is a right; toleration is a matter of expedience; liberty a matter of principle; toleration is a grant of man; liberty is a gift of God."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday, June 23, 1954

This is the news:

The State Department says it has no reports from any American diplomats in Central America reporting the loss of a single life in the fighting in Guatemala. Yet again today both sides reported victories in battle. The anti-Communist invaders claim they now hold at least 17 towns..their radio speaks of "furious air and land attacks" on an important rail junction east of Guatemala City. And they say the plane that bombed neighboring Honduras last night was actually flown by "two mercenary pilots" in the employ of the pro-Communist government who sought to attack the rebel headquarters inside Honduras. Honduras has accused Guatemala of the attack in a complaint to the United Nations. The Guatemala government claims it is defeating rebel troops everywhere. Again today Guatemala insisted that the United Nations Security Council consider its complaint of aggression. And Ambassador Lodge, the security council chairman this month, has taken the appeal under advisement.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida called on the Administration to "do something..quickly" for the anti-Communists in Guatemela. He says it is "unrealistic and naive to adopt a hands-off attitude. Smathers says:"If we become too involved in the necessities of parliamentary procedures we are liable to find out that the Communists accomplished what they set out to do."

In Indo-China today a French patrol beat off an ambush by 200 guerrillas..and killed 30 of them.

In London, on the eve of his departure with Prime Minister Churchill for Washington, Foreign Secretary Eden proposed to the House of Commons that both the free world and the Communists sign an Asian pact to stop the war in Indo-China and guarantee peace in Southeast Asia. Eden made a number of thinly disguised digs at American policy to the cheers of both Conservatives and Laborites. For example, he spoke of Molotov's help in settling procedural matters.. and said he had a close relationship with Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith but he did not mention Secretary Dulles. My colleage Howard K. Smith cables from London that Eden's studied coolness toward Dulles is being interpreted as "a violent and bitter attack." Eden told the House of Commons that the war in Indo-China could spark World War three.. he denied that British prejudice has delayed the creation of a united front against Communism in Southeast Asia. He said he did everything in his power to get an agreement at Geneva and confessed that no real progress was made toward settling the Korean war.

Former Prime Minister Atlee (Complimented) Eden and said at times it is "awfully difficult to understand what the American line is, between what members of the government say and what senators and semtimes generals and admirals say." Atlee said he thinks the real obstacle to a settlemenet for Korea is the failure to recognize China's position. He said he hopes America soon takes a realistic approach.

French Premier Mendez-France spent two hours in Switzerland today talking with Chinese Communist Premier Chou En Lai. He says he now has reason to hope "that the Geneva conference can produce happy progress." But he explained none of his reasons.

The President today heard Secretary Dulles and Undersecretary Smith discuss their experiences at Geneva. They spoke with some 30 congressional leaders of both parties. One Senator said the State Department officials still expect Cambodia, Laos and part of Viet Nam to resist Communism. And one leader said Mr. Dulles gave the group the impression that he fears the new French government will accept a "PEACE at any price " settlement of the war in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles is reported to have said that the new government is "more responsive to what the French people want" than was its predecessor.

The White House made it known today that the President oppossses a federal pension for Alger Hiss. Yesterday spokesmen for the Civil Service Commission and the (Budget BUREAU) opposed bills aimed at banning retirement payments to federal employes convicted of any felony. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters today Mr. Eisenhower feels the Army's retirement plan should apply to all government employes. This plan calls for pensions to be paid only for honorable service.

The President today designated 20 counties in Iowa as major (DISASTER) areas..eligible for federal assistance.. because of flood conditions. (AND) in Des Moines some 5-thousand volunteers are sandbagging the Des Moines River levees in an effort to hold back the worst flood crests in the city's history.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee today approved a three and a half billion dollar foreign aid program..only 7-million less than the President requested.

Senate Democrats today fought for a three year extension of the foreign trade program. The President originally sought such an extension then made it known he'd accept a one-year extension. Democratic Senator Gore of Tennessee says the President really wants the three years. But Republican Senator Milliken said Mr. Eisenhower has made it clear that a one-year extension is acceptable to him.

The Army announced today that beginning next year soldiers will be sent overseas (AS) part of the units with which they trained..instead of being drawn individually from a replacement pool. The plan is to increase over-all combat efficiency and to improve morale (BY) expanding the "buddy" system (INSTEAD OF) assigning a lonely soldier to work with total strangers.

And in Kansas City, the condition (OF) former President Truman.. who underwent an operation four days ago..is now reported as excellent.

Edward R. Murrow: June 23, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Last night President Eisenhower spoke to the National Editorial Association - editors from communities of ten thousand or less. He spoke from notes, and seldom has a president outlined so clearly, in such a short time, the complexities and the contradictions confronting an Administration. The President contended that truth comprises more than knowledge, there must be some understanding. He then proceeded to outline four facts, or statements, each of which has its own element of truth, but each of which, if taken by itself, would not advance the interests of this country. The first is the statement that the United States cannot by its financial sacrifices carry all the other nations of the world on its own shoulders. We should stop "give away programs". The President said: "This is very true. The so-called give away programs are not going to keep the world free."

The next question he is frequently asked is: "Why do you allow nations with whom we are allied to trade with the Reds?" His answer is that we shouldn't allow them to do so if they propose to trade things which might be used to destroy us. The third suggestion is this: Do not let us get involved in Southeast Asia. Let's don't try to defend the whole world for freedom when it really doesn't want freedom. Again the President found truth in this proposition. We can't be strong enough to defend the whole world. The fourth proposition was that we should not trade with countries whose labor and living standards are so far below ours that it hurts some of the industries here at home. Again the President agreed that we cannot merely open the gates of our markets to world competition.

And then Mr. Eisenhower wrapped all four of these true, or partially true propositions into one example, to prove that while the four propositions may be true when considered alone they are all part of the basic problem confronting us, and no one can be the pivot of that problem. His example was Japan - eighty-five million people, industrious, hard-working, inventive. It is mandatory to us and to our safety that the Japanese nation shall not fall to communism. Japan cannot live, cannot remain in the free world, unless something is done to allow her to make a living. If we will not give Japan money, if we will not trade with her, if we will not allow her to trade with the Reds, if we will not try to defend Southeast Asia - what is to happen to Japan? It is going to the Communists. No single one of the four propositions, if pursued alone, could possibly help Japan; and any one of them pursued to an extreme would ruin us.

The President was saying, in effect, that while there may be truth in each of the four propositions, they must all be bent or blended into a combination of financial aid, trade with Japan; an adequate military posture of defense; and limited trade between Japan and the Iron Curtain countries. The President warned that when Japan's war-making potential is recognized, it becomes absolutely mandatory to us and to our safety that the Japanese nation does not fall under the domination of the Kremlin, because if that should happen, Japan could produce the Navy that would turn the Pacific into a Communist lake.

As this reporter reads the President's speech, he took four propositions generally regarded to be true, and demonstrated that no one of them - if its full implication is fully understood - is completely true or workable in the national interest. He used Japan as his example; he might have used other countries. He posed the alternative in a blunt, direct fashion. If we give no financial aid, no military defense; if we refuse to trade with Japan, or to allow her to trade behind the Iron Curtain, then Japan is going to go Communist. So if the four propositions he stated - propositions generally regarded to be true, and he regarded them as so - were to be followed completely and literally, the result would be disaster.

Basically this speech was an appeal for understanding, understanding that single propositions, if they be held inflexibly, cannot be woven into a national pattern of policy. And then Mr. Eisenhower said to the editor of every single newspaper in the United States - and it may perhaps be assumed that he meant broadcasters too: "You have a duty to find the truth, and project it fearlessly, honestly, and to the utmost ability that your heart and head will allow, to every person that you can reach."

The President, in his speech last night, stressed the need for more truth and greater understanding in our everyday existence. Thoreau once remarked appropriately that " a man must see before he can say." For as Nietzsche put it:"In the mountains of truth, you never climb in vain. Either you already reach a higher point today or you exercise your strength in order to be able to climb higher tomorrow."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Thisis the news:

The State Department says it has no reports from any American diplomats in Central America reporting the loss of a single life in the fighting in Guatemala. Yet again today both sides reported victories in battle. The anti-Communist invaders claim they now hold at least 17 towns - their radio speaks of "furious air and land attacks" on an important rail junction east of Guatemala City. And they say the plane that bombed neighboring Honduras last night was actually flown by "two mercenary pilots" in the employ of the pro-Communist government who sought to attack the rebel headquarters inside Honduras. Honduras has accused Guatemala of the attack in a complaint to the United Nations. The Guatemala government claims it is defeating rebel troops everywhere. Again today Guatemala insisted that the United Nations Security Council consider its complaint of aggression. And Ambassador Lodge, the security council chairman this month, has taken the appeal under advisement.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida called on the Administration to "do something quickly" for the anti-Communists in Guatemala. He says it is "unrealistic and naive to adopt a hands-off attitude. Smathers says: "If we become too involved in the necessities of parliamentary procedures we are liable to find out that the Communists accomplished what they set out to do."

In Indo-China today a French patrol beat off an ambush by 200 guerillas and killed 30 of them.

In London, on the even of his departure with Prime Minister Churchill for Washington, Foreign Secretary Eden proposed to the House of Commons that both the free world and the Communists sign an Asian pact to stop the war in Indo-China and guarantee peace in Southeast Asia. Eden made a number of thinly disguised digs at American policy to the cheers of both Conservatives and Laborites. For example, he spoke of Molotov's help in settling procedural matters and said he had a close relationship with Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith but he did not mention Secretary Dulles. My colleague Howard K. Smith cables me from London that Eden's studied coolness toward Dulles is being interpreted as "a violent and bitter attack." Eden told the House of Commons that the war in Indo-China could spark World War three - he denied that British prejudice has delayed the creation of a united front against Communism in Southeast Asia. He said he did everything in his power to get an agreement at Geneva and confessed that no real progress was made toward settling the Korean war.

Former Prime Minister Atlee complimented Eden and said at times it is "awfully difficult to understand what the American line is, between what members of the government say and what senators and sometimes generals and admirals say." Atlee said he thinks the real obstacle to a settlement for Korea is the failure to recognize China's position. He said he hopes America soon takes a realistic approach.

French Premier Mendez-France spent two hours in Switzerland today talking with Chinese Communist Premier Chou En Lai. He says he now has reason to hope "that the Geneva conference can produce happy progress." But he explained none of his reasons.

The President today heard Secretary Dulles and Undersecretary Smith discuss their experiences at Geneva. They spoke with some 30 congressional leaders of both parties. One Senator said the State Department officials still expect Cambodia, Laos and part of Viet Nam to resist Communism. And one leader said Mr. Dulles gave the group the impression that he fears the new French government will accept a peace at any price settlement of the war in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles is reported to have said that the new government is "more responsive to what the French people want" than was its predecessor.

The White House made it known today that the President opposes a federal pension for Alger Hiss. Yesterday sokesmen for the Civil Service Commission and the budget bureau opposed bills aimed at banning retirement payments to federal employees convicted of any felony. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters today Mr. Eisenhower feels the Army's retirement plan should apply to all government employees. This plan calls for pensions to be paid only for honorable service.

The President today designated 20 counties in Iowa as major disaster areas - eligible for federal assistance because of flood conditions. And in Des Moines some 5-thousand volunteers are sandbagging the Des Moines River levees in an effort to hold back the worst flood crests in the city's history.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee today approved a three and a half billion dollar foreign aid program - only 7 million less than the President requested.

Senate Democrats today fought for a three year extension of the foreign trade program. The President originally sought such an extension then made it known he's accept a one-year extension. Democratic Senator Gore of Tennessee says the President really wants the three years. But Republican Senator Milliken said Mr. Eisenhower has made it clear that a one-year extension is acceptable to him.

The Army announced today that beginning next year soldiers will be sent overseas as part of the units with which they trained instead of being drawn individually from a replacement pool. The plan is to increase over-all combat efficiency and to improve morale by expanding the "buddy" system instead of assigning a lonely soldier to work with total strangers.

And in Kansas City, the condition of former President Truman, who underwent an operation four days ago, is now reported as excellent.

Last night President Eisenhower spoke to the National Editorial Association - editors from communities of ten thousand or less. He spoke from notes, and seldom has a president outlined so clearly, in such a short time, the complexities and the contradictions confronting an Administration. The President contended that truth comprises more than knowledge, there must be some understanding. He then proceeded to outline four facts, or statements, each of which has its own element of truth, but each of which, if taken by itself, would not advance the interests of this country. The first is the statement that the United States cannot by its financial sacrifices carry all the other nations of the world on its own shoulders. We should stop "give away program." The President said: "This is very true. The so-called give away programs are not going to keep the world free."

The next question he is frequently asked is: "Why do you allow nations with whom we are allied to trade with the Reds?" His answer is that we shouldn't allow them to do so if they propose to trade things which might be used to destroy us. The third suggestion is this: Do not let us get involved in Southeast Asia. Let's don't try to defend the whole world for freedom when it really doesn't want freedom. Again the President found truth in this proposition. We can't be strong enough to defend the whole world. The fourt proposition was that we should not trade with countries whose labor and living standards are so far below ours that it hurts some of the industries here at home. Again the President agreed that we cannot merely open the gates of our markets to world competition.

And then Mr. Eisenhower wrapped all four of these true, or partially true propositions into one example, to prove that while the four propositions may be true when considered alone they are all part of the basic problem confronting us, and no one can be the pivot of that problem. His example was Japan - eighty-five million people, industrious, hard-working, inventive. It is mandatory to us and to our safety that the Japanese nation shall not fall to communism. Japan cannot live, cannot remain in the free world, unless something is done to allow her to make a living. If we will not give Japan money, if we will not trade with her, if we will not allow her to trade with the Reds, if we will not try to defend Southeast Asia - what is to happen to Japan? It is going to the Communists. No single one of the four propositions, if pursued alone, could possibly help Japan; and any one of them pursued to an extreme would ruin us.

The President was saying, in effect, that while there may be truth in each of the four propositions, they must all be bent or blended into a combination of financial aid, trade with Japan; an adequate military posture of defense; and limited trade between Japan and the Iron Curtain countries. The President warned that when Japan's war-making potential is recognized, it becomes absolutely mandatory to us and to our safety that the Japanese nation does not fall under the domination of the Kremlin, because if that should happen, Japan could produce the Navy that would turn the Pacific into a Communist lake. As this reporter reads the President's speech, he took four propositions generally regarded to be ture, and demonstrated that no one of them - if its full implication is fully understood - is completely true or workable in the national interest. He used Japan ashis example; he might have used other countries. He posed the alternative in a blunt, direct fashion. If we give no financial aid, no military defense; if we refuse to trade with Japan, or to allow her to trade behind the Iron Curtain, then Japan is going to go Communist. So if the four propositions he stated - propositions generally regarded to be true, and he regarded them as so - were to be followed completely and literally, the result would be disaster.

Basically this speech was an appeal for understanding - understanding that single propositions, if they be held inflexible, cannot be woven into a national pattern of policy. And then Mr. Eisenhower said to the editor of every single newspaper in the United States - and it may perhaps be assumed that he meant broadcasters too: "You have a duty to find the truth and project it fearlessly, honestly and to the utmost ability that your heart and head will allow, to every preson that you can reach."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President, in his speech last night, stressed the need for more truth and greater understanding in our everyday existence. Thoreau once remarked appropriately that "a man must see before he can say." For as Nietzche put it: "In the mountains of truth, you never climb in vain. Either you already reach a higher point today or you exercise your strength in order to be able to climb higher tomorrow."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday June 24 1954

This is the News --

In Moscow tonight, the Russians accused the United States of seizing a Soviet merchant ship south of Formosa on Wednesday. Moscow has threatened to take retaliatory [redacted] measures. The protest was made to Ambassador Bohlen in Moscow. [redacted] or [redacted] Department.

~~BULLETIN~~ MATTER

~~(WX)...MOSCOW--2ND [redacted] X X X FURTHER.~~

~~[redacted] DEPARTMENT SAID IN [redacted] HAD RECEIVED A NOTE FROM [redacted] MATTER.~~

(LINCOLN WHITE, A STATE DEPARTMENT PRESS OFFICER, SAID THE RUSSIAN NOTE "GIVES NO EVIDENCE THAT THE UNITED STATES HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH THE SHIP SEIZURE."

~~[redacted] WHEN [redacted] WILL REPLY TO THE RUSSIAN NOTE IN [redacted] COURSE.)~~

~~JA740PM~~

Th[redacted]s:

The Guatemala government says its has crushed the rebellion... that it has wiped out resistance in three key cities, and inflicted "a great number of casualties" on the invaders. The pro-Communist government also says it is firmly in control of all strategic and tactical points, and is now preparing a "final blow" against the rebels. The government gives no indication that (IT) fears a rebel radio claim that the invaders are marching on Guatemala City from three points. This was just about the only claim the rebels made today, and correspondents in Honduras agreed, that so far the war has been virtually bloodless.

~~In Honduras, American officers acknowledged that one of the 250 pound bombs dropped there was on American origin. But no one, not even [redacted] air officers of Honduras, seems to know where the p[redacted] (PLANE) fr[redacted]~~

Ambassador Lodge today called a meeting of the United (NATIONS) Security Council for tomorrow. He acted after Guatemala reported that the rebels threatened "a massive attack" on Guatemala City. Despite a government communique reporting that the rebellion has been crushed, Guatemala told the U.N. [redacted] that its "civilian population had been machine-gunned and bombed. Guatemala protested that "it lacks the means to repel such criminal attacks." Under prodding from Russia, Brazil and Colombia, Ambassador Lodge called tomorrow's council meeting.

Guatemala turned down a proposal by the Inter-American peace commission, to send observers to the areas where fighting has been reported. First, Guatemala wanted action on Sunday's U.N. resolution calling for a cease-fire, and an end to any aid being supplied the invaders by neighboring countries. But there are reports tonight that Guatemala may change its mind, and permit an observation team to enter the country.

In London today, the western powers disclosed that Russia has rejected a sweeping plan for armament controls. Among other things, our plan would (completely) scrap all atomic and hydrogen weapons, on a strictly enforced time-table basis. We would freeze the amount of manpower and money spent on all armaments. We suggested a conference to decide how far conventional armaments could be reduced. But after 20 meetings the Russians said NO. American Delegate Howard Patterson said: "The Soviet propoal could be summed up in six words... Ban the bomb, trust the Russians"

In Washington the Joint congressional atomic energy committee has voted tentatively to approve the President's request for authority to join a world atomic pool for peaceful purposes. The committee has also decided to let the President share information with our allies on the use of atomic weapons. And Chairman Cole said today military planners are convinced that tactical atomic weapons..those used in ground warfare.. can deter the Russians from ever attempting to sweep through western Europe.

Prime Minister Churchill and Anthony Eden have left London by plane for their vist to Washington. And top American officials have made it clear they do not favor the plan suggested by Mr. Eden yesterday.. to make an agreement with the Communists to guarantee peace in southeast Asia.

In Paris, Premier Mendez-France, just back from a vist with Chou en Lai, Communist China's premier, told his National Assembly that he is doing all he can to get ~~peace~~ PEACE in Indo-China. He said France will insist on an honorable settlement and France is determined to keep her position in the Far East. The premier said: if the fighting must continue , France will not be able to fight alone and may be forced to "ask another nation to help shoulder the sacrifices." (The United States is now contibuting about 374 Million a year to the Indo-China war.)

Senate (MAJORITY) Leader Knowland charged today that Mendez-France and Chou en Lai "are prepared to negotiate a far eastern Munich." Knowland says the Chinese will, at the very least, demand "all of the Tonkin delta" in Viet Nam. And he says: "This is going to be a tremendous victory for Communism in Asia." Knowland says he's opposed to the involvement of American forces in a "land war" in the continent of Asia. But he feels that we "cannot forever delay making a basic decision to maintain a free world and free men." He emphasized that he was not speaking as a spokesman for the government.

Air Force Secretary Talbott announced today that the nation's new air academy will be constructed at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He says the 15-thousand acre site there is "admirable for the establishment and development" of a school that is planned to rank with West Point and Annapolis.

The Senate today defeated a Democratic move to extend the recprocal trade program for three years and liberalize it. This was the plan originally favored by the President. The Senate then approved a one-year extension of the law.

And the Senate Agriculture Committee turned down the President's request for flexible farm price supports and voted, 8 to 7, to continue the present rigid supports for one more year. Chairman Aiken, Vermont Republican, says this vote will ultimately be reversed by the full Senate.

Senator Mundt today confirmed that two members of the McCarthy committee staff do not have Defense Department clearance to handle secrets. Mundt did not identify the two staff members. He said he should know by the end of the week whether their clearance has been delayed..or denied...and if so, why. Mundt refused to comment on reports that Donald Surine, who is investigating the Central Intelligence Agency, is one of the two persons who has not been cleared by the Defense Department.

Edward R. Murrow: June 24, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The Korean war began four years ago tomorrow. It now stands in recess. Both sides were prepared to settle for a military stalemate. They now face each other across a broad No Man's Land. Both sides send out night patrols to the edge of a de-militarized zone. The conference at Geneva has made precisely no headway in bringing about a permanent peace.

The military historians of the future will disagree on many points regarding the military action - the wisdom of MacArthur's strike for the Yalu - whether we could, as some contend, have won the war in the Spring of '51 - whether we should have struck at the enemy's supply lines and depots north of the Yalu - and many other matters. But there will, I think, be general agreement that this was the first demonstration that free nations banded together, not themselves directly threatened, determined and did resist aggression against a nation which was far away and of which they knew little. This nation carried most of the load, in terms of money and blood, excepting of course the South Koreans. Long after memories of the dust and death of that first summer, the cruel cold of the following winter, have faded - there will remain the massive fact that under the leadership of this nation other free nations, having no economic, political or military interests in Korea, decided to fight in those brown hills and green valleys.

There will also be written in the record the magnificent success of the Army's policy of non-segregation. There will be more than enough evidence to show that free people, properly equipped and trained, can produce in an amazingly short period of time a fighting force capable of magnificent defense and offense. It is true that in the early days of the war the South Koreans broke and ran when they confronted tanks while having only muskets in their hands. Our boys did the same thing.

There were those who said the South Koreans lacked the will to resist, to fight in defense of the freedom they had so recently acquired. Just as there are those who say that the people of Indo China lack that will and determination. But the South Koreans demonstrated what can be done in such a short space of time by men who value freedom, once they are trained and properly equipped. Ask any American soldier who fought alongside them in the latter part of the war.

Korea was a nation that refused to die without battle. It paid a terrible price for that decision, and so did we. No one who saw any part of that war, even as a spectator, will ever forget that feeling of wonderment akin to pride at seeing troops of the free world in that barren, brutal land so far from home, dying in defense of freedom on that puny peninsula stretching into the China Sea.

Should we have entered that war? Should we have ended it as we did? Did our Allies pull their weight? Should we have settled for anything short of victory? All these and many other questions must be left to the future. But one thing seems reasonably clear, and that is that if Communist aggression is to be contained, if virtually defenseless nations are to be defended, then Korea set the pattern for the kind of united action that will be required.

This reporter was privileged to spend some time with troops in Korea during three visits; was, as always, humbled by the experience. And yet in spite of memories that remain like scar tissue, the clearest recollection hinges upon a conversation with General Dean shortly after he returned. I suggested to him that he had more time to think in the years he spent in that prison camp than had any other General in the Army of the United States. And I asked him what he had thought about. He replied, mostly about the mistakes he had made in handling his troops around Taejon just before he was taken; he expected to be court-martialled or dismissed from the Army if he ever returned home. And secondly he had thought about the lack of information or indoctrination, the education of the troops under his command. He was impressed by the fact that his communist guards, officers and men alike, spent at least two hours a day on political indoctrination and study. What he wanted, as I understood it, was not braver or better equipped soldiers, but rather men who knew more about why they fought, and the nature of the evil forces against which they contended. An Army is not a university, but it remains a place where ideas and conviction count greatly.

There are many threads in the fabric that we call military morale. And not the least important of these is a consciousness of what we are fighting for. It's probably true, as Sir James Bryce said that "nothing is more troublesome than the effort of thinking." But Philip Bailey put it well when he concluded:"It is much less what we do than what we think which fits us for the future."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

In Moscow tonight, the Russians accused the United States of seizing a Soviet merchant ship south of Formosa on Wednesday. Moscow has threatened to take retaliatory measures. The protest was made to Ambassador Bohlen in Moscow. Lincoln White, a State Department press officer, said the Russian note "gives no evidence that the United States had anything to do with the ship seizure."

The Guatemala government says its crushed the rebellion - that it has wiped out resistance in three key cities and inflicted "a great number of casualites" on the invaders. The pro-Communist government also says it is firmly in control of all strategic and tactical points and is now preparing a "final blow" against the rebels. The government gives no indication that it fears a rebel radio claim that the invaders are marching on Guatemala City from three points. This was just about the only claim the rebels made today and correspondents in Honduras agreed that so far the war has been virtually bloodless.

Ambassador Lodge today called a meeting of the United Nations Security Council for tomorrow. He acted after Guatemala reported that the rebels threatened "a massive attack" on Guatemala City. Despite a government communique reporting that the rebellion has been crushed, Guatemala told the U.N. that its "civilian population had been machine-gunned and bombed. Guatemala protested that "it lacks the means to repel such criminal attacks." Under prodding from Russia, Brazil and Colombia, Ambassador Lodge called tomorrow's council meeting.

Guatemala turned down a proposal by the Inter-American peace commission to send observers to the areas where fighting has been reported. First, Guatemala wanted action on Sunday's U.N. resolution calling for a cease-fire and an end to any aid being supplied the invaders by neighboring countries. But there are reports tonight that Guatemala may change its mind and permit an observation team to enter the country.

In London today the western powers disclosed that Russia has rejected a sweeping plan for armament controls. Among other things our plan would completely scrap all atomic and hydrogen weapons on a strictly enforced time-table basis. We would freeze the amount of manpower and money spent on all armaments. We suggested a conference to decide how far conventional armaments could be reduced. But after 20 meetings the Russians said NO. American Delegate Howard Patterson said: "The Soviet proposal could be summed up in six words: "Ban the bomb, trust the Russians."

In Washington the Joint congressional atomic energy committee has voted tentatively to approve the President's request for authority to join a world atomic pool for peaceful purposes. The committee has also decided to let the President share information with our allies on the use of atomic weapons. And Chairman Cole said today military planners are convinced that tactical atomic weapons - those used in ground warfare - can deter the Russians from ever attempting to sweep through western Europe.

Prime Minister Churchill and Anthony Eden have left London by plane for their visit to Washington. And top American officials have made it clear they do not favor the plan suggested by Mr. Eden yesterday to make an agreement with the Communists to guarantee peace in southeast Asia.

In Paris, Premier Mendez-France, just back from a visit with Chou en Lai, Communist China's premier, told his National Assembly that he is doing all he can to get peace in Indo-China. He said France will insist on an honorable settlement and France is determined to keep her position in the Far East. The premier said: if the fighting must continue, France will not be able to fight alone and may be forced to "ask another nation to help shoulder the sacrifices." The United States is now contributing about 374 million a year to the Indo-China war.

Senate majority leader Knowland charged today that Mendez-France and Chou en Lai "are prepared to negotiate a far eastern Munich." Knowland says the Chinese will, at the very least, demand "all of the Tonkin delta" in Viet Nam. And he says: "This is going to be a tremendous victory for Communism in Asia." Knowland says he's opposed to the involvement of American forces in a "land war" on the continent of Asia. But he feels that we "cannot forever delay making a basic decision to maintain a free world and free men." He emphasized that he was not speaking as a spokesman for the government.

Air Force Secretary Talbott announced today that the nation's new air academy will be constructed at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He says the 15-thousand acre site there is "admirable for the establishment and development" of a school that is planned to rank with West and Annapolis.

The Senate today defeated a Democratic move to extend the reciprocal trade program for three years and liberalize it. This was the plan originally favored by the President. The Senate then approved a one-year extension of the law.

And the Senate Agriculture Committee turned down the President's request for flexible farm price supports and voted, 8 to 7, to continue the present rigid supports for one year more. Chairman Aiken, Vermont Republican, says this vote will ultimately be reversed by the full Senate.

Senator Mundt today confirmed that two members of the McCarthy committee staff do not have Defense Department clearance to handle secrets. Mundt did not identify the two staff members. He said he should know by the end of the week whether their clearance has been delayed or denied, and if so, why. Mundt refused to comment on reports that Donald Surine, who is investigating the Central Intelligence Agency, is one of the two persons who has not been cleared by the Defense Department.

The Korean war began four years ago tomorrow. It now stands in recess. Both sides were prepared to settle for a military stalemate. They now face each other across a broad No Man's Land. Both sides send out night patrols to the edge of a de-militarized zone. The conference at Geneva has made precisely no headway in bringing about a permanent peace. The military historians of the future will disagree on many points regarding the military action - the wisdom of MacArthur's strike for the Yalu - whether we could, as some contend, have won the war in the Spring of '51 - whether we should have struck at the enemy's supply lines and depots north of the Yalu - and many other matters. But there will, I think, be general agreement that this was the first demonstration that free nations banded together, not themselves directly threatened, determined and did resist aggression against a nation which was far away and of which they knew little. This nation carried most of the load, in terms of money and blood, excepting of course the South Koreans. Long after memories of the dust and death of that first summer, the cruel cold of the following winter, have faded - there will remain the massive fact that under the leadership of this nation other free nations, having no economic, political or military interests in Korea, decided to fight in those brown hills and green valleys. There will also be written in the record the magnificent success of the Army's policy of non-segregation. There will be more than enough evidence to show that free people, properly equipped and trained, can produce in an amazingly short period of time a fighting force capable of magnificent defense and offense. It is true that in the early days of the war the South Koreans broke and ran when they confronted tanks while having only muskets in their hands. Our boys did the same thing. There were those who said the South Koreans lacked the will to resist - to fight in defense of the freedom they had so recently acquired. Just as there are those who say that the people of Indo-China lack that will and determination. But the South Koreans demonstrated what can be done in such a short space of time by men who value freedom, once they are trained andproperly equipped. Ask any American soldier who fought alongside them in the latter part of the war. Korea was a nation that refused to die without battle. It paid a terrible price for that decision, and so did we. No one who saw any part of that war, even as a spectator, will ever forget that feeling of wonderment akin to pride at seeing troops of the free world in that barren, brutal land so far from home, dying in defense of freedom on that puny peninsula stretching into the China Sea. Should we have entered that war? Should we have ended it as we did? Did our Allies pull their weight? Should we have settled for anything short of victory? All these and many other questions must be left to the future. But one thing seems reasonably clear, and that is that if Communist aggression is to be contained, if virtually defenseless nations are to be defended, then Korea set the pattern for the kind of united action that will be required. This reporter was privileged to spend some time with troops in Korea durin three visits; was, as always, humbled by the experience. And yet in spite of memorie that remain like scar tissue, the clearest recollection hinges upon a conversation with General Dean shortly after he returned. I suggested to him that he had more time to think in the years he spent in that prison camp than had any other General in the Army of the United States. And I asked him what he had thought about. He replied, mostly about the mistakes he had made in handling his troops around Taejon just before he was taken; he expected to be court-martialled or dismissed from the Army if he ever returned home. And secondly he had thought about the lack of information or indoctrination, the education of the troops under his command. He was impressed by the fact that his communist guards, officers and men alike, spent at least two hours a day on political indoctrination and study. What he wanted, as I understood it, was not braver or better equipped soldiers, but rather men who knew more about why they fought, and the nature of the evil forces against which they contended. An army is not a university, but it remains a place where ideas and conviction count greatly.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are many threads in the fabric that we call military morale. And not the least important of these is a consciousness of what we are fighting for. It's probably true, as Sir James Bryce said that "nothing is more troublesome than the effort of thinking." But Philip Bailey put it well when he concluded: "It is much less what we do than what we think which fits us for the future."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, June 5, 1954.

This is the news:

The President talked with Prime Minister Churchill for two and a half hours today at the White House. We're told that they discussed two major problems: the proposed European defense army, and the exchange of atomic information between Washington and London. Today Mr. Eisenhower and Sir Winston met with their aides. Tomorrow, Anthony Eden will meet with Secretary of State Dulles, the President and prime minister will meet again..then both groups will join for another conference. When Mr. Churchill arrived in Washington by plane this morning, he told reporters "I've come with Anthony Eden to talk over a few family matters, and try to make sure than there are no misunderstandings." I'd like to discuss the purpose of these talks in a few minutes.

The Senate today by a vote of 69 to 1...~~Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota~~.. approved a resolution warning "international communism" to stay away from the Americas. The resolution, which now goes to the House, is not a law. It merely says that it is the sense of the Congress, that "interference in western hemisphere affairs by the international communist movement" is intolerable. Democratic Leader

Johnson of Texas who introduced the resolution, says it is an "unmistakable warning that we are determined to keep Communism out of this hemispehere."

The action came as both sides in the Guatemalan fighting issued conflicting statements. And eight Americans who reached the Mexican border from Guatemala told the Associated Press, they are agreed that the rebel forces there "definitely" have the pro-Communist government's forces "on the run." Today both the government and rebel radios spoke of the city of Chiqimula.. a railroad center. The invaders claim they've captured it. The government says it was bombed.. is in flames from air attacks..but is still held by government forces. The rebel radio says the government should give up because "victory is ours." The government radio says "total victory is our battle plan." The rebels threaten to bomb Guatemala City "weather permitting." The Guatemalan Ambassador to U.N. Says City bombed to rite

The government of Guatemala has appealed to Argentina to use its "valuable influence" to get some enforcement of the United Nation's Security Council's call for a cease-fire. A similar appeal to Russia was answered with Foreign Minister Molotov's promise to take all possible measures to get the cease-fire call carried out.

At Geneva today both political and military negotiations for an Indo-China armistice were suspended for the week-end. And in India, Prime Minister Nehru is playing host to Communist China's Premier Chou en Lai. The two men had a three hour tea. An Indian spokesman says the meeting was "most friendly."

(NATIONALIST) [redacted] China has announced that its naval forces seized a Russian tanker off Formosa because it was bound for "Communist bandit Shanghai" in defiance of a nationalist blockade. Last night the Russians accused us of seizing the tanker. Moscow has threatened "appropriate measures for safeguarding" her ships in this area of the world. The State Department is preparing a rejection of the Soviet note.

In Korea today, on the fourth anniversary of the start of the Korean war, South Korean President Rhee called on the west " to use the courage and force necessary to win over an enemy determined on world conquest."

Here in New York, the government charged today that four associates working out of a New York law office were engaged in a plot to "fix" income tax cases.. and block tax scandal investigations. United (STATES) ~~States~~

Attorney O'Hara called the men "human vultures." He said Lawyers Samuel Schopick, Irving Davis and Max Halperin and Accountant Milton Hoffman worked so closely with crooked tax agents that they knew in advance when criminal tax investigations were going to be made. This permitted them to approach targets for a "fix." Ten persons were named as co-conspirators.. among them Daniel Bolich, former number two man in the tax bureau, and Henry (The Dutchman) Grunewald. The four defendents pleaded innocent.

The President today named Democratic Representative Secrest of Ohio to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

And the National Association of Real Estate Boards called on Congress to discard the President's public housing program. The Association says private enterprise can take care of the nation's low-cost housing needs.

7529

Edward R. Murrow: June 25, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The Churchill Eden visit has started in an unusual cloud of pessimism. This isn't the pessimism of exciteable persons who often want too much from top-level meetings and see only doom if it isn't forthcoming. This time the persons usually excited don't appear to be worried, and those with factual and seasoned minds are the least hopeful.

One reason for this is that the conference turns out to be quite different from the one planned. It was going to be a meeting held because the Geneva conference had failed and next steps had to be decided. But now the Geneva conference has come to life and may even result in a truce in Indochina. As long as this possibility exists, it again becomes difficult for the United States and Great Britain to agree on the next steps. If Chou En-lai and Mendes-France had not met at Berne, Mr. Eden, in coming to Washington, would have been entering the world as seen by Mr. Dulles and would have had to adjust himself to it. Mr. Dulles had held all along that the conference was sure to fail unless strong measures were taken in advance to organize collective security in Southeast Asia. Mr. Eden, with a failure in Geneva behind him, would have been expected to keep the promise he once made to do this "after Geneva".

But now Mr. Eden, in a sense, is bringing his world with him to Washington, and expects Mr. Dulles to conform to it. And Mr. Dulles instead of finding himself leading Mr. Eden, finds Mr. Eden as much out of reach as at Geneva. The breakdown in Geneva was going to restore Anglo-American harmony. The sudden revival of Geneva has given discord another run.

Annoyance in Washington, where the British are concerned, sometimes goes to extremes. Mr. Eden is scolded because he made the proposal about a Locarno treaty in Asia without advance notice to the State Department. His critics say he should have brought it up in Washington first. Further, he made no mention of Mr. Dulles in his House of Commons speech, and this is supposed to show that he is in a huff. And in his speech he cashed in on the popularity of certain ideas - like Locarno - to win enthusiastic bi-partisan support, in Britain, even though it lessened the chance of success ~~XX~~ at Washington.

But Mr. Dulles has sprung surprises in his time, and he has angled for Congressional support at the cost of lessening the chances of agreement with our Allies. ~~Actually, a~~ any feud between Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden is not a major factor in any trouble that exists. Mr. Eden is here because Mr. Dulles fixed the meeting for a time when he could accompany Sir Winston Churchill.

Mr. Dulles knows that more and more the British Cabinet is shaping British foreign policy, which puts Mr. Eden in a key position. Mr. Dulles considers Mr. Eden to be an eminently reasonable man, often more easily dealt with than Sir Winston.

What is causing the pessimism isn't that Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden don't get along. What is causing it is that this isn't a get-together, it is the postponement of a get-together. And postponement, if it doesn't worsen Anglo-American relations, doesn't help them.

Mr. Eden's Locarno proposal is annoying Washington for other reasons than its timing. Washington knows, and knows that Mr. Eden knows, that the United States can't sign such a non-aggression and mutual aid pact without recognizing Communist China. And recognition is impossible without a decent peace in Korea and an honorable truce in Indochina, and a season of fulfilment of its international obligations by Communist China.

Mr. Eden linked a Locarno treaty with a military pact that guaranteed whatever settlement is made in Indochina. That is as far as some in Washington can see. But it is probable that Mr. Eden produced the Locarno idea for its appeal to India, not for its effect in Washington. The British feel they cannot enter into any military pact in Southeast Asia that does not have the approval of India. They even believe that if it is linked with a Locarno type treaty, India may actually join the military pact. The British may wish to proceed with a Locarno treaty, which the United States does not join at this time, but link it with a military pact which India does join. This idea may prove to be far-fetched. But the British have to take account of what India wants, as well as what the United States wants. And this has to be understood in Washington, just as New Delhi has to understand the requirements on Britain, from an alliance with the United States.

There is one aspect of the situation that should be mentioned. If Anglo-American relations aren't going to be improved this week end, as had been hoped and foreseen, it will be altogether because Communist China wanted it that way. Chou En-lai produced the result by offering something to Premier Mendes-France in Berne, which he had refused to Monsieur Bidault in Geneva. That was to give a military truce in Indochina priority over a political settlement. That is what brought the Geneva negotiations to life. Obviously one thing the Chinese Communists couldn't face, was a fruitful Churchill-Eden mission to Washington.

However, if the statesmen meeting in Washington can't at this juncture produce a sensational proof of complete agreement, they can demonstrate that civilized nations know how to examine their differences without losing sight of their basic dependence on each other.

The Churchill-Eisenhower meetings this weekend are admittedly not taking place under the best of all possible circumstances. But Herman Melville once remarked that "mishaps are like knives, that either serve us or cut us, as we grasp them by the blade or handle."

Whatever the outcome, Robert Burton was right when he said:"Hope and patience are two sovereign remedies for all, the surest reposals, the softest cushions to lean on."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 25, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President talked with Prime Minister Churchill for two and a half hours today at the White House. We're told that they discussed two major problems: the proposed European defense army and the exchange of atomic information between Washington and London. Today Mr. Eisenhower and Sir Winston met with their aides. Tomorrow. Anthony Eden will meet with Secretary of State Dulles, the President and prime minister will meet again - then both groups will join for another conference. When Mr. Churchill arrived in Washington by plane this morning he told reporters "I've come with Anthony Eden to talk over a few family matters and try to make sure that there are no misunderstandings." I'd like to discuss the purpose of these talks in a few minutes.

The Senate today by a vote of 69 to 1 approved a resolution warning "international communism" to stay away from the Americas. The resolution, which now goes to the House, is not a law. It merely says that it is the sense of the Congress that "interference in western hemisphere affairs by the international communist movement" is intolerable. Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas who introduced the resolution says it is an "unmistakable warning that we are determined to keep Communism out of this hemisphere."

The action came as both sides in the Guatemalan fighting issued conflicting statements. And eight Americans who reached the Mexican border from Guatemala told the Associated Press they are agreed that the rebel forces there "definitely" have the pro-Communist government's forces "on the run." Today both the government and rebel radios spoke of the city of Chiqimula - a railroad center. The invaders claim they've captured it. The government says it was bombed - is in flames from air attacks - but is still held by government forces. The rebel radio says the government should give up because "victory is ours." The government radio says "total victory is our battle plan." The rebels threaten to bomb Guatemala City

"weather permitting." The Guatemalan ambassador to U.N. says the city was bombed tonight.

The government of Guatemala has appealed to Argentina to use its "valuable influence" to get some endorcement of the United Nation's Security Council's call for a cease-fire. A similar appeal to Russia was answered with Foreign Minister Molotov's promise to take all possible measures to get the cease-fire call carried out

At Geneva today both political and military negotiations for an Indo-China armistice were suspended for the weekend. And in India, Prime Minister Nehru is playing host to Communist China's Premier Chou en Lai. The two men had a three hour tea. An Indian spokesman says the meeting was "most friendly."

Nationalist China has announced that its naval forces seized a Russian tanker off Formosa because it was bound for "Communist bandit Shanghai" in defiance of a nationalist blockade. Last night the Russians accused us of seizing the tanker. Moscow has threatened "appropriate measures for safeguarding" her ships in this area of the world. The State Department is preparing a rejection of the Soviet note.

In Korea today, on the fourth anniversary of the start of the Korean war, South Korean President Rhee called on the west" to use the courage and force necessary to win over an enemy determined on world conquest."

Here in New York, the government charged today that four associates working out of a New York law office were engaged in a plot to "fix" income tax cases and block tax scandal investigations. United States Attorney O'Hara called the men "human vultures." He said Lawyers Samuel Schopick, Irving Davis and Max Halperin and Accountant Milton Hoffman worked so closely with crooked tax agents that they knew in advance when criminal tax investigations were going to be made. This permitted them to approach targets for a "fix." Ten persons were named as co-conspirators among them Daniel Bolich, former number two man in the tax bureau, and Henry (The Dutchman) Grunewald. The four defendents pleaded innocent.

The President today named Democratic Representative Secrest of Ohio to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

And the National Association of Real Estate Boards called on Congress to discard the President's public housing program. The Association says private enterprise can take care of the nation's low-cost housing needs.

The Churchill Eden visit has started in an unusual cloud of pessimism. This isn't the pessimism of exciteable persons who often want too much from top-level meetings and see only doom if it isn't forthcoming. This time the persons usually excited don't appear to be worried, and those with factual and seasoned minds are the least hopeful.

One reason for this is that the conference turns out to be quite different from the one planned. It was going to be a meeting held because the Geneva conference had failed and next steps had to be decided. But now the Geneva conference has come to life and may even result in a truce in Indochina. As long as this possibility exists, it again becomes difficult for the United States and Great Britain to agree on the next steps. If Chou En-lai and Mendes-France had not met at Berne, Mr. Eden, in coming to Washington, would have been entering the world as seen by Mr. Dulles and would have had to adjust himself to it. Mr. Dulles had held all along that the conference was sure to fail unless strong measures were taken in advance to organize collective security in Southeast Asia. Mr. Eden, with a failure in Geneva behind him, would have been expected to keep the promise he once made to do this "after Geneva."

But now Mr. Eden, in a sense, is bringing his world with him to Washington, and expects Mr. Dulles to conform to it. And Mr. Dulles instead of finding himself leading Mr. Eden, finds Mr. Eden as much out of reach as at Geneva. The breakdown in Geneva was going to restore Anglo-American harmony. The sudden revival of Geneva has given discord another run.

Annoyance in Washington, where the British are concerned, sometimes goes to extremes. Mr. Eden is scolded because he made the proposal about a Locarno treaty in Asia without advance notice to the State Department. His critics say he should have brought it up in Washington first. Further, he made no mention of Mr. Dulles in his House of Commons speech, and this is supposed to show that he is in a huff. And in his speech he cashed in on the popularity of certain ideas - like Locarno - to win enthusiastic bi-partisan support in Britain even though it lessened the chance of success at Washington.

But Mr. Dulles has sprung surprises in his time, and he has angled for Congressional support at the cost of lessening the chances of agreement with our Allies. Any feud between Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden is not a major factor in any trouble that exists. Mr. Eden is here because Mr. Dulles fixed the meeting for a time when he could accompany Sir Winston Churchill. Mr. Dulles knows that more and more the British Cabinet is shaping British foreign policy, which puts Mr. Eden in a key position. Mr. Dulles considers Mr. Eden to be an eminently reasonable man, often more easily dealt with than Sir Winston.

What is causing the pessimism isn't that Mr. Dulles and Mr. Eden don't get along. What is causing it is that this isn't a get-together, it is the postponement of a get-together. And postponement, if it doesn't worsen Anglo-American relations, doesn't help them.

Mr. Eden's Locarno proposal is annoying Washington for other reasons than its timing. Washington knows, and knows that Mr. Eden knows, that the United States can't sign such a non-aggression and mutual aid pact without recognizing Communist China. And recognition is impossible without a decent peace in Korea and an honorable truce in Indochina, and a season of fulfilment of its international obligations by Communist China.

Mr. Eden linked a Locarno treaty with a military pact that guaranteed whatever settlement is made in Indochina. That is as far as some in Washington can see. But it is probable that Mr. Eden produced the Locarno idea for its appeal to India, not for its effect in Washington. The British feel they cannot enter into any military pact in Southeast Asia that does not have the approval of India. They even believe that if it is linked with a Locarno type treaty, India may actually join the military pact. The British may wish to to proceed with a Locarno treaty which the United States does not join at this time, but link it with a military pact which India does join. This idea may prove to be far-fetched. But the British have to take account of what India wants, as well as what the United States wants. And this has to be understood in Washington, just as New Delhi has to understand the requirements on Britain from an alliance with the United States.

There is one aspect of the situation that should be mentioned. If Anglo-American relations aren't going to be improved this week end, as had been hoped and foreseen, it will be altogether because Communist China wanted it that way. Chou En-lai produced the result by offering something to Premier Mendes-France in Berne which he had refused to Monsieur Bidault in Geneva. That was to give a military truce in Indochina priority over a political settlement. That is what brought the Geneva negotiations to life. Obviously one thing the Chinese Communists couldn't face was a fruitful Churchill-Eden mission to Washington.

However, if the statesmen meeting in Washington can't at this juncture produce a sensational proof of complete agreement, they can demonstrate that civilized nations know how to examine their differences without losing sight of their basic dependence on each other.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

ED MURROW: The Churchill-Eisenhower meetings this weekend are admittedly not taking place under the best of all possible circumstances. But Herman Melville once remarked that "mishaps are like knives, that either serve us, or cut us, as we grasp them by the blade or handle." Whatever the outcome, Robert Burton was right when he said: "Hope and patience are two sovereign remedies for all, the surest reposals, the softest cushions to lean on."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, June 28, 1954

This is the news:

The President and Prime Minister Churchill have agreed to press [redacted] forward with plans for collective defense. At the end of four days of "friendly and fruitful conversation" Mr. Eisenhower and Sir Winston issued a statement saying: the international situation will be "seriously aggravated" if the Communists make unreasonable demands for a settlement in Indo-China. The TWO MEN tried again to prod France into approving the European defense community and said they are determined to make West Germany an equal partner in the western world, and use German troops for western defense. They also agreed that both countries will benefit from technical co-operation on atomic energy to the fullest extent possible under our law. Later, Sir Winston addressed reporters and answered questions. We'll hear some of the questions and answers in a few minutes.

The Guatemala radio says a three-man-military junta has been set-up to rule the country as a result of the resignation of President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman. The junta has outlawed the Communist party but has taken no action on the rebel demand that [redacted] Arbenz [redacted]..and Communist leaders..be arrested. The rebel radio refuses to recognize the military junta..again calls on the government's army to rebel..

And tonight the official Guatemalan radio says rebel planes are bombing and strafing Guatemala City..concentrating on the radio station.

The American ambassador reports that one of our cargo planes.. on its way to rescue AN AMERICAN ~~a reporter~~ and photographer who crashed in a rented plane..was fired on by a P-47 fighter plane..over either Guatemala or Honduras. Our cargo plane was not hit.

In Indo-China today, the enemy radio claims that more than a thousand French union troops have been killed in central Viet Nam. They say they wiped out the French garrison in the central Annam plateau.

Communist China's Premier Chou en Lai has arrived in Burma after confering with India's Prime Minister Nehru. Chou and Nehru have called for a settlement of the Indo-China war that would create free states "which should not be used for aggressive purposes or be subject to foreign intervention."

The British today welcomed a Red Chinese trade delegation as part of its campaign for more trade and better relations with Communist China.

And French Premier Mendez-France says he has his own plan for a European army if the National Assembly refuses to agree on the European defense community.

In Washington, Representative Brown of Ohio says we have spent more than 13-billion dollars on foreign aid since 1940..and now have more enemies and fewer friends than when we started.

Senate Democratic leaders are reported to have agreed to make a fight for personal income tax cuts in the Administration's tax bill.

Republican Senator Hendrickson of New Jersey says juvenile delinquency is "riding rampant through our countryside." He says: "not even the Communistm conspiracy could devise a more effective way to demoralize, disrupt , confuse and destroy our future citizens than apathy on the part of Adult Americans to this scourge known as juvenile delinquency."

The House agriculture committee says the President's plan for flexible price supports "might be dangerous not only to agriculture but to the whole economy. " And Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he hopes the House will eliminate what he calls "some indefensible features" of its farm bill.

Chairman Capehart of the Senate Banking committee says "maladministration and looseness of the law" were responsible for government-insured real estate deals in which promotors are said to have made millions in profits on investments of a few thousand dollars.

Army Secretary Stevens says the army is getting "excellent results" from its program of guarding against Communists.

In Kansas City, the condition of former President Truman today was described as "improved..somewhat less serious than last night." Mr. Truman, who was operated on eight days ago, is reported "more alert and in better spirits." Mr. and Mrs. Truman were married 35 years ago today.

Here in New York today a federal judge ruled that Author Quentin Reynolds was clearly libeled in a 1949 newspaper column by Westbrook Pegler, the Hearst columnist. Reynolds had asked 500-thousand dollars in damages. Judge Edward Weinfeld told the jury to fix damages and "use your common sense."

3.

At his news conference, Sir Winston Churchill was asked what he thought the possibilities were of the Communist and non-Communist worlds ever living together in peace. We've recorded a portion of his answer.

TAPE RUNS 3:55
COMES AT

RETURN CUE: "...situation which baffles human imagination in its terror."

The Prime Minister didn't want to say whether or not he had discussed with the President his earlier proposal for a meeting with Premier Malenkov. He said such a meeting had to be timed right. But then, he added:

TAPE RUNS 1:45
COMES AT

RETURN CUE: "....plans for bringing human life to an end."

Sir Winston had one other comment. Now that the conferences are over, what's the temperature of British-American relations. "Normal."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, Bob Dixon.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, June 28, 1954
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... At his news conference, Sir Winston Churchill was asked what he thought the possibilities were of the Communist and non-Communist worlds ever living together in peace. We've recorded a portion of his answer.

CHURCHILL: I am of opinion that we ought to have a try for peaceful coexistence, a real good try for it, although anyone can see that it doesn't solve all the problems, but it may be that time, if it is accompanied by vigilance, will enable peaceful coexistence for a period of years to create a very different situation to the one so full of peril, so gleom-laden, as the present one under which we live. I am most anxious that the real mood of the people of Russia should be known and that every opportunity should be given for its expression. The people of Russia have had a very rough time in the twentieth century, a century of the common man. The common men in no country have had a worse time than they have had in the twentieth century with all the bloody struggles in which they have had to engage, and the revolutions, and disciplinary measures, internal ... internal stresses, which have fallen upon them. I have a sort of feeling, and I may be quite wrong, I feel it with my finger tips, that's all I've got in the matter, I have a sort of feeling that there must be a very great wish in Russia to have a better time, among the masses of the people. I think they would ... they would like to have some of the ... of the new wealth which science can give to all peoples in the world, to the masses of the people, to have more to eat and more various things to eat, and more ... more and better houses, and more knickknacks to put in the houses, and would like to have more cinemas with better programs and, after all, democracy, once its material needs are met, deserves to have some fun. Why shouldn't they have some of the ... of the fun of television on which there are various opinions (laughter) but still many ... many like it.(laughter) Others have to submit to it ... television and football pools. I don't know if you have them here,(laughter) football pools, but all that constitutes the ... the sustaining background of the life of a man upon whose faithful daily toil and exertion all the progress of society depends.

So I would like to make quite sure that the Russian people would not feel they might gain far more by a quarter of a century of peaceful development in their own country than they would by pressing matters to a point where we should all be led to situations which baffles the human imagination in its terror.

MURROW: The Prime Minister didn't want to say whether or not he had discussed with the President his earlier proposal for a meeting with Premier Malenkov. He said such a meeting had to be timed right, but, then, he added:

CHURCHILL: I have not altered any of my views and I shall continue to ... to put them forward in suitable ways, at suitable times, and I earnestly hope that nothing will be neglected by any of the western countries which can make for comprehension, a better comprehension, of Russia than what we have at the present time.

It doesn't follow at all that the men in the Kremlin will always be able to be largely independent of the opinions of the vast Russian masses, I think not, but I am quite sure thatnothing is more likely to bring about a modification of the rigorous Russian system of Communism than contacts between the Russian people and ... and the peoples of the western world, and cultural contacts, and trade, and trade contacts, from the magnification of the exchange of goods and services, and the feeling that, after all, there's very much more to be got out of the world by trying to make the most of life than there is of studying plans for bringing human life to an end.

MURROW: Sir Winston had another comment. He was asked, now that the conferences are over what's the temperature of Anglo-American relations and with a chuckle Sir Winston replied - "normal."

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff

(30)

Bishop Thomas Horne once wrote:"Our children, relations, friends, honors, houses, lands and endowments, the goods of nature and fortune, are only lent. It is our misfortune and our sin to fancy they are given. We start,therefore, and are angry when the loan is called in. We think ourselves masters when we are only stewards and forget that to each of us one day it will be said: Give an account of thyself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 28, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President and Prime Minister Churchill have agreed to "press forward with plans for collective defense." At the end of four days of "friendly and fruitful conversation," Mr. Eisenhower and Sir Winston issued a statement saying: the international situation will be "seriously aggravated" if the Communists make unreasonable demands for a settlement in Indo-China. The two men tried again to prod France into approving the European defense Community and said they are determined to make West Germany an equal partner in the western world, and use German troops for western defense. They also agreed that both countries will benefit from technical co-operation on atomic energy to the fullest extent possible under our law. Later, Sir Winston addressed reporters and answered questions. We'll hear some of the questions and answers in a few minutes.

The Guatemala radio says a three-man-military junta has been set up to rule the country as a result of the resignation of President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman The junta has outlawed the Communist party but has taken no action on the rebel demand that Arbenz and Communist leaders be arrested. The rebel radio refuses to recognize the military junta, again calls on the government's army to rebel. And tonight the official Guatemalan radio says rebel planes are bombing and strafing Guatemala City, concentrating on the radio station.

The American ambassador reports that one of our cargo planes on its way to rescue an American reporter and photographer who crashed in a rented plane was fired on by a P-47 fighter plane over either Guatemala or Honduras. Our cargo plane was not hit.

In Indo-China today, the enemy radio claims that more than a thousand French union troops have been killed in central Viet Nam. They say they wiped out the French garrison in the central Annam plateau.

Communist China's Premier Chou En Lai has arrived in Burma after confering with India's Prime Minister Nehru. Chou and Nehru have called for a settlement of the Indo-China war that would create free states "which should not be used for aggressive purposes or be subject to foreign intervention."

The British today welcomed a Red Chinese trade delegation as part of its campaign for more trade and better relations with Communist China.

And French Premier Mendez-France says he has his own plan for a European army if the National Assembly refuses to agree on the European Defense Community.

In Washington, Representative Brown of Ohio says we have spent more than 13-billion dollars on foreign aid since 1940 and now have more enemies and fewer friends than when we started.

Senate Democratic leaders are reported to have agreed to make a fight for personal income tax cuts in the Administration's tax bill.

Republican Senator Hendrickson of New Jersey says juvenile delinquency is "riding rampant through our countryside." He says: "not even the Communist conspiracy could devise a more effective way to demoralize, disrupt, confuse and destroy our future citizens than apathy on the part of Adult Americans to this scourge known as juvenile delinquency."

The House Agriculture Committee says the President's plan for flexible price supports "might be dangerous not only to agriculture but to the whole economy." And Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he hopes the House will eliminate what he calls "some indefensible features" of its farm bill.

Chairman Capehart of the Senate Banking committee says "maladministration and looseness of the law" were reponsible for government-insured real estate deals in which promotors are said to have made millions in profits on investments of a few thousand dollars.

Army Secretary Stevens says the army is getting "excellent results" from its program of guarding against Communists.

In Kansas City, the condition of former President Truman today was described as "improved somewhat less serious than last night." Mr. Truman who was operated on eight days ago, is reported "more alert and in better spirits." Mr. and Mrs. Truman were married 35 years ago today.

Here in New York today a federal judge ruled that Author Quentin Reynolds was clearly libeled in a 1949 newspaper column by Westbrook Pegler, the Hearst columnist. Reynolds had asked 500-thousand dollars in damages. Judge Edward Weinfeld told the jury to fix damages and "use your common sense."

At his news conference, Sir Winston Churchill was asked what he thought the possibilities were of the Communist and non-Communist worlds ever living together in peace. We've recorded a portion of his answer.

CHURCHILL: I am of the opinion that we ought to have a try for peaceful co-esixtence, a real good try for it, although anyone can see that it doesn't solve all the problems, but it may be that time, if it is accompanied by vigilance, will enable peaceful coexistence for a period of years to create a very different situation to the one so full of peril, so gloom-laden, as the present one under which we live. I am most anxious that the real mood of the people of Russia should be known and that every opportunity should be given for its expression. The people of Russia have had a very rough time in the twentieth century, a century of the common man. The common men in no country have had a worse time than they have had in the twentieth century with all the bloody struggles in which they have had to engage, and the revolutions, and disciplinary measures, internal - internal stresses which have fallen upon them. I have a sort of feeling, and I may be quite wrong, I feel it with my finger tips, that's all I've got in the matter, I have a sort of feeling that there must be a very great wish in Russia to have a better time, among the masses of the people. I think they would, they would like to have some of the - of the new wealth which science can give to all peoples in the world, to the masses of the people, to have more to eat and more various things to eat, and more - more and better houses, and more knickknacks to put in the houses, and would like to have more cinemas with better programs and, after all, democracy, once its material needs are met, deserves to have some fun. Why shouldn't they have some of the - of the fun of television on which there are various opinions (laughter) but still many - many like it. (laughter) Others have to submit to it - television and football pools. I don't know if you have them here (laughter) football pools, but all that constitutes the - the sustaining background of the life of a man upon whose faithful daily toil and exertion all the progress of society depends. So I would like to make quite sure that the Russian people would not feel they might gain far more by a quarter of a century of peaceful development in their own country than they would be pressing matters to a point where we should all be led to situations which baffles the human imagination in its terror.

MURROW: The Prime Minister didn't want to say whether or not he had discussed with the President his earlier proposal for a meeting with Premier Malenkov. He said such a meeting had to be timed right, but, then, he added:

CHURCHILL: I have not altered any of my views and I shall continue to - to put them forward in suitable ways, at suitable times, and I earnestly hope that nothing will be neglected by any of the western countries which can make for comprehension, a better comprehension, of Russia than what we have at the present time. It doesn't follow at all that the men in the Kremlin will always be able to be largely independent of the opinions of the vast Russian masses, I think not, but I am quite sure that nothing is more likely to bring about a modification of the rigorous Russian system of Communism than contacts between the Russian people and - and the peoples of the western world, and cultural contacts, and trade, and trade contacts, from the magnification of the exchange of goods and services, and the feeling that, after all, there's very much more to be got out of the world by trying to make the most of life than there is of studying plans for bringing human life to an end.

MURROW: Sir Winston had another comment. He was asked, now that the conferences, are over what's the temperature of Anglo-American relations and with a chuckle Sir Winston replied: "Normal."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Bishop Thomas Horne once wrote: "Our children, relations, friends, honors, houses, lands and endowments, the goods of nature and fortune, are only lent. It is our misfortune and our sin to fancy they are given. We start, therefore, and are angry when the loan is called in. We think ourselves masters when we are only stewards and forget that to each of us one day it will be said: "Give an account of thyself."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday June 29, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

A radio broadcast from Guatemala says that a cease-fire has been agreed upon, and that the 11-day revolt is apparently at an end./This followed a day of developments in which the Diaz government, formed only 34 hours ago, fell in a bloodless coup./Colonel Elfego Monzon... generally regarded as strongly anti-communist...took over./He immediately outlawed the Communist Party...rounded up all known communists...and lifted censorship./He indicated that he would make every effort to end the revolt./Apparently some sort of agreement has been reached with the rebel forces, at a meeting held in nearby San Salvador. But so far, this is all we're told.

(2)

[redacted]

IN WASHINGTON

The Atomic Energy Commission, by a 4 to 1 vote, has upheld an earlier Security Board ruling that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer be denied information on atomic secrets. The majority report said that while the AEC was not concerned with the fact that Oppenheimer opposed the H-Bomb program in 1949, it was concerned about his "associations." These, the report said, were with persons known to Oppenheimer to be Communists. And, it went on, "they extended far beyond tolerable limits of prudence and self-restraint." Consequently, "we find Dr. Oppenheimer is not entitled to the continued confidence of the government and this commission because of the proof of fundamental defects in his character."

The one dissenting vote came from Commissioner Henry Smyth. He contended that character and association are only important if they bear on revealing improperly secret information. Smyth said there was no evidence to indicate this was the case with Oppenheimer. He still regards him as loyal and not a security risk.

Oppenheimer, through his attorney, said he would not comment until he had had an opportunity to read and examine the statements.

Prime Minister Churchill arrived in Ottawa tonight after winding up his five-day talks with the President in Washington. Before leaving, the White House issued a joint statement calling for a reduction of armaments and a better understanding with the Communist world. I'd like to discuss this document in a few minutes.

~~In Guatemala, [redacted] which was formed [redacted] age has fled [redacted] blood [redacted] up. And Colonel [redacted] generally [redacted] anti-communist, has taken over. Monzon, immediately [redacted] ordered all known communists from public office [redacted] willingness to bring about [redacted] to the 11-day revolt. [redacted] elections are apparently under way with the rebel leaders [redacted] meeting may be held tonight in El Salvador.~~

~~Tomorrow [redacted] Secretary of State Dulles will give a radio and television report [redacted] Guatemala situation.~~

In Indo-China, the French Union forces have begun a new attack along the Red River Delta east of Hanoi. But they have had to give up a strongpoint 250 miles above Saigon after suffering "serious losses."

The CIO United Steel Workers and U.S. Steel have signed a new one year contract, providing for a 5 cent an hour pay increase, along with other insurance and benefit increases. The industry's magazine, Iron Age, estimates that this will increase the price of steel 3 to 4 dollars a ton.

The Senate today passed a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Bill, but gave the President no powers for cutting any duties.

And the House (POSTPONED UNTIL TOMORROW A FINAL VOTE) on the President's Foreign Aid Bill. BUT It has accepted an amendment...aimed at Indo China... which would withhold funds to any Asiastic country under Communist rule.

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana today charged that Clyde Powell, a former Federal Housing official, concealed a criminal record of 8 arrests, when he joined the government. Capehart said the FBI forwarded this information to the Housing Administration. But Deputy Administrator William McKenna, said he could find no such reports. McKenna did say, however, that former Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt gave a Florida builder illegal advice, after leaving the Truman administration. Wyatt says this is not true.

Former President Truman, who underwent a gall bladder and appendix operation, is now officially listed as "past the critical stage" and "greatly improved." Mr. Truman told his physician, Dr. Wallace Graham: "I'm over the hump...I've got this thing whipped."

A Special Federal Grand Jury made known today that it considers security risks among Americans at the U.N. greatly lessened in the 18 months since a first Grand Jury report detailed this problem. The new Grand Jury statement says there has been considerably more government cooperation in weeding out bad risks. But "constant vigilence will still be required."

Here in New York, former Internal Revenue Commissioner Joseph Nunan, Junior, has been found guilty on five counts of income tax evasion, involving more than 90-thousand dollars.

~~The Senate has confirmed [illegible] Doerfer of [illegible] for a term on the Federal Communications Commission.~~

And attorneys for columnist Westbrook Pegler have asked the court to set aside a libel verdict of 175-thousand dollars awarded Quentin Reynolds last night as "excessive." The motion will be heard on Friday.

Edward R. Murrow: June 29, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

The talks with the British, which have now ended, covered about all the international issues in which the two governments are interested. # They included Southeast Asia and security there, the problem of the European defense community, and German sovereignty, Egypt, the Middle East, Trieste, and atomic energy. / No new agreements of any noteworthy kind have been reached - unless there is one over Egypt, which will emerge later # That "next big step", of designing a Southeast Asian security system, has had to wait on the outcome of the Geneva conference. Chinese Premier Chou En-lai saw to that.

But a minor kind of success was made in this connection. A different kind of approach is to be made to the security system. / Instead of gathering representatives of all countries concerned, for a formal meeting, they will be approached singly, or by groups. That is the way NATO began, also the peace treaty with Japan. The first of the study groups will go to work when the Anzas meeting starts in Washington next week. Mr. Eden will form a study group with the French on his return. Then, when this kind of bi-lateral study is finished, the big negotiations will take little time, when events permit their being held. The studies will seek solutions and alternative solutions, doing in the political field, what the staff talks recently did in the military field. This arrangement pleases the British, who don't want spectacular multi-lateral negotiations now, and the Washington Administration as well, since it eagerly wants the work on a security system to get going.

Not having big or new agreements to point to, Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Churchill produced what may come to be known as the Potomac Charter. It is a statement of six principles of Anglo-American collaboration. The emphasis is on disarmament, the peaceful uses of atomic energy, regional security systems, the maintenance of spiritual, economic and military strength, friendship for all nations wanting peace, and the re-affirmation of the Atlantic Charter. Secretary Dulles's desire for American leadership against colonialism is seen in Point Three which is a promise "to use every peaceful means to secure the independence of all countries whose people want it". And the British reservation to this thesis is in the added stipulation that the countries to be aided must be "capable of maintaining" their independence.

Chou En-lai, who was responsible for the indecisiveness of the meeting with the British, has been holding a simultaneous conference with Premier Nehru in New Delhi. So there is another communique for appraisal. This might be summed up as being notable for a word it contains, and for a word it omits.

The word it contains is "unified". It is in the passage describing the peace the Asian leaders recommend for Indochina. A political settlement there, they said, should aim at the creation of "free, democratic, unified and independent states which should not be used for aggressive purposes or subjected to foreign intervention." "Unified" is the key word, perhaps for the whole ~~visit~~ Report. For it says in effect that Vietnam is not to be partitioned. This is hardly what Premier Mendes-France is hoping for. A unified Vietnam ultimately would almost certainly be communist-controlled. As such it might conceivably remain a loyal member of the French Union, but that is far from likely. Mendes-France promised the Assembly that France would remain in Southeast Asia. That means in Vietnam, since it is generally foreseen that Cambodia and Laos, if the Communists will get out, are to be demilitarized. So this word "unified" makes it look as though Chou En-lai, having overthrown Laniel, may be preparing to compromise Mendes-France.

The word that was omitted from the communique is "infiltration." The two Prime Ministers re-stated five principles laid down in their recent treaty over Tibet and recommended them as the basis for peace in Southeast Asia, or anywhere else. They are mutual respect for others' territory and sovereignty; non-aggression; non-interference in others' internal affairs; equality and mutual benefit; and peaceful co-existence. Maybe "infiltration" isn't the best name for what is omitted. Maybe it is the phrase: "conquest from within". Anyhow, unless conquest from within is renounced and rendered impossible in Southeast Asia, this peace formula is just standard Communist window-dressing. If ghosts could speak, the ghost of Jan Masaryk would have plenty to say about it, as would those dozens of vanished leaders of countries the Communists swallowed up without aggression or overt interference in their internal affairs.

The British proposed an Asian Locarno because they hoped Mr. Nehru would endorse and support. They hoped that India and Burma might even join in a military guarantee of any settlement made in Geneva, or join in holding Communism behind a given line if Geneva should break down. That is their explanation of the Locarno proposal. But since his meeting in New Delhi it looks as though Chou En-lai had left India more neutralist than he found it. At any rate he has made the British task of enlisting Indian support for a guaranteed peace more formidable. And even if Mr. Nehru, as his friends insist, is no less anxious today than before, to halt the spread of Communism in Southeast Asia, the Chou visit has not helped the cause of preventing it.

There are undoubtedly those who will contend that today's joint statement of British and American aims leaves much to be desired. Confucius, wise in his ways, once remarked appropriately that "without knowing the force of words, it is impossible to know men." This could be the case. Or it could be as Charles Dana put it:"A word that is not spoken never does any mischief."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 29, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A radio broadcast from Guatemala says that a cease-fire has been agreed upon and that the 11-day revolt is apparently at an end. This followed a day of developments in which the Diaz government, formed only 34 hours ago, fell in a bloodless coup. Colonel Elfego Monzon, generally regarded as strongly anti-communist - took over. He immediately outlawed the Communist Party rounded up all known communists and lifted censorship. He indicated that he would make every effort t end the revolt. Apparently some sort of agreement has been reached with the rebel forces at a meeting held in nearby San Salvador. But so far, this is all we're told.

In Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission, by a 4 to 1 vote, has upheld an earlier Security Board ruling that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer be denied information on atomic secrets. The majority report said that while the AEC was not concerned with the fact that Oppenheimer opposed the H-Bomb program in 1949, it was concerned about his "associations." These, the report said, were with persons known to Oppenheimer to be Communists. And, it went on, "they extended far beyond tolerable limits of prudence and self-restraint." Consequently, "we find Dr. Oppenheimer is not entitled to the continued confidence of the government and this commission because of the proof of fundamental defects in his character."

The one dissenting vote came from Commissioner Henry Smyth. He contended that character and association are only important if they bear on revealing improper secret information. Smyth said there was no evidence to indicate this was the case with Oppenheimer. He still regards him as loyal and not a security risk.

Oppenheimer, through his attorney, said he would not comment until he had had an opportunity to read and examine the statements.

Prime Minister Churchill arrived in Ottawa tonight after winding up his five-day talks with the President in Washington. Before leaving, the White House issued a joint statement calling for a reducation of armaments and a better understanding with the Communist world. I'll discuss this document in a few minutes.

In Indo-China, the French Union forces have begun a new attack along the Red River Delta east of Hanoi. But they have had to give up a strongpoint 250 miles above Saigon after suffering "serious losses."

The CIO United Steel Workers and U.S. Steel have signed a new one-year contract providing for a 5 cent an hour pay increase along with other insurance and benefit increases. The industry's magazine, Iron Age, estimates that this will increase the price of steel 3 to 4 dollars a ton.

The Senate today passed a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Bill, but gave the President no powers for cutting any duties.

And the House postponed until tomorrow a final vote on the President's Foreign Aid Bill; but it has accepted an amendment aimed at Indo China which would withhold funds to any Asiatic country under Communist rule.

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana today charged that Clyde Powell, a former Federal Housing official, concealed a criminal record of 8 arrests when he joined the government. Capehart said the FBI forwarded this information to the Housing Administration. But Deputy Administrator William McKenna said he could find no such reports. McKenna did say, however, that former Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt gave a Florida builder illegal advice after leaving the Truamn administration. Wyatt says this is not true.

Former President Truman, who underwent a gall bladder and appendix operation, is now officially listed as "past the critical stage" and "greatly improved." Mr. Truman told his physician, Dr. Wallace Graham: "I'm over the hump - I've got this thing whipped."

A Special Federal Grand Jury made known today that it considers security risks among Americans at the U.N. greatly lessened in the 18 months since a first Grand Jury report detailed this problem. The new Grand Jury statement says there has been considerably more government cooperation in weeding out bad risks. But "constant vigilence will still be required."

Here in New York, former Internal Revenue Commissioner Joseph Nunan, Junior, has been found guilty on five counts of income tax evasion, involving more than 90-thousand dollars.

And Attorneys for columnist Westbrook Pegler have asked the court to set aside a libel verdict of 175-thousand dollars awarded Quentin Reynolds last night as "excessive." The motion will be heard on Friday.

The talks with the British, which have now ended, covered about all the international issues in which the two governments are interested. They included Southeast Asia and security there, the problem of the European defense community and German sovereignty, Egypt, the Middle East, Trieste, and atomic energy. No new agreements of any no eworthy kind have been reached - unless there is one over Egypt which will emerge later. That "next big step" of designing a Southeast Asian security system has had to wait on the outcome of the Geneva conference. Chinese Premier Chou En-lai saw to that.

But a minor kind of success was made in this connection. A different kind of approach is to be made to the security system. Instead of gathering representatives of all countries concerned for a formal meeting, they will be approached singly or by groups. That is the way NATO began, also the peace treaty with Japan. The first of the study groups will go to work when the Anzas meeting starts in Washington next week. Mr. Eden will form a study group with the French on his return. Then, when this kind of bi-lateral study is finished, the big negotiations will take little time when events permit their being held. The studies will seek solutions andalternative solutions, doing in the political field what the staff talks recently did in the military field. This arrangement pleases the British, who don't want spectacular multi-lateral negotiations now, and the Washington Administration as well, since it eagerly wants thw work on a security system to get going. Not having big or new agreements to point to, Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Churchill produced what may come to be known as the Potomac Charter. It is a statement of six principles of Anglo-American collaboration. The emphasis is on disarmament, the peaceful uses of atomic energy, regional security systems, the maintenance of spiritual, economic and military strength, friendship for all nations wanting peace, and the re-affirmation of the Atlantic Charter. Secretary Dulles's desire for American leadership against colonialims is seen in Point Three which is a promise "to use every peaceful means to secure the independence of all countries whose people want it." And the British reservation to this thesis is in the added stipulation that the countries to be aided must be "capable of maintaining" their independence.

Chou En-lai, who was responsible for the indecisiveness of the meeting with the British, has been holding a simultaneous conference with Premier Nehru in New Delhi. So there is another communique for appraisal. This might be summed up as being notable for a word it contains, and for a word it omits. The word it contains is "unified." It is in the passage describing the peace the Asian leaders recommend for Indochina. A political settlement there, they said, should aim at the creation of "free, democratic, unified and independent states which should not be used for aggressive purposes or subjected to foreign intervention." "Unified" is the key word, perhaps for the whole report. For it says in effect, that Vietnam is not to be partitioned. This is hardly what Premier Mendes-France is hoping for. A unified Vietnam ultimately would almost certainly be communist-controlled. As such it might conceivably remain a loyal member of the French Union, but that is far from likely. Mendes-France promised the Assembly that France would remain in Southeast Asia. That means in Vietnam, since it is generally foreseen that Cambodia and Laos, if the Communists will get out, are to be demilitarized. So this word "unified" makes it look as though Chou En-lai, having overthrown Laniel, may be preparing to compromise Mendes-France. The word that was omitted from the communique is "infiltration." The two Prime Ministers re-stated five principles laid down in their recent treaty over Tibet and recommended them as the basis for peace in Southeast Asia, or anywhere else. They are mutual respect for others' territory and sovereignty; non-aggression; non-interference in others' internal affairs; equality and mutual benefit; and peaceful co-existence. Maybe "infiltration" isn't the best name for what is omitted. Maybe it is the phrase: "conquest from within." Anyhow, unless conquest from within is renounced and rendered impossible in Southeast Asia, this peace formula is just standard Communist window-dressing. If ghosts could speak, the ghost of Jan Masaryk would have plenty to say about it, as would those dozens of vanished leaders of countries the Communists swallowed up without aggression or overt interference in their internal affairs. The British proposed an Asian Locarno because they hoped Mr. Nehru would endorse and support, it They hoped that India and Burma might even join in a military guarantee of any settlement made in Geneva, or join in holding Communism behind a given line if Geneva should break down. That is their explanation of the Locarno proposal. But since his meeting in New Delhi it looks as though Chou En-lai had left India more neutralist than he found it. At any rate he has made the British task of enlisting Indian support for a guaranteed peace more formidable. And even if Mr. Nehru, as his friends insist, is no less anxious today than before, to halt the spread of Communism in Southeast Asia, the Chou visit has not helped the cause of preventing it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are undoubtedly those who will contend that today's joint statement of British and American aims leaves much to be desired. Confucius, wise in his ways once remarked appropriately that "without knowing the force of words, it is impossible to know men." This could be the case. Or it could be as Charles Dana put it: "A word that is not spoken never does any mischief."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday June 30 1954

This is the news:

The United States, Australia and New Zealand have agreed that "immediate action" should be taken to set up a collective defense arrangement in Southeast Asia. This was made known in a joint statement released after representatives of the two countries had met with Secretary of State Dulles to "review current developments." Our own State Department made a point of noting that Australia and New Zealand are not dissatisfied with yesterday's Churchill-Eisenhower promise to "press forward with plans for collective defense." But some in Washingto regard this new move as indicating that we, the New Zealanders and the Australians are possibly more anxious to get action than are the British at this time.

Prime Minister Churchill, who is now in Ottawa, told newsmen that he favors a policy of "peace through strength." He feels his meetings with the President underlined this. And have increased the prospects for continued peace in the world.

Mr. Eisenhower, at his own news conference today, said [redacted] substantially the same. The nations of the world, he said, must find ways of living together...as he and Sir Winston agreed yesterday. But this must not mean appeasement. No nation should be subordinated to an outside power. And then the President, saying he could be quoted directly, went on:"I will not be a party to any agreement that makes anybody a slave and that's all there is to it."

The President was asked by reporters to comment on a speech made by Vice President Nixon last weekend in which Nixon blamed the foreign policy of former Secretary of State Acheson for the loss of China, Korea and the present Indo-China crisis. Mr. Eisenhower said while he hadn't read the speech, the Vice President normally speaks for the administration. And he - the President - wasn't going to be maneuvered into the position of condemning his Vice President.

There were no new developments on the fighting fronts in Indo-China. But the French found themselves in the position of having to officially deny reports that they have made a "deal" with the Communists to evacuate the whole of the Red River Delta...where they are now under heavy attack.

Guatemala began to return to normal after 12 days of an almost bloodless civil war./Local radio stations were again playing American jazz music...stores were re-opened...and commercial airline service was about ready to be resumed./The roundup of known communists continued and all civilians were ordered to turn in any firearms they might have. Guatemala's new junta leader Colonel Monzon and the rebel leader Colonel Castillo Armas are now in El Salvador./And by tomorrow details of a peace may already have been worked out.

In Washington, the Senate voted down both a Republican and Democratic plan to reduce individual income taxes next year./And since the House has already indicated it is opposed to any new reductions, this just about ends any prospect for lower taxes in 1955.(The President had urged no tax reductions at this time.)

The House finally got around to passing the three and a third billion dollar foreign aid bill today...just three per cent less than Mr. Eisenhower had asked for.

~~And all money bills in deep [illegible] against [illegible] the next fiscal [illegible] now thro[illegible] the [illegible] has gone on [illegible] since 1946.~~

The Moscow radio said today that Russia's first industrial atomic power plant has gone into operation. We and the British are also building peacetime atomic projects, but neither country has as yet got its plant in operation.

The Senate Committee, which heard the McCarthy-Army dispute, held another meeting in Washington today. It discussed a letter from the Defense Department, refusing clearance to two staff members to handle classified information. And a second letter, from Army Secretary Stevens which implied there had been some "mistakes" in handling the Major Peress case, and that steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence. (Major Peress was the New York dentist who was promoted and given an honorable discharge. Senator McCarthy called Peress a Fifth Amendment Communist.)

The CIO Communications Workers have announced that 16-thousand Western Electric equipment installers will go on strike tomorrow, in 43 states. The strike involves wages and other grievances. There's no indication yet whether picket lines will be thrown around telephone exchanges of the Bell System.

The President, at the request of Agriculture Secretary Benson, has asked Congress for another billion and a half dollars to support farm prices through the purchases of surplus crops. Mr. Eisenhower, at his news conference, said he was opposed to a rigid price support program. And Benson, later in the day, said he felt the President would veto any bill that was too strong in this direction.

The flood waters of the Rio Grande have now completely isolated the Texas town of Laredo. There is no drinking water...sanitation is becoming an increasing problem...and because of ground conditions rescue helicopters have been unable to operate there.

In the light of diplomatic developments of the past few days, I've asked my colleague, Howard K. Smith to give us a [redacted] report as he views it from the other side of the Atlantic. And from London, this is what he has to record...

RETURN CUE: BACK NOW TO ED MURROW IN N.Y.

Appears to be basic agreement in London & Wash. as to results of conference

As my colleague, Howard K Smith, reported from London, there is a certain degree of apprehension about the state of the world...in spite of the Churchill-Eisenhower talks. I'm reminded of something Robert Burdette once said:"There are two days of the week about which, and upon which, I never worry. One of these days is Yesterday...and the other day I do not worry, is Tomorrow." (That would be more appropriate for a Friday Night.)

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, June 30, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: In the light of the Washington conference, and in the light of diplomatic developments of the past few days, I've asked my colleague, Howard K. Smith, to give us a report as he views it from the other side of the Atlantic. And from London this is what he has to record:

SMITH: British opinion is pleased that at least the tone of the Anglo-American relations has been improved, at least temporarily, by the talks Prime Minister Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden have had with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. It is widely noted that for the space of four days now, no strong epithets have been hurled in either direction across the Atlantic; it is considered clear gain that urgent European problems like EDC have been talked over on the top level and that, regarding the thorny issues of truce in Southeast Asia, differences have at least been clarified by the men who know most about them. All commentaries ~~xxx~~ here claim, however, no morethan this for the talks. I cannot recall a meeting between top U.S. and British leaders when comment has been so reservedand cautious or when the welcome given to the results has been so conditional and skeptical. As the "Manchester Guardian" says: "The urgent essential difference between the English-speaking allies is how they look upon the possibility of co-existence with Red China. Britainbelieves chances of co-existence are good and she's striving to negotiate a settlement in Southeast Asia with the Reds. American policy-makers have no faith in any such agreement with Red China and tend not merely to avoid negotiation but to brand such an endeavor as the preparing of a Far Eastern Munich." There is, commentators here say, absolutely no indication that this basic difference has been resolved. The Washington charter, issued by the two chiefs of government yesterday, says that the two nations will not be a party to any arrangement, or treaty, which will confirm or prolong the unwilling subordination of former sovereign states which fall under Communist sway. This statement seems to permit Mr. Eden to go on advocating and trying to get the Locarno-type of pact, including Red China, that he wants and to permit Mr. Dulles to go on disapproving of it. Nor is there any sign of a coming together on the related issue of recognizing Red China. In fact, public opinion in the two countries seems to be moving farther apart on the question. While the talks were going on at the White House, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives - it has been noted sadly here - adopted a proposal to withhold military aid from countrieswhich sign non-aggression pacts, such as Britain wants, with Communist countries (indistinct) While the United States, thus, seems more adamant than ever against any form of recognizing China, the Gallup Poll here in Britain today indicated an increased wish by the Britons for Red China not only to be recognized but to be included in the United Nations. A year ago, the Poll said, only 43% of the British people favored Red China coming into the UN; but today 61% are in favor of it.

Indeed, while thetalks weregoing on regarding these matters, in Washington, here yesterday the Archbishop of York issued a diocesan letter calling it absurd for the United States to go on resisting recognition. And at the same time, a ten-man Red Chinese trade delegation arrived in London to negotiate Britain into stronger commercial relations with the government America does not believe business can be done with.

Though this matter of co-existence with Red China remains the chief difference, it has also been noted here that it is not the only cause of friction which is still there afterthe talks are over. For example, the most pro-American of London's big daily papers is probably the conservative "Daily Telegraph." It today ran a column-long editorial conditionally welcoming the Washington charter and hoping there would be greater understanding from now on. Just belowthat editorial was a shorter editorial criticizing the award, in the United States, to an American firm of a contract for generators at the Chief?Joseph Dam though British firms had submitted tenders much lower in cost. This kind of thing, the editorial says, causes very great irritation. It's also an indication of sub-surface friction ready to break out; that Labor members of Parliament were barely restrained from making bitter attacks on the United States in the House of Commons day before yesterday regarding that war in Guatemala.

Reporting them with perfect honesty, the Washington talks seem to have proven to commentators here mainly that Sir Winston Churchill is a beloved figure in the United States and that President Eisenhowerand he get along extremely well together. But there's no indication that the major point of difference inthe policies of the two countries has been removed, or that underlying uneasiness about one another's attitudes have changed. To go on reporting honesty, there's a sizeable body of people here who think that that situation is not entirely a bad idea. As an unnameable figure said to me the other day, "Our backs are against the wall in Indo-China; we have very little to bargain with in Geneva. We have really only one bargaining counter, and that is the Red's overriding fear of what those unpredictable wild men in Washington may yet do if there's no truce. Thanks heavens, he said, the Washington talks have done nothing to remove the Communist illusions about (indistinct) Back now to Ed. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, reporting from London. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

ANNOUNCER: (COMMERCIAL)

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United States, Australia and New Zealand have agreed that "immediate action" should be taken to set up a collective defense arrangement in Southeast Asia. This was made known in a joint statement released after representatives of the two countries had met with Secretary of State Dulles to "review current developments." Our own State Department made a point of noting that Australia and New Zealand are not dissatisfied with yesterday's Churchill-Eisenhower promise to "press forward with plans for collective defense." But some in Washington regard this new move as indicating that we, the New Zealanders and the Australians are possibly more anxious to get action than are the British at this time.

Prime Minister Churchill, who is now in Ottawa, told newsmen that he favors a policy of "peace through strength." He feels his meetings with the President underlined this. And have increased the prospects for continued peace in the world.

Mr. Eisenhower, at his own news conference today, said substantially the same. The nations of the world, he said, must find ways of living together as he and Sir Winston agreed yesterday. But this must not mean appeasement. No nation should be subordinated to an outside power. And then the President, saying he could be quoted directly, went on: "I will not be a party to any agreement that makes anybody a slave and that's all there is to it."

The President was asked by reporters to comment on a speech made by Vice President Nixon last weekend in which Nixon blamed the foreign policy of former Secretary of State Acheson for the loss of China, Korea and the present Indo-China crisis. Mr. Eisenhower said while he hadn't read the speech, the Vice President normally speaks for the administration. And he - the President - wasn't going to be maneuvered into the position of condemning his Vice President.

There were no new developments on the fighting fronts in Indo-China. But the French found themselves in the position of having to officially deny reports that they have made a "deal" with the Communists to evacuate the whole of the Red River Delta where they are now under heavy attack.

Guatemala began to return to normal after 12 days of an almost bloodless civil war. Local radio stations were again playing American jazz music, stores were reopened and commercial airline service was about ready to be resumed. The roundup of known communists continued and all civilians were ordered to turn in any firearms they might have. Guatemal's new junta leader Colonel Monzon and the rebel leader Colonel Castillo Armas are now in El Salvador. And by tomorrow details of a peace may already have been worked out.

In Washington, the Senate voted down both a Republican and Democratic plan to reduce individual income taxes next year. And since the House has already indicated it is opposed to any new reductions, this just about ends any prospect for lower taxes in 1955. (The President had urged no tax reductions at this time.)

The House finally got around to passing the three and a third billion dollar foreign aid bill today - just three percent less than Mr. Eisenhower had asked for.

The Moscow radio said today that Russia's first industrial atomic power plant has gone into operation. We and the British are also building peacetime atomic projects but neither country has as yet got its plant in operation.

The Senate Committee which heard the McCarthy-Army dispute, held another meeting in Washington today. It discussed a letter from the Defense Department refusing clearance to two staff members to handle classified information. And a second letter, from Army Secretary Stevens which implied there had been some "mistakes" in handling the Major Peress case and that steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence. (Major Peress was the New York dentist who was promoted and given an honorable discharge. Senator McCarthy called Peress a Fifth Amendment Communist.)

The CIO Communications Workers have announced that 16-thousand Western Electric equipment installers will go on strike tomorrow in 43 states. The strike involves wages and other grievances. There's no indication yet whether picket lines will be thrown around telephone exchanges of the Bell System.

The President, at the request of Agriculture Secretary Benson, has asked Congress for another billion and a half dollars to support farm prices through the purchases of surplus crops. Mr. Eisenhower, at his news conference, said he was opposed to a rigid price support program. And Benson, later in the day, said he felt the President would veto any bill that was too strong in this direction.

The flood waters of the Rio Grande have now completely isolated the Texas town of Laredo. There is no drinking water, sanitation is becoming an increasing problem and because of ground conditions rescue helicopters have been unable to operate there.

In the light of diplomatic developments of the past few days, I've asked my colleague, Howard K. Smith to give us a report as he views it from the other side of the Atlantic. And from London, this is what he has to record:

SMITH: British opinion is pleased that at least the tone of the Anglo-American relations has been improved, at least temporarily, by the talks Prime Minister Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden have had with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. It is widely noted that for the space of four days now, no strong epithets have been hurled in either direction across the Atlantic; it is considered clear gain that urgent European problems like EDC have been talked over on the top level and that, regarding the thorny issues of truce in Southeast Asia, differences have at least been clarified by the men who know most about them. All commentaries here claim, however, no more than this for the talks. I cannot recall a meeting between top U.S. and British leaders when comment has been so reserved and cautious or when the welcome given to the results has been so conditional and skeptical. As the "Manchester Guardian" says: "The urgent essential difference between the English-speaking allies is how they look upon the possibility of co-existence with Red China. Britain believes chances of co-existence are good and she's striving to negotiate a settlement in Southeast Asia with the Reds. American policy-makers have no faith in any such agreement with Red China and tend not merely to avoid negotiation but to brand such an endeavor as the preparing of a Far Eastern Munich." There is, commentators here say, absolutely no indication that this basic difference has been resolved. The Washington charter, issued by the two chiefs of government yesterday, says that the two nations will not be a party to any arrangement, or treaty, which will confirm or prolong the unwilling subordination of former sovereign states which fall under Communist sway. This statement seems to permit Mr. Eden to go on advocating and trying to get the Locarno-type of pact, including Red China, that he wants and to permit Mr. Dulles to go on disapproving of it. Nor is there any sign of a coming together on the related issue of recognizing Red China. In fact, public opinion in the two countries seems to be moving farther apart on the question. While the talks were going on at the White House, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives - it has been noted sadly here - adopted a proposal to withhold military aid from countries which sign non-aggression pacts, such as Britain wants, with Communist countries (indistinct) While the United States, thus, seems more adamant than ever against any form of recognizing China, the Gallup Poll here in Britain today indicated an increased wish by the Britons for Red China not only to be recognized but to be included in the United Nations. A year ago, the Poll said, only 43% of the British people favored Red China coming into the U.N.; but today 61% are in favor of it. Indeed, while the talks were going on regarding these matters, in Washington, here yesterday the Archbishop of York issued a diocesan letter calling it absurd for the United States to go on resisting recognition. And at the same time, a ten-man Red Chinese trade delegation arrived in London to negotiate Britain into stronger commercial relations with the government America does not believe business can be done with.

Though this matter of co-existence with Red China remains the chief difference, it has also been noted here that it is not the only cause of friction which is still there after the talks are over. For example, the most pro-American of London's big daily papers is probably the conservative "Daily Telegraph." It today ran a column-long editorial conditionally welcoming the Washington charter and hoping there would be greater understanding from now on. Just below that editorial was a shorter editorial criticizing the award, in the United States, to an American firm of a contract for generators at the Chief? Joseph Dam though British firms had submitted tenders much lower in cost. This kind of thing, the editorial says, causes very great irritation. It's also an indication of sub-surface friction ready to break out; that Labor members of Parliament were barely restrained from making bitter attacks on the United States in the House of Commons day before yesterday regarding that war in Guatemala. Reporting them with perfect honesty, the Washington talks seem to have proven to commentators here mainly that Sir Winston Churchill is a beloved figure in the United States and that President Eisenhower and he get along extremely well together. But there's no indication that the major point of difference in the policies of the two countries has been removed, or that underlying uneasiness about one another's attitudes have changed. To go on reporting honesty, there's a sizeable body of people here who think that that situation is not entirely a bad idea. As an unnameable figure said to me the other day, "Our backs are against the wall in Indo-China; we have very little to bargain with in Geneva. We have really only one bargaining counter, and that is the Red's overriding fear of what those unpredictable wild men in Washington may yet do if there's no truce. Thank heavens, he said, the Washington talks have done nothing to remove the Communist illusions about (indistinct) Back to Ed Murrow now in New York.

MURROW: That was Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, reporting from London. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As my colleague, Howard K. Smith, reported from London, there is a certain degree of apprehension about the state of the world - in spite of the Churchill-Eisenhower talks. I'm reminded of something Robert Burdette once said: "There are two days of the week about which and upon which I never worry. One of these days is yesterday - and the other day I do not worry is Tomorrow." (That would be more appropriate for a Friday night.) Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday July 1, 1954

This is the news:

Some 15-thousand French troops are withdrawing from the Red River Delta of Indo-China tonight and are moving north toward Hanoi. The withdrawal began on Tuesday, but because of military censorship, was not made known until today. The French say they have had to pull back because of "defense needs"...the protection of Hanoi and the rail and supply lines that feed the city.

Vietnamese political leaders immediately called the withdrawal a "sell-out." They noted that so far the operation has been carried out without a single instance of interference by the Communists. But the French say there is no "deal"...that at least six enemy divisions are concentrated in the Hanoi area...and that this sector must be given first priority.

Our State Department said it had no advance word that the withdrawal was to take place. The British Foreign office expressed "anxiety" over the situation. But dispatches received so far fail to indicate whether a showdown battle will possibly take place before the monsoon rains end in early fall.

What the French have given up is an area roughly the size of Rhode Island. They leave behind four major outposts...60% of the rice fields of the delta...and some four million Vietnamese who now come under communist control.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland described the French action as a "thinly disguised surrender." He said this is a "communist victory of no mean proportion". And asked his colleagues in the Senate:"How many more Communist victories must be gained in Asia before the free world recognizes its danger ? Where is the line to be drawn ?"

Knowland said that he now anticipates a new drive to seat Communist China at the U.N. If the Communists are seated, he said, he will resign as Majority leader and do all that he can to bring to an end our membership in the United Nations. He said his "conscience would not allow him to remain silent if this last grand act of appeasement takes place."

Prime Minister Churchill left this country today on the Queen Elizabeth. Sir Winston had nothing to say to reporters. But Sir Roger Makins, the British ambassador, said the prime minister's talks with President Eisenhower have increased the prospects of world peace.

Moscow reacted to the Washington talks [redacted] by hinting that Communist China might withdraw its offer to "normalize" relations with Great Britain, if the British join a Southeast Asia alliance. A Moscow broadcast claimed that British membership in such an alliance might also harm Britain's relations with India.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (SAYS) [redacted] she has called off her trip to Russia... because Soviet officials would not grant a visa to a magazine writer who was to have accompanied her.

Talks on a peace settlement for Guatemala (HAVE) resumed [redacted] in San Salvador, with some sources predicting an agreement between the rival anti-Communist leaders in the next 24 hours. The big question (SEEMS) [redacted] to be: Who will control the armed forces? John Peurifoy, the United States ambassador to Guatemala, has arrived in San Salvador to take a direct hand in patching up a settlement.

New violence has broken out in ~~Palestine~~ Israel, with ~~[redacted]~~ (ONE) dead and ~~[redacted]~~ (23) wounded. Most of the fighting ~~[redacted]~~ (TOOK) place along the Arab-Israeli border in Jerusalem (AFTER AN EARLIER CEASE-FIRE HAD BEEN AGREED ON). Both sides have charged the other with aggression, and Israel says it will lodge a complaint against Jordan in the United Nations Security Council. U.N. officials on the scene are trying to establish a cease-fire.

In Congress today, the House refused to accept the Administration program of flexible price supports for farmers... and voted instead for a compromise plan that would support basic commodities at from 82 and a half to 90 percent of parity. Both actions are tentative, THERE'LL BE a final vote tomorrow.

The Senate pushed toward final action on a new tax bill. By a vote of 71 to 13, it killed a major part of the Administration's plan for easing the taxes stockholders have to pay on income from dividends. It also rejected... [redacted]... an amendment to give relief to income taxpayers in general. The amendment, offered by Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana, would have given a tax cut of 20 dollars to individual taxpayers and a 40-dollar reduction to married couples filing joint returns.

The [redacted] Andrew Frost, who was recently [redacted] F.H.A. [redacted] poker games and parties [redacted] contractors [redacted] cy. In [redacted] answer questions [redacted] pleaded his constitutional right [redacted] The other witness... Burton C. [redacted] ward, who was [redacted] conceded that ~~he had heard stories of [illegible] who was disch[illegible]er.~~

The death toll in the flood of the Rio Grande has now reached 55, with at least 90 persons missing. And the Senate has approved a resolution favoring emergency relief for flood victims on both sides of the border. President Eisenhower has declared six Texas counties to constitute a disaster area.

Democratic Senator Butler of Nebraska is reported in critical condition in the Bethesda Naval Hospital, following a stroke last night at his Washington home. A late bulletin says that Senator Butler is receiving oxygen and that his condition is "essentially unchanged."

The Republican leadership in the Senate has proposed a new set of rules for investigating committees. The rules... nine in number... are designed to protect the rights of witnesses and curtail the power of committee chairmen.

Edward R. Murrow: July 1, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

This being the start of the vacation season, I am in receipt of a communication from my colleague in Vienna - Alex Kendrick. He cables that a pamphlet on table etiquette - called "Cultural Habits in Eating" - has just come off the presses in the Soviet Union. And by the first reaction it could, says Kendrick, outsell all of Stalin's works. The pamphlet is written by Nikolai Smirnov - the Emily Post of Russia. We thought you might be interested in some of the excerpts. They speak for themselves. You can draw your own conclusions.

The pamphlet begins by saying table manners are not an invention of the aristocrats but represent rules of Hygiene developed by the experience of many centuries. There are many cultured ways of eating, but fundamentally they reduce themselves to two - first to keeping dirt and bacteria out of food, and secondly eating in such a way as not to spoil other peoples' appetites. After warning against slopping one's tea about in his glass, the pamphlet declares that the well-mannered diner "will not eat off his knife, knowing very well that a knife thrust into the mouth might cut his tongue or lips; and besides, such a habit creates a most unpleasant impression on the people around him."

The pamphlet continues: "Outer garments - coat, raincoat, etcetera - hamper movements of the eater, and the person who eats with his overcoat on frequently stains it with food. He thus gives the impression of being slovenly. However, it is important not only to protect the outer garments from food but still more to protect food from contact with outer garments. Outer garments are in constant contact with the most varied surroundings in the street or subway or bus. Outer garments are the most dirty ones, and it is necessary to protect food from them by removing before eating. Even if it is cold in the dining room it is recommended that outer garments be taken off, as the intake of hot food evens out the temperature, and the eater doesn't feel cold. The same can be said about eating in a cap or other headgear. This is unhygienic, and also increases the flow of blood to the face and especially to the nose, making the face and nose red and shiny.

After explaining how the napkin is used, and revealing the secret of the napkin ring which "enables one to use the same napkin several times in an hygienic way", the pamphlet cautions against drumming on the table with the fingers, or hitting the glass or plate with a knife since "all this causes unpleasant impression on one's neighbors."

Then comes the subject of reading during meals, and the pamphlet says: "Such a habit should be given up, first because reading during meals has a most unfavorable effect on the digestion, and secondly because the person who reads at table thereby shows disregard and disrespect for others. Moreover, it is possible that the newspaper or book might be stained with food during the meal."

The pamphlet continues: "Food should be eaten in such a way as not to spoil the appetite of those present - without any hurry, and without loud chewing or smacking of lips. Loud chewing can be avoided if the food is masticated with the mouth closed. It is not recommended to converse when the mouth is full of food. Soup is eaten bending forward slightly over the plate. Small quantities are taken into the spoon - then it cools quicker and doesn't splash. Blowing into the spoon, and still more into the plate of soup is not recommended, as splashes may fly about.

"It is not permitted to take bread out of the common dish with the fingers, since none of those present can be sure of the cleanliness of other people's hands. Bread is usually taken with a clean fork. Meat dishes are eaten with knife and fork. Knife and fork are used simultaneously and are retained in the hands throughout process of eating. It is considered ugly to use the knife and fork in turn, that is, first to cut meat into small pieces, and then putting knife down and using the fork to raise them to the mouth. Fish is eaten with the fork alone. In order to hold the fish more easily when removing the small bones, a piece of bread is used in the other hand. To eat with the hands alone - without knife, fork or spoon - is permitted only in the case of very small game or crayfish.

"Fruit is raised to the mouth by the fingers - under no conditions the knife. From the vase of fruit or sweets a selection should be made with the eye, and the selected article taken directly, without turning over the whole contents of the vase by hand.

"If you spill something during the meal, or accidentally knock over a glass, there's no need to turn such a minor event into a big thing, or talk or gasp a lot about it. Chekhov said something profound on this subject, namely: 'Good manners don't consist in not spilling sauce on the tablecloth, but in taking no notice if somebody else does it.'"

There endeth, Selected excerpts from the New Russian Pamphlet, called "Cultural Habits in Eating"

We were talking of good manners...particularly the etiquette of eating. The Frenchman Savarin who was as expert on food as he was on politics once remarked:"The table is the only place where a man is never bored during the first hour." The Englishman, Samuel Butler took another view when he said:"Man is the only animal that can remain on friendly terms with the victims he intends to eat until he eats them."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Some 15-thousand French troops are withdrawing from the Red River Delta of Indo-China tonight and are moving north toward Hanoi. The withdrawal began on Tuesday but because of military censorship, was not made known until today. The French say they have had to pull back because of "defense needs" - the protection of Hanoi and the rail and supply lines that feed the city.

Vietnamese political leaders immediately called the withdrawal a "sell-out." They noted that so far the operation has been carried out without a single instance of interference by the Communists. But the French say there is no "deal" - that at least six enemy divisions are concentrated in the Hanoi area and that this sector must be given first priority.

Our State Department said it had no advance word that the withdrawal was to take place. The British Foreign office expressed "anxiety" over the situation. But dispatches received so far fail to indicate whether a showdown battle will possibly take place before the monsoon rains ends in early fall.

What the French have given up is an area roughly the size of Rhode Island. They leave behind four major outposts - 60% of the rice fields of the delta - and some four million Vietnamese who now come under communist control.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland described the French action as a "thinly disguised surrender." He said this is a "communist victory of no mean proportion." And asked his colleagues in the Senate: "How many more Communist victories must be gained in Asia before the free world recognizes its danger? Where is the line to be drawn? Knowland said that he now anticipates a new drive to seat Communist China at the U.N. If the Communists are seated, he said, he will resign as Majority leader and do all that he can to bring to an end our membership in the United Nations. He said his "conscience would not allow him to remain silent if this last grand act of appeasement takes place."

Prime Minister Churchill left this country today on the Queen Elizabeth. Sir Winston had nothing to say to reporters. But Sir Roger Makins, the British ambassador, said theprime minister's talks with President Eisenhower have increased the prospects of world peace.

Moscow reacted to the Washington talks by hinting that Communist China might withdraw its offer to "normalize" relations with Great Britain, if the British join a Southeast Asia alliance. A Moscow broadcast claimed that British membership in such an alliance might also harm Britain's relations with India.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt says that she has called off her trip to Russia - because Soviet officials would not grant a visa to a magazine writer who was to have accompanied her.

Talks on a peace settlement for Guatemala have resumed in San Salvador, with some sources predicting an agreement between the rival anti-Communist leaders in the next 24 hours. The big question seems to be: who will control the armed forces? John Peurifoy, the United States ambassador to Guatemala, has arrived in San Salvador to take a direct hand in patching up a settlement.

New violence has broken out in Israel with one dead and 23 wounded. Most of the fighting took place along the Arab-Israeli border in Jerusulem after an earlier cease-fire had been agreed on. Both sides have charged the other with aggression, and Israel says it will lodge a complaint against Jordan in the United Nations Security Council. U.N. officials on the scene are trying to establish a cease-fire.

In Congress today, the House refused to accept the Administration program of flexible price supports for farmers and voted instead for a compromise plan that would support basic commodities at from 82 and a half to 90 percent of parity. Both action are tentative. There'll be a final vote tomorrow.

The Senate pushed toward final action on a new tax bill. By a vote of 71 to 13, it killed a major part of the Administration's plan for easing the taxes stockholders have to pay on income from dividends. It also rejected an amendment to give relief to income taxpayers in general. The amendment, offered by Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana, would have given a tax cut of 20 dollars to individual taxpayers and a 40-dollar reduction to married couples filing joint returns.

The death toll in the flood of the Rio Grande has now reached 55, with at least 90 persons missing. And the Senate has approved a resolution favoring emergency relief for flood victims on both sides of the border. President Eisenhower has declared six Texas counties to constitute a disaster area.

Democratic Senator Butler of Nebraska is reported in critical condition in the Bethesda Naval Hospital, following a stroke last night at his Washington home. A late bulletin says that Senator Butler is receiving oxygen and that his condition is "essentially unchanged."

The Republican leadership in the Senate has proposed a new set of rules for investigating committees. The rules, nine in number, are designed to protect the rights of withesses and curtail the power of committee chairmen.

This being the start of the vacation season, I am in receipt of a communicatio from my colleague in Vienna - Alex Kendrick. He cables that a pamphlet on table etiquette - called "Cultural Habits in Eating" - has just come off the presses in the Soviet Union. And by the first reaction it could, says Kendrick, outsell all of Stalin's works. The pamphlet is written by Nikolai Smirnov - the Emily Post of Russia. We thought you might be interested in some of the excerpts. They speak for themselves. You can draw your own conclusions.

The pamphlet begins by saying table manners are not an invention of the aristocrats but represent rules of Hygiene developed by the experience of many centuries. There are many cultured ways of eating, but fundamentally they reduce themselves to two - first to keeping dirt and bacteria out of food, and secondly eating in such a way as not to spoil other peoples' appetites. After warning against slopping one's teaabout in his glass, the pamphlet declares that the well-mannered diner "will not eat off his knife, knowing very well that a knife thrust into the mouth might cut his tongue or lips; and besides, such a habit creates a most unpleasant impression on the people around him."

The pamphlet continues: "Outer garments - coat, raincoat, etcetera - hamper movements of the eater, and the person who eats with his overcoat on frequently stains it with food. He thus gives the impression of being slovenly. However, it is important not only to protect the outer garments from food but still more to protect food from contact with outer garments. Outer garments are in constant contact with the most varied surroundings in the street or subway or bus. Outer garments are the most dirty ones, and it is necessary to protect food from them by removing before eating. Even if it is cold in the dining room it is recommended that outer garments be taken off, as the intake of hot food evens out the temperature, and the eater doesn't feel cold. The same can be said about eating in a cap or other headgear. This is unhygienic, and also increases the flow of blood to the face and especially to the nose, making the face and nose red and shiny.

After explaining how the napkin is used, and revealing the secret of the napkin ring which "Enables one to use the same napkin several times in an hygienic way," the pamphlet cautions against drumming on the table with the fingers, or hitting the glass or plate with a knife since "all this causes unpleasant impression on one's neighbors."

Then comes the subject of reading during meals, and the pamphlet says: "Such a habit should be given up, first because reading during meals has a most unfavorable effect on the digestion, and secondly because the person who reads at the table thereby shows disregard and disrespect for others. Moreover, it is possible that the newspaper or book might be stained with food during the meal."

The pamphlet continues: "Food should be eaten in such a way as not to spoil the appetite of those present - without any hurry, and without loud chewing or smacking of lips. Loud chewing can be avoided if the food is masticated with the mouth closed. It is not recommended to converse when the mouth is full of food. Soup is eaten bending forward slightly over the plate. Small quantities are taken into the spoon - then it cools quicker and doesn't splash. Blowing into the spoon, and still more into the plate of soup is not recommended, as splashes may fly about. "It is not permitted to take bread out of the common dish with the fingers, since none of those present can be sure of the cleanliness of other people's hands. Bread is usually taken with a clean fork. Meat dishes are eaten with knife and fork. Knife and fork are used simultaneously and are retained in the hands throughout process of eating. It is considered ugly to use the knife and fork in turn, that is, first to cut meat into small pieces, and then putting knife down and using the fork to raise them to the mouth. Fish is eaten with the fork alone. In order to hold the fish more easily when removing the small bones, a piece of bread is used in the other hand. To eat with the hands alone - without knife, fork or spoon - is permitted only in the case of very small game or crayfish.

"Fruit is raised to the mouth by the fingers - under no conditions the knife. From the vase of fruit or sweets a selection should be made with the eye, and the selected article taken directly, without turning over the whole contents of the vase by hand.

"If you spill something during the meal, or accidentally knock over a glass, there's no need to turn such a minor event into a big thing, or talk or gasp a lot about it. Chekhov said something profound on this subject, namely: 'Good manners don't consist in not spilling cause on the tablecloth, but in taking no notice if somebody else does it."

There endeth, selected excerpts from the New Russian pamphlet, called "Curtural Habits in Eating."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of good manners - particularly the etiquette of eating. The Frenchman Savarin who was an expert on food as he was on politics once remarked: "The table is the only place where a man is never bored during the first hour." The Englishman, Samuel Butler took another view when he said: "Man is the only animal that can remain on friendly terms with the victims he intends to eat until he eats them."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, July 2, 1954 (1)

This is the news:

Vice President Nixon, for the second time in less than a week, has accused the Truman Administration of failing to recognize and understand the real danger of world communism. In a filmed interview for two upstate New York television stations, the Vice President...(as he did in Milwaukee last Saturday)...said the "previous administration" lost 6-hundred million people to Communism by following a foreign policy of "weakness...a policy of surrender of principle at the conference table."

Mr. Nixon said that the Eisenhower Administration, on the other hand, is determined "not to surrender our principles at the conference table but to make them prevail." He said those in authority now are aware that the threat of communism is "a world threat...that it must be met equally all over the world...and that it will not do us much good to meet it in one place and let it go in another place." The United States, he said, has a "great mobile retaliatory power. It will be used against the major source of aggression whenever and wherever it appears."

The Vice President's talk came only a few hours after the Democratic leader in the Senate, Lyndon Johnson of Texas, told his colleagues:"Our basic foreign policy is at the crossroads." He said: "the American people are uneasy about their Allies...uncertain whether our foreign policy should take a new direction...determined that there should be no appeasement of communists...and are opposed to continued American support of the United Nations if Communist China is given U.N. membership."

Republican Majority Leader Knowland, who said substantially the same thing yesterday, called Johnson's speech "very statesmanlike." But Senator Morse - Independent from Oregon - said such views are likely to bring "serious misinterpertations at home and abroad." He said:"I dislike the growing attitude that if we can not have our way, we'll retire from the United Nations."

In Denver, Adlai Stevenson said Mr. Nixon "seems to have achieved an all-time high of irresponsibility in his recent statements." But, added Stevenson, the situation is "perilous." And since the Eisenhower Administration is the only one we have and America must succeed, Democrats in government must do what they can to help.

The State Department let it be known today that it [redacted] (HAS) asked the French why they gave up more than half of the rich Red River delta (OF INDO-CHINA) to the Communists. Premier Mendes-France is reported to have told Douglas Dillon, our ambassador in Paris, that the withdrawal was dictated by purely military considerations. Mendes-France said the move was decided on two months ago and involved no "deal" with the Chinese Reds.

[redacted]

The Administration won a partial victory in Congress [redacted] when the House passed a farm bill providing modified price supports, ranging from 82½ to 90 percent of parity. [redacted] The measure now goes to the Senate.

After five days of hectic debate, the Senate has passed the Administration tax reform bill. The measure contains no general tax reductions, but does provide relief for various groups of taxpayers amounting to more than a billion dollars. It now goes to a conference committee of the Senate and House.

The government has filed an anti-trust suit against the United Fruit Company, charging it with monopolizing interstate and foreign trade in bananas. The suit says that United Fruit has obtained control of nearly all the land in Central America used in growing bananas.

The civil war in Guatemala ended officially today with the signing of a peace treaty by the two rival, anti-Communist leaders. The country will be ruled by a new military junta, headed by Colonel Elfego Monzon. The rebel leader, Carlos Castillo Armas, is a member of the junta which is supposed to elect a new head of government after 15 days. The new regime pledges itself to fight Communism.

Russia has sent the United States a new protest over the seizure of that Soviet tanker off the coast of Formosa on June 23rd. The tanker was seized by the Chinese Nationalists. The new Russian note claims the United States is responsible because the area is under our control.

In Seoul, the South Korean national assembly handed President Syngman Rhee an unexpected rebuke today when it refused to confirm his new cabinet. Many members of Rhee's party object to the fact that the cabinet consists wholly of political independents.

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

And Dag Hammershield, Secretary General of the U.N., has called on Israel and Jordan for "immediate and complete observance" of the unconditional cease-fire in Jerusalem. Seven persons have been killed... and more than 50 wounded...in the sporadic fighting which started Wednesday.

Since tonite marks the start of the Independence Day weekend...and the majority of the speeches are yet to come...I've asked my colleague in Vienna, Alex Kendrick, to record for us:"July Fourth as it looks to those less fortunate behind the Iron Curtain."

Tape Runs 5 Mins

Return Cue;"Now back to Ed Murrow in New York."

Edward R. Murrow: July 2, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

This reporter is taking a few weeks' vacation, during which he hopes to read a few books, catch a few fish, pursue a golf ball, and do some travelling and listening. while keeping silent This report will be handled each night by my friend and wartime colleague, Charles Collingwood. Most of you will remember him from the war, and from the time when he was our White House Correspondent.

It is never possible to leave this microphone without saying thanks to our own correspondents at home and overseas, who have contributed so much to whatever merit these reports may have had, and to Jesse Zousmer and John Aaron, here in New York, whose assistance has literally run from A to Z.

On Monday at this time your reporter will be Charles Collingwood.

Will Rogers once remarked about July Fourth speeches that "never is as much politics indulged in under the guise of freedom and liberty. They are five per cent of what George Washington did, and 95 per cent what the speaker intends to do. What this country needs on July the Fourth is not more liberty or more freedom...its a roman candle that only shoots out of one end."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President reports to the nation tonight on what his Administration has accomplished and what it hopes to do in the future. His talk will be heard over many of these stations at 9:30 p.m. eastern time. Today Mr. Eisenhower and his cabinet went over the speech and his State of the Union message with Republican congressional leaders. House Speaker Martin says the President will offer the country "a progressive, dynamic program." And Republican Senate Leader Knowland says the President will present a "constructive program." Another White House guest was Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee. He told reporters: "I wish the American people a prosperous New Year and congratulate them on prospective tax relief."

A White House source says today's visiting congressmen did not discuss the question of military aid to Pakistan. But one congressional source says the President has decided to ignore India's protests and grant aid to Pakistan. And in India, Prime Minister Nehru said a military alliance between the United States and Pakistan would be "a step toward world war - a step that would bring war right to our doors."

In Korea, United Nations troops are building two new camps to receive the 22-thousand anti-Communist war prisoners who we expect to be released towards the end of this month. General Hull, the United Nations commander, has told the neutral Indians - who now have the prisoners under their control that we will free the Chinese and North Koreans on January 23rd, in accordance with the armistice agreement. Indian General Thimaya says "we will have to decide what to do" with the prisoners. And at the United Nations today we have started a move to block any effort to bring the Korean issue to the floor of the General Assembly before the day the prisoners are to be released.

In Indo China, French fighters and bombers have been attacking supply lines to the Communist-led Viet Minh forces in the northwest. The French flew by moonlight in an attempt to disrupt the coolie convoys that generally move at night.

The French government says that in the seven years of war in Indo-China 15,700 men have been killed or are missing - an average of 2-thousand Frenchmen a year.

In Washington today the State Department said the Russians are now studying our suggestions on how to begin secret talks on President Eisenhower's proposal for a peacetime pool of atomic energy. Ambassador Bohlen discussed the proposal with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow on Saturday.

The Navy says when its new atomic submarine, the Nautilus, is launched it will be used for research on underwater speed and pressure problems - with some tests submerged for two months or more at a time.

The Bureau of Printing and Engraving today made public what could turn out to be the biggest theft on the bureau's history. Sometime during the Christmas holiday someone apparently stole 160-thousand dollars in new twenty dollar bills and replaced them with two dummy packages of blank paper cut to the size of regular bills. The Bureau is making a thorough search of its building to see if the money may have been hidden there. The serial numbers of the missing 8-thousand twenty dollar bills are known to the Bureau.

Here in New York today, Governor Dewey called for the elimination of traitors without injuring the reputations of the innocent and without "untrammeled exploration of intellectual and scientific inquiry and teaching." Opening the 200th anniversary celebration of Columbia University, Governor Dewey said the free world is battling three major threats: "The first is the communist totalitarian idealogy which would place all men on a procrustean bed. The second threat comes from the impoverished of mind and spirit who distrust all learning and fear to trust the future." And the third threat, said Governor Dewey, "comes from the small but vocal group who would sacrifice liberty in order to defeat its enemies." Governor Dewey called for punishment of all subversives. But, he said, this should be accomplished without "injury to the reputation of good people."

Frequently on this report we have relayed to you information sent by an old friend and fine reporter, Alex Kendrick. He makes his headquarters in Vienna, and frequently travels through part of the Balkans and the Middle East. He is here with me tonight. Alex, a little more than a year ago the Russians gave us a blueprint of their future plans. They said in substance that the Western Alliance would come unstuck; that our allies would come to resent more and more our economic domination; and that the Russians would use trade as an instrument to break up the Western Alliance. They said that there were now two world markets instead of one. Have you seen any evidences of this Communist trade offensive?

KENRICK: What the Russians meant at the time, what Stalin meant, was that they were giving priority to the building up of their own economic bloc, and that trade within that bloc had arrived at a point where it could be considered a separate market. But that was 15 months ago, and Stalin has died, and now I think the Russians are beyond that,are competing with their market against ours and not doing badly.

MURROW: Anything to support that?

KENDRICK: Well, there's no doubt that the Russians are exporting gold - which incidentally has no value whatsoever inside the Soviet Union. They mine it in large quantities, at practically no expense since it's forced labor, and when they send gold to other countries in exchange for butter and other consumer goods they get those goods for practically nothing by their values. There are also many parts of the world where the Communists don't have to buy goods with gold, but sell their own goods in impressive quantities.

MURROW: I suppose Vienna is one of those places?

KENDRICK: a thriving market place between East and West. At the Vienna Fair a few months ago the Russians and all the satellites were well represented. They put on sale - and they sold, too - everything from automobiles and hydraulic presses to radio sets and pianos and fur coats. Even Russian wrist watches. The satellites sold everything from Bulgarian tobacco and attar of roses to Czech glassware and Polish rubber tires.

MURROW: So the satellites are in business, too?

KENDRICK: Ed, on the basis of visible evidence - which means I don't know what goes on in the free ports of Europe or the banks of Switzerland - I would say that the satellites are doing more selling than the Russians. Especially in the Middle East.

MURROW: You were there recently, weren't you?

KENDRICK: Yes, and I can say that if the man in front of me on every plan and at every hotel desk was a German or Japanese businessman, the two men behind me were Czechs, or Poles, or East Germans. I say two men because Communist trade delegations travel in groups. They don't represent one factory, or one industry, but whole sections of the national economy. In Cairo recently the Czechs held an industrial exposition with great success, and in Lebanon the East Germans arrived right on the heels of the West Germans.

MURROW: Any reason for this outburst of trade by the satellites?

KENDRICK: I would say it's because they seem to have been released from some of their previous obligations to the Soviet economic system. Not so long ago they were producing primarily for the Russians, and even their own needs came after that, let alone any outside trade. But now I think some of the economic ties with Moscow have been loosened. The satellites are more on their own, making the best bargains they can wherever they can.

MURROW: Are they making any fast bucks?

KENDRICK: Well, they're not so much interested in dollars as they used to be. Any other currency will do, and some of it is quite good these days. The Egyptian pound is worth more than the British pound, and the Austrian schilling, believe it or not, costs more dollars than the official rate.

MURROW: Alex, od you think this economic penetration by the Communists is a serious thing?

KENDRICK: It would be more serious, of course, if there were a depression in this part of the world. I don't know if it's serious, but it's certainly important, and one of the important things is that we can't do anything about it. I don't know whether anything can be done.

MURROW: Neither do I, Alex; what are things like in Trieste these days? That's part of your beat, isn't it?

KENDRICK: I get there whenever I can, and I think we'll have a Trieste settlement sooner or later. We didn't help the chances with the recent Trieste Crisis, which made everybody mad and caused the Yugoslavs to wonder about our good intentions. But the heat has gone out of the situation, and there can be an agreement.

MURROW: What kind of agreement?

KENDRICK: I think the Yugoslavs will finally concede that Trieste city should go to the Italians, and the Italians will concede a few border changes. Slovene villages in Zone A going to Yugoslavia in return for Italian villages in Zone B. That, plus a Yugoslav free port in Trieste, like the Yugoslav free port in Salonika, in Greece.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problems of international trade are no less involved now than in the past. And recall something that Ray Lyman Wilbur once said: "The world population finds itself where it must work harder if it is to get out of the hole that it is in. If we do not use opportunity wisely, we will get pushed aside by other forces. For the weeds stand ever ready to replace the plants."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, July 2, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... I've asked my colleague in Vienna, Alexander Kendrick, to record for us July 4th as it looks to those less fortunate behind the Iron Curtain.

KENDRICK: The most striking thing about life behind the Iron Curtain these days, can best be expressed in a few facts relating to the staff of life. The Western world is currently experiencing its (indistinct) of wheat: Canada has a surplus of 16-million tons; the United States has 22-million tons in its silos, and Secretary of Agriculture Benson last week ordered a 12-point-seven-per-cent cut in next year's wheat production. The export price of wheat has been reduced by both Canada and the United States on the world market. There's obviously no shortage of wheat. Yet, at the same time, Soviet Russia has sent twenty million young men and women to the distant lands of Kazahstan and Siberia to put thirty million acres of marginal land under cultivation and add twenty million tons of wheat to Soviet production. They are doing so with an expenditure of energy and resource that is impressive if only because of its incongruity. One reason for the desired increase of wheat was to give Russia and export surplus in a world market that cannot absorb the surpluses it already had. And the Soviet Union satellite states have similarly embarked on large programs of increased agricultural production. If conditions were normal and this were one world, a fantastic situation of this kind could not exist. The part of the world that had wheat would sell it or trade it to the part without wheat and receive other goods in exchange. But the enforced separation of two worlds prevents normal usage and normal relations, and both parts suffer, one from surplus the other from shortages. There's no more balance and no (indistinct)

It is six to eight years now since the countries of Eastern Europe passed behind the Iron Curtain, and whatever other losses they may have incurred as a result in the way of lessened political liberties, curtailed civil rights, worsened economic status or stagnated intellects, the principal loss - it is important to recall as we nearthe 178th birthday of American independence - the most tragic loss to the so-called satellites has been the loss of their sovereignty and of the right to shape their own destinies, right or wrong. In short, their independence.

The Soviet Union is a vast country and a naturally wealthy one. They could be almost autarchic in its economy, that is to say self-sufficient. It takes a great ...? in trying to be autarchic and thus not dependent on the rest of the world for anything. Yet the very concept of autarchy is a medieval one; it is the concept of the feudal (indistinct) In a world that is highly developed in communication, transport and commerce attempts to establish self-sufficiency are inefficient, costly and unnecessary. They can only be made by those deliberately seeking isolation. It is one thing for the Russians to feel that; they have always had the streak of self-sufficiency and self-worship? within themselves, and the revolution has provided them with a phobia of capitalist encirclement and counter-revolutionary plots?. But the so-called satellites were always part of the larger world, and this deliberate and enforced isolation is for them the heaviest burden of their current existence.

To compensate their subjects for cutting them off from the world, and to assuage their restlessness and dissatisfaction and even revolt, the various Communist regimes have for exactly oneyear now been carrying out a vaunted new policy. July 4th in addition to being American Independence Day, is also the first anniversary of a speech by Hungarian Prime Minister Imre Naj? which introduced the new course in the satellite states. This was something of a landmark in post-war Communist history. From Malenkov down to Ambra Ochea? of Albania, promises were made of moreconsumer goods, relaxed restrictions, fewer obligations to the state or to Communist discipline, lower prices, fewer taxes. It's only fair to say that many of these things have been brought about, in one degree or another, and that an easier climate is today prevalent behind the Iron Curtain. The leaders have made conscious efforts to come closer to the people: The creative artists have been relieved of some of their straight jackets; the bureaucrats have lost ~~of~~ some of their untouchability. But there has been no real change in the isolation of the Communist world. And what the people were given last Fourth of July was instead of independence. So July 4th is an important anniversary behind the Iron Curtain too, the anniversary of what might be called counter-independence.

This is Alex Kendrick recording from Vienna - now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

JULY 6, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

The condition of former President Truman has much improved and the information from Kansas City is that he is itching to get out of the hospital which is right in character, for he has always been a man who hated to be tied down.

He's probably strong enough now to have a look at some of the messages that have come in wishing him well. There have been a lot of them - more than a hundred thousand letters and telegrams. In fact, when it appeared to be touch and go for Mr. Truman, a rather astonishing thing happened. Large numbers of Americans decided that they liked to have him around. Republicans as well as Democrats wrote him letters, old enemies exhorted him to recover. Even that ancient antagonist, the Chicago Tribune ran an editorial wishing him a speedy recovery. According to the New York Times correspondent in Kansas City, Mrs. Truman read the Tribune editorial to him when he was very sick indeed. He smiled and shook his head in appreciation.

Whether all these evidences of affection surprised the former President is hard to say. He has always taken the long view and firmly believed that when political passions had cooled his accomplishments and his character would command general respect. But he would not be human if he had not been wounded by some of the bitter judgments which had been made upon himself and his tenure of office. But whether he was surprised or not by the outpouring of sympathy, Mr. Truman was certainly pleased. Some of the letters contained contributions for the Truman Memorial Library and that pleased him especially for this project to make his papers available to students is something very close to his heart. We Americans are essentially a kind-hearted folk, and it is in our tradition to send get-well messages to those who are seriously ill, but the stacks of mail piling up in Kansas City seem to be more than that. It may not be too much to say that a reappraisal of Harry Truman as a man and as a President is underway. Our politics are marred by rancor, which is doubtless a normal result of taking politics seriously, but it presents our public men with a heavy burden of bitterness and abuse. Harry Truman got his share. But we are not a people to hold a grudge, and time often tempers our judgments.

Leaving aside his policies and his politics, Truman always had in full measure those qualities which cause men to be liked. He was always willing to fight for what he believed in. He was loyal, and friendly and humorous. Above all he was natural. He worked very hard at his job and it was important to him that he not in any way diminish the high office which he held. There was an impressive kind of integrity about him and those who met him for the first time invariably came away with the impression that here was a better man than they had been led to expect. It is natural, then, that now that he is no longer on the firing line, or in front of it, that his fellow-citizens are rediscovering that Harry Truman is a rather attractive figure - with all his faults, and maybe because of them.

We tend to grow fond of our ex-presidents, anyway. Herbert Hoover is an ex-presidents, anyway. Herbert Hoover is an example. For years he was a symbol of our failure to foresee and to grapp;e with the Great Depression. Today he is a much respected elder statesman. There is much polititical wisdom in this instinct of ours to cherish our living former Presidents. Any man who holds that great and lonely and terribly demanding office leaves it with a perspective and understanding that is unique. He can make great contributions. Most Americans are glad that Harry S. Truman is going to be around to have a chance to make his.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: After 14 long years, meat rationing has ended in Britain. But the end of rationing has not been an unmixed blessing. Prices shot up at once. Steak, which last week sold for 49 cents a pound, sold today for 91 cents. Housewives are taking a second look. Said one London butcher: "Some women come in, ask the price and walk out. Others with large families make do with stewing meat. It looks as though stew and dumplings will be the favorite hot meat this week."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (Charles Collingwood)

FRIDAY, JULY 9, 1954
7:45-8:00 PM EDT

Good Evening! French authorities in Indo-China today called in representatives of the civilian population of Hanoi and told them to evacuate the city. The Supreme French Commander, General Paul Ely, urged French residents to leave town as communist Viet Minh regulars drove hard against French Union positions to the south, north and northwest. Ely pledged again that his forces will defend Hanoi as well as its port-city Haiphong.

Reports from Hanoi say that American civilians in the city will be flown out to the south. ~~Ok~~ Only United States consular officials will remain behind. A special air-lift is being arranged for Nationalist Chinese refugees in Hanoi. They too, will go further south.

Large-scale fighting broke out on the southern defenses of Hanoi -- a French-Union armored unit battled Viet Minh regulars, driving them off about 20 miles below the city. To the north and northwest, the French admit "appreciable losses" have been inflicted by communist attacks against what are described as "weak defenses".

Even as the fighting steps up, discussions to end it are continuing at Indo-China's little Panmunjom -- the village of Trung Gia. There, an agreement is reported to have been reached between French and communist delegates to improve living conditions for prisoners of war.

And Radio Peiping has also announced that Red China's Premier Chou en Lai is on his way back to Geneva to take part in conferences there.

Reports from Geneva say that a meeting has been set up between Frnch Premier Pierre Mendes-France and Russia's Foreign ~~Mit~~ Minister Molotov. The two are expected to get ~~together~~ together on Sunday.

Mendes-France is said to have warned the United States that in his opinion the Western alliance will be sorely strained if no top-level American delegate returns to Geneva. Secretary of State Dulles has said that he will not return to the conference and neither will Under Secretary of State Walter Bedell Smith. I want to say more about the Indo-Chinese situation in a moment.

American authorities are reported tonight to be watching the progress of the Indo-Chinese truce talks before deciding whether to replace United States air force technicians servicing French warplanes in the battle zone. Two-hundred-65 technicians are in Indo-China, maintaining French planes and enabling them to average 90 hours of combat flying a month. Without the G.I.'s, the average flying time for the planes is around 30 hours a month.

Army, Navy and Air Force officers from Britain, the United States, France and Australia have concluded conferences in Singapore. The officers exchanged latest information for the defense of Southeast Asia.

Three state Governors who toured the Far East early this year today presented their report to President Eisenhower. The three Governors -- Dan Thornton of Colorado, John Fine of Pennsylvania and Allan Shivers of Texas -- recommend the immediate erection of a vast Pacific Ocean radar warning system to prevent another Pearl Harbor-type sneak attack by the communists. The Governors also recommend that Japan be allowed to resume what they describe as "a carefully controlled trade with Red China". This action, they say, would not amount to recognition of Red China and they point out that trade could be stepped up when the communists are thrown out.

Republican Senator Frlanders of Vermont warned today that the United States has "Probably lost the respect of Asia as a whole in the cold war". Flranders says the Chinese communists are clear in their own minds that no military threat of ous will be carried through to a conclusion. Flanders opposes the admission of Red China to the United Nations at the present time or "until she has shown a willingness to abide by the decisions of the international organization.

Russia's Ambassador to the United States, Georgi Zarubin, visited the State Department today to receive a note dealing with atomic energy matters. The contents of the message have not been disclosed.

At the United Nations Trusteeship Council, India has demanded a halt to United States atomic tests in the Marshall Islands. India wants an International Court ruling on whether the United States can use territory under her trusteeship to conduct atomic experiments. The American delegate to the Trusteeship Council says this country will continue tests because we must do so as long as Russia continues her experiments.

The Atomic Energy Commission Security Patrol is investigating reports of violence on picket lines set up by strking C.I.O. atomic production workers at Oak Ridge, Tennessee. One report tells of a few shots being fired at one of the plant's gates.

In Washington, "considerable progress" is said to have been made in secret efforts to bring the atomic strike to an end without use of a Taft-Hartley injunction. Labor Secretary Mitchell, CIO President Walter Reuther and top officials of the striking union met today and came up with recommendations for getting the workers back on the job. These will be submitted to union members for their approval.

The Presidential fact-finding board which is investigating the strike has finished hearing testimony and is expected to report to the White House very soon. This will clear the way for the issuance of a Taft-Hartley injunction which would send the 45-hundred strikers at Oak Ridge and Paducah, Kentucky, back to work, should they choose to continue on strike.

The Department of Agriculture announced today that crop production this year may be the second largest of record. Farmers are said to have shifted land from cultivation of surplus products like cotton and wheat to other cash crops instead of taking the land out of cultivation.

The Senate Agriculture Committee, meanshile, has approved a general farm bill which includes many provisions opposed by the Administration. The bill includes an extension of rigid farm price supports for one year whereas the President has requested a flexible support program.

The House Post Office Committee today voted a five per cent pay-raise for half-a-million postal workers. The bill carries a minimum 2hundred dollar a year pay boost.

Army investigators at Fort Dix, New Jersey, have recommended disciplinary action against a lietenant and a first sargeant who kept a company of two hundred ~~xxx~~ twnety five basic trainess standing at rigid attention in 90 degree heat for almost an hour.

Thirteen persons are dead and more than 70 towns have been evacuated in the face of floods in Austria and Southern Germany. American Army helicopters are helping in the evacuation.

In Guatemala, the Mexican Embassy has requested safe-conduct passes for ousted President Arbenz and several of his followers. They have been political ~~xxxxxxxx~~ refugees in the embassy since the successful revolt led by the current Guatemalan President, Carlos Castillo Armas. But Arbenz may not be granted the safe-conduct. The Armas government says he is a criminal and not a political refugee because of alleged links with the murder of a one-time political foe.

And a note of good news here at home: Former President Truman is back home in Independence, Missouri -- dismissed from the hospital. He sat up for lunch on his backporch and Mrs. Truman says the former President thinks it's "~~jxx~~ just great to be home".

Now a word or two about the situation in Indo-China. The drama is in its last act. Whatever happens at Geneva, it is apparent that thelong struggle to keep Indo-China out of Communist hands is almost over. And the end is coming not with a bang, but with a round-robin of international recrimination from authoritative sources.

In the war zone, the military situation has deteriorated to the point where foreign nationals are being flown out of Hanoi in anticipation of a Communist attack at any moment. General Paul Ely says he will defend Hanoi, but no one thinks he can defend it indefinitely. The best that can be hoped for is that he can hold it long enough for the politicians to reach an agreement in Geneva.

At Geneva, the position is equally gloomy. Premier Mendes-France has only tent days left until his self-appointed deadline to liquidate the war or get out. He goes to Geneva this weekend to meet with Molotov, Eden, and Chou En Lai -- all of the top diplomats involved with the exception of John Foster Dulles. The French are very hurt and angry over Dulles's pointed absence from these critical negotiations. They charge him with pulling the rug out from under thier hope of getting a fair settlement. With the United States dissociating ~~ix~~ itself from the whole affair, the Frnech say, they themselves are in no position to drive a hard bargain and will have to take what they can get rather than what they want.

The State Department is just as angry about the French and mutters darkly about appeasment..... and with Senator Knowland breathing down Mr. Dulles's neck, appeasement is a very dirty word these days.

The British, after Churchill's failure to bring the two positions any closer together on his flying trip to Washington, are critical of everybody's conduct but agree with the French that it's better to reach a cease-fire in Indo-China than to risk a third world war by any kind of massive outside intervention -- if, indeed, intervention could accomplish anything by now, so far have things gone.

So, the Communists hold all the cards and with the western powers divided and embittered, they are dealing. The richest part of Indo-China seems destined to fall under Communist sway at once with the rest to follow later.

It is an inglorious end to an eight year struggle which was often fought stupidly, but was also fought with great gallantry and at much cost. The French must bear the greatest blame, perhaps, for their unwillingness to adjust their outmoded concepts of colonialism to the realities of the tide of nationalism sweeping through Asia. But France's allies, including the United States, must share the blame for their failure to realize until too late how much was at stake and how grave was the risk. After all, up until a few months ago, our statesmen regularly issued soothing statements to the effect that the French had everything in hand and that there was nothing we needed do but maybe send a few more airplanes.

The war in Indo-China has been a costly war...not only in blood and treasure, but in the toll it has taken in its dying days of the vitality of the anti-communist coalition. Now the task is to safeguard the rest of Southeast Asia. And that will take more allied unity than the free world ever showed over Indo-China.

This is Charles Collingwood...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news... But, first, Bob Dixon.

FOOTNOTE

The Senate Agriculture Committee today put into the farm bill a provision allowing long-staple cotton growers to obtain the minimum price support level. Said Chairman Aiken: "This may sound nuts, but these long-staple cotton producers say they want to sell their cotton rather than put it into government stocks so they asked for minimum supports". He sounded amazed as he said it.

This is Charles Collingwood...See you Monday.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

JULY 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

The Board of Governors of Freedom House announced today that their annual Freedom Award will go this year to Edward R. Murrow, who customarily presides over this microphone. It would be impossible to imagine him drawing attention to this honor himself, but since he is on vacation and, I trust, safely out of earshot, for I would not want to embarrass him, it might not be amiss to say a word or two about this award.

This kind of recognition for an Ed Murrow elevates the whole profession of news and news analysis on radio and television. For when he is honored for the kind of thoughtful, factual, and above all courageous broadcasting that has become his trademark it makes it that much easier for all other broadcasters to do their work according to the standards in which they believe.

The citation that will appear on his Freedom Award reads: "Free men were heartened by his courage in exposing those who would divide us by exploiting our fears." I think I know what the Governors of Freedom House had in mind. I'm sure you do, too. But the position Ed Murrow took on Senator McCarthy was not an isolated act. It sprang from a consistent and deeply felt philosophy which he has followed all his life. That, I suspect, is what the Governors of Freedom House were really honoring.

Because Ed Murrow's performance has been awfully good from the days of Munich, through the London Blitz, the war, and the tribulations and the triumphs that followed. It has been awfully good. It has angered some people, embarrassed others and fortified a good many. Murrow's broadcasting has always been marked by honesty, humanity, and a scrupulous regard for facts. C.P. Scott, the late great editor of the Manchester Guardian once counselled his staff: "Comment is free, but facts are sacred. Comment also is justly subject to a self-imposed restraint. It is well, to be frank, he said; it is even better to be fair."

It would be my guess that that pretty well represents Ed Murrow's philosophy. And by hewing to it he has raised the whole tone of the new kind of journalism which came in with radio and television. If the kind of news you get in this medium is accurate, and the comment both provocative and fair, much credit must go to Ed Murrow's example. And since accurate information and intelligent conclusions from it are essential to freedom, Ed Murrow is a good choice for the Freedom Award.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the days news - but first, Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: In this atomic age, the wars that are being fought in Asia sometimes seem anachronistic; but as we have learned to our cost, they are no less important for that. Here is a communique from Burma where the Government announces that in a battle near Pakokku, 200 miles north of Rangoon, 22 Communist rebels were killed. And the communique adds, one elephant was captured.

This is Charles Collingwood - See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (Charles Collingwood)

MONDAY, July 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

Good evening! Secretary of State Dulles has left for Paris. In a suddenly announced decision, the Secretary revealed he is going to the French capital at the invitation of French Premier Mendes-France and the British Foreign Secretary Eden. The three men will meet there tomorrow. Now, here is Dulles's good-bye statement, recorded just before he left Washington.

TAPE: runs: 1:33

ends on cue: "Ambassador Hugh Alexis Johnson and his associates".

Dulles conferred several times during the day with President Eisenhower, and the White House says the Chief Executive "concurs fully and approves completely of the Secretary's course of action".

Red Chinese Premier Cho en Lai is back in Geneva -- ready for the show-down talks on Indo-China. He was greeted at the airport by Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov. During the day, French Premier Mendes-France met with Britain's Foreign Secretary Eden, and the two are reported to have hammered out a program to secure "peace with honor" in Indo-China. Mendes-France has scheduled a meeting for tomorrow morning with Choe en Lai, after which the French leader and Anthony Eden will fly to Paris to confer with Secretary Dulles.

Before Dulles announced his surprise Paris trip, he and Under Secretary of State Walter Bedell Smith x met with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. They are reported to have recommended to the Committee that it tone down a proposal cutting off foreign aid to France and Italy unless they ratify the European Defense Treaty by the end of the year. This was done by a committee vote of x 8 to 5.

French forces in Indo-China beat back three-thousand communist troops south of Hanoi. French officers say their forces were "staked out" to catch the rebels in a trap. Current French strategy seems to be aimed at keeping roads open inside their Red delta defense area -- Viet Minh rebels have admittedly infiltrated the perimeter heavily.

At the Trung Gia truce talks in Indo-China, discussions have gotten around to definition of so-called "troop reassembly areas". These are the sectors to which French and communist troops would be withdrawn in the event of a truce.

Prime Minister Churchill went before the House of Commons today to report on his recent conferences in Washington with President Eisenhower. Sir Winston revealed he went to Washington because he was "deeply concerned" at the lack of information he had about the capabilities of the H-bomb. He reported that his conversations with President Eisenhower touched "in general terms" on the possibility of a meeting with Russia's Malenkov. Churchill said the "difficulties" of such a meeting were talked about, but he did not elaborate. The Primer Minister repeated that his government still believes the Communist Chinese should represent China in the United Nations, but that he does not think that this is the moment for such a move. Summing up his conferences with the President, Sir Winston said they "established a framework within which our differences can be amicably resolved."

Congressional comment on Churchill's speech came quickly from Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He thinks Churchill's announcement about not seating Red China now is "good news" and adds that he can not foresee the moment when the communists could get into the United Nations. A more cautious comment comes from Chairman Ferguson of the Senate Republican Policy Committee. He is sorry Sir Winston referred to this not being the moment for seating Red China. Ferguson says a moment is a very short time but he added sharply: "Even small favors are acceptable".

Vice President Nixon flew to Bolton Landing, New York this afternoon to be on hand to deliver a speech for President Eisenhower to the Annual Governor's conference. The President cancelled his appearance because of the death of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Milton Eisenhower. Speaking for the President, Nixon will propose a long-range program of highway construction costing, in the end, an estimated fifty billion dollars. Mr. Eisenhower believes the United States will have a population of 200-million by 1970 and he wants a vast Federal-State alliance on what he calls "a grand plan" for highway development. As for foreign affairs, Vice President Nixon, reading from notes prepared by the President, will urge the maintainance of what's called " a military dike around our defense perimeter".

The Governor' Conference has so far had some harsh words for the Administration's new 900-million dollar highway law. Several governors contend the act runs counter to their demands for greater state control over car and gasoline taxes and the use of funds for road-building.

One other suggestion of note has come out of the conference -- Utah's Republican Governor Lee suggests repeal of the 16th Amendment to the Constitution. That's the one setting up Federal Income Taxes which Lee calls "the root of all evil". The Governor concedes he hasn't much chance of success with his project.

In New York, the United Nations Trusteeship Council's Committee on Petitions has rejected a Russian resolution calling for an end to American H-bomb experiments in the Marshall Islands in the Pacific.

Construction work on two huge atomic plants in Oak Ridge, Tennessee has been halted by a wildcat walk-out of building workers. The union says the walk-out is unauthorized. It has nothing to do with the recent walk-out of CIO atomic production workers at Oak Ridge.

In other news today: News flood threats are reported in Austria as melting snows add to the already overflowing Danube River. 70-thousand are homeless -- at least 27 are known dead.

Eleven persons are dead and 19 wounded in a new outbreak of terrorist violence in Tunis. A crowded cafe was sprayed by a machinegunner. Two policemen are missing in other incidents.

A landslide in the Panama Canal has temporarily forced the closing of the east side of the ship channel. Workers are dredging some 30-thousand cubic yards of dirt in an effort to restore normal operations.

The Board of Governor of Freedom House announced today that their annual Freedom Award will go this year to Edward R. Murrow, who customarily presides over this microphone. It would be impossible to imagine him drawing attention to this honor himself, but since he is on vacation and, I trust, safely out of earshot, for I would not embarass him, it might not be amiss to say a word or two about this award.

This kind of recognition for an Ed Murrow elevates the whole profession of news analysis on radio and television. For when he is honored for the kind of thoughtful, factual, and above all courageous broadcasting that has become his trademark it makes it that much easier for all other broadcasters to do their work according to the standards in which they believe.

The citation that will appear on his Freedom Award reads: "Free men were heartened by his courage in exposing those who would divide us by exploiting our fears". I think I know what the Governors of Freedom House had in mind I'm sure you do, too. But the position Ed Murrow took on Senator McCarthy was not an isolated act. It sprang from a consistent and deeply felt philosophy which he has followed all his life. That, I suspect, is what the Governors of Freedom House were really honoring.

Because Ed Murrow's performance has been awfully good -- from the days of Munich, through the London Blitz, the war, and the tribulations and the triumphs that followed. It has been awfully good. It has angered some people, embarrassed others and fortified a good many. Murrow's broadcasting has always been marked by honesty, humanity, and a scrupulous regard for facts. C. P. Scott, the late great editor of the Manchester Guardian once councelled his staff: "Comment is free, but facts are sacred. Comment also is justly subject to a self-imposed restraint. It is well, to be frank," he said; "it is even better to be fair."

It would be my guess that that pretty well represents Ed Murrow's philosophy. And by hewing to it he has raised the whole tone of the new kind of journalism which came in with radio and television. If the kind of news you get in this medium is accurate, and the comment both provocative and fair, much credit must go to Edward Murrow's example. And since accurate information and intelligent conclusions from it are essential to freedom, Ed Murrow is a good choice for the Freedom Award.

This is Charles Collingwood....I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news.... but first, Bob Dixon.

FOOTNOTE

In this atomic age, the wars that are being fought in Asia sometimes seem anachronistic, but as we have learned to our cost, they are no less important for that. Here is a communique from Burma where the Government announces that in a battle near Pakokku, 200 miles north of Rangoon, 22 Communist rebels were killed. And the communique adds, one elephant was captures.

This is Charles Collingwood .... See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (Charles Collingwood)

TUESDAY, JULY 20, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

Good evening! A truce agreement ending the war in Indo-China is being signed in Geneva tonight according to official French sources. French Premier Mendes-France thus missed his midnight deadline, but appears sure to make good his pledge to end the fighting within 30 days after taking over as head of the French government. We will have a direct report from Geneva on the day's developments in just a few moments.

In Washington today, an expected bitter fight within the McCarthy Investigations Sub-Committee failed to materialize when the Senator made two announcements. First, he revealed the resignation of his Chief Counsel Roy Cohn. And second, McCarthy transferred assistant counsel Donald Surine from the sub-committee staxff to his personal staff. At the sub-committee meeting, the Senators voted unanimously to retain in their jobs all 25 other staff members with the exception of office manager and investigator Thomas Lavenia.

He has been denied Defense Department security clearance and he will be forced to leave the sub-committee staff on July 31st. However, Senator McCarthy has demanded to know why the Defense Department did not clear Lavenia and he is confident that the matter can be straightened out. Defense Secretary Wilson told newsmen, however, that he will not tell McCarthy the reasons for his department's action with respect to Lavenia.

When Senator McCarthy announced Roy Cohn's resignation he said "it must bring great satisfaction to the communists and fellow-travelers". In his letter of resignation, Cohn paid tribute to what he calls Senator McCarthy's inspiring leadership and expressed confidence that the fight against communism will go on.

Meanwhile, on the Senate floor, Vermont's Republican Senator Flanders made his much publicized speech attacking Senator McCarthy. When he concluded, Flanders was praised by New York's Democratic Senator Lehman who says he too will have some words on the subject of McCarthyism when Flanders' motion to censure McCarthy comes up for a vote.

The House of Representatives today beat down a last-ditch attempt - led by Democrats - to restore President Eisenhower's bid for construction of 35-thousand public housing units a year for four years. The House defeated an amendment providing for such a building program and then went on to pass a compromise measure allowing the construction of 35-thousand housing units in one year for use by persons displaced by slum-clearance projects.

The Senate is still tied up with debate on the proposed revisions of the Atomic Energy Act. Tennessee's Senator Gore -- denying any attempt to filibuster -- can't foresee a vote today or tomorrow despite predictions by Republican Majority leader, Sentor Knowland, that one will be taken.

The Senate Finance Committee today voted to permit persons over 65 years of age to earn up to 12-hundred dollars annually without losing Social Security benefits. Present law limits such earnings to 75 dollars a month.

The Senate Banking Committee, digging deeply into housing scandals, heard testimony from a New York ~~xxxxx~~ builder today that he had a tentative agreement to hire ~~xxxxx~~ Clyde Powell -- a former Federal Housing Administration Commissioner -- while Powell was still with the government. These plans fell through however, when the housing scandal investigations began.

The House Civil Service Committee today voted unanimously to deny government ~~xxxx~~ retirement pay to any Federal employee or member of Congress convicted of lying about communist associations or engaging in subversive activities or felonious activities. This measure is aimed at Alger Hiss and others like him who would be entitled to federal retirement pay upon reaching retirement age.

Today's biggest story, and the biggest story in many a day, happened in Geneva, Switzerland. It is well past Mendes-France's midnight deadline now, and for a direct report on what has transpired we take you to Geneva, Blair Clark reporting.

GENEVA PICK-UP

That was CBS Radio Correspondent Blair Clark reporting direct from Geneva, Switzerland.

The truce agreement in Geneva will mean the guns can fall silent in Indo-China for the first time in seven-and-a-half years. French Headquarters at Saigon estimates it will take three or four days to notify all troops that the war is over. Plans are being made now to evacuate non-communists from the cities of Hanoi and Haiphong which go to the communists under the cease-fire agreement. The United States Air Force says it will evacuate "as quickly as possible" the two hundred technicians now stationed in Indo-China to maintain French warplanes.

Defense Secretary Wilson, commenting on the partition of Viet Nam, says it may be the "best answer a t the moment but it's nothing to get enthused about". Wilson believes - as he puts it - "it it up to the people who reach the agreement to defend any truce line", and he added: "Certainly the United States is not going to do it alone". And Wilson thinks that even if United States military strength had been double what it was during the last 18 months, the world situation today would be no different.

At the State Department, a spokesman xxx revealed that the United States and Britain are considering plans for meeting any emergency which may arise in Southeast Asia. An Anglo-American committee -- set up by President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Churchill -- has completed preliminary discussions, referring their decisions for final action to London and Washington.

Communist China's Premier Chou en Laiii was interviewed today for a British broadcast and called for the creation of a Pan-Asian security block to safeguard the colective peace of Asia. Chou wants Asian nations to consult among themselves and assume "obligations" for peace. Chou says he believes that once peace is achieved in Southeast Asia there can be a gradual expansion of what he calls "areas of peace" which would lead to the consolidation of the security of the whole world.

The White House took an unusual step today -- helping a candidate for a Congressional seat to throw his hat in the ring. White House News secretary James Hagerty introduced Vernon Bradley of Springfield, Massachusetts to newsmen and told them President Eisenhower was wishing Bradley well in his campaign for Representative from the second Congressional District in Massachusetts. Bradley will be opposing incumbent Democratic Representative Edward Boland in the November balloting.

And Ray Jenkins says that no matter what happens in the Tennessee Senatorial Primary, he is not a candidate. Jenkins' name will appear on the Republican primary ballot in Tennessee because he did not formally register his desire to withdraw it. It was placed there by Jenkins' friends after Jenkins' work as Chief Counsel for the Army-McCarhhy hearings.

And a report from England -- the four-thousand ton Danish passenger ship KRONPRINSESSE INGRID -- has radioed she is afire 40 miles ~~on~~ off the English coast. Coastal vessels have reached the ship's side and say the blaze appears to be undr control.

In Hopewell Junction, New York, 13 year old David Ronk was rescued after seven hours in a collapsed wall. One hundred rescuers dug frantically to reach the boy after doctors warned he might become permanently injured by the pressure of mud packed tightly around him.

Former Democratic Senator Blair Moody died this afternoon in the University Hospital in Ann Arbor, Michigan. He was 52. Blair Moody was appointed to the Senate upon the death of Senator Vandenberg and thus became a politician. He was in fact campaigning when stricken by the illness which led to his death. But his real profession was journalism. He had been a reporter for the Detroit News since 1923. For 14 years he doubled as correspondent for Barron's Financial Weekly. He was a fine reporter, thorough, scrupulous and fair. In fact, when he was appointed to the Senate, many of his friends didn't even know his politics, which is a good thing to say about a reporter.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news.....but first, Bob Dixon.

FOOTNOTE

In the great tradition of lavish parties, there was one thrown in London last night for the coming out of Australian heiress Barbara Stanley Smith. It cost her absent father some 28-thousand dollars and degenerated into a memorable shambles in which guests ate the fresh fruit decorations and broke a record number of champagne glasses. Said hostess STanley-Smith: "It was wonderful. I must write and tell father about it".

This is Charles Collingwood..... See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS --- CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

Good evening!

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that United States Navy planes, operating off Hainam Island in the South China Sea, were there on legitimate business. The planes are conducting search operations for possible survivors from that British airliner which was shot down last Friday by communist Chinese fighter planes. The President insists that the United States does not mean to be truculent toward Red China but we do mean to defend our rights. Mr. Eisenhower flatly denied communist assertions that our navy planes were flying over Chinese territory Sunday night when they were engaged in aerial combat by Red planes. The President added that the Naval task force should be leaving the South China Sea area soon because the search mission is just about complete. At the Pentagon, a Navy official says the search may be abandoned within the next 24 hours.

The President devoted a good deal of his news conference today to domestic issues. He says he would be more than bitterly disappointed if Congress should adjourn without approving six major Administration measures. These include Foreign Aid, farm policy, tax revision, housing and social security, as well as anti-subversive legislation.

The Chief Executive took note of the forthcoming Congressional elections by saying he will support only those candidates who, in general, support his principles. He added, however, that he does not insist on 1-hundred per cent backing. The President revealed that when a Republican candidate requests his support, he makes a check to see if the candidate agrees with him. In line with that, Mr. Eisenhower said he still supports Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky despite the fact that Cooper voted against the Administration's Atomic Energy bill. Cooper explained his position to the White House and the President says he was honest about the whole thing.

Mr. Eisenhower indicated today that he may go into a number of states during the election campaign to make speeches. But he is not going to stump for individual candidates.

Commenting on other matters, the President said he feels an increase in the 275-billion dollar national debt limit is inescapabl . He defended his action authorizing tarriff increases on certain imported watch movements, adding that he still believes in a freer flow of world trade.

The House of Representatives completed action today on one part of President Eisenhower's program - biggest tax revision bill in 75 years. In an overwhelming vote, the Representatives first voted down a last-ditch Democratic move to eliminate from the bill a provision giving some tax relief to persons gaining most income from stock dividents. Then the House passed and sent to the Senate the completed bill which will reduce the nation's taxes by an estimated 1-billion 363-million dollars a year. The Senate is expected to begin debating the measure tomorrow.

And in another action today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill appropriating more than 5-billion-200-million dollars for foreign aid. Democratic Congressmen joined with Republican supporters of the Administration to beat back attempts to reduce the amount of money appropriated.

Tonight, the Senate passed and sent to the White House an omnibus housing bill which will reduce down payments on homes bought with government insured loans. The bill also sets up safeguards against housing windfall profits but it falls short of President Eisenhower's public-housing program.

The House and the Senate interrupted their deliberations today to hear an address by South Korean President Syngman Rhee. Rhee proposed what he called a "counter-attack" on the Chinese mainland by an Asian army supported by American guns, ships and planes. He repeatedly emphasized, however, that he does not want American foot-soldiers in the attack. Rhee warned that "peace can not be restored in the world half-communist and half-democratic" and he acknowledged that although his proposals were "a hard doctrine", the communists have made this a hard world in which to be soft is to become a slave." The South Korean leader insists that Communist China is a monster with feet of clay and he concluded with a warning that the Soviet Union will not stop of its own voliton and that unless we win China back, an ultimate victory for the free world is unthinkable."

Rhee was interrupted six times during his speech by applause from the assembled Congressmen. But his proposals for a "counter-attack" were greeted with silence. After his address, several Congressional leaders commented cautiously. Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said merely: "I listened with interest to a great man and a great patriot who made a great speech for his country". Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington called Rhee's suggestion "a form of preventative war" and added: "We can not undertake that". On the other hand, Democratic Representative Dorn of South Carolina said "sooner or later we are going to have to fight these communists and the sooner the better - they grow stronger every year".

Incidentally, Speaker of the House Martin had a little trouble with his introduction of President Rhee to the Joint Session of Congress. The first time he tried, Martin announced he had the pleasure to present the President of India. Correcting himself, Martin said forcefully, he was presenting the President of Indiana. Finally, on the third try, Martin got it right - introducing the President of the Republic of Korea - "a great patriot, a stalwart fighter for the free world".

Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont told the Senate today that Senators can not be neutral about his motion to censure Wisconsin's Senator McCarthy. Flanders says there are indications of what he calls "gumshoe tracks and finger prints" all around him and he thinks McCarthy may try to launch what Flanders calls "a smear attack" against him. The Vermont Senator says he would not be surprized to see a file on himself from McCarthy's Government Operations Committee brought out during debate on the censure motion. And if that happens, Flanders says he will point out that government funds are "being used to finance the preparation of files against fellow senators". There has been no comment so far from Senator McCarthy who tonight is in New York for a testimonial dinner in honor of his former Chief Counsel Roy Cohn.

In London, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons that an agreement with Egypt to evacuate British troops from the Suez Canal zone preserves the "essential requirements" in the Middle East in this "age of the hydrogen bomb". Faced with opposition from some members of his own conservative Party, Eden said the evacuation should "contribute to a reduction of tension in the Middle East as a whole". Eden also announced that the United States and France are determined along with Britain to guard the peace between Arab states and Israel.

In Cairo, there is a report that United States military and economic aid will be sent to Egypt as a result of her agreement with Britain. Most of the assistance will be economic - designed to help Egypt's government fulfill pledges to irrigate vast areas of desert.

Prime Minister Churchill shuffled his cabinet today as a result of the resignation of Colonial Secretary Oliver Lyttelton who is returning to private business. Shortly after the realignment of Cabinet posts was announced, another member turned in his resignation; Britain's Attorney General Sir Lionel Heald.

French Premier Mendes-France is reported ready to ask the National Assembly for a four-month blank check so that he can correct France's economic situation. The Assembly would have to vote Mendes-France the right to make laws by decree.

And West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer is due to visit the United States for one day - he will address the American Legion Convention in Washington on August 30 and then fly back to Bonn.

Some other items in today's news: An army court martial at Fort Dix has acquitted a sergeant of charges that he forced a basic training company to stand at attention for an hour in 90 degree heat.

Arkansas' Democratic Senator McClellan has apparently won renomination in that State's Democratic primary.

The Justice Department has received a recommendation that Ellis Island in New York Harbor be abandoned as an immigration station. Operations would be transferred to a building in New York City.

And at Niagra Falls, part of famous Prospect Point over-looking the famous waterfall, collapsed today into the Niagra River Gorge. Prospect Point has been the mecca of honeymoonin sightseers for many years.

= The season's second tropical storm is heading toward Louisiana Gulf cities. Winds up to 70 miles an hour are reported. The storm may strike in the vicinity of Morgan City, Louisiana some time tonight.

One of the best listening posts on the edge of the Iron Curtain is Vienna. The Iron Curtain is thinner there, somehow, and Vienna, once the capital of the Austro-Hungarian empire, still maintains its ancient connections with those unhappy countri s where the lights have gone out. CBS Radio has stationed in Vienna an able and resourceful reporter named Alexander Kendrick who has an unusual faculty for turning up those little incidents in the Communist world which reveal the quality of life there. He sent us such a report today, which I would like to passon to you:

The good old summer time, no respecter of political systems, is in full bloom behind the Iron Curtain, too...a time for relaxing and cool drinks if possible. But neither relaxation nor cool drinks are the lot of one humble citizen of Budapest. His Communist bosses may be concerned with the party line, Mr. Molotov's call for a new conference, air incidents off the China coast, but the common man has other concerns. Mainly, the ice box. Not an electric refrigerator, just an icebox. He told his story in a letter to the editor. He bought an icebox in the Government Central Department store in Budapest...price equivalent to $110. Next day he noticed that the lock didn't work and water filled the lower compartment. He went back to the department store and asked where he could have the icebox repaired. The salesman said it was impossible for anything to be wrong with the icebox, but finally with ill grace revealed that the icebox was made by the state Domestic Economy Wood Products factory. But the Domestic Economy Wood Products factory denied it and said they didn't manufacture it, only distributed it. They referred him to the State Refrigeration Materials factory. There he was told to send the icebox in for repairs, that he might have a long wait, there were so many ahead of him. Exasperated, he demanded to know what government ministry had jurisdiction over the factory. The Ministry for Machine Industry, he was informed. But at the Ministry for Machine Industry he could find no one who knew under what section the icebox factory came. Meanwhile, the water continued to flow through the icebox, and now he was unable to close the door. Desperate, he applied himself directly to the secretary to the Deputy Minister for Machine Industry, who sent him to the Dept. of Machine Construction, which sent him to the Director of Inspection and Maintenance, which finally sent him a repairman. The repairman said the icebox, though new, was not very good, but he fixed the lock. Yes, reported the little man, the lock is fixed and the door closes, but the icebox still floods the lower compartment. And now he is waiting again for the good old wintertime.

So reports Alexander Kendrick on the tribulations of a citizen of Budapest. It sounds like some dreadful satire, but to the Communist bosses of Hungary it was so normal that they allowed it to be published. We know little enough of what goes on behind the Iron Curtain, and sometimes it seems that the Communist organization is very efficient, monolithic, and frightening. But these little glimpses help us realize that the totalitarian machinery of the Communist state is a long way from being infallible.

This is Charles Collingwood....I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news....but first, Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: Commercial.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD: Footnote: Two attractive young French girls working in this country used their vacation to take a trip from New York to California. The unusual thing about the trip is that they made it by motor scooter. Asked why, one of the girls replied with that irrefutable logic for which the French are famous, "Because you attract attention on a motor scooter. You learn so much about people, especially men."

This is Charles Collingwood.... See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (Charles Collingwood)

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

Good evening!

The six-man bi-partisan committee of Senators set up to investigate charges of misconduct against Senator McCarthy has held its first meeting. The committee members were appointed this afternoon by Vice President Nixon on the advice of Republican and Democratic party leaders. The three Republicans on the committee are:

Senator Arthur Warkins of Utah, who before coming to the Senate, was a judge.

Senator Francis Case of Kansas who also served in the House of Representatives on the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Senator Frank Carlson - a former Governor of Kansas and a one-time member of the House of Representatives.

The three Democratic members of the special committee are:

Senator Edwin Johnson -- a veteran of 17 years in the Senate and a former Governor of Colorado. He plans to retire after his current term expires.

Senator John Stennis -- a former Mississippi Circuit Judge.

Senator Sam Ervin -- recently appointed to the Senate from North Carolina after the death of Clyde Hoey. Ervin was a Justice of his State's Supreme Court.

After Vice President Nixon finished announcing the names of the Senators, Senator McCarthy rose and asked who would be chairman. He was told the group would name its own leader. McCarthy later told newsmen he had no comment on the appointments but he will be available whenever the group needs him. He plans to continue with his own investigations of alleged communist infiltration into the nation's defense plants.

At its first meeting this afternoon, the committee discussed preliminary matters affecting organization and the general policy to be adopted in hearing evidence. Senator Watkins -- who is acting as temporary spokesman -- says the committee operations will be conducted "in the nature of a judicial inquiry" by men who -- as he put it -- "have not prejedged the issues." Watkins added that he could say positively that "there were no volunteers among the Senators to serve."

